SILVER SERVICE SET ALL THAT REMAINS OF OLD IOWA BATTLESHIP

A silver dinner service set, all that remains of the United States battleship Iowa, has been completely restored from the effects of use and now is on exhibition in the Iowa historical museum. The battleship itself, was sunk as a target, March 22, 1923. An appropriation of the 26th Iowa general assembly in 1896, for $5,000 made possible the silver service for the battle ship. It was installed when the craft went into service. June 15, in that year. After the Iowa went out of commission, the silver service was returned to the state through the solicitation of the former Governor N. E. Kendall. Contract for the silver service was made by former Governor F. M. Drake and former Secetary of State W. M. McFarland on behalf of the state executive council. There were 23 in the set and not one was missing from the original purchase.

YELLOWSTONE JAIL RAZED

No Prisoner In 32 Years So Jail Is Torn Down

Yellowstone Park, Wyo.—The old Yellowstone National Park jail has not held a prisoner in its thirty-two years of existence and now has been razed.

"The only thing the jail has held has been liquor which has been found cached by rum runners from the Canadian border," a park official asserted.

The jail was built in 1894, when the park was under the administration of the United States army. At that time prisoners were housed in the Army gaurdhouse.

FREE CAMP FOR FAIR GUESTS

Des Moines, Special:

Visitors at the Iowa State Fair this season may enjoy the unusual combination of a camping trip accompanied by virtually all the conveniences which are available in their own homes, according to state fair officials.

Many added conveniences are being developed here this month for the opening of the 80-acre free camp tract at the fairgrounds on Aug. 25.

The camp will be furnished with city water service, police protection, electricity, post office and modern sanitary facilities. Meat markets, stores, and supply houses will be conveniently located and will be operated under careful supervision by the fair management to insure reasonable prices for everything. More than 35,000 visitors from all parts of the mid-west are expected to enjoy state fair camping trips this summer.

Big Prizes To Youths

Des Moines, Special:

The Iowa Boys' and Girls' 4-H Club Congress at the Iowa State Fair, Aug. 25 to Sept. 3, will include contests, demonstrations and special events participated in by more than 1,000 boys and girls from Iowa farms Prizes totaling $11,922 00, one of the largest sums ever put up for such competition in this county, are offered to these youthful farmers by the Fair Board this year.

The livestock show alone will include more than 500 baby beeves, 350 swine, 100 sheep and 600 fowl, which have been assembled by these junior farmers.

Demonstrations to be in progress each fair day will cover many fields of farm operations and livestock raising. The champion teams to represent Iowa in competition with other states in the National Club Congress in the fall, will be chosen in these demonstration contests.

"Messiah" to Be Fair Pageant

Des Moines, Special:

"The Birth of the Messiah," a religious pageant and grand opera production which will headline the Sunday program at the Iowa State Fair on August 29, will also serve as the homecoming of Arthur Middleton, baritone of the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company, who is a native of Iowa and will take a leading role in this special Sunday feature.

Mr. Middleton is an internationally known soloist. He will be accompanied by several other widely known singers, a professional ballet brought here from the east, a professional chorus of 40 voices and instrumental accompaniment by the famous Thaviu's band The largest Sunday audience that has ever attended the fair is expected this year, as Sunday is the only day upon which this event will be staged.

Farm Short Course at Fair

Des Moines, Special:

An unusual short course in modern farming subjects will be offered by specialists from Iowa State College as one of the headline attractions at the Iowa State Fair this summer.

New discoveries for the betterment of agriculture which have been worked out in the college laboratories are among the features to be brought to the fair by the Ames experts. These discoveries cover such subjects as control of animal disease, livestock feeding, protection from the European corn borer, modern farm building construction, and conservation of farm waste products The exhibit will be accompanied by lecturers from Ames during the entire fair period, who will assist farmers with their individual problems and answer general questions.

Fair Sponsors Horseshoe Meet

Des Moines, Special:

Local horseshoe enthusiasts have just received invitations to participate in the annual statewide horseshoe pitching tournament at the Iowa State Fair at Des Moines August 30 and 31 and September 1. Cash prizes amounting to $400 will be awarded to contest winners.

A new champion will be chosen from the more than one hundred entries expected for the event. Many new stars have appeared in various parts of Iowa during the last six months which insures keener competition than ever for the Iowa championship this summer. Any individual may enter the contest and rules may be obtained by writing to A. R Corey, State Fair Secretary.

Numerous Amusements at Fair

Des Moines, Special:

The biggest amusement program that has ever ben scheduled for any such event in the history of the state is now being assembled here for the Iowa State Fair Aug. 25 to Sept. 3.

An eight-day program of attractions which will be continuous from 9:00 o'clock every morning until 11:00 o'clock at night, will be presented. It will include two days of auto racing five days of horse racing, six days of whippet dog races, 15 hippodrome thrillers, 8 bands and orchestras grand opera, fireworks spectacles, mammoth "Midway", an old fiddlers contest, four nights of society horse shows, a statewide horseshoe pitching tournament, and many other like attractions.

"The 1926 Fair will be Iowa's greatest outing," Secretary A. R. Corey today declared.

GRAND OPERA AT STATE FAIR

Mmo. Kitaieff, famous mezzo-soprano, who will take one of the leading roles in Massenet's great opera "Herodiade" to be presented each evening at the Iowa State Fair, Aug. 25th to Sept. 3. The opera will include many well known stars and an international ballet, under the direction of M. Thaviu, conductor.

Women Exhibit at The Fair

Des Moines, Special:

The Women's Exposition at the Iowa State Fair this year will virtually be a fair in itself. It will occupy the entire Women's Building at the Fair and will overflow with several departments quartered in neighboring buildings

This exposition by the women of Iowa will be sponsored by the State Federation of Women's Clubs, the State Women's Committee of the Iowa Farm Bureau, the Iowa Parent-Teachers' Association, and other important state-wide organizations.

The annual Iowa Baby Health Contest will be among the greatest attractions of the Women's Fair. Other features of this division are the cooking schools, daily style shows, home furnishing lectures and demonstrations, pageants, nature study, dramatic instruction, home management, and citizenship work. A series of daily lectures and demonstrations of setting up exercises for women to develop greater physical perfection is a new feature of great general interest.

Increase Race Purses

Des Moines, Special:

Purses for the harness and running race schedule which will be one of the big attractions of the Iowa State Fair this summer, have been increased by more than $3,000. The state fair horse racing card this year offers total purses of more than $21,500.00.

"Derby Day", a complete afternoon's racing program sot aside for running races exclusively, will be a new race feature. This will take place on Saturday, August 28. On all other days the schedule will be made up to include both harness and running races.

Over 300 fast horses from the finest racing stables in the mid-west are entered in these events. Many of the harness entries will come to the Des Moines track fresh from grand circuit triumphs.

Expect Record Livestock Show

Des Moines, Special:

The National Livestock Show which is to be an important part of the Iowa State Fair here this summer, promises to surpass the record-breaking 1925 show in both size and quality. The premiums in this division aggregate more than $80,000.

The public will be able to see more than 7,000 head of swine, cattle, sheep and horses when the mammoth show barns open their gates, according to advance estimates. From far away Vermont on the east to California on the west, entries have already been received. The list of competitors for the huge prize money includes famous breeding farms from over the whole United States.

A special show feature will be a department devoted to poultry, sheep, pigs, and calves, raised by the boys and girls from Iowa's farms.

Plan Old Fiddlers Contest

Des Moines, Special:

The big championship fiddlers' contest scheduled for the Iowa State Fair on Friday and Saturday, Aug. 27-28 is attracting old fiddlers from the entire mid-west.

Over one hundred veteran musicians from all parts of Iowa participated in the State fair fiddlers' contest held last year, and this year's contest is looming even larger than the first. All contestants must be fifty years of age or more, and only the tunes of a generation back will be allowed in competition. Full particulars about the contest may be secured from A. R. Corey, Secretary of the State Fair, Des Moines, Iowa.

Fair to Offer Motor Show

Des Moines, Special:

The Iowa State Fair this summer promises many surprises for Iowa automobile enthusiasts at the mid-season motor show to be held from August 25 to September 3, according to advance exhibits thus far scheduled by officials.

More than 100 of the new designs which have been brought out since the winter months will be on display on the motor show floor at the fair Many eastern manufacturers and dealers plan to send special shipments to Des Moines for this show. Trucks tractors, and inter-city busses will augment the automobile exhibits.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

PROMISES BIG TIME FOR LEGIONNAIRES

Heading the list of hosts who will welcome the thousands of American Legionnaires to the eighth annual national convention in Philadelphia October 11 to 15 will be the Legion's leader in Pennsylvania, Department Commander L. McK. Crumrine of Washington, Pa.

Commander Crumrine as host will be faced with the inevitable problem of hosts, "What shall we do with our guests and where shall we take them?"

Philadelphia, the site of more historical spots and relics than any city in America, solves the problem of what to do with the visiting Legionnaires. There are enough places of interest in Philadelphia and vicinity to more than occupy the time the Legionnaires will have to see them. Further, since Philadelphia is the scene this year of the Sesquicentennial exhibition, which celebrates 150 years of American independence, the Quaker City's hospitality will be at its height when the Legionnaires visit there.

Chief among the places of interest to be viewed by Legionnaires is Independence hall, the most historic spot in America, where the Declaration of Independence was adopted July 4, 1776. Here is housed the Liberty Bell, which first proclaimed the nation's freedom From 9 a. m. to 4 p.

m. each day Legionnaires will be permitted to examine the famous bell where it rests in the main corridor.

Christ church, one of the oldest in America, founded in 1695 and where worshiped Washington, Franklin, Robert Morris, Betsy Ross and other patriots of Revolutionary days, will be seen. Seven of the signers of the Declaration of Independence lie buried there. The chime of eight bells is the oldest in the colony and in tune with the Liberty Bell rang out on July 4, 1776.

Betsy Ross house, "the birthplace of Old Glory," where Mrs. Elizabeth Ross is said to have made the first American flag in 1777, will be of great interest to the veterans. In this house can be seen relics of William Penn and other early Philadelphia souvenirs.

Carpenters' hall, where the first Continental congress met in 1774, and Congress hall, where Washington and Adams were inaugurated and where Washington made his farewell address, are among the spots of interest.

Other places of interest are the Benedict Arnold mansion, purchased by Arnold for his wife and now used for a restaurant; Chew mansion, scene of some of the heaviest fighting of the Battle of Germantown in 1777; Franklin's house, where memorials and relics of the great American can be seen; William Penn house, the first brick house in Philadelphia, Grant's cabin, which Grant occupied as his headquarters during the winter of 1864-65, and Old Swedes church, one of the oldest buildings in America.

In the vicinity of Philadelphia can be visited Valley Forge Memorial park, Gettysburg battlefield, scene of Washington's crossing of the Delaware, Fort Washington, Bryn Athyn cathedral, a notable architectural achievement built at a cost of $10,000,000, and Penn Treaty park and monument.

Prexy Sweeps Streets

From president of the University of Arizona to street sweeping was the unusual role played by Dr. C. H. Marvin of Tucson, Ariz., recently.

The job of street sweeping was taken on by President Marvin for one afternoon as the result of the failure of Tucson to win from Phoenix in an American Legion membership contest. The doctor, who is an ardent Legionnaire, declared that if Phoenix won the contest he would personally sweep Tucson's main thoroughfare. He did and made a good job of it.

Makes Legion Known

"The radio is making the American Legion a household word throughout the land," declared National Adjutant James F. Barton recently. In compliance with the Legion's national radio program this year 27 Legion departments have conducted highly successful radio programs and others are being planned.

TRAVEL AND OTHER WRAPS; BLACK FROCKS ARE POPULAR

NOW, when half the world is "a-traveling" or getting ready for vacations and outings, the shops are making exhibits of new coats in novel adaptations of current styles. These exhibits attract the rank and file of us with their many novelties, but sell us smart utility coats that will answer for all-round wear, including travel. However, one may indulge in a novelty or so without extravagance, since they are often moderately priced. There are many pretty tailored models in white flannel, sometimes with inlays on collar and cuffs of light colors. Flannels and kashmir in coral pink, light green and sand, topped by white lapin collars are cut in the straight-line fashion, varied by capes and cape backs and having narrow stitched belts of the fabric.

Capes of all lengths are used on land or sail the seas in ships. Then there are long, soft enveloping capes of tweed that look equal to all emergencies of travel whether by train, motor, ship or airplane. Some of these are in the novelty weaves of tweed and ombre shadings and many coats have raglan sleeves.

However flattering the colorful, cool and dainty frocks, popular for present wear in the afternoon or evening, they cannot eclipse the all-black or black-and-white dresses that make their annual appearance in midsummer and are with us once again. There is always a place in the wardrobe, summer or winter, for the black dress, but its unique smartness makes a stronger impression in summer among so many colorful rivals that serve to set it off.

Among the styles presented for afternoon there are some attractive crepe de chine models with rippling skirts, apron draperies and long loose sleeves. Others, especially designed for the larger women, follow the straight-line silhouette, introducing groups of inverted plaits in the skirts and a belted and slightly bloused waistline. Vestees, jabots and collars in white, or showing touches of white, are liked in these models and occasionally a black frock reveals white pipings. A pretty new sleeve for midsummer is tight fitting above the elbow, but is split and falls away from the arm below it. In frocks of georgette this same type of sleeve has graduated ruffles attached at the elbows corresponding with circular flounces on the skirt. Black georgette crepe with polka dots in white is a charming medium for black-and-white frocks with white lingerie gilet, collar or vestee in white. For evening black chiffon appears in low-necked sleeveless gowns that have full coats of the lighter materials—like flat crepe—and monkey fur contributes a fringe to many of them.

A very attractive coat is fashioned of black and white hairline stripe, with a short cape at the back. Bands of the material, with stripes running crosswise, serve for trimming the coat and edging the cape, in which the stripes are vertical. Black and white are promoted in coats of black taffeta lined with white kashmir. Facings of kashmir down the front are edged with looped fringe of wool yarn.

Two good coats for general wear lay no claim to novelty but invite attention to good style and appropriateness. The coat at the left of the picture is intricately cut and faultlessly tailored with no trimming except large buttons on the sleeves. It has a collar of summer fur. The coat at the right is a little more elaborate, showing pipings of satin and featuring large pockets and flaring sleeves. Coats of this kind are usually made of a twill in tan, navy, beige or light brown shades. Whatever the style or material used, coats in present exhibits emphasize the slender silhouette and depart very little from straight lines.

Light-weight tweed coats, in tan or gray mixtures, innocent of trimming, except for a button or so on sleeves and pockets, are great favorites with persistent travelers and are just as appropriate for sports wear as for journeys. Tweed in two tones—as beige and tan—with half-length cape at the back is a variety of travel coat that pleases those who motor overskirts, long-bloused bodices and wide, crushed girdles, of the material. Sometimes they have floating panels.

A perennial favorite returns in simple gowns of black satin, some of them sleeveless, like those shown in the picture. These are tailored types, but, being sleeveless, they are very adaptable and will see one through a summer afternoon and evening. The frock at the left has a bloused bodice and long shoulder. Fine embroidered batiste, in collars or trimming touches, as shown in the gown at the right, is a charming finish for the black satin afternoon frock. But the neck treatment may be changed for evening wear. A tulle scarf, a flower on the shoulder or a bit of jewelry may do the trick and convert a day frock into evening dress. This is one good reason for the appeal of black satin.

ROAD BUILDING

NAMES OF NOTED ROADS CHANGED

"There is no more reason for abolishing the names of our famous highways than there would be for abolishing the names of crack trains," says Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club. "It is right for the railroads to establish numbers for their trains, and these numbers are always used by railroad men; the old familiar names, however, are used by the traveling public. The Twentieth Century, the Overland Express, or the Seminole Limited, known only by numbers, would lose half their romance. The same is true of our highways.

"Calling state and federal highways by numbers is the efficient method, but in using numbers we should not abolish the historic names that have attached themselves to those highways. No routing agency would wish to go back to the old system of using names only; the combination of the official number and the unofficial name is ideal. Such names as the Lincoln, Grant, Dixie, Appalachian, Old Spanish trails, and the National Old trails have a tremendous historical and geographical significance. Traveling over these roads is more of an adventure than if these famous names were to be discarded for the highly efficient and highly impersonal numbering system.

"The recommendation of the joint board of the Interstate highways at Washington to eliminate the names of highways has met with organized opposition all over the country. It is pointed out that at the beginning of the good roads movement, men have been moved to give their funds because of the inspiration of such names as Lincoln, Lee and Harding; it is also pointed out that the traveling public has become so familiar with these names that much confusion would result in eliminating them entirely. The Appian and Ostian ways, known as numbers 21 and 22, would never have gone down in history. Let us retain our numbers for efficiency, but let us retain our names for sentiment; in this manner the engineer and the layman will be satisfied."

Will Erect Memorial to "Father of Good Roads"

Joseph H. Weeks, "the real father of good roads in Pennsylvania," who established the first comprehensive system of highways and who was the first president of the Keystone Automobile club, is to be honored by the erection of a $35,000 memorial in Swarthmore.

Funds for the memorial are being raised through the efforts of the Keystone Automobile club and by popular subscription. The club has purchased a plot of ground triangular in shape at Baltimore avenue and Chester road, in the center of which it will erect a memorial monument, the center feature of which will be a bronze plaque containing a relief map of the state highway system established by the Sproul act of 1911, which act Mr. Weeks was instrumental in having written upon the statute books.

The memorial will be in the nature of a small park, in the center of which there is to be a sunken terrace circular in form and at the bottom of which the plaque will rest. It then can be viewed from every angle. Mr. Weeks died in 1919, and plans for the memorial have been considered ever since that time.

Motorists will have about 5,900 more miles of concrete road to travel over during 1926 than they had in 1925. Added to the 31,700 miles built in previous years, there are now approximately 37,600 miles of concrete on the highways in the United States outside limits of incorporated cities and villages.

The building of 5,900 miles of concrete highways in a single year establishes a new record and along with the improvement of many other miles of gravel and grading was no small job for the road builders. It involved the use of tremendous quantities of materials and the employment of a great army of workers.

A feature of the past year's highway construction activities was the efforts of the road builders to inconvenience the motorists as little as possible. In every way the policies of the state highway departments were to serve the highway user.

More attention was paid to detours around construction jobs. They were kept in good condition and were carefully marked so that the motorist could reach his destination with the least inconvenience.

Billions for Roads

Road-making plans for this year in America will call for the expenditure of nearly $1,250,000,000, which will exceed the amount thus spent in any previous year. It had been thought that fine progress had been made in the creation of great thoroughfares, but it seems that the soil has merely been scratched. As a result of the motor industry all the country is pledged to a program of road building that will ultimately link up virtually all the cities of the nation.

Reckless Questioning

Attorney J. Lyman Gray was questioning Dr. E. A. Gates during a trial in Superior court relative to the time that he visited a patient, and the physician said he believed the date was December 25.

"Was it on Christmas day?" the attorney asked.

"It was December 25, as I recall it," the physician said.

"December 25 is usually Christmas, isn't it?" the lawyer asked.

"That is a reckless question, isn't it, Mr. Gray?" Judge Christopher T. Callahan asked with a twinkling of the eye.—Springfield Union.

City Water From Glacier

The city of Boulder, Colo., has taken steps to purchase from the United States government the land occupied by the Arapahoe glacier, distant about fifteen miles from the city, with the object of supplementing the city's water supply from the melting ice. According to the weather bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture, this is the first instance of a town or city in this country deriving a part of its water supply from a glacier.

Details are omitted and War department officials are wondering whether clouds of mosquitoes obscured the targets or whether marksmanship was afflicted with disaster from the mosquito either on the front sight or on the rifleman's nose.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

M'KINLEY FIRM GAVE CASH TO AID SMITH

Slush Probe Reveals All Illinois Utilities Helped.

Chicago.—Col Frank L. Smith had the financial backing in the Illinois primary of all three major groups of public utilities interests, including the Illinois Power and Light company, of which Senator William B. McKinley is nominal chairman of the board

Former Congressman Ira C Copley of Aurora, who developed the $50,000,000 Western United Gas and Electric company, contributed $25,000.

Clement Studebaker, who headed the company of financiers who took over the McKinley utilities interests, retaining the senator as chairman of the board, contributed $20,000.

This makes the total of direct contributions to Colonel Smith's campaign from the utilities group $203,735.19.

In addition to this Mr. Insull contributed $10,000 to the Crowe-Barrett Cook county chest, considered as indirect aid to the Smith candidacy, and $10,000 to the Deneen-West group.

Another item of $2,500 got into the record, which subsequently may be shown to be a part of the Insull fund handled by Attorney Daniel F. Schuyler for anti-World court propaganda, or may appear as a new item. It was given direct to the Smith fund by Schuyler.

The McKinley total also was boosted by $1,475, which United States Marshal James A. White of Murphysboro contributed.

The revised ledger account, assuming that the latest $2,500 from Schuyler is a new item, reads as follows:

For McKinley	$361,091 72
For Smith	287,282.70
For Deneen county ticket	132,298 19
For Crowe county ticket	171,500.00
For George E. Brennan	20,841 42
Total	$974,014 03

The public-utility contributions to Colonel Smith's fund, assuming that the Schuyler $2,500 is a new item, now stand:

By Samuel Insull, direct	$125,000.00
By propaganda financing	33,735 19
By Colonel Copley	25,000 00
By Clement Studebaker	20,000 00
By Daniel Schuyler	2,500 00
By Insull, to Crowe group	10,000 00
Total	$216,235 19

Insull's total contributions, including the Schuyler $2,500, acknowledged to date, stand as follows:

To Smith, direct	$125,000.00
Propaganda for Smith	33,735.19
To Crowe-Barrett committee	10,000.00
To Deneen-West committee	10,000 00
To Smith by Schuyler	2,500.00
To George E. Brennan	15,000.00
Total	$196,235 19

Widow Is Arrested in Double Murder Mystery

New Brunswick, N. J.—Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, widow of Rev. Edward W. Hall, pastor of the Protestant Episcopal church of St John the Evangelist, who was shot and killed with Mrs. Eleanor Mills on September 14, 1922, was arrested in her home in New Brunswick, charged with the murder, and locked in the Somerset county jail in Somerville.

The arrest was the result of charges made by Arthur S. Reihl, in a petition for annulment of his marriage to Louise Geist. The girl at the time of the murder was employed as a maid in the Hall household

Mrs. Hall was released in bail of $15,000.

Pencil Had Traveled Far From Its Owner

Like the law, coincidence is reputed to have a long arm, remarks "Peter Simple," in the London Post. A story sent to me by a correspondent on the anniversary of a strange happening is a case in point.

"I was in Clifton, Bristol," she writes, "and having occasion to use a pencil, asked a little girl who had one in her hand to lend it to me. The pencil proved to be one which had been in my possession 27 or 28 years before—quite an ordinary pencil, except that it had my name—a very unusual one—on it.

"The child had no idea that it ever had been my name, as I had changed it many years before she was born. I asked her where she had found the pencil, and she told me that her brother had picked it up a few days before on Clifton downs.

"I had had it, and must have lost it in Ireland."

Acres of Wild Geese

The slight protection the laws have given migratory wild geese are not without result. Recently Capper's Weekly told how thousands of these birds on their northward flight had stopped in Oregon's fields of new wheat to browse on them. John Hirus, driving a bus to a town in Manitoba, was forced to stop his car for several minutes a recent morning by a dense flock of wild geese. Several birds struck the windshield. Fifty acres of wheat stubble that he passed was a moving mass of geese which made no effort to get out of the way as people passed among them. As geese are the original honkers, perhaps they should be entitled to the right of way.

Testament Reading

It required 69 hours and 20 minutes of constant reading for members of the First Methodist church at Yucaipa, Calif., to finish the Old and New Testaments, says the Pathfinder Magazine. This is 10 minutes better than last year's time. In 1925 the Seventh Day Adventists in Boston read the Bible aloud in 55 hours and 47 minutes.

ONAWA BANK HELD UP BY LONE GUNMAN

Onawa, Iowa, August 4.—A bandit heavily armed, walked into the First Trust and Savings bank here at 12:30 o'clock noon Saturday, held up the assistant cashier, J. E. Tradett, scooped up $500 in bills and escaped, it is thought, in an automobile.

According to a description obtained by officers here, the robber was a middle aged man, of medium build. It is not known whether he had a confederate waiting with a car in a near alley or if he staged his get away alone, as no one saw him leave town.

Officials of the bank, after checking up, said that the bandit obtained an amount slightly in excess of $500 Officers here had found no trace of the robber.

Later: The robber was captured in a corn field by a posse. He was seen by a farmer who notified the sheriff. The farmer received $1,000 reward for his capture. The robber assisted by a young man in his getaway.

If Your Motor Walls Were Glass

YOU WOULD SEE THIS LOSS OF Gas and Power

Stormizing will restore full power and give you a "new" motor to run.

Stormizing is a mechanically accurate process that restores cylinders to their original accuracy. The Process is so accurate it can be repeated several times as cylinders wear.

The Stormizing Process will keep motor at Full Power for 75,000 to 200,000 miles of use. It's the economic way.

The SAVINGS in gas and oil will pay the small cost and you have continuous full powered motor service during the life of your car.

Drive in and let us look over your car. This will cost you nothing. We will show you the advantages and economy of Stormizing and how it pays for itself.

EVEMENT DAY OF COUNTY H CLUBS HELD AT GARNER LAST WEDNESDAY

Honor Goes To Misses Mildred And Dorothy Hampel Of Ell Township

om The Garner Leader)

chievement day of the 4-H clubs held yesterday, August 4, in the l high school building. This is day on which all 4-H clubs of the nty exhibit the work they have mplished during the year. This r the clubs took up the study of e furnishing and bedspreads, tains, rugs, redecorated candle- ks, chairs and other articles suit- e for the home, were on display. his is also the day on which art- s to be exhibited at the fair in Moines are selected, as only the t among the lot can be entered the state fair. Each of the seven bs which were represented at yes- day's meeting, had demonstration ms there and Mrs. Edith Barker lhe extension department of Iowa te college, was present and selec- the best team to go to the state to represent Hancock county club work.

Misses Hampell Selected

Misses Mildred and Dorothy Ham- of the 4-H Home Furnishing club Ell township wore given first hon- by Mrs. Barker, and together h their efficient leader, Mrs. Jen- gs Anderson, will go to Des Moin- the week of the 29th of this nth. They will leave here Sunday order to be there for roll call nday morning. Besides represent- the county in club work, one of e girls will also take part in the alth contest and style show of b girls of the state.

The Misses Hampel gave a very e demonstration. First they intro- ced themselves and Miss Mildred plained their reasons for selecting their subject for the demonstra- n,' "Refinishing of Furniture.' e said because it was economical d practical. Nearly every home s old pieces of furniture which ld be used to good advantage by finishing them. Cart, however, ust be taken in their selection, she id.

Actual Demonstration

Miss Dorothy Hampel then exhibit- d the particular chair they had osen and called attention to the mple lines and the quality of the ood. The paint was first removed om the chair with a homemade nt remover, the contents of which e four tablespoons of lye to a art of corn starch solution. The lution is made of water and corn rch cooked until thick. This is ap- lied with a brush, care being taken at none of it touches the skin. iss Dorothy stated that the reason r using the homemade paint remov , was because it was more econom- al and that is one of the aims of e club members.

The next process is the filling of ll crevices with plaster paris which ey considered best, and it is again ft to dry, after which it is thor- ughly sandpapered with heavy per The first coat of paint was hen applied, using a comercial flat int. A 12-hour drying process is hen required.

Pieces of wood were used to dem- nstrate the balance of the process s actual work could not be done on he chair until it was thoroughly y. After that length of time, Miss ildred explained, the chair is a- ain thoroughly sandpapered with 0 paper and a coat of slow drying namel put on. She stated the slow rying enamel is better because f its more durable qualities. In or- er to give color and add life to the ork, a stencil is applied with oil aints containing Japanese dryer.

In concluding the demonstration, Mis Dorothy summarized their work nd exhibited a chair which had al- ready been refinished and redecora- ed.

Credit Due Mrs. Anderson

Much credit is due Mrs. Jennings nderson, who, as leader of the girls lub work in Ell township, has work- d untiringly in helping them to ac- omplish their work this year. Miss amer of the extension department f Iowa State College, Ames, who as charge of the work, was also resen, as well as Mrs. E. J. Schnei- der, of Goodell, who is county chair- man.

Other honors coming to the 4-H Home Furnishing club of Ell town- ship were the selection of curtains and candlesticks made and redecor- ated by Miss Dorothy Hampel, and a writing table refinished by Miss Ethel Baack of Klemme, to be ex- hibited at the state fair.

TAKE YOUR HOME PAPER

(An Editorial from The Farmer, of St. Paul, Minn.)

In the course of our travels thru the rural sections of the Northwest, we are constantly impressed by the fact that a wide-awake, progressive home paper plays a most important part in community progress. In fact, it is difficult for a community to move forward if the home paper does not match up to and properly reflect the enthusiasm of the leaders of tha' community. On the other hand, a live home paper can do much to wake up a sleeping com- munity.

We sometimes find communities where the local paper is far ahead of the spirit of the people. In such communities the editor plays a heart breaking game. On the other hand, many communities stand still year after year because of a dead or sleeping home paper The right sort of working partnership between the community and the press nearly al- ways brings results.

We believe that the Northwest is particularly fortunate with refer- ence to its local papers. In a recent editorial, the Wisconsin State Jour- nal says things that have been on our mind for a long time. We glad- ly add our approval to this editorial which describes the unselfish ideal- ism usually to be found behind the local newspaper. The editorial foll- ows:

"The local newspaper in the Unit- ed States is each year getting on a firmer foundation and becoming more and more useful to its home town and its community.

"It is the home newspaper which boosts the town, year in and year out, which takes the lead in every enterprise which has for its purpose the upbuilding of the community.

"We frequently hear it said that the old-time independent spirit of the newsparer is gone; that its edi- torial policy is now subservient to the business office. Yet this is not true. There is more unselfish ideal- ism in the average local newspaper than in any other business enterprise It frequently speaks out in the way which it believes will be for the good of the nation and of the com- munity, regardless of what the con- sequences may be from a business standpoint.

The local newspaper is the prin- cipal booster for the community, and it does its boosting often without hope of material reward. Unfortun- ate is the comunity which neither appreciates nor supports its local newspaper."

TREASURER SUURBALLE GIVES SOME FIGUERS ON AUTO LICENSES ISSUED

Business This Year Far Ahead Of ame Period Last Year

The Times is in receipt of a letter from County Treasurer John Suur- balle, who calls our attention to an error in The Times of last week, in which we gave the number of new licenses issued was 28, but it should have read "88' were issued for the month of July That's quite a big difference.

Mr. Suurballe also gave us some more interesting figures from his office He says that to date (Aug. 5) "We have issued 42 more truck licences than were issued for the whole year 1925."

"Also at close of business July 31, 1926, we were 226 pleasure cars a- head of same date 1925 Sure looks like 'his County is broke."

The editor wishes to thank Mr. Suurballe for the above information

ELABORATE BATH FOR LIGHT POLES

The tall cedar or fir pole that car- ries electric wires across the country has many enemies. Animals gnaw it, birds peck it, and bugs, parasites, borers, fungi and ground rot attack it from every point. To protect the pole and to prolong its life of service there has been developed a hot bath treatment as elaborate as that be- loved by the bulbous Roman sena- tors of old.

A steel cylinder eight feet in di- ameter and one hundred and fifty feet long is built on the ground. Through it runs a two-foot track, upon which a tiny electric locomo- tive hauls flat cars laden with the raw poles. When the cylinder is filled, both ends are closed and the air is pumped out, producing a par- tial vacuum that dries the last mois- ure from the wood.

After this the whole cylinder is pumped full of creosote, made from the coal-tar from gas plants. The pressure is brought to one hundred and fifty pounds to the square inch, and the temperature is raised to 220 degress F. Under this treatment the pores of the pole are open, as do those of a person under a hot towel, and the creosote penetrates the wood to a depth of several inches. The re- osote in the cylinder is then pumped out and a second vacuum is produced to clean the poles and dry them af- ter their hot bath.

When the cylinder is opened the little locomotive is hitched to the miniature train, and the cars of long poles are hauled away to be stored until used.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK NOT CLOSED, AS REPORTED

The following article was handed to us by depot agent, M. O. Barr which may of interest to any of our readers who may visit the west this year:

"There is no truth to statment that Glacier National Park is closed account of forest fires, and this is to advise that all our facilities in Glaci- er Park are being operated as usual without any difficulty. Further there is absoultely nothing to prevent ourists from making contemplated Park trips in perfect safety and comfort.

"The fire referred to in newspa- er dispatches was on the west side on Lake McDonald, near Belton, and is under control. There are no fires on east side of Park, where all of our tours are made, and nothing is interferring with movement of tourists. Mr. H. A. Noble, General Manager Glacier Park Hotel Com- pany, wires there are more people on trails today than at any time in history of Park They are in no way inconvenienced, and there is posi- tively no cause for apprehension, as fire was not in area covered by any of our tours.

"Will appreciate if you will ad- vise all interested."

FAMOUS ARTIST INSTRUCTS

William de Leftwich Dodge, famous mural artist, in his studio at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition grounds in Philadelphia, where the 150th anniversary of signing the Declaration of Independence will be celebrated from June, to December, of this year, giving instructions to a group of young artists who are creating the "Rainbow City." Mr. Dodge is the color expert for the exposition, and every bit of color work done must be approved by him.

COOL "BIDDY" WITH WET MASH

Moist Feed Will Help to Counteract Hot Weather

Hot weather is hard on the poul- try business because it has a tenden- cy to check egg production thru loss of appetite of the layers and because it often starts the birds to molting early. One way to help counteract the effects of the hot weather is to give the layers moist mash.

Moist mash is very palatable and hence the hens will consume more feed than would be the case with only the dry mash. About six pounds of mash should be the maximum amount to soak and feed daily, the poultrymen at Iowa State College say. If possible, wet the mash with milk and feed it in a crumbly but not in a sloppy condition.

In addition to the wet mash, the hens also should have access to their regular hoppers of dry mash. Feed- ing wet mash is recommended be- cause it will aid in getting the birds to consume a larger amount.

Another thing that will help dur- ing the hot weather is to remove all of the windows fromt he poultry house and see that plenty of air cir- culates thru it. If the window space is not sufficient to allow an adequate air supply, remove a few of the boards.

Anything that can be done at this season to maintain egg produc- tion will pay big dividends later. In a good laying flock they declare that August and September will ordin- arily pay the biggest dividends for the feed used of any months of the year.

PECK HANSON EVEN PUTS WALL PAPER ON HOUSE FOUN- DATION, SAYS SIGNAL

The following article is clipped from the Garner Signal, of last week:

"Peck Hanson is making big im- provements on the house he owns just north of his home. He has fixed the foundation, painted it out- side, papered the inside, put in sew- er connections, and has nearly fin- ished a thorough job of it."

Gosh, Peck must be right in style. Sure must be a swell foundation, all papered pretty inside, all connect- ed to the sewer and everything. We wonder if the foundation has a bath room, a sleeping porch and a den?

A WILL 600 YEARS OLD

Forest City Summit: Palmer Ostby left a photographic reproduction of a will that was written some six hundred years ago in Norway, at the office this week. The old will is in possession of Andrew Engebretson, who lives north of Leland and has been handed down from father to son for six hundred years of its ex- istence. It is said that the will is well preserved, and is written on a kind of parchment that does not exist today, and on of the peculiar things is that no one can read it. The form of writing and characters of letters used have changed so much that it appears to have been written in an unknown language, though it must have been Norse at that time.

Corn Frightens Horse To Death

Mr. A. Erickson of east of town lost a horse at the Farmers Elevator in a peculiar manner last Friday. Mr. Erickson drove into the elevator af- ter a load of shelled corn. The spout was adjusted to his wagon box and opened when the corn came rattling down the spout one of his horses, which was blind, rared up and fell over and died in a few minutes. The dry shelled corn coming down thru the metal spout makes a loud rasp- ing noise and it is thought that the horse was actually frightened to death.—Dows Advocate.

It is said that Great Britain last year imported enough apples from America to pay one-third of her an- nual debt payment to Uncle Sam. No wonder those European diplo- mats can hand out so much apple- sauce.

PLAN FAIR EXHIBIT TO SHOW FARM PROGRESS

Des Moines, Special:

The great strides forward which modern agriculture has made during the past several years, will be shown at the Iowa State Fair this summer, by a series of graphic displays arranged by Iowa Farmers and their wives, in co-operation with Iowa State College officials and the State Farm Bureau.

In this branch there will be assem- bled twenty-four women's project and seven men's project exhibits, repre- senting thirty-one different County Farm Bureaus throughout the state. These exhibits will show the leading projects which farmers have been working on during the past year, and will be accompanied by demonstrations which will show the benefits which have been derived from these pro- jects.

The exhibits will include such sub- jects as soil improvement, farm man- agement, tuberculosis eradication, co- operative marketing, corn yield, cloth- ing work, poultry culling, and citi- zenship.

A complete horticultural show, county and individual farm exhibits of prize grains and other products, and an extensive dairy exposition will also constitute part of the agricult- ural department at this year's state fair. Prizes in the agricultural and horticultural departments of the fair aggregate more than $15,000.00.

To Aid Cattle Feeders

Des Moines, Special:

That Iowa livestock raisers may better realize larger profits, prepara- tions are being made here for a new and unusual type of livestock exhibit in connection with the Iowa State Fair and National Livestock Show to be held Aug. 25 to Sept. 3.

Over thirty head of various kinds of feeder cattle will comprise this exhibit, which will be designed to show farmers the kind of cattle which will pay them the greatest profits in their feeding operations, and the kind with which they are apt to sus- tain losses. An exhibit showing all of the various commercial cuts of meat will accompany this display.

Advice on feeding problems and counsel concerning the types of stock which should be bought will be given visiting farmers by experts from the Omaha Stock Yards, the United States Department of Agriculture, and Iowa State College.

Fair Offers Good Music

Des Moines, Special:

The greatest assembly of bands, or- chestras and other musical attractions that ever played for visitors at any Iowa exposition, has been engaged as a part of the entertainment program for the Iowa State Fair, August 25 to Sept. 3. The array of musical or- ganizations include Thavlu and his 52-piece band, the 3rd District Amer- ican Legion Band, Karl King's Mili- tary Band, personally directed by this well-known composer, The Halcyon Players and International Ballet, the Old Soldier's Drum Corps and two leading orchestras.

"Herodiate", Massenet's great grand opera, will be presented each evening in front of the grandstand at the fair, as one of the features of the musical program. Well known soloists will sing in the leading roles

To Reveal Science Secrets

Des Moines, Special:

Modern science will have a prom- inent place in the program at the coming Iowa State Fair, Aug. 25 to Sept. 3 in a series of exhibits which is being especially arranged by the State University of Iowa.

Among the exhibits will be found demonstrations of the method by which modern power plants are oper- ated, the workings of radium and x-ray in curing disease, the manu- facture of glass, the science of radio, and the preparation of many of the medicines which have curbed disease and pestilence. The work being done to cure deformed and crippled chil- dren will also be shown in a special exhibit.

Many of the interesting things found in the great natural life museum at Iowa City will be brought to the fair by the Museum Department of the University.

To Name Champion Babies

Des Moines, Special:

Entries in the annual statewide Baby Health contest at the Iowa State Fair, Aug. 25 to Sept. 3, promise to equal or surpass the record entries in previous contests.

The champion boy and champion girl of Iowa will be selected in this contest which is open to everyone. Mothers having babies entered in the contest will receive advice from a widely known baby consultant who has been retained by the Fair Board to serve throughout the entire fair period.

Foreign Travel Holds Surprises

Americans on First Trip Abroad Find Hotel and Train Customs Different.

New York—Americans contemplating a first trip abroad are particularly interested in all the hints they can obtain on differences in mail, travel and hotel customs abroad, said a representative of the American Express company recently, when asked for some general information on baggage and other items connected with travel. Seasoned travelers know all these things, but each year produces a brand new crop of visitors to Europe who have to get this information. Not only are customs different, but common everyday things go by different names, he pointed out, and this applies not only to countries where foreign languages are spoken, but to England, where a street car is called a tram, "curb" is spelled "kerb," and a "check" is "cheque," and that the latter has to bear a revenue stamp.

Division of service on trains into classes, since many years unknown in America, is universal in Europe. In most countries there are three classes and in some four. First class is everywhere used only by the very rich—and by Americans. Second class has practically disappeared in England (on account of the excellence of third class), except on a few trains connecting with boats for the Continent, on which services there is a demand for second class all the way through. The almost universal habit among well-informed Americans, he said, is to travel third class in England and second in most of Europe, going first perhaps in Spain and Portugal. Where fourth class is found the seats are seldom upholstered.

In most countries circular tickets (like our prewar mileage books), good for a certain amount of travel anywhere over certain lines or within the country, may be obtained. In some, reduced rates obtain for trips of more than a certain length; in others, tickets good for unlimited travel for a certain number of days may be obtained at a flat price.

Ticket Examination.

Throughout Europe tickets are invariably examined on entering the train platform or boarding the train, and must usually be retained and surrendered at destination.

Time tables, it was said, are not freely distributed in Europe, and it is sometimes difficult to obtain information about connections even from the station agent. On most of the Continent the 24-hour clock is used, the hours from 1 p. m. to midnight being known as 13 to 24 o'clock. Trains are not commonly referred to by their numbers, as in America, and the story of the American who with infinite pains had learned the number of the evening train is classic. "How is No. 15 running this evening?" he asked the station agent. "The 7:43 is reported on time, sir," replied the inflexible Britisher.

The fact that European coaches are divided into compartments is known to most Americans. Originally these compartments ran all the way across the coaches from one side to the other, and access from one compartment to the next was only by opening the door and swinging along an outside running board. Such coaches are still to be found on local runs, and are practically universal in rural districts, but on through runs on the Continent they have been superseded by corridor-and-vestibule cars. The compartments open at one side directly out of doors, but on the other into the corridor, which runs along one side of the coach.

Reserved Seats.

On European railways there are almost no separate coaches consisting entirely of reserved seats, like the pullman cars in America. A few lines in England run pullman cars, and of course all compartments in sleeping cars are on reservation, but in general the above holds true. Instead, any seat, number of seats or compartments in an ordinary day coach may be reserved according to regulations, which vary in different countries.

Usually a small fee is required for reserving a seat, and in some countries, for instance in Italy, the reservation protects the seat only until a few minutes before the time of departure. After that the seat belongs to the one who gets there first. Throughout Europe it is the custom to require the marking of a seat in some manner when leaving it, for however short a time. A book, gloves or hat suffices. It is sometimes possible to obtain exclusive use of a compartment without taking quite all the seats therein.

For sleeping, first (and usually second) class passengers on payment of an additional amount have access to sleeping cars much like the compartments in the newer American pullmans, where all bedding is supplied by the company. On other runs only "couchettes" are available, and the traveler must supply his own covering, if desired. This can usually be rented and turned over to a representative of the renter at the end of the run.

To Americans the total absence of drinking water on most trains (except, of course, in the dining cars) proves an inconvenience, but the natives provide themselves with bottles of mineral water, light wines or beer before leaving and do not seem to suffer in the least.

Table d'Hote on Diners.

Generally only table d'hote meals are served in dining cars. There are several sittings, tickets to which are issued by attendants, a convenience appreciated by Americans.

The amount of baggage carried free varies in different countries, as do the customs. In England most trains carry "luggage vans," or baggage cars, in which trunks and other heavy baggage may be carried, but in which there are no facilities for checking. On arrival at destination each passenger must claim his own trunk.

On most of the Continent only such baggage will be carried free as can be taken into one's compartment, and to be allowed in the compartment at all it must not exceed certain dimensions, so that it can go in the rack above one's head. All other baggage must be "registered," which means that it is carried checked in the baggage car much as in America, except that extra payment must be made.

The advice often encountered to carry only hand baggage is due to the fact that many trains do not carry baggage cars, so that if heavy articles are taken they must often be left behind to come by a later train. Contrary to the custom in America, it is usually the faster trains which do not carry baggage cars and the locals which do.

Sending Letters.

When it is definitely known at what hotels one will be, and on what dates, it is usually more convenient to have one's letters sent there. Otherwise it is best to use the foreign offices of some travel agency or firm. Friends should be warned that only to British possessions will 2 cents carry a letter; elsewhere the minimum charge is 5 cents. The American Express company, whose Paris office during the summer rush handles as many as 40,000 letters a day, finds that 90 per cent of all letters received for patrons carry insufficient postage.

Another thing which causes confusion is that no telegrams or letters can be sent collect, so that when it is expected that cables will arrive after one's departure a small deposit should be left at the address in care of which they will arrive to cover the cost of telegraphing them on.

Hotel customs do not differ greatly from those in this country. The "American plan" of operation is found far more frequently than in the land which gave it birth. Many hotels now make a surcharge for service, and in many cities and some countries there are taxes on hotel bills. These items are not included in the prices quoted for accommodations, but are added to the total of the bill, so that if this is not taken into consideration the total is apt to be more than expected.

The hall porter, or "concierge," is an important individual and can do much to make one's stay pleasant.

Contrary to the usual impression, it is only in England that the traffic goes to the left. Elsewhere, when it has any noticeable predilection at all, it inclines to the right. Americans who have wondered at the incessant squawking of motor horns in Paris are informed that an ordinance requires bulb horns within the city limits.

Taxis are surprisingly cheap in Paris, and nowhere are they much dearer than in this country, in spite of the considerably higher price of gasoline.

Compared with America, there are of course extremely few buildings which have elevators, and those which do often have queer customs. In many apartment houses the elevators will carry one up, but if one wishes to descend one must walk. In others, tenants may ride free, but visitors must pay. Servants are denied the use of the elevators in many places. In spite of cheaper labor and comparatively plenty of servants the automatic elevator is met with much more often than in this country.

European Subways.

Americans who use the European subways are surprised to find first and second-class coaches and smoking cars, with different rates and different tickets for the different classes. In London the rates vary with the distance traveled, and the tickets bear the names of starting point and destination. On the Continent a flat fare is more common. There is no surveillance to see that a traveler with a second-class ticket doesn't get into a first-class coach, but occasionally inspectors come through who mildly collect the additional sum from delinquents.

On some lines season tickets are sold, good for an unlimited number of trips during the period named. As everywhere, the tickets must be shown at the entrance, where they are punched and surrendered at the exit.

In London most of the subways—"tubes," they are called—are deep underground, and so elevators from the train platforms discharge the passengers into shop-lined arcades through which they reach the street. Some of the Paris subways were built by English companies, and consequently the trains run to the left.

MRS. BLANCHE E. MIZE

Mrs. Blanche E. Mize, whose spectacular rise in the business world has been the talk of Kansas for several years, now has branched out into the political game, and is running for the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor. It is the first time a woman has ever aspired to that high office in Kansas, and she will have no opposition in the primaries. She is at present an executive in a building and loan concern in Eldorado, Kan., where she makes her home.

Just eighty-five years after she was launched at New Bedford, Mass., the Charles W. Morgan, the last square-rigged whaling ship in existence, was formally dedicated to posterity at Round Hills, Mass., the home of Col. E. H. R. Green. The old ship was docked in a bed of concrete and sand.

MALCOLM KERLIN

A five-day week for workers during hot weather is advocated by Malcolm Kerlin, acting chief of the United States bureau of efficiency. The most logical policy for efficiency, he asserts, is to add half an hour to each working day in the cool of the morning, and give employees Saturday and Sunday off.

Citizens of the Pacific Northwest joined with the Columbia River Historical expedition in dedicating the monument to early pioneers erected at Astoria by Vincent Astor. The monument is a memorial to Capt. AUSTRIAN STILL TALKS AND SINGS MINUS LARYNX

Surgeon in Vienna Clinic Trains Muscles of Throat to Perform Duties of Lost Glottis.

Vienna.—A man without a larynx, who speaks and sings, was presented at the last meeting of the Society of Physicians by Dr. Hugo Stern of the laryngological clinic in Vienna.

Ignaz Scheuch, fifty-seven years old, an artisan in St. Andrae, in Nether Austria, had a malignant growth in his larynx which necessitated the removal of the entire organ. The operation, carried out by Prof. Marcus Hajek, was a success, and Dr. Hugo Stern undertook to restore to the patient his faculty of speaking by a new method.

In former years the surgeons used to replace the natural larynx by an artificial one of metal, but the experiments made with these substitutes were not satisfactory. Doctor Stern has worked out a plan by which certain muscles in the lower section of the throat are trained to become a sort of pseudo glottis.

The new method has been applied in a number of cases, and it never has failed to have some success, although the results have varied and the faculty of modulation has not always been the same. The best cures have given persons voices very near the normal, but without enabling them to sing. Scheuch, however, can sing two octaves quite correctly, although with a somewhat harsh timbre. In ordinary talk he has reached such perfection that the listener does not notice anything abnormal.

Doctor Stern, who now is endeavoring to perfect his treatment, believes that close investigation of his cases will lead to a change of the present notions regarding the physiological conditions for the modulation of the pitch of the human voice.

China's First Inhabitants Probably Not Mongolians

Madrid.—The first inhabitants of Indo-China were probably not Chinamen or any of their Mongolian relations. Important new facts about the dark past of this corner of the Far East are coming to light as a result of the investigations of the geological service of Indo-China.

At the international geological congress held here, it is reported that human remains unearthed in this region indicate a succession of prehistoric races inhabiting the peninsula that show relations to the early forerunners of the Malays, Australian aborigines and Polynesians. Further study of these finds, say geologists, may yield important information concerning the origin and distribution of the different races of the Far East.

THE STORY SO FAR

On their way to the new Cottonwood gold diggings in Colorado in the early Seventies, Robert Gilson, easterner, and his partner, Buck Hayden, a veteran miner, witness the hold-up of a stage coach, from which the express box is stolen before the bandits are scared off. Among the hold-up victims are Mrs. Constance Deane, and Mrs. Barnaby, who intends to open a restaurant in Cottonwood. Gilson meets Marcus Handy, editor, on his way to start the Cottonwood Courier. Arriving in town, Gilson and Hayden together purchase a mining claim. A threatened lynching is averted by the bravery of Chris McGrath, town marshal. Gilson becomes disgusted with gold digging, what with its unending labor and small rewards, and so the sudden appearance of Shorty Croly, old-time partner of Buck, is not altogether disconcerting to him. Gilson takes a job on the Courier and arrangos to sell his share in the claim to Shorty. His acquaintanceship with Mrs. Deane ripens. As the Courier grows in power a civic spirit is awakened. Following a crime wave, which the marshal seems to overlook, Handy, in his newspaper demands a clean-up.

I read; and I realized that Marcus ad outdone himself. His literary ults and merits alike were, as a sual thing, those of the old-time min-g-camp editor. He overloaded his ought with words and figures of peech; he wrote in stock phrases. ut this editorial was simple, explicit, forceful and as straight to the point s a pistol shot. It recited, with the urtis affair as a text, the present ate of Cottonwood camp—holdups, obberies, brace faro games and all. Where are our schools?" it inquired. Where is our fire protection? Does ny sensible man doubt that a single re in the heart of town would sweep ottonwood off the map? Where is r provision for public health? The ack alley of Main street smells as ud as our municipal morals. here, above everything, is our pro-ction against crime? Do the pres-t authorities really want to suppress ur epidemic of holdups and highway obberies? Have we here the great-st camp in the Rocky mountains—" he editorial trailed off into the glo-es and possibilities of Cottonwood, nd ended with a demand for a mu-icipal government—"to replace the xisting regime of weak, inefficient uff."

I looked up from my reading, and y eyes must have told Marcus what thought.

"It's the Rubicon, I guess," said arcus; "may get me killed in the ext twenty-four hours." And here, though the weight had begun to lift om his spirits, he became his nor-al, dramatic self.

"Don't give a d—n if I do die," he uckled. "By G—d, the sooner they ill me, the soner we'll clean up Cot-nwood!"

I no longer concealed from myself at I loved Constance Deane, loved er with every kind of warm emotion at a man can hold toward a wom-n, but mostly—so young was I—as a erotee loves his saint. Like one ho sinks by imperceptible degrees nder a narcotic, I passed gradually to this torturing yet agreeable mad-ess. And, like a bad patient, I fought e ether. According to the ethics pon which I had been reared, to ve a married woman was a thing o genteel person so much as con-emplated. When it happened—I had eard rumors of cases—one whis-ered the news to his intimates in e shocked tone with which one men-ons hideous vices. For all our re-essed exteriors, we were a roman-ic lot in the circles of my origin, esolutely shutting our minds to such cts of life and lessons of experience at did not fit the picture we found in r sugary fiction. Somewhere there aited for you the One Being. Destiny ould bring her down a flowery path o you. Of course, she would be un-arried; it was always arranged that ay. There were soft passages at hich the sickly imagination of youth ew sweetly faint. Then you were arried. And afterward—but imag-nation halted there. Marriage did not ome within the scheme of romance.

I first looked at the facts of this ntimental entanglement—shyly, as ound the edge of a door—when I had en for less than a week a boarder Mrs. Barnaby's.

The presence of Mrs. Deane at that oard had worked according to the rewd Jim Huffaker's prophecy. Her-lf unconscious, she was bait to Mrs. arnaby's fishing. Within two days fter she consented to receive me, Mrs. arnaby took no more transients. At elve dollars a week—ruinous rates those days—she filled her table ith permanent guests. Even could e boast that she shared with Jim uffaker "the best patronage in wn." As Jim drew, the kind of man ho in settled communities goes in clubs, so we gathered up those ith inhibited desires for the com-ny and society of decent women. chins, a dapper clerk at the bank, Michelson, chief owner in one of the most promising galena claims, Selden, the assayer, Barton, the mining broker, old Pop Eldridge, agent for the stage company—these, probably because they gave me most reason for incipient jealousy, remain most vivid in my memory. Mrs. Barnaby, it appeared, sternly erased from her waiting list all other women than Mrs. Deane. Though, indeed, women of the class which any respectable boarding house would receive applied but rarely.

So all threads of conversation at the table ran together, knotted themselves, in the person of Mrs. Deane. She had the gift of drawing confidences; her very reserve, backed as it was by a sense of vivid sympathy, seemed to spur the confessor on. When I think of her as she was in that rosy dawn of a stormy morning, I see her always as she sat at the head of Mrs. Barnaby's table, the lamplight drawing flecks of gold from the curl of golden-brown hair which tumbled across her shoulder, throwing from her brows shadows that could not veil the blue glint of her eyes, blurring to mystery the quick, whimsical expressions of her mouth. I hear her laughter running its gamut like a flute; the delicious pause and drip of her voice when she hesitated between syllables. And then over that vision rises always the vulgar, invidious glitter of Sam Barton.

My dawning jealousy could find in the conduct of the rest no flaw to criticize. Never had queen more respect, never saint more reverence, than she from this tiny court of hers—all except Barton. He glistened, did Sam Barton—his diamond studs and rings, his heavy watch charm, even his too perfect teeth. Most of his profession and kind took meals at Jim Huffaker's, where passed all the gossip of the camp. In his presence at Mrs. Barnaby's I read a sinister meaning. When he looked at Mrs. Deane, his expression, as I defined it to myself, became sinister, oily, insinuating. Of course, I exaggerated. Still, reviewing Sam Barton after the intervening years, I cannot say that it was all imagination. He alone plied Mrs. Deane with open compliment; he alone sometimes introduced ideas considered in that time wholly inappropriate to the hearing of a lady. Which always caused a moment of embarrassed chill about Mrs. Barnaby's dinner table; a silence broken only when Mrs. Deane adroitly turned the subject.

"There's going to be an assembly ball," I announced one evening as, having got the floor, I retailed camp news.

"Guess I'll have to put on a clean collar and take Mrs. Deane! There, boys, got my bid in first!" said Pop Eldridge hastily.

"Aw, no fair—if you tried to dance at your age, you'd look plumb unseemly!" put in Selden.

"Guess I will need an assistant," said Pop Eldridge, "in case Mrs. Deane gives me the contract. Boys, why don't we all take her?"

The one exclamative "Sure!" exploded like a bunch of firecrackers round the table.

"It's selfish of me," said Mrs. Deane, "but you gentlemen have tempted me beyond my strength. I accept; it's understood, though, that Mr. Eldridge is head escort. So I'll go with you all—you, Mr. Michelson, and you, Mr. Selden—and you, Mr. Gilson—" Here she paused.

"I'm afraid I'll have to forego the pleasure," I said, trying to keep out of my voice the sulkiness I felt. "But I must drop in to report it," I added, exerting my self-control, "and if I may have the pleasure of one dance—"

But on the night of the ball, having seen Mrs. Deane at dinner with her hair newly curled for the event, having lived through a scattering fire of persiflage which turned me sick of soul, I sulked again. I told myself, as I walked furiously back to the Courier, that the ball could go hang; all the while knowing perfectly that I was lying to myself. And at about ten o'clock of an especially busy evening, I dropped a murder story half written and took the trail to Odd Fellows' hall.

Couples were waltzing furiously through the mist raised by their feet from a dusty, soft-pine floor. Two reflector lamps illuminated a background of pathetically sparse evergreen decorations tied up with tiny and sleazy American flags; in the corner, an orchestra of guitars and violins twanged dreamily. Out of the crowd emerged Constance Deane, waltzing. She was in blue brocade, a dress simple for those days. The throat opened in a lace-edged square to show a bosom full, yet virginal. . . . I caught my breath. Then I was aware that Barton held her in his arms, held her all too close for current ideas on dancing. He was looking down on her with what I described to myself as his vulgar, insinuating smile. A surge of blood struck with the force of a tidal wave the base of my skull. I could have killed Barton. I hated him because—I loved Constance Deane. It was ridiculous, unprecedented, even disgraceful. But I loved Constance Deane. I loved. . . .

Now half a dozen men arrayed in every description of evening dress, swallow-tails to blue reefer jackets, surrounded her. Impulsively, I started toward the group to claim my dance; as impulsively, I turned, left the hall, walked back to the Courier. I could not bear in that moment to see anyone else so much as rest a hand upon her arm. I was jealous of Barton, jealous of the whole world, jealous beyond all things of that wedding ring.

* * * * * * *

But lying awake that night with the whoops, the rattle, the music of Cottonwood flowing in discordant waves through the chinks of our cabin, I spawned a rosy hope which became, as my stimulated imagination played upon it, a reality. Widows also wore wedding rings. I had even read in stories of maidens going to far, perilous places, who assumed for protection the title and symbol of marriage. That was it; that must be it; I could float away now on the enchanted river of my dreams.

It did not seem so plausible when I woke early—for me—next morning, with the brilliant mountain light streaming through my window. I must know. An hour ahead of the dinner time which was my breakfast, I went over to Mrs. Barnaby's and to that tent where Mrs. Deane lodged.

She came at my call through the flap, faced me with no halt or embarrassment of manner, not even the touch of an emotion like fear. And I realized it was not going to be so easy.

"I saw you at the ball last night," she began. "It was most interesting! Though I must admit I'm tired this morning. You wild Westerners are energetic dancers, Mr. Gilson!" "Why didn't you claim your dance?"

I forced a laugh.

"I noticed you dancing with Barton. You seemed to be enjoying yourself," I said; and my ill-natured mood must have shown through these simple words. For Mrs. Deane's head came up straight, and her eyes became for a moment serious. Then they twinkled.

"Barton at least has enterprise!" she said.

"You mean—if I'd had the enterprise—" I began. But her laugh cut me off.

"You are to be punished by not understanding what I mean!" she said. "I think if I gave you the chance, you'd be very naughty!"

The charm of her was creeping over me again like a spell. "It's an hour yet before my breakfast and your dinner," I said. "Will you suspend sentence long enough to go with me for a walk? That is—if you have nothing better to do."

Mrs. Deane hesitated just a moment. "I never have anything really urgent to do just now," she replied. "Wait until I get into my things, won't you?" There were suggestive feminine rustlings within the tent before she emerged, a little bonnet crowning with blue flowers the glory of her hair, her fingers fluttering like a flock of lovebirds over the business of putting on her gloves.

Up from the hill where Cottonwood was building its residence district ran a shallow gulch wherein no miner had as yet found sign of ore, no lumberman a tree large enough to be worth cutting. Even the little brook which had gouged it out from the hills ran unpolluted, heavenly-clean, over entanglements of fern and watercress. Toward this, as by common impulse of youth and holiday, we turned. She was walking at my right hand; the single great, coiled curl in which her hair was dressed that morning fell over her left shoulder. It gave out a faint perfume, which sent my blood beating; so that I could not trust my voice. A little shelf of rock guarded the approaches to the trail up the gulch. As I helped her across it, I felt that my own hand, at the warmth radiating through her glove, at the soft, yet firm grasp of her fingers, was trembling. She too must have perceived that; for suddenly she withdrew her hand and slipped lightly down into the trail. The very embarrassment of this pulled me together. I controlled my voice and clutched at the first commonplace which popped into my mind.

"Mrs. Taylor was asking about you last night. She was very enthusiastic—called you a radiant creature or something like that. I think Mrs. Taylor is preparing to call. You'll become at once a member of the elite, associating with the wives of the mining engineers."

It Was Mrs. Deane—She Was Coming Down the Trail.

"A dazzling prospect, certainly!" exclaimed Mrs. Deane. Then suddenly the laughter died from her eyes. "Did Mrs. Taylor tell you she was going to call?" she asked, her voice a trifle muffled.

"Oh, no! That was merely my inference. Only I can see that you're elected. Mrs. Taylor is the outward and visible sign—like an accolade or a royal proclamation."

"If she says anything about that to you, discourage it." Mrs. Deane had slackened her pace. "I'm not sure I wish to belong to the camp aristocracy—there are so many other interesting things here, after all—and I may not stay long enough to make it worth while."

"Then you're going soon!" I exclaimed; and my voice, in spite of my will, was sharp.

"That depends on many things. Oh, I must have some of those daisies!" replied Mrs. Deane. I knew perfectly that she was changing the subject deliberately, and that I was rebuked. She had dropped on one knee at a bed where mountain asters, pink and blue, fringed the stream. I knelt beside her; we picked two double handfuls, fringed them with fern from the stream bed, tied their stems—tight, bunchy bouquets being then the fashion in flowers—with withes of dandelion stalk.

When our bouquet was done, she asked for the time, found that it lacked but ten minutes of the dinner hour at Mrs. Barnaby's. We stood by the flap door of her tent now, and the question I had come to ask her had been parried. I could not face the next twenty-four hours without some satisfaction of my inflamed curiosity.

"Did you say you might be going away soon?" I asked.

"Perhaps."

Then I blundered boldly toward the heart of the subject.

"When Mr. Deane comes for you?"

She was laying her hand on the tent flap. It stopped, frozen, and she shot out one quick glance before she answered:

"Call it that if you wish."

Already convicted in her eyes of impertinence and curiosity, I might as well be hanged for an old sheep as a lamb. So I pursued the subject.

"There is a Mr. Deane, then—a living Mr. Deane?"

"Yes. Do I seem like a widow?" she asked rather sharply, and was gone inside the tent.

Yet when ten minutes later she entered the dining room and took her accustomed seat, her manner toward me had neither warmed nor chilled. It was a crumb of comfort to perceive that if she had changed toward anyone, it was Barton. Somehow, she broke that day his monopoly of conversation; the more readily as Barton showed less than his usual disposition to converse. He boarded out his week with Mrs. Barnaby, and was seen among us no more. I suspected then what a dramatic revelation afterward confirmed—that he had taken too much for granted the night before. So exit Barton from the board; only a pawn in the game fate was playing with me, but a pawn whose single move had served—and was to serve again.

She was married. Constance Deane was married. I tried, as I walked downtown, to resolve that I would move from Mrs. Barnaby's and never see her again, and, even while making this resolution, knew that I was deceiving myself.

CHAPTER VIII

I looked up through the limy but brilliant light thrown by the edge of the mountain shadow—for it was late afternoon and already sunset in that gulch. The trail, as it wound its sinuous course upward toward Forty-Rod, curved round a castle-like shoulder of striated rock and crossed a hillside. A moment visible as a black patch against the electric-blue sky, in a moment hidden by a little hogback of intervening rock, appeared a horse at a slow walk. He bore a side-saddle; the rider was a woman. Just as she disappeared, she leaned forward, laid her hand on the horse's neck as though steadying herself for the descent or arranging something at the pommel. In a world of women, I could never mistake that motion. It was Mrs. Deane. She was coming down the trail; I should encounter her, ride with her! The mere fire story which was taking me to Forty-Rod might go hang. I kept my own horse at a walk, prolonging the delicious anticipation.

Her horse's head emerged about the gray barrier of rock. She had dropped the reins on his neck; as he walked, he was cropping at the bushes by the roadside. She still leaned forward, her hands resting on the pommel. Resting—nay, clutching. We were so near now that my horse stopped because hers was blocking the trail. And looking straight at me, through me, was the face of a Constance Deane which I had never seen before. Those blue eyes were set and hard, yet absent. It was as though she were sleep-walking toward some challenging, repulsive vision. The lines of her face were all fallen, the corner of her expressive mouth drawn downward. Misery or hate or anger—whatever this emotion was—it held her with devastating, overpowering force. All this I saw in a wink of an eye before my rather independent little roan plunged forward and nipped at the intruder in his path. At that awakening motion, she gave a hysterical start, so violent that she bent backward over the cantle of her saddle; she stared at me with round, terrified eyes and mouth. Then, before I could utter a word of reassurance, she dismounted in one swift motion, stood in the roadway—gripping a horn of her side-saddle with both hands. And the terror was still upon her face.

I dismounted in turn; stood facing her there in the road.

"What is the matter—are you ill?" I asked.

Something of the normal Constance Deane began to come back into her face. It lightened now; but yet I felt that her smile was forced.

"No—you frightened me coming upon me so suddenly," she said. Then the smile went, driven away by a tense expression. She stared at me a moment before she asked with a catch in her voice:

"Why did you—are you—following me?"

"Why should I follow you? You said I might not ride with you," I replied, for a moment piqued; yet taking at once the defensive, as a man always will with the woman he loves.

"Yes," breathed Constance Deane. And what she meant by that simple monosyllable I could not tell, except that it expressed pain. She straightened up, took hold of the saddle as though to mount. Instinctively, I stepped forward to help her. She turned, laid her hand on my outstretched arm, trying weakly, it seemed, to fend me away. And it was as though that light touch pulled a trigger which had been restraining an explosion of passion. I did the thing which, one minute before, I would have thought impossible.

"Constance!" I said. "Constance!" I had never called her by that name before. And I took her into my arms. She did not struggle against me. She lay for a moment inert in my embrace. Then her hands dropped from the saddle, went round my shoulders. And I kissed her—long, long, in ecstasy.

Is Gilson getting into deep water? What will happen when Mr. Deane puts in his appearance?

Pride of Scotland Not Alcohol Addict

Sir James Crichton Browne, a medical man, has published a postmorten diagnosis on Robert Burns, the Scotch poet, which aims to break down the sad and sodden figure of tradition and substitute one of an Ayrshire plowboy who was "on the whole a temperate fellow for his time," though cursed with a poor constitution, the New York Times asserts.

Sir James submits that heart disease arising out of rheumatism acquired in youth, and not drink and debauchery, as generally held, caused the poet's "unconscious suicide." He goes over the records and shows that not a single contemporary of Burns noted in him symptoms which might indicate the effect, direct or indirect, of chronic alcoholism.

The accepted legend springs apparently from the Currie biography. Now Currie, Sir James points out, figured in his day as a temperance zealot. He gathered and preserved in his "Life of Burns" much information that might otherwise have passed forgotten, but the reformer won out. He seized the opportunity to point a moral, and in so doing deformed his tale.

Magic Now Lost Art

If it ever existed magic is now a lost art. Nothing is accomplished without employment of brain and brawn. The magic of thought stirs to action which properly directed produces results. The magicians of today are its thinkers.

QUEEN VICTORIA LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Two Famous Women Born the Same Year

In the year 1819, two babies were born whose lives were destined to have a far reaching influence. One was born in a stern castle of Old England, the other in a humble farmhouse in New England.

Queen Victoria through her wisdom and kindliness during a long and prosperous reign has become enthroned in the hearts of the British people. Lydia E. Pinkham through the merit of her Vegetable Compound has made her name a household word in many American homes.

One of the many women who praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is Mrs. Adolph Bratke of 4316 South 13th St., South Omaha, Nebr., who was in a rundown condition for four years before she tried the Compound. "I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," she writes, "and I have felt my health steadily improving" Mrs. Bratke continued to take the Compound for a year and a half and at the end of that time she found herself in excellent health. "I am feeling fine now and do all my work myself," she wrote in her most recent letter. "I am the mother of six and manage an eight-room house without anybody to help."

Canny Titus Tite Took No Chances

Darius L. Chauncey, the millionaire broker, said at a Boston brokers' banquet:

"And then there's the mean speculator, the speculator who wants to make a million or two without taking any risks. I told one of these speculators a story the other day.

"It was a story about Titus Tite, the village usurer. Titus was watching a patent medicine man conduct a sale of patent medicine. The sale had no success, no success at all, and the medicine man at last, in a spirit of bitter irony, put up at auction a bright new silver dollar.

"But the villagers were suspicious, though it was clear that the dollar was a good one. Titus Tite, however, went so far as to bid a dime for it.

"'The coin's yours, Mr. Rockefeller,' said the medicine man. 'There are no further bids. Pass up your dime.' And from his automobile he held out his hand with the dollar in it.

"But Titus whined up at him:

"'Ah, take me dime out of the dollar, and gimme 90 cents change.'"

Political Fidelity

Owen Wister, novelist, was talking about a political fight in Pennsylvania.

"Well, you know," he said, "the average politician's idea of fidelity reminds me of a dog story.

"A fat man dining in a restaurant went out to speak to a friend and on his return a waiter said to him:

"'That's a very faithful dog you've got there, sir. While you were outside another dog tried to sneak your lobster, but your own dog scared him off with a nip in the leg and ate it himself.'"

"Waiter, these are close quarters."

"Yes, sir, most of 'em are just dimes."

When a new philosophy begins it demands tolerance; after it grows old, it practices intolerance.

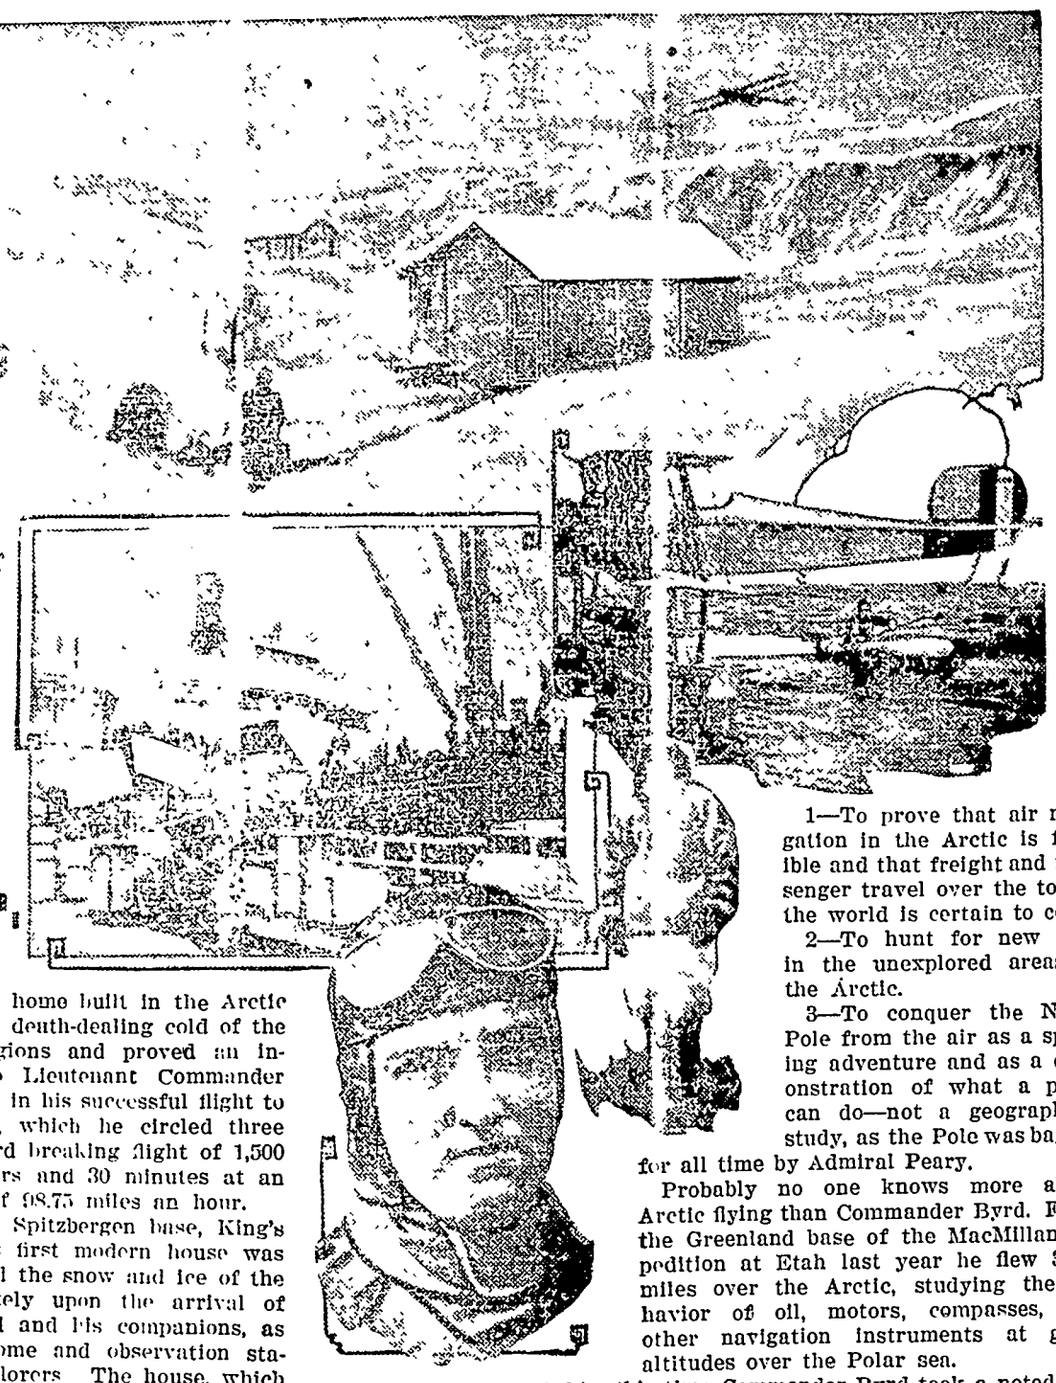
Modern Home Aided Byrd Pole Dash; Sugar Cane Fought Cold of North



The House in the Arctic.

Loading Ship for Trip.

Byrd in Airship and Doughnut Boat.

A MODERN home built in the Arctic defied the death-dealing cold of the Polar Regions and proved an invaluable aid to Lieutenant Commander Richard E. Byrd in his successful flight to the North Pole, which he circled three times in a record breaking flight of 1,500 miles in 15 hours and 30 minutes at an average speed of 98.75 miles an hour.

It was at the Spitzbergen base, King's Bay where this first modern house was constructed amid the snow and ice of the Arctic immediately upon the arrival of Lieutenant Byrd and his companions, as a permanent home and observation station for the explorers. The house, which rose up on the horizon of the frigid north in marked contrast to the igloo of the eskimo, was equipped with a complete radio outfit that those who remained at the base while Lieutenant Byrd made his thrilling dash to the Pole in his speeding Fokker might keep in touch with their chief and the outside world, which they kept informed as to the progress and success of the flight.

It was to this same home that he returned after his hazardous trip and from which some of the first messages were sent to the waiting public, telling them through the lanes of the air that Byrd had circled the pole three times and had returned to his Spitzbergen home in safety, adding one of the most memorable pages to the history of Arctic exploration.

Sugar Cane Fights Polar North.

When Lieutenant Byrd left the Brooklyn Navy Yard on the ship Chantier he declared he had the best and most scientifically equipped expedition that ever had started for the North Pole. Special plans were made for the erection of his Arctic home. Boards of celotex insulating lumber made from bagasse (sugar cane fiber after all sugar juices have been extracted) were carried along with the latest inventions to aid in polar exploration. This building material is very light and is filled with millions of air cells, which give it great insulation value and resistance to change in temperature, especially the severe cold. One odd circumstance in connection with the use of this material is that the sugar cane of the south was utilized to fight the cold of the north.

Celotex was selected instead of lumber because tests made by the United States Bureau of Standards and its universal use in building construction all over the world, had demonstrated that this insulating lumber would keep the quarters of the explorers warmer and protect their living conditions more securely than ordinary building material.

It was only after careful investigation by the scientific men in the expedition that celotex was selected. These authorities pointed out that the protection afforded by its insulation efficiency was three times as great as ordinary lumber and nearly twelve times as great as that of brick and other masonry material. The ship Chantier also was lined with celotex as an added precaution to keep the ship warm while the explorers used it in the preliminary stages of the expedition.

In practically every other way this expedition was more scientifically prepared than any of its predecessors. These included inventions of Commander Byrd himself. A simple sun compass conceived by Byrd and developed by Mr. Bumstead of the National Geographic Society, superseded the complicated German device, developed three years ago for Amundsen. The drift indicator also was Byrd's invention. The bubble sextant by which the navigator obtains his bearings while in flight was another one of his inventions. Still another scientic development was a quick method of telling when one is at the North Pole. This has been worked out by G. W. Littlehales, the navy's hydrographic engineer.

Device Locates the Pole.

Byrd and others contributed to a chart of the magnetic lines flowing toward the magnetic North Pole, which is in Bolthia Land, 1,200 miles south of the Pole. Between Bolthia Land and the Pole the campass points south instead of north and over much of the Arctic it is badly disturbed by the discrepancy of position between the geographical North Pole and the magnetic North Pole.

This chart of the magnetic lines, flowing to the magnetic North Pole, although it was far from complete, was such as to enable the navigator to tell in what direction the compass should point from any spot in the Arctic. With this knowledge, the erratic behavior of the compass becomes orderly and it is once again a useful instrument.

A third type of compass used was a device of infinite sensitiveness—a revolving electrical coil, which is adjusted to a given relation with the magnetism of the earth. This, the sun compass, and the magnetic compass were each used to correct the other.

Lieutenant Byrd in his flight used a quick method of flying when he was actually at the Pole. This was the invention worked out by Mr. Littlehales, the U. S. Navy hydrographic engineer. It shows the sun's position from the North Pole at every hour of the day and every day of the year. When the flyer is near the Pole he can, by ascertaining the exact position of the sun, prove that he is near the Pole.

Flies 3,000 Miles Over Arctic.

The expedition, backed by such men as John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., had three main objects.

1—To prove that air navigation in the Arctic is feasible and that freight and messenger travel over the top of the world is certain to come.

2—To hunt for new land in the unexplored areas of the Arctic.

3—To conquer the North Pole from the air as a sporting adventure and as a demonstration of what a plane can do—not a geographical study, as the Pole was bagged for all time by Admiral Peary.

Probably no one knows more about Arctic flying than Commander Byrd. From the Greenland base of the MacMillan expedition at Etah last year he flew 3,000 miles over the Arctic, studying the behavior of oil, motors, compasses, and other navigation instruments at great altitudes over the Polar sea.

With him this time Commander Byrd took a noted fuel expert, who is Flying Commander G. O. Noble, as it requires great skill and pains to prevent the freezing of lubricating oil and stiffened action of the motors, if forced to work on the plane in the open at great altitudes with the thermometer at 60 to 70 below zero. The points which favored the month of May were that the Arctic fog had not begun to rise and heavy snows still covered the land and afforded many good landing places.

A factor of safety pointed out by Commander Byrd in connection with the use of the Fokker machine is that it carries a reserve engine. It has three engines. With a light load one is expected to be sufficient to maintain the plane in flight. With a normal load, two engines will do the work. If two engines break down at one time, when the plane is not too heavily loaded, it may fly with the use of one engine. The Fokker machine has a wingspread of slightly more than 64 feet. It is said to be a marvel of airship construction.

The other airplane—the Curtis Oriole—was to have been used chiefly in finding landing fields so that if the fliers found their main landing place covered with a fog they might go elsewhere.

The Chantier was equipped with a powerful radio transmitter to send back the news of the expedition. The Fokker also is equipped with a receiving and transmitting set. Commander Byrd not only kept the world informed of the progress of the expedition, but received through the Chantier weather warnings to guide him in his flight.

How Expedition Was Equipped.

Forty-five hundred pounds of whole beef were included in the rations of the Byrd crew of forty-seven fliers, seamen and technicians. Also four hundred pounds of pemmican (meat fats and raisins), huge quantities of bacon, dried milk, erbswurst (pea soup) and other supplies in proportion were carried along. Cod liver oil was included for its healthful properties. Herbert Griggs, who had charge of provisioning Peary's expedition in his famous dash to the Pole, worked out the rations for the Byrd explorers. Two pounds per man per day was the allowance to take care of all emergencies.

No amount of clothing is really sufficient when flying 1,000 or more feet in the air in the Polar regions, but every possible precaution was taken by Commander Byrd against exposure. The men were equipped with the warmest and lightest of reindeer suits and with fur parkas, a garment that reaches to the knees and has a hood covering the head. Plenty of goggles were found to be an absolute necessity to protect them against the glare of the snow.

In spite of all the precautions the undertaking was full of unseen danger. None of this equipment would be of the slightest avail against some unexpected and unprecedented situation which might arise. There is always the danger of snowblindness, exhaustion, freezing, some mishap to the engine. Lieutenant Byrd and his companions, however, were particularly fortunate in escaping with practically no ill effects except the exhaustion due to such a perilous trip.

Pick Up Ice Pilot.

The ship Chantier's first stop was at Tromso, Norway, where an ice skipper was taken on to pilot the Chantier and its crew through the ice-filled waters around Spitzbergen to King's Bay, where preparations for the first flight to the Pole were made. The planes, the instruments and the various oil mixtures used in connection with the airship tests, were carefully examined and tested. Lieutenant Byrd's original plans called for six flights as follows:

1—A 400-mile flight from Spitzbergen to Peary Land to unload oil, provisions and equipment at a place that looks promising for a landing.

2—A 400-mile flight back to Spitzbergen.

3—A second 400-mile flight from Spitzbergen to Peary Land base with further food, fuel and equipment.

4—An 850-mile flight to and around the Pole and back to the Peary base.

5—An 800-mile round trip flight to the northwest over unexplored areas in search of new lands.

6—A 400-mile flight from the Peary Land base back to Spitzbergen.

It was his plan in his second flight to attempt to discover new land, but when he received the report of the flight of Amundsen in his dirigible, in which it was stated that the Norge had failed to find any trace of new land, Lieutenant Byrd decided to abandon further flights and the trip over land on sleds he had planned in his search for new land in unexplored areas. Now he has decided to try to accomplish by airship at the South Pole what he did at the North. As he left the Spitzbergen base he stated that he would have just as well an equipped expedition for his southern flight as he had in his recent adventure in the North.

NOTICE OF INCORPORATION

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned have associated themselves together as a corporation, organized for pecuniary profit under the provisions of Chapter 384, Title 19 of the 1924 Code of Iowa, and laws amendatory thereto, the Name of said corporation to be The Wellemeyer Company, and its principal place of business, Klemme, Iowa.

The general nature of business to be transacted is to buy and sell such merchandise as is ordinarily dealt in by a department store selling everything pertaining to Goods, Wares and Merchandise, for personal, domestic, household and general use and consumption, also to buy and sell Notes, Securities, and Real Estate, and any other business which can be conveniently carried on in connection with the above, as fully as permitted or authorized by the laws of the state of Iowa.

The amount of Capital Stock authorized is $35,000.00 divided into 350 shares of Common Stock of $100 each.

Said Corporation commenced business July 2nd, 1926. It's articles of incorporation are recorded at the Hancock County Court House at Garner, Iowa, and are also filed with the Secretary of State at Des Moines, Iowa. This corporation will continue 20 years unless sooner dissolved by a majority vote of all stockholders.

The affairs of this corporation are to be managed by a board of two directors, which number may be increased to not over five by a majority vote of stockholders. All of the powers of this corporation are vested in its board of directors. The Officers shall be a President, a Secretary and Treasurer, and such other officers as the by-laws may provide.

Officers are to hold office one year. The board of directors shall be elected at the annual meting of stockholders on the first Tuesday of August of each year. The Officers shall be elected by the board of directors at a meeting immediately after the annual meeting of Stockholders. Until the annual meeting of stockholders in the year 1927, Arthur Wellemeyer and Andrew J. Wellemeyer shall constitute the board of directors, and its officers shall be Arthur Wellemeyer, President, and Andrew J. Wellemeyer Secretary and Treasurer. The indebtedness of this corporation shall at no time exceed two thirds of the authorized capital stock, and the private property of the stockholders shall be exempt from liability for the debts of the corporation.

Dated this 10th day of July, 1926.

Germany has 1,100 cow test associations which test 430,000 cows annually. Denmark, a country one-fifth the size of Iowa has 1,083 cow test associations testing 412,000 cows annually. In the entire United States, only 777 associations are in operation with a total of 327,653 cows tested last year. Iowa ranks fourth among the states of the Union in number of cow testing associations with 22,000 cows tested last year in about 1,800 herds. Each year there is more interest in better cows.

ONE-MAN DIGGING DEVICE

Can Be Used For Digging Wells, Cisterns, Cellars, Etc.

Here is a suggestion for making a one-man digging device which we have clipped from a recent issue of "The Farmer," of St. Paul:

The enclosed diagram (D-462) shows how I dug two wells 32 feet deep on my place without any help. The device consists of an A-shaped derrick about seven feet high, which leans over the well and is held there by a guy rope, and also what might be called an endless rope. One end of this is fastened to the bail of a galvanized bucket, while the other end is fastened to the bottom of the bucket and serves as a trip rope when the bucket is to be emptied, and also for bringing the pail back over the well.

When the bucket of dirt reaches the top of the derrick you keep on pulling until the derrick swings away from the well. By that time you must have one rope in each hand, and with a little practice you can dump the dirt and bring the bucket down again quicker than any man that worked above. With a little pull on the rope after the bucket is empty and slack on the other rope, the sash weight will automatically bring the derrick back over the well.

Do not start with too long a rope, as it will just be in the way. Small pieces of any light rope can be tied to the bottom of the bucket until the knots interfere in the pulley, then they can be removed and a long rope spliced in their place.

I not only saved a man by this arrangement, but I worked in the well in my shirt sleeves on some of the coldest days when I couldn't do anything else, but it would have been too cold for a man to have staid on top. Do not get discouraged if it doesn't work just right at first, as it takes some practice to operate it successfully.

I very seldom looked up when in the well, but went by the feel of the ropes. It is very important that the derrick has the right slant. The last well I dug I didn't use any sash weight, as it worked well without it.

Keep The Cream In A Cool Place

Milk and cream are regular meeting places of odors—just like the old fashioned store used to be for village loafers. They gather, the good and the bad, and the only way to keep milk and cream free from odors is to keep them away from it.

Milk and cream should not be stored in musty cellars or in cellars where the odor of vegetables are strong as they absorb odors like a sponge absorbs water, and for this reason it should not be stored in the kitchen.

Make of your milk house a shrine for the milk and cream alone and don ot permit the men to store their boots, overalls and harness in the milk house and then expect to market a quality product—"It can't be did."

When the saying was coined, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," the fellow who sprung it must have been thinking about milk and cream.

Help make the butter manufactured at this creamery stand for the very highest quality.

OBITUARY OF LUBBE ALBERS

Lubbe Albers was born on the 27th of March, 1878, at Aldersun, Ostfre Island, Germany. His parents brought him to Holy Baptism in the Reformed church. As a child he attended the schools of his native land. At the age of 14 he came to America with his parents and brothers. For several years the family resided at Belmond, Iowa. Then the father bought a farm about four miles east of Klemme, which remained the home of Mr. Albers throughout his life. On the 22nd of May, 1912, he was united in marriage to Miss Gretchen Dickhus. This union was blessed with six children, four daughters and two sons. The oldest, Jennie, is now 13 years of age. Mr. Albers was a home-loving father. Through thrift and hard labor he provided a home for his family. For several years the deceased was troubled with a rupture. A few days before his death he was removed to the hospital at Mason City for an operation where it was discovered that the rupture was gangrenous and little hope was entertained for his recovery. Only two days later, Friday, August 6, he passed away, at the age of 48 years, 4 months and 19 days.

Surviving him and mourning his loss are his wife and six children, Jennie, Mary, Johanna, John, Harold and Louise. Two brothers, George and Fred, and one sister, Mrs. Geo. Pals of Belmond, Iowa.

Funeral services were held at the Reformed church Monday afternoon. Interment was made at the Klemme cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our appreciation for the many acts of kindness shown us by neighbors and friends during the recent illness and death of our beloved husband, father and brother. We also take this oppoortunity to thank the choir for their service and for all the beautiful floral offerings.

SO EMERSON TOOK DRINK—OF WATER

Essayist Imbibed What Bartender Set Before Him.

Not so very long ago I reread Edward Everett Hale's classical short story, "The Man Without a Country." I put the book down; my thoughts wandered back to the first and only time I ever saw its author, that kindly philosopher with deep-set eyes and a forehead. The meeting took place in Roxbury, Mass., Robert H. Davis relates, in the New York Sun.

Doctor Hale was in a delightful mood and received me in his studio among a conglomerate mass of books and manuscripts. All about the place were ancient easy chairs in which the truly great of New England had lounged and listened and learned for the previous half century. Never before or since has it been my privilege to compose myself in such a hallowed atmosphere.

"When I was still a young man I heard a most amusing story about Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson," said Doctor Hale, searching the past.

"Emerson visited an office down on Beacon street, where he wrote. In order to reach this den he was obliged to pass a certain public place whose proprietor was not particular what sort of patrons he served. In those days a very potent brand of Medford rum was to be had for a half a shilling a glass.

"One afternoon there emerged from that inn a comparative youth whose whole demeanor, dress and bearing, in spite of his befuddled condition, betokened the well born. There he stood on the pavement wavering on unsteady legs, uncertain in mind and body, with a vacuous look in his eyes. Ralph Waldo happened to be ambling along at the precise moment the drinker appeared.

"'What,' said he to himself in horror, 'is the direct physiological, pathological and spiritual upheaval that takes place in the human animal upon swallowing a given quantity of rum? How is this wreck of the intelligence brought about and what are the first symptoms of its deadly and terrible occupation? I shall find out for myself.'

"Emerson took further stock of the habitues of that particular inn and found that alcohol acted pretty much the same way upon all of them. The whole enterprise was quite outside his realm of research, but he made up his mind to get first-hand evidence. He talked with several addicts, but none of them was able to elucidate to his scholarly mind the complicated and delicate metamorphosis between sobriety and intoxication. It was while in this state of reflection that he found himself one morning passing the iniquitous place that had caused him so much unrest. The door was open and the place unoccupied.

"Wholly unmindful of the consequences in the public eye and with an inordinate thirst for knowledge that he deemed for the good of mankind, knowledge that he would have turned ultimately to excellent account, Emerson responded to an overpowering urge and stepped inside. The stench of rum that assailed his delicate nostrils did not deter him.

"'Be so kind as to give me a drink,' said he, approaching the bar with an air of confidence."

Doctor Hale smoothed back the gray locks from his fine forehead and smiled.

"You couldn't possibly guess what the barman did."

One can never guess what a bartender will do, so I remained silent.

"He reached down," resumed Doctor Hale with an air of wonderment, "poured something out of a pitcher and set before Ralph Waldo Emerson what one might nowadays define as a schooner—of ice water—which Emerson drained to the dregs and immediately thereafter left the establishment utterly in the dark for all time as to the influence of alcohol upon the human animal."

Veteran Physician

For 54 years, Dr. Wilson A. Allen, ninety-two years old, and believed to be the oldest practicing physician in Minnesota, has dispensed medical advice to his patients from the same suite of rooms at Rochester. A base-burner stove provides heat, and in no essential detail has the interior of his suite been changed. But he drives his automobile, unassisted, visiting patients both in the city and the country, and this summer he plans to visit Danville, Ill., where he will call on an old acquaintance, Uncle Joe Cannon.

Going on Record

"Bruddern and sistahs," said good old Parson Bagster, in the midst of a recent Sabbath morning's sermon, "I takes dis 'casion to 'splationate dat I isn't in no wise 'sponsible for de squabblin' and squibblin' dat's gwine on in de choir for de past few weeks. I owns up dat I has sev'ral times said, 'Git thee uh-hint me, Satan!' But I isn't never yit commanded de gen'leman wid de hawns and stickery tail to git in de choir."—Kansas City Star.

Czech Noblemen Emigrate

Twelve noblemen from Czechoslovakia are contemplating emigrating to America, probably Canada, as soon as Count Thun Hohistein makes his report to them after a visit to America. They control considerable wealth and are expected to go in for farming on a large scale. They are interested in farming in Manitoba.

TWO HOURS—GARDEN TO CAN

This Is Good Rule To Follow In Canning Vegetables

Vegetables, with the exception of tomatoes, are non-acid and therefore difficult to can so that they will not spoil One rule to adopt that will aid in canning these products successfully is: "Two hours from garden to can."

It always pays to discard all vegetables which show the slightest sign of spoilage, the home economics workers at Iowa State College say. Fruits or vegetables that are to be canned should be washed and prepared as for cooking.

All dirt should be cleaned from vegetables because bacteria which are difficult to kill are likely to be carried in soil.

Apricots, peaches and tomatoes should be scalded and then dipped in cold water tofacilitate peeling. Such foods as cabage or spinach should be blanched for a few minutes in a kettle of boiling water so as to reduce their bulk and to remove some of their objectional flavors.

Proper storage for home canned foods is of vital importance. All cans and jars should be marked after sealing so that each lot may be identified After one is certain that the product is keeping, store the jars in a cool, dry, and light place. Cover the jars so that the light will not bleach the food. Heat or freezing temperature will spoil the most carefully canned products.

$22 COW MAKES $126 PROFIT

Furnishes Another Case Of Finding Worth By Testing

A lame, thin cow recently was sold in Winnebago County for $22. The man who sold her had never tested her—he had only a hazy idea of whether she was a profitable producer or not—and he didn't believe in "wasting" too much feed on a cow.

The cow's new owner was a member of a cow testing association. He fed the cow well until she freshened and during the first month after freshening she brought the man $21 45 above feed cost—just 55 cents less than he had paid for her. Ten months later, this same cow had made her owner $126.91 profit in addition to paying for her feed.

How much is a milk cow worth? The only sure way to know is to test the cow for production and then measure the production along with the cost of the cow's keep. About 20,000 farmers in Iowa are now doing this at a cost of around $30 a year through the medium of the cow testing associations.

The man who keeps the ground black from now until freezing weather in Canada thistle or quack grass patches will have the pests about whipped.

Too Late

"Yes, I seen him—but yer needn't foller him any longer cause I picked it up."

Friend Wife: "Good idea. I've been thinking we should do something to get acquainted!"

Green Magic

I see by the papers that scientists claim nature made the trees and grass green 'cause the color is so soothing on the nerves. I'll say it is! When a fellow gets mad slip him a little long green and see how it quiets him!

UNANIMOUS FOR FRANCHISE

Every voter in the town of Clio, Iowa, is a strong believer in electric light and power. At a recent election a franchise was unanimously voted to the Middle States Utilities Company. The count was 110 for the franchise and none against.

Beauty in Roof Tops

It is very possible that the prevalence of aerial photographs of our large cities has had something to do with the increased tendency to treat the tops of buildings with as much care as the sidewalk level, writes Harvey Wiley Corbett in the Saturday Evening Post.

An airplane photograph of Paris is a thing of beauty in itself, whereas a camera shot of certain sections of Chicago or San Francisco or New York is nothing but a tangle of roof tanks and laundries.

But the Chicago of the future, with terraced gardens and sun parlors and graceful towers, will vie in beauty with the fabled magnificence of the hanging gardens of Babylon. When air travel becomes universal civic pride will balk at ugly roof tops, just as now it condemns a street full of ashcans.

The American Legion

INDORSES MOVE TO HONOR MATHEWSON

Establishment of a national memorial to the late Christy Mathewson, baseball's greatest hero, to be known as the Christy Mathewson memorial, was given the endorsement of the American Legion at a recent meeting of the national executive committee

The memorial, which will be located at Saranac Lake, N.Y., where "Matty" spent much of his time previous to his death in trying to regain his health, will be established by his friends in baseball, in the Legion and by others who wish to contribute.

The purpose of the memorial is "to perpetuate the name of Christy Mathewson by a fund to be used to aid the sick and needy who come to Saranac Lake for treatment from all states in the Union; and by the establishment of a Mathewson Memorial club house for the use of World war veterans with the aim of improving their physical, intellectual, ethical and social nature."

The big leagues will contribute towards the memorial by staging benefit games. On May 28 the first benefit game was played at Braves field, Boston, between the Giants and the Braves. A memorial tablet to Mathewson was unveiled before the game

Matty was an active member of Jackson A Matthews post of the Legion at Saranac Lake, which is made up entirely of disabled veterans. While at Saranac Lake he became greatly interested in the welfare of the disabled and was instrumental in establishing a welfare fund and a veterans' club. The Mathewson memorial will perpetuate these two things in his name.

Among the directors of the memorial are John J. McGraw, Judge Kenesaw Landis and Harry C. Wilder, department commander of the Legion in New York. National Com. John R. McQuigg of the Legion, is a charter member of the memorial.

Asks Funds for Verdun and Liege Memorials

Appeal has been made by National Commander John R. McQuigg of the American Legion to members of the Legion and of the Legion auxiliary for contributions towards the erection at Verdun and Liege of international memorials of the sacrifices and services of the armed forces of all the nations allied together during the World war

These projects were given formal approval by the Legion's national executive committee at a recent meeting. The committee directed the national commander to call upon Legionnaires and auxiliary members to contribute to the funds for the memorials. Contributions for the two funds are being received by National Treasurer Robert H. Tyndall, national headquarters, the American Legion, Indianapolis, Ind.

At Verdun will be erected a great ossuary in which will be interred the bones of the unidentified dead of the battle which raged around that crucial point in allied defense. It will commemorate especially the trench of the bayonets near Fort Douaumont. The ossuary is to consist of a series of chapels, surmounted by a central tower in which a light is to burn forever. The French committee in charge of the project, under the chairmanship of Marshal Petain, has offered to the United States as its part of this international memorial the central tower. Contributions of Legionnaires to the Verdun memorial will be used for its erection. The committee in charge hopes to have the memorial completed so that it may be dedicated in 1927, when the American Legion convention is expected to be held in Paris.

At Liege in Belgium the memorial is to take the form of a civic hall, with representation for each allied country in it.

Four Departments Pass Their Membership Quota

Four departments of the American Legion had surpassed by June 1 their membership quota for the year 1926 as set by the national headquarters of the organization, according to National Adjutant James F. Barton, who pointed out that the Legion is headed for a record membership year.

The departments which have passed their quota, in the order of "going over the top," are Florida, Wyoming, Arizona and Idaho.

"In view of the fact that the membership quotas for the departments have been set considerably in advance of the 1925 membership enrollment, the achievement of the four departments in surpassing their quota months before the end of the year is the more commendable," declared Adjutant Barton.

Jobs for Veterans

Advertising Men's post of the American Legion in Chicago maintains an employment bureau which secures jobs for post members calling for salaries as high as $10,000 a year. During the year good jobs were found for 105 men

JACKET AND BLOUSE STYLES; STRAIGHT CONTOURS ENDORSED

THOSE smart compose suits in which the tailored coat is of a material different from the skirt (or of the same material in a different pattern) may be responsible for a flock of new jackets and separate coats that spice up the summer wardrobe. At any rate, for resort and sports wear, numbers of trim compose suits and snappy jackets that may be worn with different skirts are late acquisitions to the two-piece mode. Very frankly borrowed from masculine styles are those trim double-breasted blue serge coats worn with white flannel skirts and white crepe shirts or blouses. Some of these coats are feminized by trimming of white braid. Then there are the mannish striped coats and those of dark blue flannel cut on boyish lines and ornamented with brass buttons—all very swagger and businesslike. To cap the climax comes a dinner coat of black velvet to be worn with light sheer frocks.

Two of the New Styles.

Having been mannish to her heart's content, the fashion devotee may change her mind as to jackets and make her appearance in a frivolous, colorful one of chalils, or a short coat of white flannel, or go to the extreme of a scarlet kasha jacket banded with loop trimming in scarlet and blue wool wherever a place can be found for it. Often a red hat and scarf are worn with dark coat and white skirt outfits.

Blouses are not so independent as jackets for every little printed silk blouse seems to have a skirt of its own—in a solid color that corresponds with one of the colors in the blouse. The most popular patterns in printed silk are not too conspicuous "futurist" designs, and colors are soft and pretty. With a blouse in soft green, gray and white a green skirt is worn and one with pink, blue and mauve possesses a blue skirt to match. For wear with compose or other suits, tailored blouses of flesh-colored or white crepe hold the eye of fashion as a rule, but sometimes even a good rule is broken to advantage and the blouse need not always be severely tailored when a softer style is more becoming.

Of course sweaters must be reckoned with in writing the story of the two-piece modes—for comfort and for sports wear they are a necessity in the wardrobe. For those who will golf, rain or shine, there are rainproof jackets, or suits, made of rain coating and reversible jackets, made of double-faced material, rubberized crepe on one side and a thin knitted fabric on the other. Also new cardigan jackets of jersey. Jerseys in endlessly varied patterns include several popular neck treatments, round, "V"-shaped and the split turtle neck. For warm weather there are lacey knit sweaters in light green and other refreshing colors, including yellow.

Some of the loveliest developments of current styles appear in late-summer frocks of crepe de chine or other lightweight silks made in tailored fashion. Whether these follow the one-piece or the two-piece modes they reveal two things very clearly—one is that stylists have no idea of abandoning the silhouette that is straight in contour, and another is that the straightline dress must be cleverly elaborated, or a little modified, to make it up-to-date. It must not be too simple and, even though it is tailored, it is not severe. There is a refinement about these late arrivals in the ranks of dresses that is refreshing and many ingenious details that make them interesting.

In the two-piece models plaited crepe de chine skirts are combined with kasha jackets that sometimes contrive to take on the effect of a bolero. In these dresses the sleeves are long, in regulation tailored style, and usually plain. High collars, or those that are high at the back with V-shaped front opening predominate. But novel collar and cuff sets are important details in some cases and bloused waistlines are featured in many frocks. Tunics, panels and plaits help out the good cause in varying the straightline mode. Colors include black and chanel red in addition to the shades already popular, as gray, almond green, navy blue, beige, tan.

Any one of these colors might be used in the fine exponent of late summer modes as shown in the picture. The designer has evolved a new arrangement of plaits at the front with groupings of small buttons down the front and on short panels at the sides, where a narrow belt of the material slips through them. The vestee of crepe de chine might be chosen in cream color or in flesh color—the latter is popular with black frocks.

It would be a pity to detract from the effect of these dainty interpretations of the tailored modes by wearing footwear less exquisite in design and finish, but there is little likelihood that this will happen. Plain silk hose is everyone's choice and shoes were never so good looking as they are now. Sandal and slipper styles, made of fine kidskin, in parchment, sauterne and beige shades, are worn with these chic frocks.

A Late Arrival.

LAMB AND MUTTON

Mutton is so well liked in England and used so freely that it seems strange that we in America cannot serve it oftener and more freely.

When mutton is properly killed and cared for there is no objectionable wooly flavor. The meat should never be touched with the hands after handling the wool, as the wool grows on the skin and the oil from it flavors the meat. Remove the skin carefully before cooking.

Roast Leg of Lamb.—Rub salt, pepper and onion with any sweet fat all over the meat. Place in a roasting pan and sear it well in a hot oven. Now add one-half cupful each of water and sliced onion, one cupful of sliced tomatoes, eight peeled potatoes around the leg of lamb. Roast in a hot oven and serve very hot with a gravy made from the liquor in the the pan. Mint sauce may be served with the lamb. To prepare it, mince a half cupful of mint and pour over it a tablespoonful of boiling water, cover and let stand, adding a tablespoonful of vinegar and a little sugar to serve.

Mutton Stew.—Put a neck piece of mutton on to stew in boiling water with a small onion. Simmer until tender, then add a can of peas, thicken the gravy and serve with the peas poured around the meat. Add seasonings of salt and pepper after the meat is partly cooked.

Mutton en Casserole.—Brown a pound or less of mutton cut from the shoulder and in serving-sized pieces. When well-browned season well and dredge with flour. Add one cupful or more of carrots, a cupful of peas, one onion to the meat, cover and bake in a casserole for two to three hours. Serve from the casserole.

Barbecued Lamb.—Cut cold roast lamb into slices and reheat them in the following sauce: Two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half tablespoonful of vinegar, one-third cupful of currant jelly and one-fourth teaspoonful of mustard. Cook until the lamb is well-heated and flavored.

DESSERT FOR EVERY DAY

On the busiest day when time is very precious, you might make

Fifteen - Minute Pudding. — Take one teaspoonful of baking powder, a pinch of salt, and enough good milk or fresh buttermilk to make a drop batter. Butter custard cups, drop a tablespoonful of batter then a tablespoonful of canned cherries and another spoonful of batter, and put to cook in a pan of boiling water well covered for 15 minutes. Serve with sugar and cream.

Edinburgh Pudding.—Take one-half pound of oatmeal, one cupful of thick custard flavored with vanilla, one and one-half pints of water, one-fourth of a cupful of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and two ounces of coconut. Cook the oatmeal in the water with the salt and milk, cool and turn into the custard, pour into molds and serve, when molded, with coconut, sugar and cream.

Lemon Meringue.—Take one pint of milk, three ounces of sugar, one cupful of fine bread crumbs, two eggs, the juice and rind of a lemon. Mix all ingredients and cook slowly until well set, baking in a deep pie plate. Set away to cool, cover with a meringue and brown. Serve cold.

Snow Jelly.—Prepare any desired flavor of gelatin, and when it is thickening whip it until foamy. Chill and pile on top of any molded gelatin of other flavor, using pineapple for one and raspberry for the other. Serve with whipped cream.

Spiced Tea Cakes.—Mix and sift one and one-half cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-eighth teaspoonful of nutmeg and one-fourth teaspoonful of mace. Cream one-fourth of a cupful of shortening, add one cupful of sugar, two well-beaten eggs, one-half cupful of milk added alternately with the flour. Add a few raisins and bake in greased muffin tins. Cover with maple frosting and sprinkle with chopped filberts.

Egg Rolls.—Scald and cool one-fourth of a cupful of milk, add one yeast cake, mix well and add one cupful of scalded milk, cooled. Stir in two cupfuls of flour, beat well and set away in a warm place until light. Add the yolks of two eggs, half a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of sugar, one-fourth of a cupful of butter and flour enough to knead. Knead until smooth. Shape into small balls; when it has become light press a cavity with the thumb and set into this half a teaspoonful of jelly, work the dough over the opening, keeping the jelly near the top crust. Let rise to double the bulk and bake twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Example to Parishioners

Sparrows have invaded the parish church at Great Bardfield, Essex, England, and the vicar, Rev. K. E. Cartwright, hopes in the parish magazine "that all other parishioners will be as regular at the services and make their voices heard as clearly."

Irish Linen Trade Low

The linen trade of Belfast and Ulster, which is experiencing hard times, is now further embarrassed by foreign competition. The low exchange rates make foreign yarns cheaper than those produced in Ulster. The rate of the franc in France and Belgium enables manufacturers in those countries to undersell Ulster According to recent official returns, the linen exported shows a drop of $1,250,000 a month. Tides Affect Volcanoes

An interesting solution of the mystery of volcanic eruptions has just been offered by William Bowie of the United States coast and geodetic survey. He advances the theory, says Popular Science Monthly, that volcanic outbursts may be due directly to the pressure of the tides, which twist and wring the earth. The tides, he adds, may also have an influence in building mountains.

Czech Nobles to Emigrate

Twelve noblemen from Czechoslovakia are contemplating emigrating to America, probably Canada, as soon as Count Thun Hohnstein makes his report to them after a visit to America. They control considerable wealth and are expected to go in for farming on a large scale. They are interested in farming in Manitoba.

ommunity Building and Cultivation of Grounds Important

ere it is not possible to build the ouse on a lot having good trees, rst step toward an attractive is tree planting. Even with already established, plants of er growth are required in addi- f a home atmosphere is to radi- om the house. A proper combi- n of these gives the most pleas- esult ating the walk and the drive, if is to be one, is a necessary pre- ary to planting the grounds. ess conspicuous they are the bet- or the general effect. If the is close to the street a straight is the least obtrusive and cuts e lawn less than a curving one; f the house is farther from the than the width of its own front, broken lawn may be provided by ing the walk from one corner or ther When a drive is needed it often be used as a substitute for lk. Walks and drives should be as few in number and as limited ea as conditions will permit.

oper location of shade trees is ably the most vital of all the ting details. Where the house is ed close to the street the street s are usually the only ornamental s that can be used, but where e is room some are needed near corner of the house as a frame, none in front to obstruct the view. large lot additional trees provide ome shade, but must not obstruct picture of the front.

nants Seek Beauty in Business Building

o far as its ability to make its is concerned, a commercial build- of architectural beauty will out- its neighbor of ordinary lines and portions.

here are several reasons for this, one of which ought to convince owner of a commercial building, t a single store or an office sky- aper that it pays actual dollars to ate the beautiful rather than the inary or ugly.

he building that has been erected commercial purposes should con- n elements in its makeup that will ure for its owner a continuation of profitableness as time goes on. At t, a building's newness and loca- n usually warrant the investment ng made without fear of its becom- a white elephant instead of a bag gold to the original investor. But en a new building goes up along- e, or across the street or the busi- portion of the thoroughfare moves ay, then there is a great liability a decline in the ordinary building's ne as a profitable investment.

The modern buying public will pa- nize that shop which does not grate its esthetic nature. Consciously or consciously, the present-day shop- will discriminate between the utiful and the ugly. Wise is the estor who realizes this tendency fore he commits the mistake of ecting an unattractive building.

Consideration in Building

There are a lot of things that can- t be and should not be regulated law, but should be governed more ccessfully than they are by good ste and proper consideration for bers of good taste. This applies in particularly conspicuous way to chitecture To break into a street generally good building standards ith a freakish, garish or otherwise congruous structure is not only a anifestation of bad taste, but a elfish disregard for the rights and in- rests of those who exercise good ste and good business judgment. he same is true of the architect or uilder who puts a freak dwelling in beautiful and harmonious neighbor- ood of homes. Such an architect or uilder discredits himself and offends nd injures persons of better taste.—ansas City Star.

Take Inventory of Trees

Some Eastern cities take an inven- ory of their trees yearly. Hartford, onn., values the trees on Washing- on street, the main street of the city, t $138.41 each. Newton, Mass., val- es each of its street trees at $120.50; ewark, N. J., at $30.72 replacement alue, Springfield, Mass., at $100; Ann rbor, Mich., at $100. The minimum alue of a street tree is fixed by the orestry department of the University f Michigan at $15, plus an increment or each year of its life.

Home Owner Is King

The man who builds in the small- ome class today is a monarch of rank eyond the aspirations of the feudal aron, with his ancestral castle and s army of retainers. The home uilder of today has catering to his eeds a host of eager slaves incon- eivable and impossible in feudal days —the myriad manufacturers of build- ng products.

Paint a Great Transformer

The season of the year is here that eems by its very brightness to throw er homes into a dingy, shabby re- ef. Paint is a magical transformer hat will go a long way toward chang g this condition, for its application ill replace the worn appearance with e of pristine freshness.

ROAD BUILDING

CITIES BUILDING GOOD PAVEMENTS

A census of city paving, begun January 1, and just completed by the American City Magazine, shows a total of 839,000,000 square yards of paved street in the 1,009 leading cities of the United States.

This yardage is equivalent to 84,000 miles of roadway 18 feet wide—enough to span the country from coast to coast 28 times and accommodate two continuous lines of motor traffic moving in opposite directions and each containing 44,520,000 vehicles.

The mileage of the paved streets, as shown by the census, is equal to one-third the total steam and electric railroad mileage of the country and 57 per cent of the total mileage in the federal-aid highway system

It is 27,000 miles more than the mileage of the latter system thus far improved with federal-aid funds and is equal to one thirty-fifth of the total road mileage of the United States.

Results of the census, therefore indicate that street paving in the cities is more than keeping pace with the improvement of the rural highways, a fact not generally appreciated.

New York city from 1920 to 1926, added 6,706,000 yards of pavement to her streets, thereby raising the total from 41,375,000 square yards in 1920 to 48,082,000 square yards in 1926.

Chicago, from 1920 to 1926, showed a gain in paved streets of only 689,670 square yards, but in the same period that city raised the standard of paving much higher Chicago's total paved streets in 1920 were 38,430,330 square yards in area while in 1926 the total was 39,120,000 square yards.

Philadelphia had a conspicuous gain of 2,932,000 square yards in the 1920 to 1926 period. Philadelphia's total paved streets in 1920 were 22,609,962 square yards in area, while in 1926 the total was 25,541,663 square yards.

Calcium Chloride, Oil and Tar Protect Roads

With the heavy traffic season here, the Minnesota highway department has been treating the more heavily traveled trunk highways with calcium chloride, oil or tar The main purpose of this treatment is to save the road surface and save maintenance expense. Incidentally the treatment lays the dust, and by many motorists this feature is appreciated more than the benefit to the road surface.

A total of over 400 miles will be treated with calcium chloride and about 150 miles with oil or tar. The cost of calcium chloride treatment is about $350 per mile, and oil or tar $1,200 per mile, but the latter is considered more lasting and capable of carrying heavier traffic. The calcium chloride is not a binder, like oil or tar, but it draws moisture from the atmosphere, and this protects the road surface and prevents dust.

On account of the cost, it will be impossible to apply the surface binders to more than about one-twelfth of the total trunk highway mileage, and the treatment must be confined to the sections of unpaved road where traffic is so heavy as to make maintenance of a smooth surface practically impossible without a binder The treatment is not permanent, but must be repeated at least once a year.

At the time of the last traffic census, Minnesota had approximately 3,300 miles of unpaved trunk highway, upon which the daily average was more than 500 vehicles and several stretches of gravel road which carried more than 2,000 vehicles per day.

Good Road Facts

There is ever the call for "faster highways." It rather drowns out the demand for a slower death rate.

Canadian highway development last year cost $150,000,000. There are about 400,000 miles of highway in the Dominion, 55 per cent of which is unimproved earth!

Many cities in Florida have put a ban on solid rubber tires. It is said that this rule was made effective as solid rubber tires caused ruts in roads during wet weather. Few streets or highways in that state are constructed with rock or concrete base.

Embarrassed

My father was a preacher. One Sunday, just as he was getting to the climax of his sermon, he reached into his pocket and, horrors, pulled out a plug of tobacco in his absent-mindedness.

As if that were not bad enough, he raised it, also absent-mindedly, and was about to take a chew when he realized what he was doing.

Then he tried to slip it back into his pocket, but, of course, all eyes were on him and everybody saw what he had done. That was my most embarrassing moment.—J. A., in Capper's Weekly.

Glass Much Used in Ancient Egypt

As long ago as 2500 B. C. the inhabitants of the Euphrates valley were making glass and a little later were selling it to the Egyptians. Then about 1500 B. C. some personage unknown had the bright thought of importing glassmakers. Fifty years after the advent of the Syrian artisans into Egypt, according to Sir Flinders Petrie in a recent lecture before the members of the Society of Glass Technology at University college, London, glass was of as relatively common occurrence in that country as it is on the 10-cent store counter of today.

There is no question that the women of ancient Egypt loved adornment, for beads, popular then as now, formed the principal use for glass. They were made not from liquid glass, since glass-blowing did not come into practice until the Christian era, but from glass paste. They also used it for making weights of considerable accuracy, said Sir Flinders, three of the same denomination having proved on testing to agree within one two-hundredth of a grain.

Postage Stamps Give Lessons in History

"Everybody who posts or receives a communication through the United States mail receives nolens volens, a transitory lesson in the history of the nation," says Harry S. New, postmaster general, in an article in School Life, a publication of the Interior department.

"In general the designs upon the regular issues have included the representation of the head of one of the Presidents, but in the past 50 years the custom has grown of commemorating important historical events by special issues," states the postmaster general. "The novel appearance of the new stamps immediately arrests the attention of the user, and inquiry into its meaning naturally follows. The result is a valuable lesson in history which few escape, even those of limited education.

"Thirteen special series of adhesive stamps have been employed to impress historical occasions upon the popular mind."

Chemists have recently developed a process whereby old rubber tires can be converted back into a devulcanized rubber which, when mixed with a new rubber, produces a compound as good as new rubber itself. Fully ten per cent of the rubber now used in the United States can thus be produced at a cost of 9 cents a pound.

Oats around Klemme is very good this year. Reports coming to the Times Office give oats as making all the way from thirty-five to sixty bushels per acre. Corn is growing by leaps and bounds here and prospects look mighty good for a big yield around this vicinity. LUBBE ALBERS DIED LAST FRIDAY

PASSED AWAY AT A MASON CITY HOSPITAL FRIDAY

This community was sadly shocked when it was learned that Mr. Lubbe Albers had passed away at a Mason City hospital Friday afternoon, following an operation which he underwent last Wednesday from which there was but little hopes for his recovery.

Mr. Albers was one of the prominent and successful farmers of this community and was highly thought of by all who knew him. He was a man who was fair and square in all his dealings with his fellow men.

Mr. Albers was in the prime of life when he was stricken and many of his friends did not realize the seriousness of his condition and the news of his death came as a sudden blow to the community.

Besides his wife, he leaves six children to mourn his seemingly untimely death.

The sincere sympathy of the entire community is extended to the Albers family and the relatives in their bereavement.

umber of our readers have asked to write up the trip we took thru sconsin and Minnesota the past ek, so we will endeavor to give air deacription of the most intering things we saw on our week's r of the scenic lake and timber ntry

C. G Waterman, wife, and little ughter; Ye Editor, wife and son, re the members of the party, and left Klemme Sunday morning, gust 8th at 5·15 o'clock on what ved to be a wonderful scenic trip m the time we left Klemme unwe returned home. It impressed with the fact that anyone wantg to spend only a week's vacation uld profitably follow the same ute of travel that we did.

From Garner we turned east and llowed highway 19 all the way to e river at McGregor. The scenery gins right "at home" and the rly morning drive was fine. The diola beds on the highway at Nora rings were beautiful and then at dd we saw a large onion field in e process of harvest. Over near w Hampton and from there on st it had evidently rained a lot as stures were very green and no reshing had yet been done. The ocks looked dark in color all the ay to McGregor.

At West Union we began to wind ound and got into the hilly coun- and we began to see lots of big ick farm houses. At Clermont e encountered a bad hill going out town which was steep and rough nd we had to shift gears to make e climb At the little town of ard we saw the brick church and arsonage where Rev. Gauger once ad charge, and where the present imes "devil" Bill was born.

We got into McGregor at 11.40 m and had lunch there and then ent a little time looking around aiting for the ferry to take us to e other side of the Mississippi

McGregor is a "one-street" town; igh bluffs on each side and the big iver in front. We did not have ime to take in the sights there but here are many places of beauty o pend at least a day looking around. The United States boat "General Allen" was anchored in the river. The overnment has been doing some ork in the river at McGregor and ses the steamer to tow barges of ock to build small dams or breakers o keep the river in its channel.

At one o'clock we ran our cars on he ferry The ferry had a turnable on it and everybody drove on he table; the cars were turned around and parked so that when we got to the other shore we could drive hem out straight.

On the way across the river we passed under the Milwaukee railroad company's pontoon bridge. A part of this bridge floats and takes the place of a draw.

The Government has surveyed the river for a bridge for cars and sometime in the future such a bridge may be built It will have to be about a mile and a half long and will span the river to the island in the middle of the stream. We went over three miles on the ferry to get across.

We landed at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin and took the highway out for Madison, Wis Up to this time we had fine roads but now we hit clay roads that were quite rough and several miles under construction that was bad going. At Bridgeport we had to spend two bits to get across the Wisconsin river on a rickety old toll bridge.

In the vicinity of Mount Ida, Blue Mounds and through there to Madison we hit good roads again, most of which was crushed rock and some tarvia roads. We were getting into the dairying country and began to see cheese factories along the road. Making cheese is one of the biggest industries of Wisconsin and we saw hundreds of cheese factories going through the state.

We drove into Madison about six that evening and had some difficulty getting through as we got into a traffic jam as there was a big fire there and everybody came to see it and it took us over half an hour to get away from the jam A large lumber yard burned down and it made quite a smudge We finally got across to the street and out to the tourist camp, which we found to be one of the best we had ever been in.

Madison, the capital of Wisconsin, is a clean, beautiful city, not so very large but nicely located and bordering on four lakes We drove around the next morning and saw the capitol building and the university grounds, both of which faced the lakes The residence section of Madison is well kept up

We left Madison Monday morning in a down pour of rain for Killbourn to view the Dells. Despite the rain the drive was beautiful thru Baraboo, Sauk City, Prairie du Lac and other towns, all of which were very nice looking We began to see lots of pea canning factories and more cheese factories along the highway We passed by a large woolen mill at Baraboo. The drive along the river, and up and down hill was very fine out of Madison.

The road from Madison to Killbourn was all concrete paved and in fine shape

We arrived in Killbourn at noon and had lunch before taking a boat up the river Killbourn is a small town of about 1200 population but they are busy and make lots of money off the tourists who come to see the Dells, however we didn't find them to be "hold-ups" as some people would lead us to believe., but they were over-bearing in rendering service and had men stationed all along the streets trying to sell boat tickets along with which you could park your car free in a garage and have free tourist park Competition was certainly keen among the several boat companies

We thought the Consolidated Boat Company looked about as good as any and we got on one of their sight seeing launches at one o'clock for the nine mile trip up the Wisconsin river which has cut a deep gorge through the rocks which is known as the Dells.

The sight seeing launches carry fifty passengers and each boat has a native Winnebago Indian for a guide who explains the various places of interest on the trip and tells some of the history of the country. The fare is $1.50 per passenger and we thought it was very reasonable. A boat trip is the only way possible to view the Dells.

We might say here that the name "Dells" is a French word meaning "layers of rock" The gorge cut by the river is nowhere over a quarter of a mile wide, and in most places it is quite narrow. In a few places the gorge is only wide enough for the boats to conveniently pass thru. The fantastically water-cut and water-worn rocks tower from about fifty feet to perhaps a hundred and fifty feet on each side above the river They are covered with trees of all kinds on top and the most beautiful wild ferns imaginable grow between the rocks and on the sides Wild ferns with leaves three feet long and a foot wide are a common sight The guide informed us that over thirty varieties of ferns were found there and as many or more kinds of trees grew in the rocks.

The main points of interest thru the upper Dells are in the order we saw them: High Rock, Romance Cliff, Chimney Rock, Stone Face, Old Dell House, Chapel Gorge, Circle Bend, Eaton Grotto, Navy Yard, Sturgeon Rock, Glen Eyrie, Devil's Elbow, The Narrows, Blackhawk's Cave, Rattlesnake Rock, Artist's Glen, Cold Water Canyon, Giant's Shield, Alligator's Head, Steamboat Rock, Rood's Glen, Arch Cove, the Witches' Gulch, Palisades, Visor Ledge, Luncheon Hall, Hornet's Nest, Stand Rock and Louis Bluff

The above are the outstanding features of the trip, but the scenic beauty is continuous along the entire trip Side trips are made into Cold Water Canyon, Witches' Gluch and to Stand Rock The Winnebago Indians made all kinds of baskets and Indian Bead work which is on sale at both Cold Water Canyon and Witches' Gulch. We saw the old Chief of the tribe himself at Cold Water Canyon The canyon gets its name from the cold water in the rocks which makes the little canyon quite chilly Here the guide showed us how the trees could grow in the rock A tree close by was seen that had two roots, each over forty feet long and each root running along a horizontal crevice in the rocks. The roots were longer than the tree itself.

The Wisconsin river, which has formed the Dells in some by gone age derives its name from an Indian word meaning, "dark waters." It is certainly well named because it is black as ink through the Dells. It gets its dark color from the rock through which it flows in Wisconsin The river is one hundred and fifty feet deep in nearly all parts of the Dells.

The trip took nearly four hours and the guide was very courteous and answered many questions He did not rush the trip as is the case on most sight seeing trips, but took plenty of time so that everybody had a chance to see all they cared to.

The trip to the Dells is one well worth taking and is not so far but one could take it by auto from here and be back home in three of four days and there is wonderful scenery all the way.

That night we camped in the "pay camp" overlooking the river, up on a high bluff An Indian pow-wow was on that night up the river but we did not take it in as we were all tired from rambling around that day The pow-wow is held in what might be called a natural theatre up near Stand Rock, nine miles up the river The seats, or bleachers, are natural layers of rock and the "stage" is a large semi-cirle opening onto the river and the Winnebago Indians put on a big show

ALMA E. HASKELL ENDED OWN LIFE IN COLORADO

We are in receipt of a copy of the Eastern Colorado Leader, published by Howard Africa, at Limon, Colo. The marked copy contained the following item of news:

Mrs Alma E. Haskell of the Walks Camp neighborhood ended her life Thursday at about 11 a. m. by taking strychine. Ill health was the cause for the rash act.

The Haskell family homesteaded their present farm nineteen years ago

She leaves to mourn her loss her aged invalid husband and one daughter, Miss Pansy.

Funeral services will be held at the home at 10 o'clock Saturday and the body laid to rest a Walks Camp cemetery beside her two sons who preceded her in death.

THEY GO LIKE "HOT CAKES"

The 1926 edition of the Farm Hand Book, issued by the Extension Service of Iowa State College, has gone like the proverbial hot cakes. Already more than 25,000 copies have been distributed since the book appeared last June It contains 80 pages of very useful information and farmers who have it keep it handy on their desks A copy may be secured free by writing to the Extension Service, Iowa State College, at Ames.

DISCUSS HOW TO MAKE PICKLES

Many Recipes Included In Leaflet Which Will Be Sent Free

A new mimeographed leaflet has just been issued by the Home Economics Division of Iowa State College, which tells in detail how to make pickles and includes many recipes contributed by various women from over the state who are members of the Homemakers' Radio club of Iowa State College.

Recipes included in the leaflet are for nine-day pickles, cucumber pickles, dill pickles, mustard pickles, sweet sliced cucumber pickles, cold mustard pickles, French pickles, sweet ripe cucumber pickles, corn salad, pepper hash, apple chutney, piccalilli, peach pickles and ice pickles.

Spoilage in pickles is due largely to not covering them in the first place with the brine and in the second place to not keeping them air tight after the brine becomes acid. So say the college home economics specialists.

Copies of the leaflets with directions and recipes for making pickles may be obtained free by writing to the Home Economics Division, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa.

CHAMPION FIDDLER

On the left is Josiah Petty of Perry, Iowa, champion fiddler of Iowa, winner in the state-wide old fiddlers' contest at the 1925 Iowa State Fair and considered one of the strongest contenders for the same honors at the State Fair again this summer. More than 100 old-timers from all parts of the state are expected to compete in the championship event at Des Moines on Sept. 1.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

This column of Kansas wind had a rest the past week as the Editor was soaking in the sights of the land of cheese and ten thousand Swedes. Some of the scenery we saw was fine, other scenery didn't smell so good. The pea shuckers cluttered up the country with all kinds of smells. They bottle up the smell and turn it loose on the heese and that's the way they make limburger.

Wisconsin's chief industry is "taking-in" tourists.

Fishing is good in Wisconsin—so they told us, only go further north. We did. They told us the same story. We did again. The fish were always forther north. Maybe Minnesota had them so we inquired at Duluth. They told us to go to Canada We told them to go to—well, it wasn't that cold!

Minnesota is noted for it's Scandihoovians and Superior herrings. We qualified for the first group and chewed 'snoose." We might be a fish, but not a herring.

An Irishman has no chance to be a cop in Duluth. They got to know how to sing like a Norwegian.

And, spoaking of cops, reminds us of Officer Leitzinger, of the local force. He carries an Ingersoll timepiece that's faster than a Bayside chicken. Last Thursday the ticker gained half hour and as the hour indicated high noon he tooted the whistle. Everybody thought it was a fire and rushed around looking for it. They asked Harold whose house was afire and he told them to go look in the stove. A comparison with other dollar clocks showed up the mistake. Anyway we have'nt had a good fire for some time and the fire fighters needed exercise.

Paul Grange has been building a fountain down at the Northern Lumber Company the past week. The fountain is about twelve feet in diameter and is big enough for a swimming pool. Next thing we know Paul will be putting on a bathing beauty contest. We have already spoken for a front row. When the fountain is completed it will greatly add to the beauty of the yard and is a fine improv ment

We almost suspicioned that Jack Wellemeyer was a bootlegger the other day when we were at the store sampling cheese and crackers. Jack led us into a quiet place and said, "Say Jergie, I know how to make the 'real stuff'." The secret is so good we copied it down and will pass it along to the rest of our near beer friends. Here it is all in one volume and no waiting for the second installment: "Chase wild bullfrogs for three miles and gather up hops. To them add ten gallons of tan bark, one-half pint of good shellac and one bar of home made soap Boil for 36 hours and stir well, then strain thru and I. W. W. sock to keep it from working. Add one big grasshopper to each pint to give it a kick. Pour a little into the kitchen sink; if takes the enamel off, it is ready for bottling." This recipe is guaranteed to be legal. Now, we are just passing this along to our friends and we want it kept quiet.

The city dads put the kibosch on any future Sunday baseball in this town when they voted to a man to put the skids to the proposition Fans who want to witness the national sport will have to seek it outside the gates of our fair city. Klemme isn't the first town where Sunday movies and baseball have been battled pro and con. Some towns say it's all jake, and others frown on it. The Puritans used to think it was wrong for a man to kiss his wife on Sunday—but they have gotten over it now.

A number have asked us when we are going to take another vacation. Evidently this windy column don't suit them. Others say it's great stuff, keep it up.

We welcome contributions, but they must be signed Also lay off knocking. This column is for the boosters and wise-crackers of the Main Drag.

We heard some kids arguing at the post office the other day. One kid says, "My dad works in a store and smokes cigars." Second kid says, "H'm, that nuthin', my paw used 'ter wurk in a circuss and he smokes Camels." Third lad says, "Ah heck, my dad used to cut meat at a butcher shop and he smoked ham!" About that time a kid from south of town walked in and said, "Yu kid's make my ears ache, "My dad, when he husks corn. smokes cobs."

Happy Johnson says there's about as much sense in advertising milk from contented cows, as in advertising sausage from hogs that died happy.

And, we wonder if Bally Kluckhohn has gotten in on any more big thresher dinners lately? We warn the farmers that Bally carries an awful appetite.

The Times is thirty-one years old today and begins Vol. 31 No. 1. We haven't yet decided wether we will have a birthday cake for the old boy or not. It's been around here about as long as most of the natives, and it's like a bad cat—it keeps coming back. Some folks have taken it for all those years and paid right up to the dot. Others have forgotten to pay and a collection agency has been running all over h—l looking for them ever since. The present editor has published the paper nearly ten years; yes, we'll agree with you, it's too long. But, we won't guarantee we stay by it another ten years. Our readers will probably want a change of wind before that unless we cut out this column of free gas.

Running this paper is the way we manufacture bread and butter and put gas in the buggy. So, "Thanks For The Buggy Ride!"

COOLIDGE APPROVES HUGE NEW AIR PLAN

President and Secretary Hoover O. K. Routes Spanning the United States.

Paul Smiths, N. Y.—Signalizing the inauguration of an era of vast development of air transport in this country, President Coolidge and Secretary of Commerce Hoover have approved plans for the greatest air program in the history of the world.

Under the provisions of the recent legislation empowering the Department of Commerce to regulate and promote civil aeronautics the government, in accord with the program approved by the President, will proceed to establish a multitude of national air-transit routes for passenger, express, freight and mail transportation.

"We are on the threshold of a general development of civil aeronautics in this country," Secretary Hoover said after his conference with the President. "Within six months we shall have full passenger, express and mail services in operation on transcontinental air routes and the extension of these services is sure to proceed rapidly thereafter. Eventually we shall have a vast system of commercial air transport which will furnish a reserve of planes and trained pilots for national defense."

The specific action of the President and the commerce secretary was to approve the establishment of the following routes:

1. Transcontinental airway from New York to the Pacific coast, via Cleveland, Chicago, Iowa City, Des Moines, Omaha, North Platte, Cheyenne and Salt Lake city, where the route divides, with one branch going to San Francisco, the other to Los Angeles. Another branch to Portland and Seattle will be added later.

2. Southwestern airway from Chicago to Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas, via Moline, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Wichita, Oklahoma City and Tulsa.

Other routes to be established in the near future are:

1. Atlantic airway from some point above Boston to Miami, via New York city, Philadelphia, Raleigh, Savannah or Atlanta, and Jacksonville.

2. Pacific airway from southern California to northern Washington.

3. Great Lakes airway, a branch of the transcontinental from Cleveland via Detroit to Chicago.

4. Northwest airway from Chicago to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

5. Mississippi valley airway from Chicago via St. Louis to New Orleans.

The establishment of airways includes the improvement by the government of emergency landing fields, the marking and lighting of the designated routes, the promulgation and enforcement of air navigation rules, the licensing of pilots and the inspection of safety of aircraft.

The President will appoint, at an early date, national advisory committees composed of representatives of the commercial air transport interests to co-operate with the assistant secretaries of commerce, war and navy in charge of aviation activities.

General Motors Cuts $600,000,000 "Melon"

New York.—The General Motors corporation made its stockholders $600,000,000 richer (on paper, at least) by cutting a "melon" which passes all precedent in financial history. By declaring a stock dividend of 50 per cent the corporation authorized an increase of about 3,000,000 shares in its common stock and advanced itself, on the basis of share capital, to an unrivaled position among American industries.

To Resume Senate Slush Fund Hearing in Chicago

Chicago.—That the senate slush fund investigating committee will resume its hearings in Chicago in September has been announced definitely by Senator James A. Reed, chairman of the investigating committee. The exact date has not been decided.

Several witnesses are yet to be heard, according to Senator Reed, before the bottom is reached.

Florence Allen Loses Fight for Senate Seat

Columbus, Ohio.—The prediction that Ohio would be the first state in the Union to elect a woman to the United States senate was upset as a result of the recent primary. Florence Allen, state Supreme court justice and candidate for the Democratic nomination for a federal senatorial seat, was decisively defeated by former Senator Atlee Pomerene.

Fall Kills War Veteran

Harrisonville, Mo.—Robert B. Morris, one hundred and three years old, died here as a result of injuries received when he fell from a porch and fractured his hip. He was a veteran of the Mexican and Civil wars.

Paris Lawmakers Adjourn

Paris.—Both houses of parliament have adjourned for the summer recess to reconvene in October, leaving the most nettlesome thorn in the flesh of France, the problem of the interallied debts, still unsettled and with no immediate solution likely.

Receiver for Florida Firm

Jacksonville, Fla.—Federal Judge Lake Jones has ordered a receivership for the $1,000,000 Southern Home Sites corporation of Miami.

NEW ASSISTANT CHIEF

Capt. Emory S. Land has been made assistant chief of the bureau of naval aeronautics to succeed Commander John Rodgers, who has been ordered to sea duty at his own request. Captain Land has been chief of materials in the bureau for four years.

COOLIDGE URGED TO AID FRUIT GROWERS

Loans on Crops Wanted During Period of Production.

Paul Smiths, N. Y.—There will be an unprecedented fruit crop this fall, particularly apples, peaches and grapes, Arthur R. Rule, general manager of the Federated Fruit and Vegetable growers, told President Coolidge in the course of a conference on proposed legislation to extend agricultural credit facilities.

The consumer will find fruit this year cheaper than ever before and it would be still cheaper were growers able to market all they grow instead of being compelled by inadequate marketing facilities to leave apples and peaches to rot on the ground.

The legislation Mr. Rule proposes would authorize the intermediate credit banks and agricultural credit associations to make loans to fruit and vegetable growers and general farmers on their crops during the period of production just as loans are made to cattle growers over a period of two and three years on stock they are fattening for market. This aid to stock raisers was given under an act of congress and Mr. Rule would have the benefit extended to all branches of agriculture.

The President did not commit himself to approval of this specific proposal but took it under advisement with the assurance that he favors supplying the farmers with adequate credit facilities.

"It is unfortunate for both consumer and producer," said Mr. Rule, "that the organization for marketing the fruit crop is inadequate. Only 20 per cent of the growers are in the co-operative organizations or organized at all."

U. S. "Cyclops," World's Largest Bombing Plane

Philadelphia.—The "Cyclops," the mystery plane of the United States army service, was recently christened at the Huff-Deland Airplane company in Bristol, near here.

The plane is said to be the largest bomber in the world and to have the largest engine.

The speed of the "Cyclops" is given at 135 miles an hour and without carrying ammunition it is said to be capable of a 24-hour flight. Many of the features of the new craft are veiled in mystery pursuant to instructions from the War department. A novelty is the arrangement of the two machine guns, one on top and one at the bottom. The lower weapon can be regulated by a movable platform which army flying officers assert will prevent an attack from below.

Weighing 17,000 pounds, the plane has a horsepower of 825 and its designers claim it will be able to cruise for eight hours while carrying 4,000 pounds of bombs.

Trio at Hall Slaying Identified by Woman

Somerville, N. J.—"Willie" Stevens and Henry Carpender were sent back to jail after being identified during their arraignment as having been on the old Phillips farm the night Rev. Edward W. Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills were killed there.

Stevens is the weak-minded brother of Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, widow of the slain rector, who is also charged with the murders; Carpender, a Wall street broker, is her cousin. Mrs. Gibson had previously identified Mrs. Hall as the woman she saw bending over the bodies.

HANDS OFF, IS U. S. POLICY IN MEXI

Plea for Severance of Diplomatic Relations Is Turned Down.

Mexico City.—President Calles vetoed the pushing of the char against Archbishop Mora Del Rio his published statements criticizing government's religious policy.

The President's decision follow extended conferences with the gove ment legal authorities.

Washington.—The State departm has refused to act on the request the Knights of Columbus that di matic relations with Mexico be s ered as a result of the church war.

Secretary of State Kellogg, it learned, replied that this governm must still consider the Mexican ligious controversy a strictly inter affair and must continue a policy hands off.

It also was learned that any acti taken by the United States will based upon Mexico's antialien la which are the subject of many Ame can protests and are again reachi a critical stage. It is this matter not the church issue which is bring Ambassador Sheffield back to the Un ed States to urge a stronger Mexic policy.

The Knights of Columbus' prote was presented by Supreme Knig James A. Flaherty of Philadelphia. was accompanied by Treasurer Dan Callahan of Washington The prote was based on a resolution adopted the Philadelphia convention August

The resolution advocated immedia severance of diplomatic relatio lifting of the embargo on arms and move to "eradicate sovietism ne door to America."

It was said the department th far has received none of the repor of outrages against American citize on which the Knights of Columbu protest was based.

There are several official protest already lodged with the Mexican go ernment on the subject of her anti alien laws. The latest was delivere last week.

Ambassador Sheffield's conference with President Coolidge will mark th most critical point in determining th course of American policy in Mexico

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

The shipping board has decided no to offer for sale at this time the Amer ican Palmetto line, operating betwee southern and European ports.

Regulations designed to prevent im port of live stock suffering from dis ease have been published The regu lations, which affect the United States and Mexico similarly, were drafted by representatives of the two nations.

United States treasury officials, it was reported, are preparing to resume negotiations with Greece for the settlement of her $15,000,000 war debt to this country. Previous negotiations were broken off about three months ago.

Policewomen of the nation's capital are too rough. That was the conclusion of a police trial board, which fined two of them $25 each on charges of false arrest and rough handling brought by Mrs. Loretta Marx.

Rev. Dr. Walden Meyer, canon of the Washington cathedral, is dead at Gloucester, Mass., where he was spending the summer. A native of Washington, Doctor Meyer was a graduate of Harvard and Oxford.

Illinois Primary Law Is Held to Be Invalid

Dixon, Ill.—The Illinois primary election laws were held invalid and unconstitutional by three judges sitting en banc in the Lee Circuit court here. Their decision, if sustained by the Supreme court, will wipe out the entire system of making party nominations by direct primaries in Illinois.

The basis of the suit and of the decision is that equal representation in county conventions, and consequently in state and judicial conventions, is impossible under the existing law

The case will go to the state Supreme court in October on an appeal by State's Attorney Mark C. Keller of Lee county. George C. Dixon, country lawyer and grandson of the founder of the town of Dixon, says he is confident the Supreme court will sweep the primary laws from the statute books.

Dixon's attack is the first comprehensive effort that has been made to knock out the general and legislative primary acts of 1910, successors to the nominating laws of 1905, 1906 and 1908, which were nullified one by one by the Supreme court of Illinois shortly after their passage.

The AMERICAN LEGION

(By for This Department Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

TO GET TIME TO GO TO FRANCE IN 1927

A recent announcement by Gen. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania railroad, that employees of the railroad who are former service men may have four weeks off in September, 1927, to go to France with the American Legion and that they would not forego their 1926 vacations, has been followed by a nation-wide movement of employers to take similar action.

The time off for Legionnaires to make the trip has been indorsed by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the Commonwealth Edison company, the United Mine Workers of America, the American Federation of Labor, the International Typographical union, and scores of other employers and employees' associations and unions.

The Couzens bill permitting former service men in government employ to have 60 days off for the trip has been signed by President Coolidge. Another act made it necessary, however, that the employees forego their 1926 vacations in order to get the 60 days.

Essay Contest Date Is Extended to November 15

The date for closing the national "Back-to-France Essay Contest" of the France convention committee of the American Legion, has been extended to November 15 instead of September 15, due to urgent requests from the field.

Several hundred essays have been received from every part of the United States. The subject is "Why I Want to Go to France with the American Legion in 1927." Three cash prizes have been donated by the steamship companies whose 24 ocean liners will carry the 30,000 Legionnaires to France. The first prize is $350; the second, $150, and the third, $100.

Those eligible to compete are members of the American Legion and the Legion auxiliary. Three judges of national prominence will choose the winners. They are William Allen White, Richard Henry Little and Frederick Palmer.

The essays must give the name of the writer as well as the post or unit of which the writer is a member. Each essay is limited to 400 words. They should be addressed to the National Convention Committee, American Legion, Indianapolis, Ind.

Insurance Companies Offer Trips to France

Several insurance companies are offering free trips to France with the American Legion in 1927 to their agents who are eligible to make the pilgrimage if a certain amount of business is written by them.

One company offers three grades of accommodations besides an additional $100 for spending money. The first prize, including the best accommodations, railroad fare to and from the port of sailing and the $100, requires that $400,000 worth of business be written between July 1, 1926, and July 31, 1927. The agent who writes $200,000 will receive railroad fare, the $100 and the minimum accommodations, while $300,000 business written will provide for the medium accommodations, railroad fare and the $100 spending money.

Suspicious

"Hello, sheik!" hailed the flapper. "Take me for a nice long ride in your new car?"

"Got your walking shoes?" asked the sheik suspiciously.

"No."

"Got a pair of roller skates with you?"

"No."

"Carry a six gun?"

"No."

"Well, then, climb aboard, but I'll bet there's a catch in it somewhere."—American Legion Monthly.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Your dreams are the wealth of your spirit, the goal,
The ideal you long to attain,
The radiant vision that gladdens your soul,
The hope that illumines the years as they roll,
And robs them of sorrow and pain.

HINTS AND THINGS

If fond of oysters add a little oyster liquor to tomato bouillon; it greatly improves the flavor.

Vanilla flavor should not be used in fried foods like doughnuts, crullers and such cakes. Nutmeg or other spices are appropriate.

If silver is washed and dried as soon as possible after using, much of the polishing will be eliminated.

Lay a cold cloth dipped in cold water over the bottom of a cake tin—the cake will be removed much easier.

Dry bits of cheese put through the meat grinder and mixed with boiling-hot cream, a dash of cayenne, will make a good cream cheese to serve in various ways. Spread on crackers and served with a salad it makes a good luncheon dish.

When roasting meat a teaspoonful of sugar added to the water when basting adds flavor as well as color to the roast and gravy.

Always dry graniteware away from the heat, as it will chip and crack; often bits will get into the food in this way.

If a child should get any foreign substance up his nose, do not try to probe for it, but put a bit of pepper or snuff on the lip under the other nostril; he will sneeze and dislodge the obstruction, unless firmly lodged. In such case call a physician. Blowing up the free nostril is often a help, if the object is not too tightly lodged.

Keep old stocking legs to slip on the arms when cooking to save good dress sleeves, or use them for covering legs of chairs or tables when moving. Cut into two-inch strips, silk stockings of various colors are crocheted or woven into pretty covers for cushions.

Cover the small clock with a glass bowl if the ticking annoys at night. The time can be seen without the disturbance of the noise.

When washing greens add a handful of salt to the water. It will dislodge any insects that may be clinging to the leaves.

Zinc fillings or small pieces of zinc placed on the coals in a grate or furnace will clear the chimney of soot.

A tablespoonful of vinegar added to stews of meat that are tough seem to soften the tough fibers wonderfully.

Summer Dishes.

During the hot weather the meat supply should be cut down. If there are mushrooms to be had from the fields one need not miss having appetizing meats.

Tuna Fish With Mushrooms.—Take two cupfuls of tuna fish, one cupful of thin cream, one teaspoonful of butter, one-half teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of cayenne, a grating of nutmeg, two cupfuls of mushrooms cut into dice and cooked in butter five minutes, one cupful of white sauce and a tablespoonful of minced parsley. Add the mushrooms to the tuna, the cream and the seasonings, stir in the butter and simmer 15 minutes. Serve on buttered toast and pour the hot, well-seasoned white sauce with the parsley added, over all.

Queen of Bread Pudding.—During the summer when bread moulds quickly, various puddings and au gratin dishes may be made occasionally. Take one pint of milk, one pint of bread crumbs, the yolks of two eggs, one cupful of sugar, a tablespoonful of melted butter, the rind and juice of half a lemon. Beat the whites of the eggs very stiff, add two tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Cover the pudding after mixing with a layer of sugar and lemon juice and rind, then cover with the meringue and bake until brown. Serve with cream or a hard sauce.

Cottage Cheese With Lettuce.—Heap creamed cottage cheese on fresh crisp lettuce, top with a spoonful of good boiled dressing and garnish with a cube of jelly or a bit of preserve. Sprinkle with chopped nuts if desired.

Best Lima Beans.—Take two cupfuls of fresh lima beans, add one medium-sized green pepper, one onion and one carrot, chopped. Cook in boiling water until tender, then salt, reserving when draining one-half of the liquor. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of flour, pepper and salt to taste, then add one-half cupful of the liquor and the same amount of milk; cook until smooth, pour over the vegetables and serve hot.

Veal Birds.—This is a dish that is especially enjoyed in summer: Have a slice of veal cut from the leg. Pound it until thin, cut into strips and place on each a spoonful of seasoned crumbs. Roll up the stripe, tie or skewer, dip into seasoned flour and fry until well browned; now add a cupful or more of thin cream and simmer for half an hour. Serve with the skewers removed and the sauce poured over the birds.

DEBONAIR VAGABOND FELTS; BEACH WEAR IS PRACTICAL

THAT something new in millinery, always due to appear for late summer, has arrived this year in force. Shop windows and promenades are full of gay emigrants from Paris—newly arrived and very captivating, light felt hats, to be worn with the airiest day dresses and sports clothes and probably destined to reappear in darker colors, or brighter ones, for fall. These are the "vagabond" hats with which summer is ringing down the curtain on the best performance in millinery for several years. They are only successful in fine qualities and are made with narrow or medium-wide, floppy brims in light tans, gray, pale rose, pinkish tan, ivory, putty color, and other delicate shades. Usually they are trimmed with ribbon but they cannot be described as simple, for the trims are intricate and the ribbon sometimes a bit gorgeous, when gold or silver metallic patterns are used.

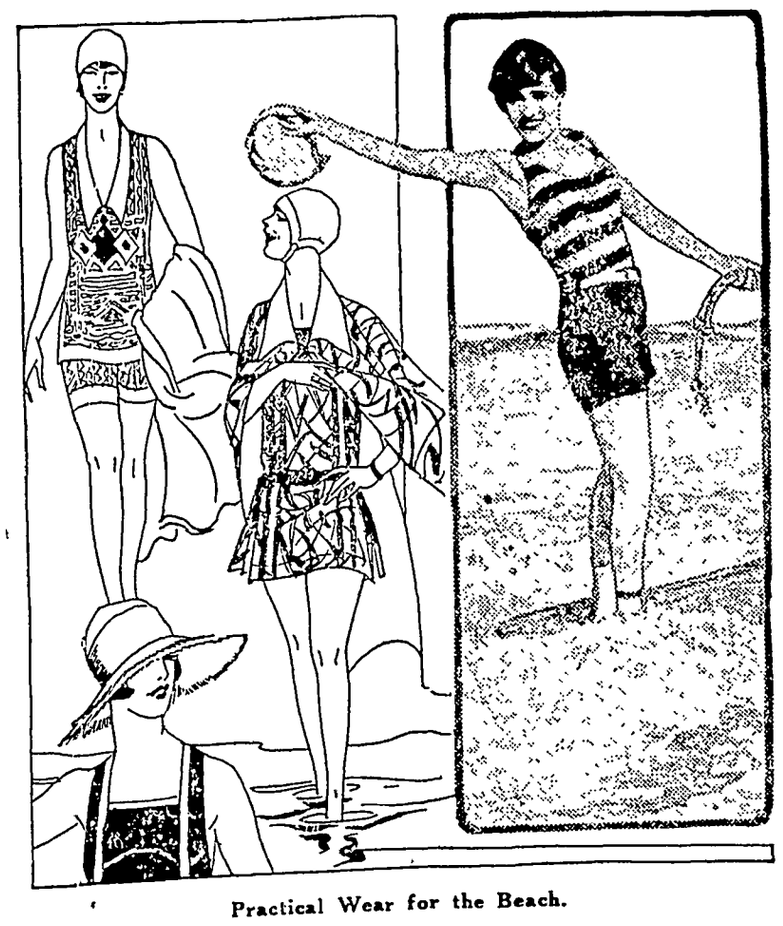
Some Emigrants From Paris.

The group of late summer hats shown here includes four felts of the vagabond type and one French sailor in straw. Both the smooth, creamy felts and the rougher "scratch" varieties are shown in the new shapes. The group leads off with a narrow-brimmed model that flares upward across the front and left side. The crown is draped with ribbon collar and ornament which is placed at the right side. The French sailor, in natural straw color, has its brim edge bound with narrow gilt braid, and this binding is repeated on the ribbon collar and buckle made of ribbon. A small shape that hints of the vagabond type has a handsome collar about the crown, made of overlapping lengths of velvet ribbon and is finished with a small ornament at the front, but very vagabondish is its neighbor with dented crown, brim widened and turned up at the back. A ribbon collar and a rosette, made with irregular plaits, trim it.

A similar shape with two ridges in the crown is content with a flat ribbon collar finished with groups of plaits at the side where two small cabochons made of strips of felt are placed.

It does not take long to tell the story of that most essential article of beach wear—the bathing suit. It is brief in every particular. Apparently all the world that goes to the beaches in any sort of bathing suit is bent on swimming in the most practical and unhampered fashion. The demand is for knitted one and two-piece suits; some of them in dark colors and mannish styles and many others in strong shades of red, green, blue and orange. Solid colors predominate but there is some diversity supplied by polka dots and stripes, usually in colors, and a smart, individual touch appears in the monograms worked on diamond-shaped or oblong patches.

Having determined upon a bathing suit, the next thing is the business of choosing a cape or robe to wear over it, and here is where the story of beachwear departs from the conventional and becomes exciting. The choice lies between garments of rubberized silk (including rubberized moire) or those of cretonne or terry cloth. The silks are shown in gay colors or quiet ones, and in many novel, futuristic designs. Gray is the favored solid color but there is far more demand for bright-figured patterns. Whatever the cape or robe may be made of, fashion approves a choice of colors that will harmonize with the bathing suit and show some relation to it. A new idea is a beach blanket of terry cloth that does double duty, serving as a wrap as well as a blanket. Capes are the most popular wraps for beach wear and all of them may be passed up for the "slicker." Even the cap must follow the lead of the suit and wrap in color, if it is to register smartness. There is considerable variety in this water millinery, with the helmet-shaped affair a great favorite. Rubber slippers or satin shoes dispose of the footwear question.



Practical Wear for the Beach.

Boxes that look like undersized hat boxes, with rubberized lining, serve to carry beachward all bathing needs, but amusing bags of rubberized silk that simulate queer dolls and conventional bags of cretonne outnumber them. Very pretty beach pillows are made of colored oilcloth.

Community Building

Put in Water System Without Much Outlay

People living outside of water zones will undoubtedly be interested to learn how one similarly situated secured a water and sewer system for less than $100. The man tells about it in a letter published in Liberty, in connection with an article on home-building, after explaining that when he moved into the country from a city home the family missed running water.

"We had a fine driven well," the man writes, "and talked of a windmill and a big tank. One day an idea came to me. I had heard of septic tanks for sewage, and investigated and found they were easy to build. I built mine in a series of three tanks of concrete, and ran the outlet into the field far below the house. In town one day I picked up, for a dollar, a discarded hundred-gallon tank which had been a heater. I got this to the roof of our rear porch, and connected pipes down from it to the sink, the lavatory, and the bath. Then I connected it with the well and installed a hand force pump.

"It required more than 300 strokes of the pump's piston to fill the tank night and morning, and I got plenty of exercise. We pumped by hand for a year, then I bought a little electric pump as soon as the lighting company extended through our district and supplied us with light."

Community Grows With Surrounding Country

A community is somewhat like a man. Sometimes a man waits and hopes for something to turn up that will give a boost. He lives to learn that such things happen very seldom. Our community has tried to land mechanical industries but such enterprises want the community to put them in business and let them make the profits. Our farmers have solved the problem. They have taken their first lesson in diversification and it is worth more to the community than all the cotton mills we could locate and every man finances himself, and is supposed to know how much to invest. The $20,000 that came to our truckers this year was practically a surplus, as each farmer who grew berries made his usual crop besides. Now the onions will soon bring in more spot cash—how much we cannot say until they are sold. But this new means of getting ready money enables us to feel independent of foreign industries, for we only prosper as the farmers prosper.—Guntersville (Ala.) Democrat.

Placing Shrubbery

In massing shrubbery near the house it should be set about two and one-half feet from the foundation in order to assure plenty of room for roots and foliage. Vines often can be used with good effect around porches and on trellises near the windows. It is not well to plant trees in rows on lawns. Often they, as well as shrubbery, are desirable for hiding defects, for framing vistas and for the shade they furnish. Too much shade, however, will kill the grass and will keep needed sunshine from the house. A dark, damp house makes a good breeding place for disease germs. Shrubbery and trees properly placed give a house a look of permanency. The idea is to make the home an integral part of the landscape, to give it the appearance of belonging to the place where it is located.

Regional Planning

In more than a dozen cities "definitely organized regional planning agencies" have been set to work. These are in addition to other bodies which have limited planning functions, including park commissions. That much more activity in this field may be expected soon is seen by the recent enactment of legislation in New York designed to facilitate regional planning by cities and towns of the state. The rapid growth of this movement seems to indicate that the lesson of costly delay, taught by belated steps toward planning within the cities, is being taken to heart. The daily convenience and general welfare of the increasing numbers will be promoted as regional planning gains headway.

Civic Responsibility

Every house along its residence streets, as well as every building in its business blocks, is responsible for that city's good name. One shabby, neglected house can spoil the appearance of an entire neighborhood.

When home owners everywhere cooperate with the city fathers in preserving and improving private as well as public property by frequent painting the beauty of American cities will keep pace with their growth.

Need for Board of Trade

A strong board of trade or similar civic organization which unites all the industrial, business, civic and social interests of the community for the purpose of concerted action in supporting those activities which are broader than any single business or industry, but which promote the interest and welfare of the community as a whole is an essential part of every growing town.

BEFORE HER BABY CAME

Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Adkins, Texas.—"Before my baby came I was so weak I had to stay in bed most of the time until I began taking Lydia E. Pinkhams Vegetable Compound. My mother-in-law, who is a midwife, told me it was all foolishness for me to stay in bed. She told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it would help me. She handed me one of your little books and I read it and was interested in it. I went to a drug-store that night and got a bottle of your wonderful medicine. I took it until the baby was born and was able to be up and do my work. Baby is 4½ months old now and weighs 14 pounds. I have plenty of milk for her and she gains steadily. I recommend it. I am willing to answer letters and will do anything I can for any woman, for I know how I suffered."—Mrs. A. H. Tschirhart, R. No. 2, Box 39, Adkins, Texas.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been in use by women for over fifty years. It is a vegetable tonic made from roots and herbs and is sold by all druggists.

Farming Interests to Feel Loss of Beaver?

The ruthless destruction of the beaver, nature's ablest engineer, is causing a huge economic loss to the farming and stock-raising industry of western America, according to discoveries made by experts of the British Columbia game conservation board. Beaver dams, these experts have found, are invaluable to agriculture because they conserve moisture which otherwise would run off quickly into rivers and be lost. Now that beaver dams all over the West are disappearing with the slaughter of their makers, agriculture in many places is feeling the effect in the form of drier soil and smaller crops.

The trapping of beaver, which in the past has been regarded only as a problem of fur conservation, thus is looming large as an economic problem as well. On this account the protection of beaver and their strange homes is becoming an increasingly important matter and game officials are studying it carefully. Investigations, already conducted, show that beaver dams in the past have exerted a widespread influence upon the water supply of Canada. Damming up thousands of creeks and rivers, the busy little animals have created enormous reservoirs where water is conserved through the dry summer months. This work, however, has gained them the enmity of farmers who blame them for occasional floods, but actually they are one of the farmer's best friends, game experts declare.

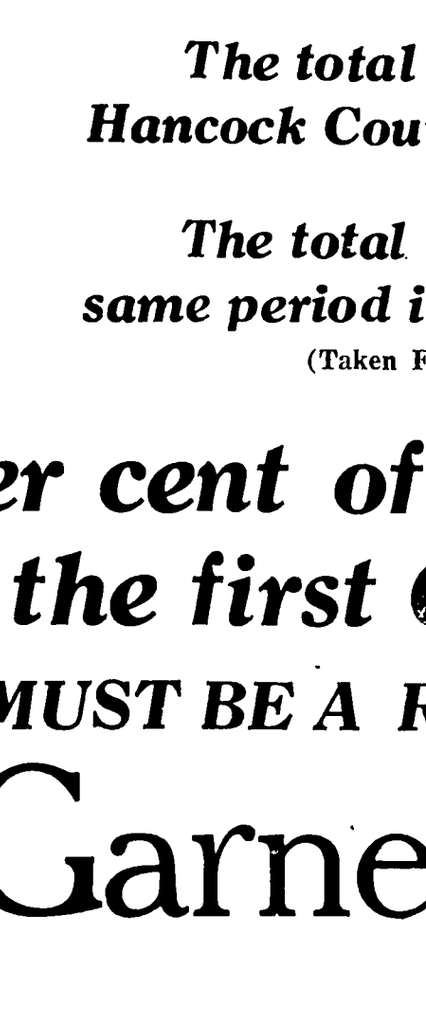
"The loss of fur bearers through the partial extinction of the beaver is not as great as the injury to agriculture and stock raising brought about through the rapid run-off of water as compared with the retention of this water by beaver dams where the beaver remains plentiful," M. B. Jackson, chairman of the British Columbia game board, declared in announcing the latest discoveries concerning beaver habits. "This is a serious economic problem, and one to which perhaps sufficient consideration is not given when many requests are made for the destruction of beavers for their furs or because here and there a few acres are flooded by their dams."

Fosters Study of Latin

To place the study of Latin on a parity with the study of modern languages, the University of North Carolina has reduced the amount of Latin required for admission to the College of Liberal Arts. A sliding scale has been adopted, and students will be admitted on a minimum of two units work. It is not the intention to minimize the importance of the study of Latin, but to make it possible for students having less than four years of high-school Latin to continue at the university their study of the language.

Arab Autos a Problem

In Bahrein, northern Arabia, where there is great wealth, automobiles have displaced every carriage but one and are fast displacing donkeys. About 100 cars are in operation, mostly taxis. A few large cars are owned by shieks and wealthy pearl merchants. An excess of "joy riding" by the pearl divers when, after weeks of hard living, they return to town flushed with money brought about an ordinance forbidding men and women to ride in the same car.



Edith May Adams of Barrington, N. J., the first American School girl to be entered as a candidate for the American Youth Award. The American Youth and Teacher Award was established by the Board of Directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia as a tribute to the youth and teachers of the nation. Miss Adams is a candidate for the Golden Eaglette, the highest gift in the hands of the Girl Scouts. She was cited recently for exceptional bravery for remaining inside a blazing building helping physicians to give first aid treatment to injured firemen.

AMERICAN YOUTH CANDIDATE

Miss Helen F. Dodge of Pennsylvania, holder of a Carnegie medal for heroism, has been nominated as a candidate for the American Youth Award established by the directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, which is to be held in Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 in celebration of 150 years of American Independence. Miss Dodge, the daughter of George H. Dodge of 5944 Walton avenue, Philadelphia, jumped into the Toms River at Ocean Gate, N. J., fully dressed, and, while having use of only one arm, saved the life of a drowning girl.

MIDDLETON AT THE FAIR

A triumphal homecoming is being planned for Arthur Middleton, native Iowan, now one of the world's most famous baritones, when he returns to the state Aug. 29 to appear in the great Sunday night grand opera spectacle at the Iowa State Fair. Middleton will take the leading role in "The Birth of the Messiah" at the fair, said to be the largest production of its kind ever staged in the state.

Whippet Racing at The Fair

Des Moines, Special:

Whippet dog racing, which has thrilled race enthusiasts on eastern tracks, and which is destined to become a leading pastime in the western states, will for the first time be brought to Iowa this summer as a special attraction of the regular afternoon racing program at the Iowa State Fair.

Descending from the greyhound, the small and wiry Whippet travels a distance of 220 yards in from eleven to twelve seconds. No animal of its size in the world can equal it for speed according to authorities on this latest sport rage The speed, thrills and competition of Whippet racing has taken the east by storm and is said to exceed even such popular diversions as horse racing and auto racing.

Seven Whippet dog races are scheduled for the State Fair program every day for six consecutive days, in addition to the harness races, running races and auto races on the regular schedule.

Gyro-Camera

One of the disadvantages of the film camera is that the scenes have to be arranged and photographed in stages, as up to the present no device has been produced which would enable the operator to follow, say, an actress from room to room, filming as he walked. It has nearly always been necessary to use a tripod.

But now an English firm has produced what the writer call as gyro-camera, which is an ordinary film camera with a gyroscope incorporated. This makes it possible to carry the camera and take films while walking, and without imparting to them flicker due to swaying as the operator walks.

The gyroscope is stopped and started by electrical means, and actuated by a press-button.

Cities To Celebrate

Des Moines, Special:

A number of central Iowa cities are planning on holding big celebrations at the coming Iowa State Fair.

Newton, Oskaloosa, Ames, Boone and several other cities will each have special days, sending large delegations to the fair to boost their respective communities.

Hog Callers Compete

Des Moines, Special:

The champion hog-caller of Iowa is to be chosen in a big, statewide contest which will be one of the features of this year's Iowa State Fair and National Livestock Show, Aug. 25 to Sept. 3.

The contest is open to any farmer in Iowa and provides $50 in cash prizes. It will be held on Thursday, Sept. 2 in the swine pavilion at the State Fair. It is expected that practically every county in the state will be represented by entries.

Wild Life Exhibit is Enlarged

Des Moines, Special:

The big "Iowa Wild Life" exhibit which has been scheduled as one of the Iowa State Fair attractions this summer, will feature 21 mammoth aquariums filled with every variety of fish to be found in Iowa waters. This interesting exhibit will be staged by the State Fish and Game department.

All kinds of native animals and birds will be shown in addition to the water life. The methods by which the state's wild life is now being preserved will be presented in a daily motion picture show.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Pastor and people alike enjoyed the responsive spirit manifested in all of our last Sunday's services. This applies to both the number in attendance as well as to the fine spirit of all present. We hope to surpass on the coming Sabbath day, in both the preaching service and the Sunday school. The latter showed a fine increase last Sunday.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held on Thursday evening. Reports on the part of the several officials show a successful year. Officials for the coming year were elected and a very fine spirit was manifest throughout the entire meeting. This was Dr. Bushnell's last visit with us in official capacity as his term of service closes with the coming annual conference. Our next Quarterly Conference will be conducted by our Dist. Supt., who will be appointed at the next conference.

As we write this, we have quite a number of sick people on our call-ing list. Some are recovering we a glad to report, but others are se ously sick. Our sympathy and o prayers go out to them and for the We are glad and anxious to minist to the sick and the needy at a time day or night. We apprecia any information given us along th line.

All services are regular next Su day. Midweek prayer meeting Thursday evening.

Keep The Cream In A Cool Place

Milk and cream are regular meeting places of odors—just like the old fashioned store used to be for village loafers. They gather, the good and the bad, and the only way to keep milk and cream free from odors is to keep them away from it.

Milk and cream should not be stored in musty cellars or in cellars where the odor of vegetables are strong as they absorb odors like a sponge absorbs water, and for this reason it should not be stored in the kitchen.

Make of your milk house a shrine for the milk and cream alone and don ot permit the men to store their boots, overalls and harness in the milk house and then expect to market a quality product—"It can't be did."

When the saying was coined, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," the fellow who sprung it must have been thinking about milk and cream.

Help make the butter manufactured at this creamery stand for the very highest quality.

...OR'S TRIP THRU WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA ALL FINE SCENERY

...e might say that Stand Rock ... shaft of rock towering up fifty- ... feet next to a cliff on which is ...dge. There is a flat "table" ... on top of the shaft and the en- ...rock is about five feet from the ...e on which we stood so that anyone with a lot of "sand" could jump across if they could get by without the guide catching them at it, as such stunts were no longer permitted. Evidently because some poor prune didn't jump far enough! The "landing" place on the rock was about twelve by twenty feet and quite flat. However, after stepping up to the edge of the ledge and taking a look down on the jagged rocks fifty feet below we didn't have any desire to make the leap.

We left Killbourn and all its beauty Tuesday morning on our way northwest for Chippewa Falls The drive was very beautiful and we were getting into a prosperous country Here we found wonderful dairying country, manufacturing of paper, saw mills, and canning factories It was quite a sight for us to see logs piled up along the river from Nekoosa to Chippewa Falls. In many places there were logs piled thirty feet high for blocks and blocks to be used in making print and wall paper. One place we saw the river fairly jammed with big logs for perhaps a mile up the river. Every town along the highway has a canning factory where peas are canned. Driving along the road we met perhaps over a hundred farmers hauling peas to the "viner" where the vines and hulls are taken off and the peas sent to the cannery. The vines and hulls are stacked like the farmers stack straw here and is used for silage to feed the dairy cattle.

We also noticed large patches of cucumbers everywaere and we wondered what they did with all of them, we soon found out. Finally we passed through a small town and saw a large warehouse and the sign informed us it was a Heinz Salting Plant So the chances are that when you buy Heinz' Pickles over at the Klemme Meat Market, they came from Wisconsin

One of the outstanding features of this part of Wisconsin was that every farmer had a herd of purebred dairy cattle, either Holstein, or Jerseys, a big barn with two silos and a nice home And when we say the barns are big, we don't mean maybe! The farms are only 40 and 80 acre tracts that have been cleared of stumps and brush and they seem to be large enough to answer the purpose The products of the dairy farm is all turned into cheese, one of the noted products of Wisconsin. We were going to stop at a cheese factory to buy some, but were advised to get it at a warehouse, as the cheese at the factories was tough as leather and had to "age" at least two months before it was good to eat We hunted up a warehouse but all they had that day was 12 lb. cakes We weren't that fond of cheese so we didn't buy any

Tuesday night we camped at Chippewa Falls, Wis, which was a nice little city and had a fine site for a camp, but lacked a few conveniences to make it modern They had a fine city park in connection where they had playground equipment, all kinds of animals and a pretty wooded drive

The next morning we started out for Superior and Duluth and we went through some more fine country At Rice Lake we saw a big saw mill and lumber company. As we got up toward Spooner, Wis, the country began to look rather "scrubby" and rough, the farms were beginning to look ancient and were far between. We were getting into the second growth timber and brush country. After we headed north from Spooner we began to get into the pine country and it looked rather wild and dismal and the little towns were getting farther apart Up around Gordon cutting fence posts seems to be the main industry and we saw trainloads of posts ready to be shipped out.

Here and into Duluth we got into the red clay country and the graveled road was a red-brick color.

As we neared the city of Superior we came on top of a long, high hill and got our first glimpse of Lake Superior and the city below. From the crest of the hill it was a dismal sight before us, the scrub timber leading up to the mist covered lake and high ranges of hills on the other side We were rather disapointed for a time, until we began to enter the city of Superior when it began to look different and we could get a better view without looking through the fog

We did not spend any time in Superior as Duluth was our objective and we wanted to get to the camp Wo got our things to eat and drove out to the camp, which was six miles out from the business district and on the shore of Lake Superior. It was located on a hillside overlooking the lake and we could watch the boats going up and down the lake It was rather cold that night and the waves dashing against the rocks made a lot of noise and it also rained hard all night.

We packed in the rain next morning and went out to see the sights of the city and the harbor.

Duluth ranks second to New York in the amount of tonnage shipped by water. We took a motor boat trip through the harbor and got a good idea of immensity of this inland port of Duluth and Superior. The boat took us up to the docks where we watched them load a ship with iron ore. They have the facilities here for handling this big business. They can load 12,000 tons of ore onto a ship in nineteen minutes. The ore comes into the docks by the trainload direct from the mines out at Iron Range. The ore cars are pulled up on the docks and dumped into bins The bins are high up over the boats and when a ship is loaded chutes are let down and a trap is opened and down comes the ore into the ship.

We watched them unload coal at other docks. Great electric scoops are used and the largest handle 12 tons at each dip. Two shovels work alternately and we judge it takes about a minute to handle 12 tons.

Henry Ford owns the largest coal dock and equipment on the lake at Duluth and has his own ships here.

The docks run out perhaps half a mile and there are a great number of them, belonging to various companies

The freighters used in shipping are boats five hundred to six hundred and fifty feet long and are all made of steel plates. They cost from a million to a million and a half dollars each, we were told.

Numerous small boats go up and down the harbor Some are tug boats which help the big boats around, others are supply boats that bring out food and supplies to the frieghters.

We passed a number of draw bridges in the harbor, one of which was the second largest in the world. They open up to allow the ships to pass underneath.

Duluth has an aerial ferry bridge, the only one of its kind in America and only one other in the world, that being in France. The bridge spans a small neck of the harbor between Duluth and a long, narrow strip of land extending nine miles into the lake. The towers on each end of the bridge are one hundred and eighty feet high and connected overhead by a track. A ferry is swung on steel cables from this and is towed from the overhead track to the other side This kind of bridge was built in order to allow ships to travel underneath without being delayed, or delaying traffic to the island The island is used as a residence district and is only three and one-half blocks wide at the widest place, but is nine miles long.

Passenger boats run up into the harbor and you can take a boat here and travel all the way to Buffalo, N. Y., for $50.00, meals and everything included, stopping at the principal cities on the Great Lakes. The trip takes four days and four nights.

The harbor is really located in the mouth of the St. Louis river and so freezes over in the winter, which ties up business there in the shipping line. However, the lake does not freeze over.

All shipping is done by water as far as possible as the cost is so much less than by rail. We were informed that the water freight rate on a ton of coal was only 50 cents for a thousand miles. Just compare this with rail rates if you want to.

All automobiles from the east are loaded on boats already assembled and when they arrive at Duluth they are driven right off the boats.

Very little merchandise comes into Duluth or Superior by rail, but is all shipped in by water. Trains come into Duluth empty, but they go out loaded.

Duluth is very hilly and a high hill rises right off from the lake shore and part of the city is so steep they run an inclined railroad up to the top. The street cars are pulled up and let down on cables.

Before taking in the harbor sights that morning we drove out along the lake a number of miles to get a better view of the great lake and saw ships going east loaded with ore.

The Duluth-Superior harbor has an area of 19 square miles and has 49 miles of shoreline. The harbor level is 600 feet above the ocean. 10 railroads lines and 32 steamship lines enter port here.

In the harbor there are 9 iron ore docks, total storage 960,000 long tons; 22 coal docks, total storage, 12,060,000 short tons; 82 grain elevators, total storage 38,825,000 bushels; (1400 cars can be unloaded every 10 hours); 1 elevator for cement, storage 141,000 barrels; 43 Freight Wharves, including MacDougall Terminal which has thru water shipping facilities to New York City.

The harbor is destined to become the world's greatest inland ocean port and eventually ocean steamers will run up the lakes to Duluth.

Having finished our harbor trip we had lunch at noon and then left the city on highway No. 1 and we were again greeted with a wonderful sight on a high hill just southwest of the city where we got a real birdseye view of the entire city, the harbor and the St. Louis river.

On an island to the south of us in the river was fought a decisive Indian battle 300 years ago at which point the Sioux tribe was driven back from the Arrowhead country.

The view from the cliff overlooking this great gateway city was most wonderful and will long be remembered.

The balance of our trip home was still scenic going past lake after lake and we camped at a little lake near Aitkin, Minn, that night.

The next morning we took the drive around the north and west shore of Mille Lacs Lake, past the Indian Trading Post, where we saw quite a number of Indians again.

We camped Friday and Saturday nights at Lake Francis, near Elysian, Minn. and put in some time at fishing. We had plenty of fish to eat but we haven't any big stories to tell.

Mrs. Mary Waterman and daughter, Mabel Cullinan drove up and met our pary Saurday noon and returned to Klemme with us Sunday afternoon.

We took our time on the entire trip and made approximately 1,200 miles on our week's vacation. It was a week well spent and was a trip we can recommend to any of our readers to take You will find the roads in fine shape over nearly the whole distance and the tourist camps as a rule were all first class and well kept up.

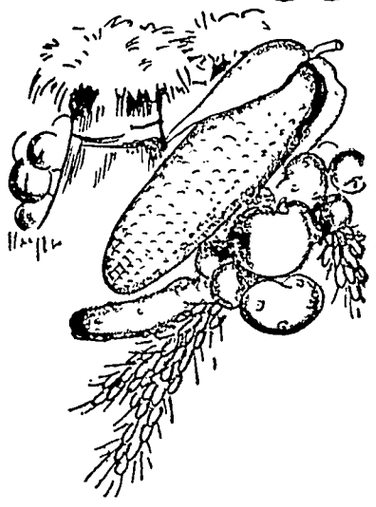
IOWA'S ANNUAL OUTING

Iowa Farmers Invite You



—to the greatest agricultural exposition ever held in North America—the 1926 Iowa State Fair and National Livestock Show.

Former Iowa State Fairs have been gigantic in scope, but this one will be unparalleled by anything ever witnessed in this country. More than 500 carloads of displays and exhibits have already been entered, from every corner of the continent. Nearly $140,000 in cash premiums, 366 acres filled with the choicest products of the farms and factories of the fertile midwest.

Over 7,000 head of livestock, 40 acres of machinery, 80-acre free camp ground, auto show, radio show, society horse show, farm bureau projects, farm boys and girls fair, women's features.

Horse racing, auto racing, whippet dog racing, grand opera, eight bands, fireworks, hippodrome thrillers, midway and hundreds of other attractions for education or diversion.

Don't miss it. The outing of a lifetime. Plan your trip early.

THE STORY SO FAR

On their way to the new Cottonwood gold diggings in Colorado in the early Seventies, Robert Gilson, easterner, and his partner, Buck Hayden, a veteran miner, witness the hold up of a stage coach, from which the express box is stolen before the bandits are scared off. Among the hold-up victims are Mrs. Constance Deane, and Mrs. Barnaby, who intends to open a restaurant in Cottonwood. Gilson meets Marcus Handy, editor, on his way to start the Cottonwood Courier. Arriving in town, Gilson and Hayden together purchase a mining claim. A threatened lynching is averted by the bravery of Chris McGrath, town marshal. Gilson becomes disgusted with gold digging, what with its unending labor and small rewards, and so the sudden appearance of Shorty Croly, old-time partner of Buck, is not altogether disconcerting to him. Gilson takes a job on the Courier and arranges to sell his share in the claim to Shorty. His acquaintanceship with Mrs. Deane ripens. As the Courier grows in power a civic spirit is awakened. Following a crime wave, which the marshal seems to overlook, Handy, in his newspaper, demands a clean-up. Gilson meets Mrs. Deane in a notorious section of the camp. In love with her and knowing she has a husband, Gilson, noting that she seems upset about something attempts to comfort her.

But as the hammering of blood against my brain died out, as the red mist cleared from my eyes, I realized that Constance had not returned my kiss, that her arms clung to me not in an embrace but as though she had grasped at me for support, for safety. Then her hands fell from my neck, began gently to push me away. We stood facing each other. Again that black mood lay on her face. She swayed, grasped at her saddle horn. I stepped forward—this time in fear she might fall, she was trembling so—but one hand lifted itself for an instant and warned me back. Now her trembling increased to a quaking which shook her whole body, broke her speech into queer fragments as she said:

"Robert—why did you—why did we—do this?"

"You know why," I said. "Because I love you!"

"Yes!" said Constance, and repeated it as though the words were a poem. "You love me!"

"And you too!" I said. "You too!"

She started to answer; and with another rush of blood against the base of my brain, I anticipated her word. But she did not speak. And suddenly her trembling stopped.

"If I did," she said, "what good would it do? What could come of it?"

I saw what she meant; and the obstacle between us, which only just now had appeared so feathery light, became a stone wall.

"I shouldn't have done this!" she went on, every moment becoming more the mistress of herself. "Shouldn't have let you do it."

"You couldn't have stopped me!" I replied. "I couldn't stop myself."

"Such things are always in the woman's hands." Almost was she again the Constance I knew. I had rent for an instant the veil over her soul; now I could feel its edges drawing together again. She turned to where the two horses, unperceiving witnesses of this crisis in human affairs, were grazing through their bits on the edge of the stream. "Hadn't you better hitch them?" she said. "Then come back here and talk—if you wish to talk this over any further."

The simple act of catching the horses, tossing the bridles over their heads, steadied me also. I turned back. She had seated herself on a broken pillar of the castle rock, and her eyes regarded me steadily as I advanced.

"Robert," she began, "don't you think you had better go away?"

"From camp?" I asked.

"From me. See me no more. You will be safest so."

"Safest from what?"

"From yourself—and me!"

"What is the danger in you?"

"Robert, a man is always in danger when he loves a married woman!—unless—" here her voice grew sharp for an instant, "unless this is only a flirtation with you. Unless you are that kind of a man."

"I couldn't tell you," I said, "how much this isn't a flirtation. Don't you think I've fought it? Don't you know that I did what I did just now because my guard was down, and you touched me and I was carried beyond myself?"

"I know all that," she said. "I'm trying to be very honest now. And it isn't honest in me, Robert, to say I doubt your honor. I'm certain of that. You're not like—well, our friend Barton, for example."

"He was—familiar?" I asked, my hands clenching.

"Oh, somewhat. But don't let that trouble you. With you, it's different. Don't you think you'd better leave me—for your own good?"

"Constance, is it absolutely hopeless?"

"Absolutely," she said finally, firmly. "But you're in trouble. I want to help. If there's one chance in a hundred million to help you, I want that more than anything else that I can have in life," I said.

She rested her elbow on her knee, dropped her chin into her palm, and gazed at the stream.

"Robert," she said finally, "if I let you—stay in my life—do you think you can go on as before—just coming to talk to me now and then until—until perhaps I go away?"

"If that is all you will give me—I have no choice!"

"I can give no more. Even then, I warn you that you are likely to be burned."

"But will you be burned? That is a thing which matters."

"No, it doesn't matter. I am already burned—scorched—withered."

"Constance, won't you tell me about yourself?"

"That isn't living up to the conditions," she replied. "No!" Suddenly, with one of her light movements, she slipped to the ground. "I'm going now. Would you mind fixing the reins for me?" As I turned to throw the bridle over her horse's head, I saw that she had swung unaided from a wayside rock into the side-saddle.

"Where were you going?" she asked, looking not at me but at her hands as they grasped the reins.

"To Forty-Rod. Matter of a little story about a fire," I said. "It isn't really important. If—" But now she looked at me, shook her head.

"No. Go on with it. I want to ride back alone. Try to forget this afternoon. Let us play it hasn't happened." With the touch of an expert horsewoman, she gathered the reins, and her brown nag started up.

She broke him into a trot, into a lope. Once she looked back, saw me staring after her, turned her head quickly to face the road. Then she disappeared round the hill.

* * * * * * * *

The aftermath of Marcus Handy's editorial on the political incompetence of Cottonwood was blurred and obscured for both the camp and me by another event, which seemed temporarily much more important in the scheme of fate.

I was wakened next morning by prolonged knocking at my door, and by the protesting grunts of Marcus Handy. As I struggled out of sleep, I saw Marcus sitting up in bed in his white-and-red nightshirt, holding his 45-calibre sidearm at ready. Then from outside a voice spoke; and Marcus, as he grasped the meaning of the words, laid down his revolver with another grunt, pulled the clothes up over his ears, and fell once more asleep.

"Does Bob Gilson live here? All right. Buck—Buck Hayden—wants to see you out to his claim right away. Says it's important!" came a heavy voice from without.

I hurled myself out of bed, anticipating accident and calamity, dressed, hurried to the livery stable for my horse and through a clear, inspiriting June air rode up the busy creek toward the rocky curve which I seemed to have abandoned such eternities ago. Busy all the way with speculation, as usual in such circumstances I reviewed every possibility except the true solution.

Was trouble breaking between Buck and Shorty? I wondered, as I rode toward the claim. Even had there been a tragedy? And, whatever happened, I must get through this thing quickly. For I did not want to miss a single one of those noon breakfasts at Mrs. Barnaby's, which were midday dinner for the rest but noon breakfast for me, and where daily I met—Constance Deane.

This was the claim, at the curve of the creek; but what had happened to the cabin? Its thatched and sodded roof lay on the bank, braced up six feet high on posts; from beneath it protruded various familiar objects of human use, such as our Dutch oven, my old set of red blankets. Where the cabin itself had stood were only chips, piles of sawdust, strips of bark, a trampled floor.

I was hailed from the hillside across the creek. I looked up, and was aware of a new object in the landscape. A timbered hole gaped at me, black and brutal-mouthed; beside it lay a fresh new dump, so small that even my inexpert eye could see how shallow as yet was the tunnel which fed it. From that orifice Buck had emerged, taking off his hat to extinguish a miner's lamp, was walking toward me not with his customary even stride, but rapidly, jerkily. I dismounted, started toward him; he waved me back. As he approached, I saw that his eye glittered with some unnatural excitement.

"Got to see you alone, kid—all alone!" he shot out. He looked round; his eye rested on that ridiculous shack of thatching and poles. Into this he drew me. He squatted on his heels, scrutinized all approaches before he burst out:

"Kid, don't it beat the Dutch?—I've struck it—struck it rich!"

"You have?" I asked inconsequently.

"I sure have—Shorty and me have—as rich as—" Buck paused, as though to find a simile wild enough to express the situation. "Rich as h—l!" he concluded.

From my whirl of thoughts and emotions, not all generous, I brought out another triviality.

"Gold quartz?" I asked.

"Gold quartz your grandma!" ejaculated Buck. "Gold's a sucker proposition. No! What I've got is the only poor man's ore. Silver carbonates!"

He might have been talking Arabic for all I grasped the dramatic meaning in that technical term. But Buck was running on:

"You can scoop her out with a spoon—assays three hundred to the ton—she widens as she goes in—that stuff we hated so like pizen—"

"That sand?"

"You've called it. Shorty seen it!" Buck stopped here, fumbled through the pockets of his overalls, produced a creased paper. "Here's where you come in," he said. It was a mining claim, filled out in my name and as yet, I saw, unregistered. "Ain't our claim!" Buck hastened to explain. "It's the ground next. And"—waved an excited hand toward the hillside—"she's crammed with it, jammed with it! You can't lose! Your play is to git this registered quick, before the rush starts. Ride, boy!"

Yet I lingered to extract the details. Two years before, Shorty, as Buck expressed it, had been "shoved out of Mexico." With a "college-bred mining expert"—Buck's phrase again—he had been looking for gold. And down in Chihuahua they had found the natives washing not gold but a brittle sand. It was lead carbonates bearing silver, the expert informed Shorty. Further, they had tunneled into the adjoining hill, had found the parent body. Some of this ore assayed better than three hundred dollars a ton.

There, Coming Along the Pavement Toward Me, Was Marshal McGrath.

So much they extracted from the cholo workmen. Then the "Mex boss" came back. He looked at things differently. That night he tried to murder the two Americans and, failing, raised the rurales against them. They barely got out to El Paso with their lives.

And Shorty had not worked a day on our claim before he recognized that brittle sand, which had so hampered our gold washing, as the same ore. It was lead carbonates; and the sample assayed three hundred dollars a ton in silver alone. How Shorty overcame the innate conservatism of Buck did not at this moment come out. I imagine that when Buck raked over those little pellets of pure silver which the blowpipe had magicked from this inert sand, his single-minded belief in gold collapsed. At any rate, he was by now so thoroughly converted as to forget that he ever held any other faith. Of course, the sand in our stream was but a trifling overflow from some main body of ore. Where did it lie? Shorty, working merely on a hazy resemblance between the lay of this land and that in the Mexican diggings, "sort of suspected"—said Buck—the hillside across the creek. He selected, I know now, the spot which of all locations on that hillside would have been the last choice to an expert mining engineer. But there is more luck in silver mining than any expert will admit; and the kind of man that Shorty was, always played the game of life in the spirit of one who shakes dice for the drinks.

The crafty Shorty, as I half suspected at the time, had not parted with the last of his resources when he produced that hundred-dollar bill from the back of his watch. They bought the necessary tools, explosives and apparatus in Cottonwood, hired for assistant a Swede who not only knew nothing about minerals, but almost nothing about the English language. Mining timbers being expensive and slow of delivery, they had cast their last coin into the pot, and torn down the cabin for the purpose.

Skidding out their debris on a crude sled and a trackway of poles, in a fortnight they had driven their tunnel twenty feet from the prism and had come to a streak of carbonates. It widened to a vein, to a pocket, to Heaven knew what. Buck's conscience and kindness were troubled because I, who shared the discovery of that curious sand, had no longer any stake in the game. And Shorty refused to give me a share, maintaining with justice that hundreds of others must have seen that sand and failed to identify it; that if anyone should be favored in this transaction it was he, Shorty. So yesterday, before they visited Cottonwood to get final results, Buck had staked out for me a claim next to the twin property of the partnership, had drawn up the necessary papers; and, but for Shorty's insistence on their agreement of secrecy, would have broken the news to me there and then. The samples from the tunnel assayed three hundred dollars a ton and upward; the farther you went, the richer it got. In approaching Major Brown, the Cottonwood assayer, Buck had maintained the fiction that he came from over the range. But in Brown's porter and man of all work—who was not in the office when he delivered the samples—Buck recognized an individual that had formerly delivered meat along the creek. This porter hailed him by name. "He's seen this tunnel—the boys on these here placers think I am digging for gold quartz. Only a matter of time till he puts two and two together and she gets out," remarked Buck. He swept his gaze over the hill. "By Gee, she's out now!" he said. "Lookee thar!" Dim on the hillcrest, two men were digging furiously. Buck scrutinized the group for a moment. "Just as I figgered," he said; "Major Brown, the assayer, and his hired man. They put two and two together d—n quick! Shorty's sitting on your claim with a shotgun and the Swede," he added. "Already started a shaft so's you can claim development work. But you never can tell. Git this registered and git back—now vamoose!"

My roan, I had discovered, possessed a trick of speed. I let him go his best. I was in a state of mind which I can describe only as triumphant greed. I was going to be rich, rich! Rich in my own right, through my own enterprise! I had absorbed, indeed, not only the joyous greed of Cottonwood, but its indomitable optimism. I no more doubted than Buck that the piece of inert earth of which I was so strangely possessed, held fortune. That I was already a pampered child of luxury, needing no wealth beyond that which my father had won for me, never entered my mind. I had made a fortune in my own right. I would tell Constance about it—Constance Deane. She and I—and there the rosy light which illuminated my dream flickered and went out. I could not throw this fortune into the lap of Constance. Encircling Constance Deane, a barrier and a cage, was that mysterious wedding ring.

And as I rode furiously down the creek road and into the head of Main street, another drop of acid worry curdled my triumphant mood. That morning's Courier would carry the editorial about the Curtis case, a challenge to Marshal Chris McGrath. And Chris was the official registrar of mining claims. Was he up yet? He usually slept late. If he was already in his office, he might find ways to block my claim. But when I entered, giving an impersonation of leisure, there was within only his blond, sphinx-like clerk. He glanced over the form which Buck had filled out for me.

"All right," he said, "come back tomorrow." I had not expected this; and my ingenuity was taxed to invent a lie plausible enough to suit the circumstances. I created it at last—something about having to leave camp that afternoon to be gone a week.

"It'll make a lot of trouble," said the clerk; and his manner was insinuating. By good fortune, I carried most of my money on my person, as was the fashion in Cottonwood. I drew out a gold double-eagle, balanced it carelessly as I said:

"I'd be sorry to trouble you, but I want it done now." The clerk fell immediately to work; in ten minutes, I had the title, all registered and sworn; and he had, besides his fee, my twenty dollars. Another glimpse, I reflected, into the run of affairs at Cottonwood. My little piece of justifiable bribery had occurred to me just in time; for as I mounted and rode away, I passed the marshal, headed for his office.

Then, as I emerged into the head of Main street, I saw that I was not riding alone. Down the road, other horsemen, carrying awkwardly across their saddlehorns shovels, picks, mining paraphernalia, were spurring furiously northward. Dotted here and there over Hayden hill, horses were tethered or roaming at will; groups of men were digging or driving stakes; riders, fording the creek at a furious gait, were spurring on over the crest. Down by the site of our cabin, Buck's last stake in his gamble with fortune, stood a knot of men gesticulating. As I rode toward them, I saw Buck in their center; and as I dismounted, the air shook with a resounding, unanimous "Aye!" The meeting, whatever it was, stood adjourned. Part of the crowd splashed through the creek and part surrounded Buck, shaking hands, slapping him on the back.

"Hello—there's the kid!" exclaimed Buck as I approached. "Boys, shake hands with Mr. Gilson, the kid—located the next claim after ours—" and I had to take my own pummeling. "And now," concluded Buck, "you boys better hustle back to your locations and git set for the rush!" Obediently, the rest of the crowd scattered; Buck, but yesterday a private in the hosts of ill luck, had become a commanding general in the army of fortune. And already he looked it; his tall, rangy figure had stiffened to a pose of authority. For the first time I realized that Buck, if he should ever clean up, would be a mightily presentable figure of a man.

"Miners' meeting!" he answered my word of inquiry. "If we don't work together, there'll be claim-jumpin' and shootin' all over the hill tonight! Just as soon as the crowd gits thick enough—we'll have all Cottonwood up here by nightfall—I'm going to hire mine guards for the whole bunch—you too. And a miner or two to keep your development work goin'. They're locatin' fast. Got any friend you want to let in on this?"

My conscience smote me a resounding thump. I had been less generous than Buck; I had never thought of Marcus Handy, employer and friend. It is odd, as I look back, to remember that Constance Deane did not cross my mind in connection with this gamble for fortune. But to me Constance dwelt in a world apart from the practical realities of Cottonwood.

Still breakfastless, I mounted and spurred back toward camp. I had not gone two hundred yards before I realized that my generous impulse had come too late. The trickle along the road was now a flood. Horsemen weaved through knots of pedestrians, walking briskly or puffing along at a clumsy run. All Hayden hill must be staked out by now. Then I saw a way out; and the tangled, excited emotions of that full morning melted into a rosy, altruistic glow. It would take money to reach my ore body. I had no money, or but little—unless I drew on my mother. Marcus should put up that money and receive half of my claim.

Main street was almost deserted as I galloped toward the office. I pulled up my horse to make a sharp turn round a freight wagon blocking the entrance to our street, and there coming along the pavement toward me was Marshal McGrath. He had seen me first, was stopping. He was reaching toward his hip. His face was a mask—as on that night when he stopped the lynching. My arm tingled with an impulse which a flash of reason, happily for me, put back. Did I but make a motion to draw, this dead shot would kill me in my tracks. Suddenly the marshal's hand stopped, fell to his side; and he turned away.

"Tenderfoot, better go up and look after your little, blackmailin' friend," he said through clenched teeth.

I galloped on. From the door of the Courier burst Johnnie the office boy—mercurial, excitable, Celtic.

"The boss is hurted—oh, the boss is hurted!" he gasped.

I rushed inside. Marcus sat at his desk, head and back hunched over his arms. There was blood on the scattered papers. And then—he moved—moved, turned round, faced me. His nose was bleeding. So was a cut over his left eye. One side of his mouth was beginning to puff, but the other smiled.

"He beat me up," said Marcus, "that dirty crook McGrath—sneaked on me and got my gun and beat me up. Didn't kill me and didn't give me a chance to kill him—just beat me up. G—d, I feel relieved!"

To clean up a mining camp, as you will soon see, isn't the simplest task in the world. The fact is—but wait! Judge for yourself.

Vital Food Elements Made in Laboratory

The five food factors are salts, fats, carbohydrates, proteins and vitamines. Theoretically speaking, the first three of these can already be made in a laboratory. The fourth seems possible and chemists are optimistic about the fifth, says Floyd W. Parsons, in the Saturday Evening Post. The important question does not so much concern our ability to make these vital food elements, but rather can we manufacture the essential constituents of our daily diet as cheaply as plants can make them.

The French scientist, Berthelot, has produced foodstuffs artificially in a laboratory by subjecting gases to the action of ultra-violet rays. He proceeds on the idea that it is the light of the sun rather than its heat that produces growth in plants. In the growth of animals, the foodstuffs consumed are reduced to carbonic acid and water vapor, but in the case of plants the action is just the reverse. The plant takes the two gases exhaled by animals and combines them again to form the sugars and other hydrocarbons that animals feed upon.

Berthelot's work tends to discredit the notion that the synthetic functioning of plants is a vital action, the secret of which is looked upon in that profound puzzle concerning the creation of life itself.

Remove Dent in Table

To remove a dent from a table apply moisture and heat. Wet a cloth with warm water, not hot, and lay it over the dent. Hold near a hot iron, but not near enough to scorch or char the wood. Repeat until the bruise comes up, then lay over the bruised surface a cloth dipped in linseed oil. Finally rub with a mixture of equal parts of turpentine and linseed oil and polish.

More Rough Diamonds

In the past the United States imported largely polished diamonds but in the last few years the number of rough diamonds brought in has been considerably increased, the 1925 imports being more than double those of 1924. This indicates an expanding industry in the United States among the diamond polishers.

BIG CAR USELESS WITHOUT HIGHWAY

"I would rather own and drive a $400 car in a state with good roads, and pay $400 a year to the good-road fund, than to have a $10,000 sedan in a state that had no road system," said a caller at the Minnesota highway department recently. "With a low-price car and good roads I would get somewhere, and get a lot more of comfort and enjoyment than the man with the big limousine and no road.

"Of course," he added, "it is not necessary to go to either extreme. But I think we should always try to maintain the right ratio between road expenditures and car expenditures. We are spending about $70,000,000 for roads in Minnesota this year, and about a billion in the United States as a whole, including state, county, town and municipal road work. That is a lot of money.

"But the people of the United States spent about $4,000,000,000 for new cars and trucks in 1924, $655,000,000 for parts, $675,000,000 for replacement tires, $2,100,000,000 for fuel and lubricants and $910,000,000 for service labor. Add garage storage costs, insurance, registration and gas taxes and other incidentals, and you soon have $10,000,000,000, so that our road cost is only 10 per cent of our total motor bill.

"Ten per cent for road and 90 per cent for rolling stock and operation would make a railroad man laugh out loud. The roads reporting to the Minnesota railroad commission spent $48,237,147 for road betterments and $125,153,097 for equipment in 1924. In 1923, they spent $60,676,352 for road and $108,178,031 for equipment. In 1922 they spent $32,009,010 for road and $37,425,854 for equipment. In other words, 35 per cent of the money they spent for betterments went into the roadbed and 65 per cent into rolling stock and other equipment.

"Or take the operating expenses. The large railroads spent in Minnesota in 1924, $18,377,261 for maintenance of way and structures, $26,356,905 for maintenance of equipment and $52,863,454 for transportation. Here the part spent for maintenance of the road was 18.8 per cent.

"But if you go back to the original investment, the proportion spent for road is much greater. Ten of the large roads on which tentative valuation has been completed by the Interstate Commerce commission have an investment of $416,940,663 in road and permanent structures in Minnesota and $125,534,575 in equipment, or 23.14 per cent for equipment and 76.86 per cent for road.

"With a liberal allowance for depreciation, the 565,719 motor vehicles in Minnesota have a present value of at least $300,000,000. If we had invested $3.33 in 'track' for each dollar invested in 'rolling stock,' as the railroads have, we should have a billion invested in Minnesota roads. That would pave every mile of trunk highway and 26,000 miles of other roads.

"I am ahead of time, I know. But I am just trying to show that our road expenditures, which seem large at first glance, are small in proportion to what we spend for vehicles."

Motorists to Ride High

An elevated highway for automobiles, twenty feet above the street level, is to be built along the western boundary of lower Manhattan Island at a cost of $11,000,000. The roadway will be sixty-five feet in width and a speed of thirty miles an hour or better will be permitted. The highway is planned as part of a comprehensive scheme for relieving traffic congestion.

Federal-Aid Roads

For the construction of federal-aid roads, a total of $73,125,000 will be distributed among the states for use during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1926. Texas will receive $4,426,917, the largest share for any state. New York with $3,647,166, Pennsylvania with $3,346,920, and Illinois with $3,175,616, follow with the next largest shares.

DURING the first six months of 1926 one in every four buyers of new automobiles bought a General Motors car. During 1925 the proportion was about one in five. During 1924 it was one in six. This steady addition of new friends for the products of General Motors has a double significance.

1. It is proof that the grouping of strong companies in one big family is economically sound. Large scale operations do make possible important economies; and these economies do benefit the buyer, in greater value. The public has recognized this principle and profited by it.

2. Increased public patronage involves increased obligation. General Motors is directly responsible for the welfare of its 152,000 employees and their families, its 20,000 dealers, and indirectly for the six thousand companies which furnish it with supplies and materials — at least a million men, women and children to whom its public good is a very personal concern.

As the volume of production increases there must be a corresponding increase in the values offered. The new series of cars just presented does embody larger values; it is a direct reflection of the fact that more than 1,075,000 General Motors cars were sold at retail during the year just closed. The added quality has been built in where its presence counts most in comfort and safety and long life.

With great pride we invite you to inspect these new General Motors cars.

Guard Banks' Money

The majority of the New York banks use armored cars in transporting their money and other valuables around the city. Several companies operate these cars, the guard and drivers of which are carefully selected men. One company hires only American citizens who have unblemished records, who have passed rigid intelligence and physical examinations and who are expert marksmen.

GERMS—6,000,000 germs on a single fly, says a noted health officer. Protect your family with Flit.

Flit spray clears your home in a few minutes of disease-bearing flies and mosquitoes. It is clean, safe and easy to use.

Kills All Household Insects

Flit spray also destroys bed bugs, roaches and ants. It searches out the cracks and crevices where they hide and breed, and destroys insects and their eggs. Spray Flit on your garments. Flit kills moths and their larvae which eat holes. Extensive tests showed that Flit spray did not stain the most delicate fabrics.

Flit is the result of exhaustive research by expert entomologists and chemists. It is harmless to mankind. Flit has replaced the old methods because it kills all the insects—and does it quickly.

BERCULOSIS ERADICATION HELPS HOG BUSINESS

Des Moines, Iowa, August 26 — Figures which have been kept by Iowa packer, answer the question many people as to the benefits ich accrue from the work of erad- ating bovine tuberculosis," states G Thornburg, Secretary of Ag- culture.

"In 1919, the average loss per g caused by tuberculosis infection as 75 cents. This is the loss per g killed in the plant. In 1920, the ss declined to 66 cents, in 1921, 49 cents and in 1922, to 32 cents. nce 1923, the loss has further de- ined to 26 cents."

Another angle of the returns is own in a letter from F. C. McClung airman of the Board of Supervis- s of Wapello county. Wapello has en modified. since January 2, 925, and the hog breeders have en getting a premium of ten cents r hundred pounds on all hogs old.

Mr McClung states, "Up to date, Morrell & Co., local packers, who uy most of the hogs bred and fed Wapello county, have paid out pproximately $17,000 in premium oney to the farmers of this coun- y. The total cost of testing the attle of this county (and this in- ludes indemnities paid to farmers or their reacting cattle was $8,689. 4. Of this sum, the state of Iowa aid $2,314 73 and the federal gov- rnment paid $2,314.73. Our local ounty, out of a tuberculosis fund, aised the first year by a levy of .05 mills on all taxable property of he county, paid the remaining $4,- 959.98."

OWER IS BUILT ON PILOT KNOB

Beacon Light to be Installed; Will Be Used in Topography Survey Work

Lake Mills Graphic:

A tower twenty feet high has been built on top of Pilot Knob, 12 miles south of Lake Mills, for signal purposes in surveying the topography of the country. Later a permanent beacon light will be placed here by the postoffice department.

The present temporary tower has been built by the government in preparation for precise triangulation. The observing party with precise instruments will arrive in September to begin the instrumental work.

The object of this survey is to spread a network of triangles over the county, leaving accurately located and permanently marked points to furnish control for topographic and other land surveys.

The building party which is now operating in this section consists of five members· Dan W. Taylor, chief of party; Sam O. White, signalman; E. Packer, N. E. Slyar and C. Currases The towers to be erected will range in height from twenty to one hundred feet.

Before the air mail service is started between the twin cities and Dallas, Tex , a string of beacon lights will be established at intervals the whole of the distance Pilot Knob will be nearly in a direct line between St. Paul and Des Moines, and one of the beacons will be placed on top of the knob.

HORSE HAS UNUSUAL ACCIDENT

Ted Johnson, of the Irvington neighborhood, had one of his horses injured seriously one day last week, while he was assisting in threshing at his father, L. A. Johnson's, south of this village. The animal was one of a team used in hauling bundles to the thresher, and on going alongside the machine it got too close to the main belt, which caught its tail, which was then wound up in the pulley and literally jerked from its body We understand this is the second horse belonging to the Johnsons that has been similarly injured, the first one dying from the effects.—Algona Advance.

Iowa's Auto Death List Great

In 1925 there were 340 deaths in Iowa charged up to motorists, and 12,256 persons were injured. The deaths were divided, 286 on the highways and 54 at railroad crossings. Since January 1, 1926, 2,240 people have been killed on the highway and 613 at railroad crossings in the United States.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

At the west end of the Main Drag is where you can hear all the fine arguments on how good a Ford is. John Pritchard, of the Ford garage was again giving us an earful of the usual line and he had us about convinced that a Ford was a regular streak of speed. Then the other day we had Wallace Pavey, of the Stormizing Shop put some oil in the crank case of our Chevrolet wagon. Wallace made an awful mistake, as he put in castor oil instead of cylinder oil Our "shivy" was then so speedy that the first mile it passed eighteen Fords, two Essex and a freight train a quarter of a mile long.

Over at the Klemme Meat Market they are singing a new song entitled, "They fed the Baby sausage so they wouldn't have to 'weiner' ".

The Salvation Army Band from Mason City was the chief entertainment on the Main Drag Saturday night They gave a good concert of band music and singing after which they took up a collection at about the time that some folks began to think they had some important business to look after However, the Army gathered in around $30 and were very well pleased with the liberal donation Giving to the S A is a good investment. Ask any vet of the World War.

And speaking of the Army reminds us of a little poem which has been brewing under the editorial dome:

"Twinkle, twinkle, little star,
Grandpa bought a motor car,
Pulled the lever back too far,
Music by the G. A. R."

And now comes Elmer Ludeke and says our home brew recipe isn't worth a tinker's darn. We asked him if he had tried it, but he said he didn't. We told him not to condem an article until it had been given a fair trial. Says, Elmer, "I'll be hanged if I can catch the frogs"

Have any of our other Main Drag Fans tried it? We would like to hear from you.

H F. Jost. manager of the North Iowa Grain Co , is confined to the hospital at Hampton this week He was taken suddenly ill last week and had to submit to an appendicitis operation. "Hank" is geting along fine now and will soon be back at the office.

John Day and family took a few days vacation last week visiting at Sioux City. John was back on the job at his Cash Store Tuesday morning and after looking over the situation found that the cracker box politicians hadn't eaten more than the accustomed amount of cheese and crackers and that there was still some Home Comfort left in the old tobacco box. And as we town bums didn't get away with the whole outfit during his absence, John may hike away again.

Doc Missman was exercising a hoe around the State Bank building the other day getting some weeds out of the way that cluttered up the scenery. Doc. is as handy leaning on a hoe handle as a section helper. But, he improved the looks of the street considerable.

Paul Grange, manager of the Northern Lumber Co. and editor of "The Northern Lights," is the owner of a new Buick enclosed car. It's a fine wagon. Even though Paul has become our bitter competitor nevertheless, we are glad to see a brother editor riding around in a good looking bus.

A couple of Fords got into an argument on the Main Drag Monday when one forgot to stop quick and the other got boosted up on the side walk And that's why Phil Bock's flivver has a new wing.

Friday the Editor of the Main Drag and Rev. Grosshuesch went fishing Reverend went along to verify any wild stories we might hatch up. We caught 13 fish big enough to adorn a frying pan properly and the thirteenth was caught without hook, line or sinker! Yep, we just sneaked up on him and said "Hockus, Pockus," and dished him in' Rev. Grosshuesch will verify this statement and as he hasn't lived in Iowa long enough to get onto the big fish stories. We demand the brass bound medal for the season.

What's the matter with having a celebration in Klemme this fall? Nothing like pulling off a big day to put some pep into the old burg. We haven't had much excitement here for several years, so what's the matter with a fall festival, a watermellon day, or a county ball tournament or some other kind of blow-out? Now don't all speak at once, but somebody make a noise and we'll furnish the wind!

The base ball club was hauled up on the carpet Monday for pulling off a Sunday game here. The boys promised to not do it again so every thing is again "quiet on the Potomac" A new diamond has been consructed outside the town limits and no more Sunday ball games will be played in Klemme.

DO YOUR BEST CLUB HAS GOOD MEETING

The meeting of the "Do Your Best" Club was held at the home of Mrs. W. J. Anderson on Wednesday, August 25th, and which proved to be very interesting. Several of the girls worked on lamp shades, the others made marblized paper. By combiuing various colors together they produced many beautiful designs. This paper will be used in lining envelopes, decorating book ends, desk sets, boxes, etc

Sunday, Aug. 29th, Dorothy and Mildred Hampel accompanied by their leader, Mrs. W. J. Anderson, will leave for Des Moines to attend the State fair. While there the girls, represening Hancock county, will give a demonstration on "How to Enamel." They also entered the district contest at he North Iowa Fair, and received second place. Floyd county received first.

The next meeting of the "Do Your Best" Club will be at the home of Luella Goll, Saturday, September 4. —Club Reporter.

"1776" COMING TO MINNESOTA STATE FAIR

The hundreds of thousands of persons i n the Northwest who cannot visit the great Philadelphia Sesqui centennial this year, will have a chance to see one of its greatest entertainment features at the Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, September 4 to 11—the mammoth fireworks spectacle, "1776".

All of the stirring episodes in the trying struggle for national freedom 150 years ago will be presented, including the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the ride of Paul Revere, the making of the first United States flag by Betsy Ross, the battle of Yorktown, the Boston Tea Party and a score of other dramatic episodes of the American Revolution.

A great scenic stage, 400 feet long and fifty feet high, will be used as a background. Tons and tons of fire works will be blown up sky-high.

KLEMME BALL TEAM APPEAR IN JUSTICE COURT FOR PLAYING SUNDAY GAME

Case Dismised On Promise That No More Sunday Games Be Played In Town Of Klemme

Notices were served on the members of the Klemme Ball Team to appear in Justice H. L. Suckow's court Monday to answer charges filed against them for playing a game of base ball within the town of Klemme last Sunday.

County Attorney Vern Grau was called from Garner to assist Justice H. L. Suckow with the case.

The town was all excited as to the outcome of the case. The ball team claimed they had not violated the law and no admission had been charged and that the money they received from spectators was in the form of a donation.

The case was settled without any fines being assessed against the players who promised that they would not play any more Sunday ball games within the town limits.

The team has built a new diamond north of town where future games will be played.

WEATHER "PROPHETS" FAIL TO GUESS

Des Moines, Iowa, August 26.—Every time there is a slight deficiency in rainfall, people begin to express fear that something mankind has done or failed to do is reducing Iowa, the most dependable food producing region of all the earth, to something approaching a desert with attending dire consequences.

According to the Iowa Weather and Crop Bureau, the driest crop season, April to September, in the last 53 years, was 1894 with 13 39 inches for the State average. Next to this, is 1886 with 15.01 inches and next is 1910 with 16.21 inches. From April 1 to August 18, 1926, the State average is about 15½ inches with six weeks yet to go.

This has not been "a year without a summer" as predicted by some unofficial forecasters, nor has it tended toward desert conditions as much as it did in some of the earlier years.

PETITIONS OUT FOR OPEN PHEASANT SEASON IN KOSSUTH COUNTY

Many residents in Kossuth county are requesting an open pheasant season this fall Petitions are being circulated this week and in order for them to be effective, 150 landowners must sign them, after which the fish and game deparmeut may, or may not, declare an open season on cock pheasants for a stated period of time. This has been a good season for pheasants, and young birds can be seen on every hand and it is thought there are many more birds in the county than last year.

FOUNDER OF TOWN OF KLEMME DEAD

H. J. KLEMME, FOUNDER OF THE TOWN OF KLEMME IS DEAD

Passed Away At The Home Of His Daughter At Mason City

H. J. Klemme passed away Monday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Stanberry, at Mason City after a brief illness.

Mr. Klemme was a pioneer of this vicinity and in the early days owned the farm and which he later platted and which became the town of Klemme.

Mr. Klemme was a public spirited man and gave liberally. He gave the ground for the Methodist church and parsonage and likewise gave the ground for the Reformed church and parsonage. We understand he also presented the ground for the school. Among other gifts to the town of Klemme he gave an entire block to be used as a park and which is now one of the best city parks in northern Iowa.

When Mr. Klemme had platted out the town he lived in the house which now is owned by C. M. Bredbenner and Mr. Klemme was then engaged in the lumber and coal business here. Later he moved to Belmond where he took an active part in building up that town and has many interests there today.

Funeral services were held at Belmond Wednesday and the remains were then shipped to California to be laid at rest beside his wife. A number of Klemme business men attended the services and the town council presented a wreath in behalf of the town of Klemme in remembrance and appreciation of the gifts of the founder of Klemme.

ROSENWALD, CAPPER, PRESIDENT CONFER

Needed Legislation Chief Topic of Session—Market Plan Is Boosted.

Paul Smiths, N. Y.—Divergent views on farm-relief legislation were reported to President Coolidge by Julius Rosenwald of Chicago, chairman of the board of a large mail-order firm, and Senator Arthur Capper, Republican, of Kansas.

Mr. Rosenwald came to White Pine camp at the President's invitation.

Mr. Rosenwald in his talk with the President approved strongly the plans to strengthen the co-operative marketing movement in the country. He urged especially a tariff on hides and suggested that a reduction or complete removal of the tariff on aluminum might be desirable.

Mr. Rosenwald also discussed the general business conditions of the nation with the President. He showed Mr. Coolidge a chart that he had prepared before he left Chicago. The chart covered the period from July 1 to August 14, and showed a general healthy increase over the same period a year ago in the mail-order business amounting to between 20 and 25 per cent. The Northwest, according to Mr. Rosenwald, was the only section of the country that did not show a satisfactory increase in volume of business.

Senator Capper told the President that the farm bloc will try for two pieces of legislation after the November elections. He said there would be an effort made to adjust the tariff to aid the farmer and that the McNary-Haugen bill, perhaps in another guise, would be put forward again. In an interview, after his talks with the President, Senator Capper said:

"The farmers of the West are protectionists, and do not desire to tear down the tariff wall that has been built for the safety of this country's business. At the same time they feel they are not getting all the benefit they should from its protection.

"For example, they believe there should be a duty on beef and hides. Also, the impost on wheat should be raised.

"The cattle man is getting nothing like his share of the general wave of prosperity because he is not sufficiently protected. Argentine canned beef and Argentine hides are sold in Kansas City and other places throughout the West in direct competition with American producers.

"Wheat from the Argentine also has its place in the midwestern market."

Regarding the McNary-Haugen bill, Senator Capper said "the farmers still believe some form of price stabilization should be tried out."

The Kansas senator indicated it was not likely the farm bloc would attempt to put over any of its legislation in the short session of congress convening in December. The idea is to build on results at the polls this fall.

Senator Capper approved the plan of price stabilization contained in the McNary-Haugen farm bill, but Mr. Resenwald said any price stabilization attempt was sure to end in a vicious circle. They agreed substantially regarding the business and economic conditions of the country.

Mr. Rosenwald is strong for the co-operative marketing movement and suggested that he thought it should be strengthened. Senator Capper said that phase of farm relief was recognized, but other steps were essential, referring to some revision of the tariff without injuring the protective fabric.

Florida Realtors Are Held on Fraud Charge

Jacksonville, Fla.—More than 40 officials and employees of the Florida Cities Finance company and the Stanley Realty and Development company are out on bond following their indictment on a charge of using the mails to defraud in connection with the sale and development of Florida real estate.

The Florida Cities Finance company, headed by Merle C. Tebbetts, was the developer of the Fulford-by-the-Sea subdivision near Miami, while the Stanley Realty and Development company promoted the Arcadia Gardens development, near Arcadia, Fla. Arthur Dunas of Chicago was president of the latter organization.

Electric Guide Posts to Aid Night Flyers

Washington.—Hundreds of miles of commercial airways will be equipped within three months for safe night flying, establishing the air transport industry on a solid basis of twenty-four-hour operation like railroad and steamship lines.

This announcement was made by William P. MacCracken, Jr., aviation secretary of the Commerce department as he authorized the purchase of twenty-four-inch revolving lights to mark seven aviation highways.

These powerful beacons will be visible to flyers fifty miles away. They will be placed ten miles apart.

See Greco-Rumanian Peace

Athens.—Negotiations are being made to complete a Greek-Rumanian friendship treaty similar to that signed by Greek and Jugoslavian representatives.

Taxi Drivers Must Give Bond

Chicago.—Orders were issued to the police by Chief Collins to enforce strictly the ordinance requiring a $5,000 surety bond from taxicab drivers and all other persons using their cars to carry passengers for pay.

Emil S. Schnellbacker of Quincy, Ill., has been appointed assistant chief of the commercial intelligence division of the Department of Commerce in Washington. The division serves American business firms by supplying information as to worthwhile sales contacts in the markets of the world.

WORLD WILL NEVER BE WITHOUT FOOD

No Limit on Synthetic Products, Chemist Says

Williamsport, Pa.—The world will never want for food. There will always be enough to eat for everybody, and if we ever reach the very unlikely situation when there will be too many mouths to feed because of increase of population over the available food supply we can live on yeast food products, which the chemist stands ready to supply in limitless quantities.

This, in substance, was the cheerful statement made before the institute of politics by Dr. H E. Barnard, president of the American Institute of Baking and a noted chemist, in a discussion of the world food problem.

"To the chemist the malthusian doctrine is but the sad reflection of a pessimistic world," said Doctor Barnard to the approval of many scientists in the audience. "It may be possible theoretically to foresee a time when our food supply will not be sufficient to meet the increase in population, but that time cannot be measured in terms of the extension of areas available for the production of cereal grains nor the ability of tillable lands to produce forage for conversion into meat.

"It is not too soon in the development of the synthetic food industry," Doctor Barnard continued, "to predict that if the need ever comes, the chemist will find a way to convert the light of sun and the nitrogen of the air into food for the human family. Already processes have been developed for the production of human food through the growth of the yeast plant which makes it possible to produce food at a very low cost and in enormous quantities."

Retail Food Prices on Decline in 44 Cities

Washington.—For the month ending July 15, retail prices of food in the United States declined in 44 major cities for which government records were kept, it was announced by the Labor department. The department's food price index for the period showed a decline of more than 2 per cent to a 157 index, as compared with 159.7 June 15, the report said.

Fourteen articles, the report said, were cheaper during the month, potatoes leading the decline with an 18 per cent slump. Thirteen articles increased, a 3 per cent advance in fresh eggs being the highest. Fifteen showed no change.

Of the 44 cities showing decreases, Cleveland, with a 5 per cent, had the largest, while Kansas City was second, with a 4 per cent drop in average costs. Butte, Manchester and New Orleans, with a 1 per cent average increase, and Birmingham, Houston, Los Angeles and Mobile, with less than one-half of 1 per cent, were the cities where prices were higher.

45,064,000 Acres Wheat to Be Sown This Year

Washington.—According to reports received by the Department of Agriculture from about 40,000 farmers, a total of 45,064,000 acres will be sown to winter wheat this year.

The acreage is 14.4 per cent in excess of that sown last fall and, if the intentions as indicated by the report are carried out, greater than the acreage of any year except the years of 1918, 1920, 1921 and 1922.

STATE FAIR AND LIVE STOCK SHOW

Opens at State Fair Grounds, Des Moines, Iowa, on Aug. 25 to Sept. 3.

Largest and Greatest Show Ever Held in any State.

Des Moines, Special:

Everything is now in readiness for the opening here August 25th of the largest State Fair and Livestock Show ever witnessed by Iowa or any other state in the Union.

The fair this year will exceed even the record-breaking expositions which Iowa has staged in the past, both in point of exhibits and attendance, officials believe.

One of the chief features will be the national livestock show which will embrace more than 7,000 head of horses, cattle, swine and sheep from all parts of the United States, representing some of the finest breeding farms in the country. There will also be continuous demonstrations and exhibits of improved farming methods by college experts, U. S. government authorities and club teams from throughout the state. Nearly all counties will participate in the exhibits of prize grains and products and in the farm bureau projects exhibit section.

Iowa farm boys and girls' clubs are to be represented by more than 1,500 youngsters who will exhibit livestock, farm produce, and will compete in daily contests in judging and demonstration work. More than 500 head of baby beeves, 550 swine, 100 sheep and 300 birds in the poultry department will be exhibited by these juniors for farmers.

An entire building is to be filled with special exhibits, displays and programs for women, covering practically every field of work in which the women of Iowa are interested at the present time.

An unusually elaborate program of entertainment has been arranged for this year. This will include five days of horse racing, six days of whippet dog races, two days of auto races, fifteen big hippodrome attractions, thirty-five carloads of sideshows and rides on a brand new midway, eight famous bands and orchestras, Arthur Middleton appearing on Sunday evening in a big operatic production, a mammoth fireworks spectacle commemorating the 150th anniversary of American independence and four nights of society horse shows.

A free camp ground of 80 acres has been set aside for fair visitors this year.

Nearly a half million vacation-seekers are expected to attend the fair between Aug. 25th and Sept. 3rd.

WAS ALL RIGHT IF THE WORDS FITTED

Our weekly advice from Hayseed informs us that Hollywood is again in the throes of one of the itches for authorship which occasionally sweep that intellectual center. There is a recurring aspiration among the more gifted and splendid males there to achieve the he-man pinnacle in fiction and share honors with such lions as Zane Grey and James Oliver Curwood.

The latest victim of this intellectual stirring has been one of the screen's perfect profiles, who has been laboring on a novel.

"How many words are there in a novel, anyway?" he inquired from a scenario writer, who might be presumed to be a literary authority.

"About a hundred and twenty thousand," said the scenarist.

"Fine," exclaimed The Perfect Profile. "That means I've finished nine."—New Yorker.

Paris Plans to Have Markets Underground

The city fathers of Paris have hit upon a grandiose scheme to relieve the congestion in the streets, Pierre Van Paassen relates in the Atlanta Constitution. They figure that there is still plenty of room underground. Of course the idea is not quite new, for Paris has a perfect subway service. Under an eighth of the area under the city, however, is a great hollowed space. This was once a quarry, but in 1781 and later under Napoleon, immense piles of bones and skeletons were stored there, when cemeteries around the churches were abolished for sanitary reasons. Now certain members of the municipal council advance the idea of sinking city markets into these catacombs. With a lighting system and proper ventilation, it is believed, public markets can be installed here after the bones are taken out once more, a scheme that would allow the destruction of the present central markets, which occupy ground much too valuable for such purposes.

Possibly Oldest Book

Among books coming to the Congressional library for the Korean collection are five out of the ten forming the Buddhistic treatise, "Ri Nyon Mi Ta to Ch'ng Cham Pep," translated by Bunyin Nanjio, as "Rules for Confession in the Temple of the Merciful and Compassionate One." The work is printed on Korean mulberry paper from wooden blocks cut in the second year of the Chin (Tartar) Emperor Ch'ung Ch'ing, 1213 A. D. It is possibly the oldest printed book in the Library of Congress.

CHAPTER IX

d Town Marshal McGrath assault- Marcus Handy on a day when the was booming along at its accus- d pace, the politics of Cottonwood t at once have rushed forward to max. I speculate yet on this, won- g if it all would have turned out happily, in that event, for Mar- Handy and me. More and more "business element" and the bet- men who lived by industry—which t of course most of us—were be- g to see a change must come. also, more and more had the lers, the dispensers of vice and actual criminals grown insolent overbearing through immunity. eet this situation head-on would taken all a man's courage with property and life. If the citizen- Cottonwood boasted in common virtue, it was courage. But things going very well for most of us; nt, public opinion in general, e deploring our civic condition, ned to let well enough alone. It ded a dramatic incident to crys- e the western spirit of fair play, translate sentiment into action. unfair and brutal assault by a n officer of the law might have ed that purpose—but for the dis- ery on Hayden hill.

he ebullient joy inspired by that nt left no room in the public om for any other emotion. By aft- oon the camp had become a mad- se; by night, a joyous chaos. It s settled now, said the public opin- of the bar-rails. Cottonwood was "permanent camp." Permanent! was the greatest camp ever dis- ered in the Rockies—in the world the universe!

Even Marcus Handy, nursing his sical and moral injuries, was ght up in the universal wave of imism and enthusiasm. He had ter reason than most of the rest. fore I had finished staunching his unds, I had broken the news in one fused burst; and hastened to in- m him that he was to be my part- r. Marcus balked a little at that. "I'm afraid you're letting your gen- osity get away with you, boy!" he id. "But it's the way I'd expect u to act," he added shyly.

"Someone's got to stake me, or I n't develop that claim," said I, "and had better be you than anyone I ow." The man's quaint habit of crecy about his most vital affairs d infected me, and I had never told m about my background in the East. "All right; I guess I'll take a whirl ith you," announced Marcus at last. f I can keep any of my money out the maw of that d—n paper com- any!"

So was born the partnership which eveloped and operated the Upper se claim on Hayden hill, which was e name given the location, in honor Buck. For of course, when we came name it, we used a printing term. et me tell here, once for all, the tory of the Upper Case, simple but pical. Hayden hill was "spotted." he ore, as many learned by hard ex- erience, lay in pockets, great and mall, and not the most experienced eologists could prophesy their lay rom the surface conformation. The Hayden and Croly tunnel tapped one f these pockets—nearly the greatest. Our shaft was only fifty yards away, et never, from the morning when we urned the first shovelful of earth un- il the night when its mouth was oarded up as a dangerous prospect hole, did it turn up an ounce of pay- ng ore. After we had sunk to a depth elow which carbonates had never yet been discovered on Hayden hill, we abandoned it as a bad job. Then a company with a theory that a deep ulphide formation underlay the whole ill made offers for some of the un- productive or worked-out claims. We old for just enough money to pay Marcus back what he had sunk in it, plus a block of stock. I am keeping the stock yet—as a souvenir.

But Marcus, when we had patched him up with court-plaster from the drug store, displayed a nobler emotion than greed of gold or hate of man. "She's the biggest story that ever came out in this camp!" he said. "We've got to spread ourselves! We're making history, boy. When Cottonwood is capital of the state, this issue of the Courier will be framed in the statehouse for a souvenir! You know the story. Write it for all you're worth."

My story finished, Marcus sent me forth to get an interview with Buck. Estimating the probabilities, I repaired straight to Huffaker's. My judgment had led me aright. Already, the first story of the hotel was finished and occupied; and the dining-room and bar, as I approached, radiated light, babble and song. I pushed inside. Buck, still in his red flannel shirt, his overalls tucked into his muddy boots, was dining in state. Heading a long table heaped with food, pinnacled with champagne bottles, he had seated Jim Huffaker at his right, Isidore Cohen at his left. The company was pieced out with "mining men," brokers, even Taylor the banker—the financial aristocracy of the camp. I had scarcely stepped through the door when Buck saw me and rose to his feet, roaring boisterous welcome.

"Gents!" he cried, rapping for order with the butt of an empty bottle. "There's the mascot! There's the tenderfoot that brought me luck! Step up, kid, and let 'em see you. He's going to be rich too! Jim, 's my credit still good? All right. Wine again!"

So I was surrounded, congratulated, welcomed prematurely to the financial aristocracy. While the false light of adulation tickled my vanity as well as my sense of humor, I had no desire to sit with the mighty that evening; life had moved so fast since Buck's messenger woke me as to yield no opportunity for seeing Constance. On the plea of urgent business necessity, I got Buck away from the table, dragged him past the clutching, congratulating hands, shut him up in a back room of Huffaker's bar, and interviewed him.

"Well, Buck," I said, "now that you're rich, what are you going to do? Go East and settle down?"

"East, h—l!" exclaimed Buck. "These here Rockies is good enough for me!"

"Here in Cott nwood?" I asked.

"Sure! Cert! What's the use of movin' to New York or Frisco when we're going to have New York right here?"

"Buck," I warned from the depths of my Yankee caution, "it's certain you have a very rich mine. There may be a million dollars down there, enough at any rate so that you might invest it and—"

"Sure I'm going to invest it!" said Buck. "Don't think I'm going to blow it all in, do you? In mines. I'll own this here camp before I'm through—"

"But mines are a matter of luck," I interrupted.

"Cert. And my luck has turned," replied Buck simply. I had no time for further argument, because a new delegation of prominent citizens was pounding at the door; and Buck, lapped in such jobs as he had never before known, was in no mood for introspection.

I hastened to Mrs. Barnaby's—late. Glancing through the door, I saw that the place at the head of the table was cleared; Constance had supped and departed. I went round to the sleeping tent and called. At the sound of my voice she came running forth into the twilight, both hands outstretched.

"I hear that you have struck it," she said, "and oh, I'm glad!"

I went all a-tremble; except for memory of that afternoon in the gulch, I should have lost my self-control again. She seemed to perceive my emotion; for she said quickly:

"We musn't talk here by night this way—people gossip—I've had to make it a rule not to see men callers in the evening. Good night, Robert; I hope your claim makes a million!" and was gone through the tent-flap. Had I yielded to my impulses, I should have torn the canvas into shreds.

* * * * * * *

Reading page-proofs that night, I glanced up at Marcus, who was locking a form.

"Aren't you going to refer to the—the McGrath episode?" I asked.

"Nope!" said Marcus cheerfully. "Crowded out to make room for more interesting matter. By the way, boy—don't you go taking this matter up with Marshal McGrath. Next time he'll shoot, and I don't want to lose my best and only reporter. Just keep out of his way. We're going to get the criminal news for the Courier from others than the appointed authorities."

"Is the campaign for municipal government abandoned then?" I asked, and held my breath for the answer. I esteemed Marcus, and did not like to think that he lacked nerve.

"No," he replied. "But when I cut my wolf loose again, old hoss, he's going to bite!" To which cryptic utterance he put a period with a resounding blow of his maul on the block.

The days passed, bringing the advance-guard of a new rush to Cottonwood camp. Again we were crowded beyond all possibility of accommodating our pilgrims and strangers.

At about this time Mike, the day bartender of the Silver Dollar saloon, began to loom up from the hazy mists of my general acquaintance. For some weeks now he had held a loose connection with the Courier as a solicitor of printing jobs on commission and a gatherer of small news items. The Silver Dollar, which stood just where the glories of Main street encountered the cheap, open brothels of Pearl street, had a hard name in camp. Rumor called it headquarters for the thug element. As for Mike—I never knew his other name—he was a small, hatchet-faced man with a dead, inscrutable eye and the appearance in his street clothes of a respectable and somewhat self-effacing mechanic. He said little at any time, and that little in a voice which sucked the words in through a set of narrow teeth slanted backward like an anaconda's. He used to bring his information as rough notes, written in a business hand whose Spencerian flourishes contrasted oddly with its grammatical atrocities. Only by a process of painful cross-examination could I extract the human lights which made the story.

When we severed relations with the marshal's office, Mike became at once invaluable. Our necessary criminal news we got from his reports; and we never missed an essential item. Twice, after I had drawn from him his budget of information, he stepped over to Marcus, spoke a quiet word; they retired then to the space behind the printing-press—the only private place in our office—and talked in whispers. Except for the uncomfortable feeling of being on the outside and a touch of amusement at my editor's mania for dramatic secrecy, I gave little thought to these conferences.

One night Marcus did not come back from dinner. Mike, reporting at eight o'clock as was his habit, laid down his budget of notes and gave his usual unilluminating explanations. He had only two unimportant hold-ups and a case of assault and battery; I put aside his notes to "work up" when I had finished the "telegraph" news. But Mike did not at once depart. For fifteen minutes he stood around the office, shifting from one foot to the other and asking faintly at intervals when I expected the boss to come back.

"Say," he said at last, "I got business that won't wait. Give this note to the boss as soon as he comes in, will you? It's important."

I took the piece of folded copy-paper, slipped it into my pocket. A minute later, in fear that I might forget it, I laid it on the desk before me. I was working furiously that night. The telegraph matter finished, I turned to Mike's items. Absently, I unfolded the note with the rest, read it over at one glance of the eye before I realized what I was doing.

"Proved that somebody in town informs when they is monney shipments," it read. "Regular sistem. . . . May have enteresting facts tomorrow."

I folded the note quickly, put it back into my pocket. When Marcus arrived half an hour later I gave it to him, wondering if the honorable and discreet thing was to admit my mistake or to keep silence. I decided on silence. Of course, I would keep his secret; and to let him know that I knew would only disturb him. A little guiltily, however, I watched him read it. He whistled, caught up his hat and hurried through the door to be gone for another half-hour. The loose ends of this affair began to knot themselves together in my mind. Mike, of course, was a detective, admirably placed in the Silver Dollar, admirably concealed by the device of giving him desultory employment on the Courier. But was he Marcus Handy's man alone—or whose?

The next day brought another tiny, significant incident—like a jet of steam from a verdant and blossoming earth, which indicates the volcano awakening to eruption underneath. But whereas my deductions from Mike's notes revealed to me part at least of the hidden truth, the meaning of this at the time escaped me.

Through a still summer afternoon, with the great mountain above seeming very near, I had ridden out to Hayden hill. Ostensibly, I made this journey in order to report progress on our development work to Marcus; in reality I went to gloat. That piece of earth was mine—not a gift or inheritance, like the fruits of life I had enjoyed hitherto, but already discounting my stroke of luck, attributing my good fortune to my native acumen.

Across the site of our placer diggings stretched now a bridge of unseasoned logs, the needles still green on their roughly trimmed stumps of branches. The rather large cabin on the next claim down-stream had passed from a private residence to a public institution. A shrewd saloon-keeper, newly arrived, had seen his chance for business with the owners, the prospectors and the mere sight-seers crowding to Hayden hill, had rented the cabin at rates which returned its owners much greater revenue than their dwindling placer claim, had opened the Big Bonanza saloon.

At the door of the Big Bonanza saloon stood hitched a team of matched coal-black Morgan horses, the silver mountings of their harness reflected in the glossy polish of their hides. The carriage behind them seemed, from the glint of its varnish, the unspotted newness of its yellow trimmings, to be out on its maiden journey. As I pulled up to admire this equipage, its owner strode from the Big Bonanza, chewing an unlighted cigar. He unhitched and mounted to the seat. He wore checked trousers as new as the paint of his carriage, as tight as the hides of his team, a black "diagonal" coat with binding an inch wide, a low, loud waistcoat revealing a white, hard and glossy shirt-front, wherein gleamed two diamond studs. Above that were a round felt hat, a set of whiskers evidently but that morning trimmed by a too expert barber, and the countenance of—Buck! I was forced to look twice before I made sure of that and hailed him.

"Hello!" he cried as I approached; and then, somewhat sheepishly: "What think of the new shell?"

"It's great. It's swell," I said, suppressing my smiles. "You must be cashing in!"

"Nope!" replied Buck. "Not till next week. First shipment started to Denver yesterday. Don't have to pay. Everybody gives me tick." Then, reverting a little shyly to the fascinating subject of his clothes:

"Since the boys elected me president of the Hayden Hill Mine Owners' association I kinder feel I ought to dog up a little!" He withdrew the unlighted cigar from his mouth, spat a loose piece of wrapper from his lips. "Tryin' to break myself of chawin'!" he remarked. "Jim Huffaker said a dry cigar was the best way. But it ain't very satisfyin'."

We drifted into the gossip of the day. Buck's claim was developing beyond all expectations. Still the ore body seemed to widen out; and still it grew richer. One sack which had gone down to Denver assayed eight hundred dollars to the ton. Shorty had been shirking his share of the work. "Drunk a heap," said Buck. "And then there's that girl from Red Nell's house. . . ." Two of the other claims had already reached "signs." "You'll break into it yourself any day, now," pronounced Buck. Hadn't been any symptoms of claim-jumping yet. Probably because the crooks in town knew what kind of men had located on Hayden hill. "That was just blind luck," he commented. "The right kind of men got locations here. Had a mine owners' association before they'd scratched ground. And we'll stand together, too. Anybody that tries anything funny up here is monkeyin' with a buzzsaw. I guess the camp's next in order." He paused a moment.

"Sacramento diggings," he added in a low, even tone.

"What?" I asked. Buck was seldom cryptic.

"Guess you ain't a member of our lodge," laughed Buck; and at once changed the subject to the shortage of mine hardware.

If I thought at all of this curious phrase, it was to reflect with amusement that Buck had probably joined by now every secret order represented in Cottonwood.

I looked up to realize that if I kept straight on, I must pass round the county jail. I had taken that course from the suburbs, where I had gone to look for a freighter with a bear story, in pure absentmindedness born of a troubled mind. The dazzling interest of my dual job as reporter for the Courier and owner of the Upper Case mine had saved me, all this time, from that sickness of the spirit which afflicts unhappy lovers. But sometimes when I was alone—as tonight—the hopeless misery of my situation and the uncertainty of the path I was following came over me in a wave of black, tormenting misery.

I hesitated just a moment. Not since the day when he beat up Marcus Handy had I encountered Marshal McGrath face to face. Subconsciously, I had been dreading the meeting. Of course, I should look through him, as though he were not there. Then, probably, the marshal would taunt me—or Marcus, which would come to the same thing. If I answered him in kind, he would probably shoot. I had no illusions as to my chance in a pistol match with the marshal. Moreover, Marcus had again and again implored me not to hunt trouble in that quarter. On the other hand, if I failed to answer in kind I should lose all standing; should be known simply as a tenderfoot that backed down. And by now my growing position in camp had become sweet, so young was I.

In the shadow of a cabin which blocked the approaches from the hillside to the jail, I hesitated, my pride disputing with my prudence. I glanced at the jail. Brilliant light flooding through its front window illuminated Marshal McGrath's rocking chair. I noted, on the hazy edge of the belt of light, two male figures standing close together as though in conversation, and the outlines of a horse. But neither was the marshal. All this in the mere pause of an interrupted step.

I was about to advance, certain that the chance of meeting my enemy was remote, when the two men stepped out into the belt of light. One, though his face lay in shadow, I recognized as the talkative Charlie Meek. The light shone full on the face of the other. It was a comely countenance; my first, photographic glimpse recorded a brow running almost without break into a straight regular nose; from beneath his black slouch hat, now pushed back on his head, emerged a tuft of curling blond hair. Then he turned from profile to full face, and smiled at some remark of Charlie Meek. And I saw that a loose mouth marred his comeliness.

I had lifted my foot to step forth and boldly to pass the jail, when he stooped, picked up the reins, led his horse's head and foreshoulders into the belt of light. The motion stirred in me a faint memory which held me, searching my brain, to the spot. The face was new. Yet that motion reminded me of something significant, dramatic, buried perplexingly in the depths of memory. Charlie, talking in low tones over his shoulder, thrust his key into the lock of the jail. A forward motion of the horse blotted out his figure. The stranger mounted; the horse swung round backward and sideward as an independent steed will. On his buckskin flank lay a white marking—shaped like the upper half of a pear, the head and shoulders of a veiled woman.

That was the horse I had seen in the bushes after the robbery of the Cottonwood stage! And the rider . . . when I saw him before, he was masked. But that motion, that figure were the same. As certainly as though he had confessed it, I knew that this was the man whom I had seen lying along the rock covering the stage passengers, whom I had seen mounting that same horse with the pear-shaped marking.

French Woman Famed for Skill as Cook

The famous Bhillat-Savarin died February 2, 1826. He was celebrated for his book called "The Physiology of Taste," wherewith he established the French tradition for good cooking, says the Detroit News.

At a banquet held in Paris recently in his honor it was remarked that there was no woman guest. Somebody has been explaining the omission on the ground that both the great epicures and the great cooks have all been men.

That may be broadly true, but not long before Brillat-Savarin's days there was one woman cook who achieved an almost unparalleled popularity. This was Marie, the cook of the Paris fermier-general of the period, whose dinners at the Elysee palace had a wide celebrity. The host would not employ a man cook, and though this at first caused astonishment among the people whom he asked to dinner, Marie's achievements soon became famous.

According to an historian of the time, she used to be called like a "prima donna" at the end of a courses, and she was enthusiastically toasted as "Le Cordon Bleu." Cordon Blue, though usually applied to men cooks in our day, was originally used of French women cooks, and was probably derived from the blue aprons which they wore in the kitchen.

Why, to Be Sure

It was raining terribly. The playing field was a sea of mud. The players came up out of every scrimmage like pulling a flivver out of a mudhole. Everything was a mess. The football jerseys had lost their brilliant hues and the white pants of the officials were a dark gray shade.

"Isn't it terrible that they should get so dirty! Look at that fellow's shirt. How will they ever get them all clean?"

"Say, what do you suppose they got the scrub team for?"—Grinnell Malteaser.

Physical Perfection

The Society of Directors of Physical Education has set the following standard of measurements of the physically ideal American student of twenty-two: "With a height of 5 feet 9 inches he carries a weight of 159 pounds. The girth of his neck, knee and calf are the same, with the upper arm 1½ inches less. The girth of his thigh is ½ inch less than that of his head. His expanded chest is 40 inches, the girth of his waist is 10 inches less, his hip girth almost the same as his unexpanded chest, while the breadth of his waist barely exceeds the length of his foot, and the stretch of his arms measures 2 inches more than his height."

Greeks Are Philanthropists

In Greece the wealthy men make gifts to the nation and leave legacies to civic enterprises in a way that outshines the rich men of any other nation in Europe. This is due partly to the native desire of the Greeks to improve themselves and to transfer that eagerness to corporate affairs.

HUSBAND DID THE WASHING

His Wife Confined to Her Bed by Ill Health

Because of his wife's frequent ill health, Mr. J. F. Gage was obliged to do the washing and cooking for the family.

One day when Mrs. Gage was confined to her bed, he brought her the newspaper to read. Among the advertisements she noticed a letter from another sick woman telling of the help she had received from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I'll try it," she decided.

Her husband brought home a bottle and only a few days after she had begun to take it she felt well enough to be up around the house. Gradually her general health improved until she is now able to do her own work.

In a letter which Mrs. Gage recently wrote, she said, "I have taken twelve bottles and feel like a new woman." She has told many women about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and one of her friends is now taking it. Her address is Mrs. J. F. Gage, Route 5, Brownwood, Texas.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been taken by women for more than half a century with very satisfactory results.

He Had the "Dope"

From a school boy's essay on the race horse:

"The race horse is a noble animal used very cruel by gentlemen. Races are very bad places. None but wicked people know anything about races. The last derby was won by Mr. Morriss' Manna, a beautiful bay colt by Phalaris, rising four. The odds was 9 to 1 against him, and he won 8 lengths. Good old Steve!"—London Daily Express.

Long Walk About Town

It is calculated that it would require six months to walk through all the streets of New York city, allotting eight hours a day to the task and keeping up a normal pace. The total of paved and unpaved streets in the five boroughs is over 4,000 miles. Brooklyn and Queens have the same street mileage, with totals each of 1,305 miles, while Manhattan has a trifle under 500 miles.

ANOTHER HIGHWAY STUNT

A traveling salesman, driving an automobile on his way from Waterloo to Mason City, was halted by a man dressed in the garb of a farmer, who was carrying a couple of halters. He asked the salesman if he had seen a couple of horses anywhere along the road, making the claim that the animals had escaped from the barnyard. He was very deliberate in his manner and engaged the autoist in conversation as to business conditions. In a few minutes an automobile coming in the opposite direction hove in sight and as it drew near two men jumped out, covered the salesman with revolvers, took $80 and a new overcoat and then picked up the fellow looking for the horses and away they went.

AGE OF RIVETLESS BUILDING IS NOW HERE

The first heavy duty commercial building ever erected by the use of the electric weld instead of rivets has recently been completed in Canton, Ohio, and, according to engineers, marks the beginning of the age of rivetless steel construction.

The plan of building measures 150 by 100 feet, and a total of 14,694 linear inches of electric welds were used in the construction of the framework. The welding was done in eighty per cent of the time which would have been required for riveting, and important decreases in cost were reported as well as greatly increased strength, since a welded joint is 100 per cent strong as compared to 65 per cent when rivets are used.

END TERMITE PERIL, AIM OF SCIENTISTS

Small Creatures Shown an Enemy of Mankind.

Funny what foolish things these scientists take up to study! Funny, too, how important the foolish things often turn out to be after they have been studied!

Recently the American Association for the Advancement of Science gave a $500 prize to Dr. L. R. Cleveland of Johns Hopkins, who had been trying to find out how termites digest cellulose.

Perhaps it was the hurt to human pride that started the inquiry. How comes it that these little insects can do what we men cannot; that is, live on wood? Not that man wanted to make a diet out of sawdust, but he was curious to know what would prevent him if he did want to.

The first thing found out was that the termite could not digest wood unaided any more than a man could. But the termite calls in still humbler creatures and by colonizing its digestive tract with microscopic animals it can handle this intractable material. This is how the ox is able to eat straw, and even we humans do part of our digestion by proxy.

The termites can live and multiply on a diet of nothing but filter paper, which is as nearly pure cellulose as the chemist can make. But if their intestinal fauna is killed off, as may be done, without harming the hosts, by heating or pure oxygen, the termites starve amid plenty of paper.

This points to the possibility of a useful application of this discovery. It may be possible to devise some means by which the microscopic internal parasites that cause many of our diseases may be destroyed without injury to us.

What does it mean to man that the termites can digest cellulose?

We can answer that question if we think for a moment on how much of our modern life depends on this simple substance—cellulose—in its various forms.

First, there is wood of all kinds, houses and furniture. It means, then, that the termites, if unhindered, would eat man out of house and home.

Second, all our cotton clothing consists of cellulose. So are all these new synthetic substitutes for silk.

Third, all our books and papers are made of the same substance, and so succumb to the same busy mandibles.

If man, then, fails to fight off these armies of insect enemies, he is left houseless, naked and illiterate. The termites thus strike at the very fundamentals of civilization by their ingenious trick of digestion. No wonder the tropics, which are infested by these pests, have found it impossible to develop and difficult to maintain, a culture of the northern type.—Edwin F. Slosson, in Collier's Magazine.

Ho! Hum!

The phone on the sports editor's desk rang. It was about a half hour after the end of the afternoon's game out at Washington park.

"How long has the game been over?" a woman's voice inquired.

"Just a little while," replied the sports editor.

"Well, just how long?" the questioner persisted.

"A half hour," responded the editor.

"All right, thank you," said the woman. "I just wanted to check up on the time my husband gets home. He's supposed to be coming straight home from the ball game."

"Ho! hum!" murmured the sports editor, who, by the way, is enjoying single blessedness.—Indianapolis News.

Cause for Mirth

Little Audrey had stayed all night at her aunt's home in the country and had been sleeping with her Cousin Emily, when her boy cousin, Roscoe, shouted for them to get up. The roosters were crowing, the bumble bees bumming, the butterflies making butter, and so on.

"We call the oldest rooster 'Robinson' because he 'Crusoe'!" cried Roscoe.

Little Audrey laughed and laughed, for just then Emily began to tickle her on the bottom of the foot with a feather.—Exchange.

Cat Adopts Young Rabbit

A Maltese cat, belonging to William Miles of Clarksville, Pa., gave birth to a number of kittens. Soon after birth one of the kittens died. The cat went to a nearby field where she robbed a rabbit's nest of a young rabbit and returned with it to the Miles home, where she is raising it with great care. The young rabbit seems to be in good health.

Voter in Hard Luck

After having walked and picked up rides most of the distances across the continent in order to vote at the Pennsylvania primary election, Charles R. Cooke arrived at Clarion ten minutes after the polls had closed for the night. He started from Sautell, Calif., on March 20 and covered the distance, which is nearly 2,500 miles, in less than two months.

Love in a Liner

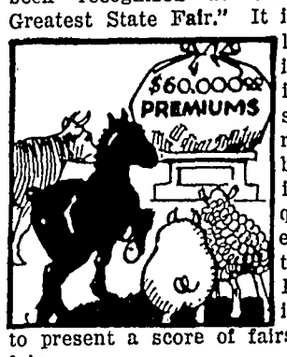
After crossing the line in the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Scotland, 27 young couples on board decided to cross the line into matrimony. This announcement was made when the liner reached Southampton, England, after a 35,000-mile pleasure cruise.

$3,500,000 FAIR PROGRAM READY

Agricultural, Livestock and Industrial Resources to be Displayed at State Fair.

THE Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition will be held in the Twin Cities September 4 to 11. With premiums totaling $145,839.50 offered with livestock exhibits coming from all parts of the continent, with an educational program that tops that of other years, and with an entertainment bill that will provide a thousand thrills, this year's fair will be the "biggest and best" ever.

The Minnesota State Fair has long been recognized as the "World's Greatest State Fair." It is going to live up to its name. It is going to set a new record for both quality and quantity of exhibits this year! In reality, it is going to present a score of fairs within a fair.



Of especial interest to visitors will be the livestock end of the fair. More than 1,000 head of the finest dairy and beef cattle in the country will be on display in the mammoth $500,000.00 Cattle Barn. Premiums totaling $28,786.00 are offered in this department.

The horse department is making preparations for the biggest show in years. With a prize list of $20,530.00, an increase over that of a year ago, both the light and heavy horse shows promise to be banner ones. The night Horse Show will be staged five nights, from Monday to Friday evenings inclusive.

The swine, sheep, goats and poultry divisions are offering liberal premiums, with record shows assured.

The county booth competition in the Agricultural building will bring out the keenest competition in years. More than 40 counties have entered exhibits.

All kinds of fruits, flowers and vegetables will be shown in the Horticultural building, which will prove one of the most inviting buildings on the grounds to fair visitors.

Women visitors will find an entirely different type of exhibit in the Woman's building. This department has been reorganized and modernized, and divided into four units. One unit will feature food, one will stress government, a third unit will be devoted to home decoration, and the fourth to education, especial attention being paid to wardrobes for the school girl and professional women.

Boys and girls enrolled in club work will demonstrate various club projects in their own building. More than 1,100 youngsters, representing every county in the state, will be brought to the fair with all expenses paid as guests of the fair.

The Fine Arts show will feature a $500,000.00 loan exhibit, in addition to the work of Minnesota artists.

"How the taxpayer's dollar" is spent will be visualized in the mammoth exhibit of 36 state departments and institutions in the State's Exhibits building. An exhibit of wild game will be an outstanding attraction.

NO MORE POW-WOWS

Those in charge of the annual pow wow at the Indian reservation in Tama county announce that the one held August 19th to the 22nd will probably be the last, as the new generation is not so much concerned with the lore and traditions of their ancestors. The Indians are adopting white men's garb and customs so rapidly that in the course of a few years even the memories of tribal rites will have become faint.

NEXT SUNDAY AT BAYSIDE

The Milwaukee railroad will run an excursion from McGregor to Bayside Park, Clear Lake, next Sunday, August 29th. This will be the last Milwaukee special to Bayside this season and a big crowd is expected. The Calmar band of thirty-five pieces will come on the excursion and will play several concerts at Bayside Sunday. A good vaudeville program will also be presented. Other good attractions are scheduled for the week at Bayside

LIDDERDALE SELLS

Another municipally owned electric system was abandoned last week when the town of Lidderdale voted to sell its system to The Iowa Light, Heat and Power Company.

The election on the sale proposal carried by a large majority.

The many showers of rain the past week has slowed up threshing, as nearly every night a shower fell that made it impossible to thresh the next day. A lot of the oats is dark in color and the shocks have to be tipped over before threshing. The past few days have been good weather for threshing Corn looks fine and plenty of warm weather will insure a bumper crop. Last Wednesday night hail fell north of Klemme about four miles and did some damage Much damage was done to the corn around Clear Lake

Klemme will have quite a representation of students in various colleges and universities this year. Last Sunday evening the Misses Mildred Johnson and Beatrice Busch left for Chicago and will attend Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill. Mabel Cullinan, Wayne Lemke and Edwin Bock will attend Iowa University at Iowa City Harl Gimer will enter Morningside College at Sioux City, and Mabel Schaefer will attend the State Teachers College at Cedar Falls.

CORN GOES AHEAD AT FULL SPEED

Des Moines, Iowa, August 26 — Where corn has not been permanently injured by the dry weather, it has put on full speed and made remarkable progress, according to the Weather and Crop Service of the Iowa Department of Agriculture. The advancement is unusually variable as some corn is just tasselling while some is beginning to dent. The crop will average about two weeks late.

Recent rains have greatly delayed threshing. There has been considerable damage to shocked grain, mostly oats, through rotting and sprouting. Stubble fields have been put in excellent condition for fall plowing in most localities.

World's prize Stock & Crops

AN Exposition of stock and farm crops, bigger and more comprehensive than any show of the kind ever seen at a state fair, will be a feature of the great Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, Twin Cities, September 4 to 11.

Pure-bred cows, prancing horses, grunting hogs, and broad-backed sheep, valued at more than a million dollars, are coming from every part of America to compete for the princely prizes offered by the fair.

The Crops show will be a hummer. It will present the finest exhibits of grains, grasses, corn, vegetables and fruits, ever assembled in the West.

Eighty acres of latest farm machinery, a style revue, a $500,000.00 Art Show, and 1,100 farm boys and girls in club work, are big features.

The big Northwest Auto Show, enlarged woman's work exhibit, a display by Minnesota's leading departments and institutions, and a health show with new features, are other attractions. You'll think it's the "Fair of a Thousand Thrills," when you see it.

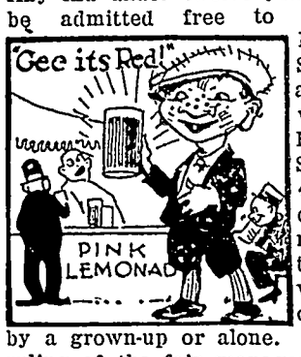
Kids Free at State Fair

Yes sir, and we don't mean Maybe! Any kid under twelve years old will be admitted free to the great Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Dairy Exposition, September 4 to 11, any day or night of the week, whether accompanied by a grown-up or alone. It's a new ruling of the fair managers, who all remember what they would have liked to get when they were kids.



And what a program has been prepared for the boys and girls of the Northwest! There's the fish and game exhibit; the wild animals; the midway shows; funny-looking horses, cattle, sheep, swine, and chickens; all kinds of moving machinery; the boys' and girls' club demonstrations; sixteen bands and orchestras; the hundreds of drink-and-eat stands; roller coaster, gigantic merry-go-round, auto racing, fireworks, open-air circus acts; horse racing—and a thousand other big and little features.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

To give variety and elegance to informal meals there is no better aid than a well-stocked fruit closet. This is the time of the year to fill the shelves with jams, jellies, preserves and conserves. The following suggestions may be worth while in regard to their use:

A cornstarch pudding topped with a spoonful of strawberry preserves or any other small fruit, makes a plain dish quite out of the ordinary.

Any pudding like rice, bread, left-over cake with plain custard is richer and more tasty with a spoonful of jelly or jam dotted over it.

Milk toast is delicious served with blueberry jelly, blackberry jam or loganberry preserve.

A firm jelly may be cut into cubes to use in fruit salads, to garnish cocktails, cake frosting, as well as ice cream.

Jelly rolls, jelly tarts, jelly doughnuts and jelly omelet are all easy to make if one has plenty of jelly.

Jams or jellies are good to serve with waffles and griddle cakes; piled in layers with plenty of butter and jelly on each layer, they may be cut as pie and are served as dessert.

Very small baking powder biscuits, opened and spread with butter, then with jam or jelly are fine; cover and serve hot as a tasty sandwich.

Apple sauce with a few spoonfuls of strawberry jam added makes an entirely different sauce.

Crush strawberries until well-mashed, then take equal measures of sugar, stir and let stand in a cool place until all the sugar has been well dissolved and absorbed by the berries. Have cans well sterilized and cool, fill and seal without cooking. Keep in a very cool cellar and they will be good to the last can. Raspberries and other small fruits may be canned fresh in the same way. This is the time to preserve watermelon pickles for the winter. Soaked over night in salted water, then cooked in clear water until tender and then dropped into a spicy vinegar and sugar and scalded, then canned, they will be a welcome dish in the winter.

Rhubarb jelly is particularly good with ham. Grape, currant, mint and pineapple are served with meats.

When serving game a spoonful of currant jelly added to the gravy makes a piquant sauce.

To avoid lumps in sauces and gravies add the fat to the flour and cook before adding the liquid, or when sugar is used mix flour and sugar well before adding it.

Sandwiches.

Stone, drain and thinly slice red and white cherries. Add an equal measure of chopped drained pineapple and one-fourth of a cupful of chopped pecan meats. Moisten with mayonnaise dressing. Use as a filling between slices of nut bread spread with mayonnaise and buttter. Garnish with fresh fruit and leaves if possible.

Sardines, Eggs and Pimento Sandwiches.—Drain sardines from the oil, using a medium-sized can. Remove the skins, bones and finely mince. Rub the yolks of six hard-cooked eggs through a sieve and chop the whites very fine. Drain four pimentoes from the liquor in can, rinse in cold water, dry between the folds of a cloth and chop fine. Mix all well with a nicely seasoned mayonnaise dressing.

Ripe Olive and English Walnut Sandwiches.—Drain ripe olives from the brine and cut the meat from the pits, finely chop and drain; there should be a cupful. Chop two-thirds of a cupful of fresh walnut meats, mix with the olive meat and add mayonnaise. Spread thin slices of white bread with pimento butter, spread half of the slices with mayonnaise and the olive mixture. Put together in pairs, press the edges and trim off crusts. Serve with coffee.

Sweet Butter, Ham and Mustard Sandwiches.—Cream one-half pound of butter (unsalted), add sufficient French mustard to highly season it. Spread thin slices of bread with the butter; cover one-half of the slices with thinly sliced boiled ham, put together in pairs, trim off the crusts and cut into any desired shape.

Carmi Sandwiches.—Drain sardines from a large can. Remove the skins and bones and finely mince. Add two tablespoonfuls of finely chopped sour pickles, season with salt, mustard, pepper, catsup and moisten with mayonnaise. Spread rye bread with horseradish butter, and half the slices with the sardine mixture. Put together in pairs, cut into rounds and serve with any crisp salad.

Brown and White Sandwiches.—Spread brown bread with butter and French mustard, spread white bread with snappy rich cheese. Put together in pairs and cut with a round cutter.

CHIC STYLES FOR SCHOOL; EARLY FALL MILLINERY

RIGHT in the midst of the long vacation mother wakes up on some placid summer morning with something weighing on her mind. It is the fact that Marguerite, Frances, Mary and the rest must soon be answering the roll call at school and thereby hangs a tale of new clothes for fast growing youngsters. Wherewithal shall they be clothed for the fall season? Is there anything new in fabrics that is worth considering? If not, which of the old reliables is favored? It goes without saying that school frocks must be simple—but how shall they be varied and what little details of finish reveal their up-to-dateness?

Ready for the School Bell.

Beginning with wool fabrics, jersey seems to stand at the head of a dependable class which includes twills, wool crepes and various novelty weaves for dresses. In silks, crepe de chine, canton crepe and other wash silks are as practical as wool or cotton for school frocks, while the smaller fry will still wear everyday clothes of sturdy cotton weaves. In wool and silk materials the favored colors are chanel red, navy blue, peony, deep green, brighter reds and some black, but beige, rose, brown and various blues are all represented. As for style points, bloused waistlines, small collars, jabots, plaits, bolero jackets, smocking and embroidery (in cross-stitch or other simple effects) are approved and recurrent in the new displays. Leather belts with metallic buckles, metallic buttons and little buckles placed at the collar, all contribute decorative touches.

Coats include the straightline, flared and cape-coat varieties made of wool cheviot, velours, broadcloth and other coatings and velveteen may be considered in the list. High, snug collars and full sleeves with varied treatments of the shoulder line are liked for girls up to their middle teens.

In August fashion sounds the retreat of summer millinery from shops and departments to make way for between-seasons and fall hats. These begin to arrive in late July and soon replace their more fragile sisters, however lovely they are, with sturdier stuff. This year the advance guard of fall headwear was made up of light-colored felt and velours hats, many of them having medium wide brims and high dented crowns. They are soft and therefore supple and adaptable, with brims that may be turned up or down and crowns that may be dented to suit the wearer. These were soon followed by felt blocked shapes and draped hats of antelope and foulard felts in darker colors. Hats of moire, satin, ribbon, velvet and combinations of fabrics are popular items for fall wear.

Judging from these early arrivals stylists are making distinctly different types for the matron and the maid. Older women will not wear flapperish hats, but will be smartly crowned with supple, intricately draped and very chic millinery, while the flapper will wear simpler modes.

Distinctive Millinery.

A youthful baretta leads the group of hats chosen from current showings, and pictured here. It has drooping, satin-covered brim and soft crown of felt cloth, and bears a rhinestone ornament at the front. A wide brimmed tailored hat, with draped and tucked crown, is finished with a ribbon ornament and a still wider hat, of the picturesque type, bears a cluster of velvet fruit at the right side. Summer lingers in the heavier straws like ballibuntis and is represented in the modified poke shape, faced with satin and adorned with handsome feather ornaments. Finally a black and white model makes a late summer appeal with soft, floppy brim, faced with velvet, crown covered with applique embroidery, a collar of fancy braid and a sparkling ornament at the front.

Community Building

Village That "Lags" Loses Out in Race

Need for improving country villages in the United States to meet modern social and economic needs is emphasized in a nation-wide survey made by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Most villages, declare department officials, have "just grown up" with resultant defects in form and arrangement to provide social, esthetic and economic advantages for residents and near-by farm families. The need for well-planned villages is pointed out in the fact that some 20,000,000 people in the United States live in villages, and that more than 30,000,000 farm people use these centers for purposes of trade, education, religion and recreation.

Numerous instances are cited by the department where villages have been literally rebuilt to meet modern requirements. The village of Weston, Mass., for example, under the direction of the town improvement commission has in the past few years entirely reconstructed its business district to form a notable civic center. Old public buildings and shops have been removed, a disease-breeding swamp was filled in and grassed over to form a common, a beautiful new town hall was erected, public buildings were regrouped, and convenient approaches and roadways constructed.

The unfortunate results of undirected development in cities are being keenly appreciated, it is stated, and millions of dollars are now being spent to correct these conditions in an effort to make cities more approachable, traversable, convenient, orderly, and beautiful.

Home-Owning People Backbone of Nation

What this country wants is more home owners—people who can call a house a home, is the assertion of a writer in the Chicago Evening Post.

Where is the man, the great man in this country, that will rise out of the mob of material getters—where is the man who will come forward and build homes for the provident and see that these homes can be paid for on the partial payment plan, without interest, without taxes, without hindrance of any kind if necessary?

The steady, straightforward, saving and serving class are usually home owners. Let us help those who want to own their homes to own them.

Some day to own a home will be the hallmark of reliability. It is the duty and should be the privilege of every patriotic citizen, banker and business man to encourage humans to own their own homes—to do more than to encourage—to help.

Not all individuals that are interested in industry own their own homes, but nearly all humans that own their own homes hold permanent positions. Their self-interest is on the job.

Brick's Lasting Qualities

In a building it is not possible to have real beauty without strength. The eye cannot be thoroughly satisfied if in the mind lurks the consciousness that the architects creation is to be vanquished in the battle with time. Time is powerless to mar the beauty of or to sap the strength of brick. Generations may come and go, but the sturdy brick walls of the homestead stay on.

Brick may reach a venerable old age—it never reached the state of decrepitude. Brick comes from the bosom of Mother Earth, in the form of plastic clay; it is hardened by the most powerful agency known in the world—fire—and is proof against the further attacks of fire; it defies wind and rain; it is as enduring as earth itself.

Color Scheme Important

When we decide on a color scheme, we face a problem that seems to get larger the longer we look at it. It has so many phases and considerations, it is dependent on so many things, that it may be that the owner does well to make an arbitrary selection and to take a chance on results.

The safest and surest selections will be those that are expected; the colors that long experience and habit have associated with certain forms and outlines and masses. Being a conservative people, we hate to be startled; we do not like to do things that will attract attention and advertise criticism; unless we have an absolutely sure color judgment, we will be happiest when we are conventional.

Competition Worth While

Frequently a philanthropic and public-minded citizen of means will himself provide all the required prizes for such a campaign as a "home-beautiful competition."

Consider what such a competition will do for a town, even if conducted but for a single season; it will leave its impress on the community for years. But once staged and carried to a successful conclusion, it is more than likely the interest will prove so great that it will develop into a permanent annual feature of the community life, gaining momentum and increasing in size, as does a snowball rolling down hill.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Insist That Frogs Arrived in Deluge

The government meteorological office in Washington gave scant credence to those Danville residents who said that it rained frogs. Officials said there had been several similar reports previously, but none of them had been proved.

North Danville residents, on the other hand, pointed to millions of black frogs as large as a man's fingernail hopping about Bryant avenue. Small boys with cans and buckets collected them by the thousands. In some cases the frogs were shoveled from porches and walks. At six o'clock in the evening there were no frogs in sight. Following a tropical deluge at that hour, lasting a half hour, the streets and yards of that section of the city were thick with them. One theory was that the tiny frogs were brought out of hiding places by the heavy rain, but this was held unlikely by the absence of trees on the street.—Washington Post.

Cuticura Soap for the Complexion. Nothing better than Cuticura Soap daily and Ointment now and then as needed to make the complexion clear, scalp clean and hands soft and white. Add to this the fascinating, fragrant Cuticura Talcum, and you have the Cuticura Toilet Trio.—Advertisement.

Royalty Seeking Mates

While King Boris of Bulgaria is looking assiduously for a wife to grace his throne, his twenty-four-year-old sister, Eudoxia, is seeking a husband. Unlike Boris, she has no throne or royal estate to offer—only her royal lineage and her affections. She has no money in her own name. She lives modestly with her brother in Sofia, but, unlike him, finds life in a Balkan capital, without relatives or family kin, extremely irksome and lonely. Eudoxia is ready to marry a commoner, provided he possesses character, means and gentle breeding.

Probably Tootin' Her Own

The young college girl, whose firsthand knowledge of country life and all things pertaining thereto was rudimentary, visited a friend on the latter's farm.

Among the many things of interest to her was the cow and to her surprise she learned that the animal had horns. She stood watching the cow for a while, discussing with her friend this feature of the animal's physiology, and then turned away. The cow bawled.

"Oh, which one of her horns did she blow?" breathlessly demanded the college girl as she grasped her friend's arm.

Remembering the Sabbath

Secretary Thomas Todd of the American Congregational association said in a Boston address:

"If some people could have their way the Sabbath would only be observed as the old salt observed it.

"'I'd like to hire a boat,' a vacationist said to an old Gloucester salt one July Sunday. 'Any objections?'

"'Jumpin' Jonah, no!'

"'Well, I thought,' said the vacationist, 'today being Sunday—'

"'Holy mackerel!' said the old salt. 'So it is! I'd clean forgot. Of course, in that case, shipmate, I'll have to charge ye double rates.'"

Admonition

"Mother, Harold's been hitting my head with his slate."

Bobbed Seals' Hair

Some fur seals in Bering sea got their hair bobbed under a dictum issued by the United States bureau of fisheries. The seals on the Pribilof islands were shorn of the thick hair or mane in order to note the increase, if any, next year. Only a certain number of three-year-old males were subjected to the trim. Regulation livery barn clippers were used to shear the seals.

Movie of an awful night.

NO longer need your nights or days be ruined by mosquitoes. Flit destroys these pests.

Flit spray clears your home in a few minutes of disease-bearing flies and mosquitoes. It is clean, safe and easy to use.

Kills All Household Insects

Flit spray also destroys bed bugs, roaches and ants. It searches out the cracks and crevices where they hide and breed and destroys insects and their eggs. Spray Flit on your garments. Flit kills moths and their larvae which eat holes.

Flit is the result of exhaustive research by expert entomologists and chemists. It is harmless to mankind. Flit has replaced the old methods because it kills all the insects—and does it quickly.

JOHNSON BILL WILL AID MANY VETERANS

Thirty-five thousand disabled men and women, veterans of the World war and their dependents, are expected to benefit directly to the extent of $20,000,000 this year, $12,000,000 next year and $10,000,000 annually thereafter from the Johnson bill passed, with the support of the American Legion, at the recent session of congress.

Under the new legislation, a flat payment of $50 a month for life will be made to veterans with arrested cases of tuberculosis.

Veterans with disabilities resulting from war service are allowed to reinstate war risk insurance through paying the unpaid back premiums against the face value of the reinstated policy where they are not able financially to pay these premiums.

Time for filing claims for war disabilities and for submitting proof that disability resulted from the war is extended to July 2, 1927.

Replacement training for disabled veterans is extended to January 1 next, in order to permit them to complete their vocational rehabilitation courses.

A two-year extension is given for educational training in schools and colleges where the trainees are now in process of training.

Insurance of men who died after discharge may be revived by the discharge bonus of $60 if the men had not received that bonus.

American women who were disabled through serving in base hospitals overseas are made eligible for compensation.

Director Frank T. Hines, of the United States veterans' bureau, has expressed the opinion that bureau regulations can be extended under the new bill to grant service connection for chronic constitutional diseases, such as disorders of heart, kidneys and digestive system, where it is not possible to trace a definite medical history of such connection with the service.

This bill is one in the series of important measures which have been supported by the American Legion for the care and cure and relief of disabled veterans and their dependents. Most of the provisions contained in the law were based on recommendations made by the Legion's national convention at Omaha in 1925.

NO 'BASKET PATIENTS'

THERE are no "basket patients" in any of the government hospitals.

"Basket patients" is the term used in speaking of men who are supposed to have lost in the World war service both arms and both legs, thus being made so helpless that no locomotion is possible.

Many rumors have been in circulation concerning such cases, according to the national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion.

Investigation by the Legion and by the United States veterans' bureau, however, shows that there is no record in either the American or the British armies of any men who lost both arms and both legs.

There are several cases of American soldiers who lost both eyes and both arms or both hands.

One Year to Reinstate and Convert Insurance

World war veterans have until July 2, 1927, to reinstate and convert their five-time insurance. The time was extended one year by legislation enacted at the 1926 winter session of congress in response to representations made by the American Legion. The five-year level-premium policy has also been provided to which veterans may convert from the yearly renewable war risk term insurance. The five-year policy may then at any later time be converted into any one of several permanent forms of government insurance at a higher premium cost.

No further extension of time beyond July 2, 1927, may be made for men who on that date are mentally incompetent or men who have disappeared must have their insurance converted.

Endorse Memorial in Honor of Mathewson

Endorsement to a project for a national memorial at Saranac Lake, New York, in honor of the late Christy Mathewson, baseball's best loved hero, has been given by the national executive committee of the American Legion. The project contemplates the establishment of a fund to be used to aid the sick and needy who come to Saranac Lake for treatment from all the states in the Union and the erection of a Mathewson Memorial clubhouse for the use of World war veterans with the aim of improving their physical, intellectual, ethical and social natures

NEW MEXICAN PLOT IS BARED BY U. S.

Papers Seized by Officials Reveal Extensive Revolutionary Scheme.

San Diego, Calif. — Information showing a widespread revolutionary plot against the Mexican government has been uncovered by United States officials, Capt A. A Hopkins, Department of Justice agent, announced.

The information indicates that the insurrecto band, led by Gen. Enrique Estrada, former Mexican secretary of war, constituted only a small part of the plan.

Hopkins said that a partial study of the papers seized when Estrada and his band were arrested near here a few days ago shows an extensive revolutionary plot.

El Paso, Texas.—Conflicting announcements by Mexican officials failed to shed light on reports that Mexican troops had been ordered to a border point opposite Columbus, N. M., following the discovery of an alleged plot by a band of heavily armed men to cross into Mexico in a revolutionary movement.

Manuel M Marcarenas, collector of customs at Juarez, said no troops had been ordered from Chihuahua City to Palomas, the border point. Gen. Roman Lopez, commandant at Juarez, however, insisted that troops have been sent to Palomas.

Mexico City —Considerable hope has been aroused that the religious question may be solved, as President Calles has suggested in a communication to the Catholic episcopate, by bringing the matter before congress with a view to securing a constitutional amendment.

If the episcopate offered amendments to the constitution, the President declares he would not use his power to have them withdrawn from congress.

In a statement replying to the letter of President Calles, the episcopate neither accepts nor rejects the President's proposal that it seek congressional or Supreme court relief.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Federal Judge Paul J. McCormick signed a warrant of detention authorizing official seizure of arms taken from Gen. Enrique Estrada's band rounded up near the border.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

President Coolidge has appointed Mrs. Fred W Upham, widow of the former treasurer of the national Republican committee, a member of the American commission to the international exposition at Seville, Spain, next April.

Plans to raise $5,000,000 by donation are announced here by the National Sanatorium for Tuberculous Children, recently incorporated in the District of Columbia.

In the will of Robert Todd Lincoln, filed for probate, certain manuscripts and papers of his father, Abraham Lincoln, deposited with the library of congress are given to the government.

A delegation of government and state officials and a committee from American industries will represent the United States at the fifth international road congress to be held in Milan, Italy, September 6.

The navy placed an order for a 200,000 cubic foot, metal clad, dirigible with the Aircraft Development company at Detroit, the machine to be finished in 400 days. The cost of the ship, as fixed by congress, will be $300,000.

Hall Kin Held Without Bail in Double Murder

Somerville, N. J.—Henry de La Bruyere Carpender and "Willie" Stevens were held without bail awaiting action of the grand jury on the charge that they murdered Rev. Dr. Edward W. Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills four years ago on the Phillips farm near New Brunswick, N. J.

Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, widow of the slain clergyman, is at liberty in $15,000 bail. She also is awaiting the action of a Somerset county grand jury on a charge of murder. Fast on the heels of the state's decision to seek first degree indictments against Carpender and Stevens came the announcement that an effort would be made to revoke Mrs. Hall's bail.

ROAD BUILDING

PAVED HIGHWAYS ARE JOY FOREVER

Statistics recently compiled by the state highway commission show that the maintenance cost of unpaved highways has increased 65 per cent in the last two years, and if any further argument were necessary for paved highways that should cinch the question, says the Hibbing (Minn.) Daily News.

There will be an increase shown for all of the dirt roads of the state at the end of the present year, for the simple reason that traffic will be materially increased and the greater the traffic the greater will be the highway upkeep. It looks like a waste of good money to go on building dirt roads and trying to keep them in anything like a decent condition for travel.

The initial cost of the pavement is considerably over that of the dirt road, but that cost is practically the end of it—the upkeep of the paved highway is merely an incidental, while the upkeep of the dirt road is steady, ever increasing, and there is but an indifferent highway at best.

Take, for instance, some of the highways about Hibbing. Enough money has been spent on them to keep them in condition to have paved them twice over, and still they are far from being the kind of highway anybody wants—and they never will be anything else until the expensive policy has been done away with.

The paved highway is a thing of beauty and a joy forever to the traveler—it is always there, in the ideal highway condition, and while it evidently brings about a great saving to the taxpayer, it spreads industry and prosperity and gladdens the hearts of every one who has any use whatever for a highway, and most everyone, now-a-days has that.

It is to be hoped that our highway builders will grasp this idea of the paved road being the only kind of highway that will fill the need, and then stop wasting public money on something that cannot be done.

Hard Street Pavements Gaining in Popularity

More than 3,000 cities and towns in the United States have built hard street pavements. The general adoption of this type of pavement came with the automobile, operating on pneumatic tires. Before that, communities that sought paved streets, chose materials that were resilient and quiet when horse-drawn, steel-tired vehicles drove over them.

But with the general adoption of the motor vehicle and heavy pneumatic-tired trucks, cities realized that a hard, true surfaced pavement was a necessity and concrete became a pronounced favorite. Before 1909 there were only about thirty miles of concrete pavement in use in the whole country. Today there is 10,000 miles or more, and hundreds and hundreds more miles are being built this year. More than 1,000 cities laid concrete streets last year, and this year will undoubtedly prove better than last.

The first hard-surface pavement in the United States was built in 1892 in Bellefontaine, Ohio. This was a narrow strip along the hitching rack on one side of the court house square. The following year the rest of the street was paved as well as the three other streets around the court house. All of this pavement is giving perfect service today, although more than thirty years old.

Newly Developed Lights Urged for Highway Use

Ohio may become the testing field for a system of super-highways, floodlighted from one end of the state to another, that may eventually be adopted throughout the country.

F. G. Harrison, president of the Good Roads Federation of Ohio, has already advanced this idea before a highway conference at Columbus. And he has the backing of specialists on lighting, as well as highway engineers.

Harrison's plan, if adopted, would entail the construction of a double-decked highway system where heavy interstate traffic demanded it, and of lighting these and all other roads in the state with a series of lights newly developed at the Nela research laboratories in Cleveland. These lights flood the road more effectively, it is said, than any boulevard lights in use today. Their principle is already in use on the large air-mail fields, where the landing grounds are flooded by the rays from one powerful lamp.

At the same time, says Harrison, the cost of installation of this system would be comparatively cheap.

"I am told that an added cost of $700 to $1,000 a mile would cover the expense," he says.

Names Historic Highway

Virginia's 500-mile motor thoroughfare has been designated by the Virginia legislature as "The Virginia Historic Highway." The route runs from Washington, D. C., through the Shenandoah Valley to Roanoke, to Charlottesville and Richmond or via Lynchburg and Richmond, and from the capital to the seaboard by two routes, and also via Fredericksburg and Alexandria to Washington. Traffic on this new highway is increasing daily.

e are glad for the interest the are showing in a college car- We wish everyone in the class could be spared and furnished the means to attend college this next year. Postponing or delaying attendance will mean harder work for them should they decide to enroll later and the longer the delay the less likely are they to be interested in furher study. The professions, of course, are becoming somewhat crowded but will never be so crowded as men laboring with less preparation.

Our girls of last year's class will no doubt be heard from later. We understand Beatrice Busch is at work fn Chicago and Elvira Stille is engaged or soon to be in teaching.

Milo Patet, we are told, is in Chicago with a view to a career as an artist. He has shown considerable ability as a crayon artist and should pursue the work that interests him most

Work on the base ball diamond has begun. It will be a somewhat difficult task to build a team without th husky seniors of last year but some new material is appearing and we hope to make a creditable showing in spite of the loss.

We extend a warm welcome to parents and friends of the school at any time If at any time there are disappointments we wish to learn of them and hope to make the Klemme schools as good as any in Hancock County. Visit us any time and get acquainted with our new teachers and better acquainted with the old ones.

Let's all pull for Klemme and her Public Schools.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Our morning services will be regular on the coming Sunday. We are looking for increased attendance. A glad welcome awaits strangers and visitors The churches of Klemme are here to help all that are willing to be helped.

Our Sunday school has a place for all that are not elsewhere connected with a Sunday school Come and see what an interesting, wide-a-wake group these Sunday school folk are.

Beginning next Sunday our evening services begin one-half hour earlier or at 7:30. This applies to the midweek services as well.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of Liberty held their last meeting for the present conference year on Tuesday afternoonThey look back over one of the most prosperous years in the history of the society.

The Klemme W. F. M S. holds its last meeting on Thursday of this week at the home of the president, Mrs C. A. Arnold. This is the time for election of officers and a full attendance is desired.

The pastor and pastor's wife attend the Algona District Conference on Wednesday. An ineresting program is awaiting those who attend.

The opening of the public schools brings new interest and activity to the community. We welcome our force of teachers to our town and to enjoy church life with us.

Choir practice on Friday evening at the church. All interested will attend.

The official Board meets on Thursday evening in the lecture room of the church The presence of all officials is desired.

KLEMME REFORMED CHURCH

Rev. Walter Grosshuesch, representing our Publishing House at Cleveland, Ohio, will be with us on next Sunday, Sept. 5th, and conduct both services.

11:00 A. M. Sunday school.
8:00 P. M. English service.

Calvin Grosshuesch, Pastor.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS NOTES

The Ta-Ta-Pochon Camp had a real picnic last Thursday when they hiked out to the woods east of Goodell. They left Klemme about 9:15 A. M. and returned after supper.

They had baked beans, bacon, eggs, sandwiches, cookies and coffee for dinner, and for supper the girls tried baked potatoes. Of course they were "good,' that is, what was left of them. The girls are learning real fast how to bake on a camp fire.

The hike home was enjoyed more than the one in the morning because the sun had set and 't was much cooler walking The girls walked about 16 miles that day, but agree that thy will go again another day.

Cartersville To Play Here Next Sunday

Next Sunday's game, possibly the last ball game on the home diamond this season, will be between Cartersville and Klemme The last game between Klemme and Cartersville was a real battle, 5 to 4, in their favor which was played on their field August 1st Since then Klemme has put in a lot of hard practice and have won some hard games. The game Sunday should give the fans a real thrill.

Future Games Scheduled

The games which have been booked for the next few weeks are as follows:

Sunday, Sept 5—Cartersville here
Wed. Sept. 8—Coulter at Meservey.
Sunday, Sept 12—Corwith. there.

The boys would like to have a big crowd of boosters go with them to Meservey, Wed, Sept 8th, the day Meservey celebrates their annual Watermellon Day.

Team Has New Uniforms

The Klemme ball team will step out of the band box with brand new uniforms next Sunday, Sept. 5th. Come out and see how nifty they look and watch them play some good fast ball.

Tractors constitute about one-third of our total agricultural implements exports. U. S. made tractors are steadily gaining in favor.

OBITUARY—JOHN SANDERFELD

Mr. John Christoph Sanderfeld was born in Aldenburg, Germany, January 7, 1858. There he received Christian Baptism administered according to the rites of the Lutheran church.

When he was but four years of age his parents took ship for America, arriving here in June 1862. They located at Homestead, Iowa County, Iowa, where Mr. Sanderfeld grew up to manhood. During this period he was confirmed in the Homestead Lutheran church and became a lifelong member of said church.

On June 28, 1887, deceased was united in marriage to Miss Wilhelmina Schultz. His companion of these many years survives him.

To this union three sons and five daughtrs were born. Of the sons two died in infancy The surviving son is Carl who lives at the old Sanderfeld farm east of Klemme. The daughters all survive and are: Mrs. Wm. Jurgemeyer, Mrs. Herbert Dickhus, Mrs. Henry Linne, Mrs. John Swalve and Miss Laura, all of Klemme vicinity.

Mr Sanderfeld is likewise survived by 13 grandchildren and two brothers. The latter live at Homestead, Iowa.

The family moved from Homestead to Benton County in this state in 1903 and lived there for eleven years, moving o Hancock County in 1914, locating on the farm that they purchased. About four years ago they moved to Klemme.

His health began to fail about two years ago. However, his condition became more serious since spring, bringing much suffering and discomfort during the summer months.

Death came to call him to the great beyond on the morning of August 26.

Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 29 on the lawn at the family home in South Klemme conducted by Rev. A. W. Gauger of the Methodist Church. Interment was made in the Klemme cemetery.

The services were largely attended by friends and neighbors. Two nephews from Homestead, Iowa, came to attend the funeral.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank all the friends and neighbors for their help and many acts of kindness and for the beautiful flowers sent during ur recent bereavement.

Mrs. John Sanderfeld
And Children.

BEN GRIEMANN IS KING OF THE PLUM GROWERS

Has Fourteen Varieties; Some Large As Peaches

Ye Editor and family drove out o the Ben Greimann farm northwest of Klemme last Friday evening to see Ben's plum orchard.

It is a bit late in the season to get the best idea of what Ben can produce as most of his plum trees are through bearing fruit for the season. However, he had quite a number of trees that were still bearing heavily.

The trees Ben has are only two years old but they were loaded so heavy with fruit he had to shake about half the plums off to keep the trees from breaking down.

Ben has about every variety and flavor plum you desire. Plums that taste like cherries, others that have a cantaloupe flavor, others with a peach-like flavor, and he has some that are nearly as large as a medium size peach.

Mr. Greimann also has quite a vineyard started where he has some eight varieties of grapes growing.

He has also set out a large number of apple trees and has made plans to set out more plum trees.

Ben uses entirely northern grown stock that has been proven and tested out by the University of Minnesota. He does not believe in buying from nursery salesman who run all over the country, as too often he says you do not get what you pay for and you are disappointed.

HARRY GIBBS NEW MEMBER OF KLEMME SCHOOL BOARD

Was Elected To Fill Vacancy Caused By W. F. Lau Moving Away

At their meeting Tuesday evening, the Klemme school board voted unanimously for Harry Gibbs to fill the vacancy on the board, caused by the former member, W. F. Lau, moving to Minneapolis.

Mr. Gibbs will no doubt make an excellent man on the board and everyone seems well pleased with the choice of the board.

The Klemme school has a large number of pupils from the country and the board therefore thought it was a good opportunity to have the country patrons represented by a man on the school board. We believe this arrangement should prove ideal in every way.

CLEAR LAKE MAN WILL OPEN MOVIE SHOW HERE SATURDAY NIGHT

Is Experienced In The Show Business And Will Show Best Moving Pictures

Mr. T. C. Thompson, of Clear Lake has leased the Idle Hour theatre building and equipment in this city and expects to open the first show here Saurday night.

Mr. Thompson has been in the show business during the past 25 years and recently was in the show business at Clear Lake. Prior to that time he was in the show business in Albert Lea. Besides the show house here he also has a movie at Thornton which he recently purchased.

Mr. Thompson called at the Times Office Monday and told us he was going to put on good shows here of new up-to-date pictures.

Let's all turn out Saturday night and give him a "full house."

The Panama Canal collected $22,931,762 in tolls during its fiscal year just ended June 30.

THE STORMING OF THE GATES

This picture is typical of many such scenes enacted daily at the main gates of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia where the 150th annlversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence is being celebrated. The "shot" was made from outside the gates and shows the long sweep of historic Broad street, the main artery of the exposition. To the left can be seen one of the capitols of the Palace of Liberal Arts and Manufactures which covers nearly eight acres of grounds and which houses some of the finest exhibits ever seen. The Exposition will continue until December 1.

LARGE APPLE CROP GOING TO CAUSES KLEMME MAN TO INVESTIGATE VINEGAR MAKING POSSIBILITY

Wellemeyer Says Vinegar Factories Cannot Use Iowa Harvest Apples For Vinegar

Arthur Wellemeyer, local business man has been trying to solve the big problem of putting to use the onormous apple crop going to waste in this community. He has gone to some time and trouble to learn a way to utilize this waste. The following article was written by Mr. Wellemeyer and will, no doubt, be of interest to the farmer readers of The Times:

OUR APPLE CROP

Every farm has several apple trees and every tree is loaded with fruit, and the quality is very good. The apple crop this year is probably the largest we have ever produced in and around Klemme.

Our customers have been asking us day after day, "What shall we do with our apples?" "It's a shame to let them go to waste." We wrote to the Extension Deparment at Ames and asked what to do with the Iowa apple crop, and to tell us if they knew, how to make vinegar out of such apples as we raise here: Harvest Apples, Dutchess, Whitney, etc, but Ames did not answer.

We also wrote to three vinegar factories asking them if they would like to buy our Iowa apples for making vinegar. They all answered back promptly and their answers were very much alike and were about as follows:

The vinegar factories never use harvest apples for vinegar purposes owing to the fact that sugar content in early apples is very low and it does not pay to generate for vinegar such apples. They aim to use late fall varieties of apples such as Baldwins, Jonathans, Winesap, etc. In these apples the percentage of sugar is very high and they make the best vinegar.

From their replies, it was evident that most of the cider vinegar is made from apples grown in New York state, Northern Arkansas, extreme southern Missouri, and also some from southern Illinois.

Several years ago the Illinois Horticultural Society became interested in the apple crop and large quantities of early apples were shipped to a vinegar factory at Freeport, Ill., but these apples were not satisfactory for vinegar purposes and the experiment did not pay either the grower or the factory.

Another fact the vinegar houses make quite clear in their lettres is that there always seems to be plenty of such apples available as they wish to use for vinegar, then why bother with harvest apples.

Another serious objection to buying apples from the farmers around Klemme is that our farmers do not have large orchards, mostly several trees here and several trees there.

And suppose we did want to ship out a few car loads during harvest and threshing, it would hardly pay the farmer to neglect his small grain crop to fuss with a few loads of apples.

The only suggestion that we an make at this time would be to make cider for your own use, also experiment in making vinegar and those of you who have tried making vinegar heretofore might tell the others through The Times, about your experiences. We may discover a way of making good vinegar out of Klemme apples, and if the sugar content is too low, maybe we could add sugar.

ARTHUR WELLEMEYER.

Building Roads With Dynamite

It required 6,700 pounds of dynamito to dislodge a huge lime stone bluff near Dubuque in furtherance of the building of a new highway. It is estimated that the blast removed 36,000 cubic yards of stone at a cost of $3,000. The explosion was heard for miles. The dynamite was exploded by electricity. It produced the most stupendous blast ever featured in the state.

Community Building

Home Owner Leader in Community Life

How the ownership of a home has become the best way known to obtain a full enjoyment of the many comforts and conveniences offered by modern civilization, was discussed recently at a meeting of real estate men at Detroit. Among opinions expressed was the following:

"Both urban and suburban life offers finer attractions than in olden times. Cities are ceaselessly spreading out and absorbing adjacent districts, giving city life and city conveniences to ever-widening areas. The services and sanitary benefits modern communities provide to home owners are vastly more than in former periods. The many devices now incorporated in the construction of homes, such as heat and electric refrigeration, insure greater comforts.

"Yet, even long before the home was much more than a primitive shelter, land had acquired such a value as to bring about the long era of its control by the rich and noble. Long before America instituted its liberal methods of functioning, ownership of laud gave the right to vote and was the sign of the freeman.

"Only the home-owner can today feel himself a true part of the progress of his locality because, in all forms of social advancement, community life always has been the leader."

House Not Real Home Without Its Setting

Those who include a bit of the outdoors in their premises come closest to making their homes ideal. Too many builders ignore this feature of the home, erecting great, expensive houses on small lots which afford no possibility of proper treatment.

Every house should have grounds surrounding it, and they should correspond in extent to the size of the house, for the grounds are the setting of the house. Often a new house has a bare, forbidding appearance when the workmen left it complete and perfect in every detail, but a lawn and a few well-chosen and properly placed trees and shrubs change the entire effect and give the place an attractive and inviting aspect.

The setting must be thought of constantly. It must be in mind when choosing the lot, planning the house and in deciding what part of the lot the house will be on. A fine old tree and wild bush are valuable assets. They should be preserved and they add beauty and comfort to the house.

Duties of Civic Bodies

Through our civic bodies and local governments we should assure protection for residential districts from wanton intrusion by means of sane, comprehensive city planning and good zoning ordinances, playgrounds within easy walking distance of children in closely built districts, parks for breathing spaces, safety on the streets, and effective public health measures. Well-drawn and enforced housing laws requiring light, air, privacy, and sanitary facilities can do much to prevent the growth of slums.

High standards of business dealing among those who build and sell houses, and adequate, reasonable financing for home seekers, also help to advance home ownership. The services of public utilities may be extended over a great number of homes by sound policies worked out in friendly co-operation with local officials.—Herbert Hoover.

City and Town "Homes"

He who feels that nature has included him "in her program," must also feel that he is part—insignificant it may be—of the cosmic process. Stability and "rootedness" in a life clothe it with a dignity that it can hardly have without those qualities. The old Antaeus myth is everlastingly true. The dwellers in great cities seem for the most part to be content, and yet many of them must be conscious of missing something, though they may not know what it is, which is perhaps just as well. There are, of course, homes, and real ones, in the cities, even in the big ones. But conditions certainly are not favorable to their creation and maintenance.

Watch for Deterioration

The man who raises an awful "howl" if he thinks he is being "done" out of a little money, often does not realize that necessary repairs on his property may soon cause him really big losses. There is only one way to eliminate these expensive repairs, and that is to keep your property protected through painting before repairs are necessary. Property should be regularly inspected. Paint should be applied to all places that appear worn and not delayed until the appearance of rust or decay when repairs become unavoidable.

Keep Up Property

Keep your property well painted and you will have mighty few repair bills. Paint is far cheaper than new wood or metal replacements. Watch the less obvious vulnerable points, such as roof, eaves and down spouts, porch columns, etc. The trim is usually the first to suffer.—Exchange.

OSTRICH BOA HAS COME BACK; YOUTHFUL DESIGNS IN PAJAMAS

AN OLD friend has returned. Yes, 'tis true, the ostrich boa in the full measure of its former glory is with us again. Paris decrees it as the outstanding idea among accessory fashions. So in comes the ostrich boa, very long or very short, not only in dressy versions but in street types as well.

Some of the smartest ostrich boas or ruffs assume a flat collar shape attached beneath to a grosgrain ribbon. Then there is the Pierrot collarette which extends just around the neck, in as saucy and perky a manner as one could wish.

A fascinating play of color adds beauty upon beauty to the new ostrich star of fashion. Which all goes to show that ostrich accessories are a foremost thought of the present hour.

Ask any of the bobbed hair sorority, and their name is legion, to express their opinion on the subject and invariably in a burst of enthusiasm they will expatiate in a veritable torrent of words upon the comfort and practicability of the fashion. Even so in regard to the vogue of wearing pajamas. Womankind has been converted to the idea from a common-sense standpoint. More and more are neckpieces. Tones and tints are combined, blended and contrasted with consummate artistry, which, of course, add a new charm and interest to the vogue. Imagine, if you please, a navy blue ruff sprinkled with chanel red ostrich. The ostrich neckpiece in this picture is of just that wondrous coloring, although you would never guess it to look at this newspaper print. Brown and yellow present themselves in amber effect, greens turning to lighter shades, chinchilla mottlings, exquisite pastel tints for evening wear—these but suggest the multitudinous delectable colorings which mark the coming season's ostrich fantasies.

Not only color, but novelty of design holds attention throughout the ostrich accessories. One type of flat boa has a small plume down the back in pointed effect, many of the longer sort are of willowed plumage, others show willowed ostrich with marabou united. Some elaborate modes have long ostrich tassels, and so on and so on is the theme being exploited.

Nor is the vogue limited to neckpieces, for ostrich trimming is furthermore making its appearance on our frocks and on our wraps. Then there is the ostrich fan. Together with the boa it makes its entrance on the pajamas establishing themselves as essential in the realm of sensible as well as esthetic lingerie modes.

For the making of practical, easy-to-launder pajamas, there is no fabric comparable to the humble, yet adorably colored, crinkly seersucker. However, if one's fancy turns to silk, what more charming than crepe de chine or wash satin made after the manner of the model portrayed? Perhaps it is the frivolous lace ribbon bows, or possibly the cunning pockets, but at any rate this particular model expresses youth in its every detail and that is a declared requisite feature for all pajama creations this season.

There are times when the feminine heart longs for lace and ribbons aplenty. The new lingerie displayed for the coming months is especially satisfying to those who delight in the ornate. Lacy, with much handwork is fashion's ultimatum for the daintier boudoir pajama sets, with no limit to elegance and novelty when it comes to the more formal types.

Color contrast is an interesting theme such as flesh-tinted silk pajamas, either crepe or crepe-back satin, trimmed with nile green, or blue with pink or orchid with maize.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1928, Western Newspaper Union.)

How can anyone start the day properly if he wakes in a room where the paint and wallpaper are constantly making faces at the furniture?

HELPFUL HINTS

Sliced cold roast beef makes a most tasty dish when combined with potatoes, onions and tomato. Put a layer of thinly sliced uncooked potato into the bottom of a baking dish, cover with a thin layer of thinly sliced onion, then add a layer of thinly sliced beef, cover with tomato and bake until the potatoes are well done. If gravy is at hand it adds to the flavor, covering the meat with the gravy. Serve with a spoonful or two of cooked peas over the top of the dish.

It is hard to teach the average housewife to buy the coarser cuts of meat. They have more flavor and as much nourishment as the steaks and tender portions. Meat that has been used for soup has lost its flavor, but the food value is still there and by adding various seasonings a most palatable dish will result. The meat which has the most flavor is found in the parts of body most active, like the legs and neck. These are the cheaper cuts.

For the second meal cut the meat into bits. Fry onion in a little butter, remove the onion when light brown and add the meat. Add stock or water and cook five minutes, season with two teaspoonfuls of curry powder, thicken the gravy with flour and add a tablespoonful of vinegar. Serve with a border of rice.

Milk at fifteen cents a quart is cheaper food than meat and eggs, while in small towns where milk is nine and ten cents a quart it is cheap food.

Most housewives have a certain amount to spend for food. If the amount is small, all the more need that it be spent wisely, so that her family gets to the limit every cent invested for the most satisfying and nourishing food. The haphazard buying which is common in many households, the last minute order, means either feast or famine. Marketing in person when possible is the best way; it teaches self-control, by being able to pass by the food too expensive for the purse and often one finds real bargains in foods that the family enjoys.

A thrifty housewife may have two good meals from a three-pound knuckle of veal. Cover the meat with cold water and cook at a low temperature until the meat is tender, but not tasteless. Remove the meat from the broth, add two tablespoonfuls of rice that is well cooked, a grating of lemon rind, or a bit of nutmeg or mace, a pint of milk and serve at once.

What to Eat.

There are few people who feel that a meal is satisfying which is not finished with some kind of dessert.

Junket is a most delicious dessert for a hot day; it may be varied by the use of fruit pulp and whipped cream as a garnish. Add a tablet of junket to a quart of lukewarm milk, add sugar to sweeten and stir until the tablet is well dissolved. Crush the tablet and let stand in a tablespoonful of water to dissolve before adding to the milk. Let the mixture stand in sherbet cups in a warm room until the junket is set. Mash bananas and cover each sherbet glass with the pulp and top with whipped cream when ready to serve. Peaches or other fruit may be used.

Peach Sherbet.—Put a pound of sugar and a quart of water on to boil for twenty minutes. Let cool, then add one and one-half cupfuls of peach pulp, the strained juice of an orange and the juice of half a lemon. Freeze.

Mint Sherbet.—Soak half a cupful of chopped mint leaves in the juice of two lemons half an hour. Boil two cupfuls of sugar and a cupful of water five minutes, then pour over the other ingredients. When cold strain into a freezer, add the grated rind of the fruit and a well-beaten egg white, with a cupful of stiffly beaten cream. Serve with lamb roast or as a dessert.

Date Crackers.—Put a pound of washed and pitted dates with a cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of water into a saucepan and cook until smooth. Cool. Cream a cupful of shortening, add a cupful of brown sugar, two and one-half cupfuls of rolled oats which have been parched to a light brown, and two cupfuls of flour; stir until well-blended, add a teaspoonful of soda in half a cupful of hot water and stir into the mixture. Roll out, cut and place a spoonful of fruit on a cooky, cover with another, then bake.

Larded Beef Tenderloin.—Cut the salt pork for larding from the firm fat portion nearest the rind. Cut the lardons into strips one-fourth inch wide and as long as the slices will permit. Chill the lardons in iced water before threading and insert them one-fourth inch below the surface, draw through, tying in a loose knot.

HOW MANY WOMEN GET UP SINGING

Two Women Find Health Essential to Happiness

MRS. BELLE THOMPSON
ROUTE 2, ROSSVILLE, GEORGIA

Springtime streamed in through the open windows. The green fields of Georgia were basking in the sunshine. Somewhere a bird was trilling. It was a day to be happy.

But the pale woman at the table sighed and pushed away her plate. Nothing tasted right. She couldn't eat much. She couldn't sleep well, either. She was so weak, it was hard to do her work. When the baby cried, she wanted to cry, too.

She had not been well for four years. Her husband watched her with a man's helpless expression. But his mother knew a remedy.

"My mother-in-law," says Mrs. Belle Thompson, Route 2, Rossville, Ga., "told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I took six bottles of the Vegetable Compound. I could sleep and would get up in the morning singing and feeling fine. I am the mother of three children, and always after the baby came I had to take treatments, but I can truly say that this last time I have only used the Sanative Wash. It does more good than the treatments. It keeps me on my feet to care for my children and I do most of my work. I feel it my duty to let you know how both of the medicines have helped me."

Another Happy Woman

Decatur, Illinois.—"I took your medicine for weakness. I would sometimes have to hold myself up with my hands. I was this way for five years, off and on. I read in the newspapers where Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped a lot of women, and I thought I would take it. I am now getting better so fast that every month I can feel a difference. My work now is cooking. If you like, you may use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to help you boost your medicine."—Mrs. Irene Reed, 635 Greenwood Ave., Decatur, Ill

This dependable medicine has been in use for over fifty years.

GOOD ROADS

IMMENSE AMOUNT FOR RURAL ROADS

Reliable estimates indicate that the United States will spend more than $1,000,000,000 on the building and maintenance of rural roads during the year 1926.

This means the disappearance of the "rube" from American life. You may be able to find him on the stage, in vaudeville, in the movies, or between the pages of alleged humorous magazines, but not on the farms, says the Minneapolis Daily Star.

The "rube" is a product of isolation and the spending of $1,000,000,000 for the rural roads means an end of isolation. The American farmer from now on lives on a main traveled highway.

When the day's work is done he is only a few miles away from entertainment. If he prefers to sit by his own fireside he may read his daily paper delivered by the rural routes, get his daily market reports over the radio, or listen to the best music and lectures that America can offer anyone.

His children are seldom more than 20 minutes away from an excellent high school. There they are being trained in all the social graces, taught the fundamental principles of culture and living a life as broad and beautiful as that enjoyed by any of the city children. On commencement day it is impossible to distinguish between the youths from the farms and those from the city.

The co-operative marketing associations have taught him the art of working with other men. The good road makes it possible for him to attend frequent meetings, participate in the discussions and become a part of the busy world of thinking and action.

Rural roads put him in easy touch with distant markets. If his local merchant cannot supply him with the goods he wants, a couple of hours' drive will bring him to a city of 20,000 or more where he can buy anything he wants.

The modern farmer is not easily imposed upon. He is a poor customer for gold-brick merchants. Bankers' figures show that the average city dweller is much the easier victim of the con man.

Improved rural roads mean consolidated schools, less loss in crops, advantageous marketing. The hard-surfaced road has done much to give the American farmer his opportunity as a business man.

It is true that the rural church has had hard sledding, but the farmer can reach the village or city church with greater ease over good roads than he could get to the rural church a few years ago through the mud.

Good roads make good citizens. The election booth is seldom more than five minutes away from the kitchen door, and the farmer is voting, and rapidly learning his political lessons.

One billion of dollars spent for rural roads means that the American farmer is now living as close to the world as the city dweller. He no longer lives alone, astride his plow. He is on a highway where "the race of men go by."

Center-Road Hog Menace to Traffic on Highways

One of the greatest menaces to traffic on the streets, the boulevards and even on the country highways is the slow driver cruising down the center of the thoroughfare. That this is the case is attested by hundreds of letters to the American Automobile association.

"The rules of the road" require all slow-moving traffic—whether passenger automobile, truck or bus—to keep to the right near the curb. This rule is violated every day, and all the time. Everywhere may be found the slow traveler, creeping down the middle of the driveway, blocking traffic and actually endangering the lives of others.

"Can't you do anything about the man who has the 'middle of the road complex?'" is the complaint of so many letters reaching us that it looks as if the road hog will never learn.

Good Time for Action

The present generation has a right to expect the building of improved highways—which in the last analysis are the most economical. It requires no great amount of argument to prove that a hard-surfaced highway will not cost as much to maintain as a graveled road does. There is considerable difference in the expense, and no good reason why the auto owner should not have the benefit of the saving that paved highways are certain to bring about. It is the time for action.—Mankato (Minn.) Free Press.

Good Roads Facts

Kansas will have 8,640 miles of paved highways in 1940, according to Walter Van Buck, state highway engineer.

FISHER DESIGN SETS THE PACE

The pace set by Fisher—and exemplified in the beautiful new General Motors cars now commanding public attention—is the guide for the entire motor industry.

Fisher's vast experience, Fisher inventiveness and Fisher's unapproached facilities devise and perfect the beauties, comforts and conveniences which attract you to the leading new cars in all price classes—Cadillac, Buick, Chevrolet, Oakland, Oldsmobile and Pontiac.

For instance, Fisher achieves a new degree of safety—and nothing less than a Body by Fisher can approach it even after seasons of striving.

Fisher leads the way in luxurious fitments and decorations—and all the industry follows.

Fisher creates new standards of beauty in line and finish—and those standards are the measure of value for all of the world's cars.

It is easy to see, therefore, why the foremost of the new cars in all price classes carry the emblem—Body by Fisher.

And easy to understand why buyers the world over proclaim as the hallmark of quality that same magic symbol—Body by Fisher.

FLIES breed in filth, feed on filth and bring filth into your home.

Flit spray clears your home in a few minutes of disease-bearing flies and mosquitoes. It is clean, safe and easy to use.

Kills All Household Insects

Flit spray also destroys bed bugs, roaches and ants. It searches out the cracks and crevices where they hide and breed, and destroys insects and their eggs. Spray Flit on your garments. Flit kills moths and their larvae which eat holes. Extensive tests showed that Flit spray did not stain the most delicate fabrics.

Flit is the result of exhaustive research by expert entomologists and chemists. It is harmless to mankind. Flit has replaced the old methods because it kills all the insects—and does it quickly.

Doris, Daughter of Rev. Buriff, To Become Bride Soon

An item which appeared in the Eagle Grove Times last week will be of interest to our readers.

The article follows:

Miss Doris Buriff, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Buriff of Goldfield, will be married soon to J. Edward Caster, of Richmond, Va.

Miss Buriff will be remembered by many Eagle Grove people as she assisted as soloist in a concert given under the direction of L. P. Eversz in the M E church here about two years ago. Miss Buriff has a very beautiful and powerful contralto voice and has until recently been voice teacher in one of the colleges of the West.

NEBRASKA BOOTLEGGERS HAVE NEW SALES IDEA

Pretty Bootlegger Throws In A Kiss With The Kick

Sidney, Nebraska, Sept. 1.— A pint and a kiss for $3 is the innovation in bootlegging by a beautiful woman of these parts who has been overtaxing the sleuthing abilities of Sidney police in efforts to apprehend her.

The woman, who incidently drives a speedy roadster, has been the cause of many moist spots in Cheyenne county despite the dry weather.

The pint and a kiss for $3 is only offered to select friends of the pretty bootlgger. making it the more difficul for police. She is believed to make headquarters in Wyoming, several miles distant.

She always travels alone and at night with her load of kisses and liquor for the thirsty, according to police, who have been pursuing party in several chases after her.

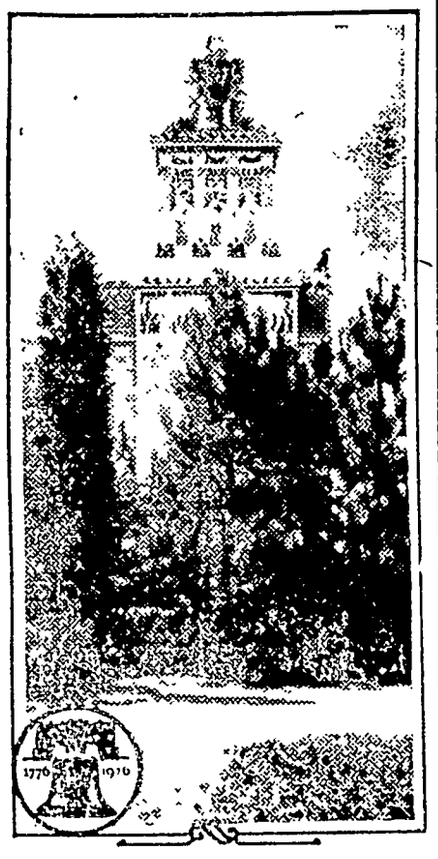
To Utilize Student Fund

Back in 1914 a group of students at Carleton college, Northfield, Minn., collected a fund and turned it over to the college for investment until a son or daughter of one of their number is a senior at Carleton Meanwhile, the fund is growing as interest on the investment accumulates. If two seniors qualify for the fund at the same time. the sum will be divided. Sponsors of the fund now are scattered from Washington state to Washington, D. C. One of the number is a missionary in Transvaal, South Africa.

Tastes of Cannibals

Cannibals of Liberia do not like to eat women Female flesh is too bitter for them, says Lady Dorothy Mills of England, who recently traveled widely in the interior of Liberia. Lady Mills asserts the human thigh is the best delicacy, and is always reserved for the chieftain The body of a youth fourteen or fifteen years old is regarded as ideal food. "An ordinary healthy, normal wife costs about $60 on the Liberian marriage market," Lady Mills said.

"A Thing of Beauty Is a Joy Forever"



This is one of the beauty spots of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia. The exposition celebrates the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence The view shows the tower of one of the main exhibit buildings rearing its head up from among the gorgeous landscape which artists have built around the giant structures which house exhibits from forty-three nations of the world. The Exposition continues until December 1.

"The Vine"

This magnificent bronze by Harriett Frishmuth is on display in the Palace of Fine Arts at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia where the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence is being celebrated. This is but one of the many gorgeous and beautiful things to be seen in the Fine Arts exhibit. Famous artists from all parts of the world have sent their paintings, etchings and sculptures to Philadelphia to be exhibited during the exposition, which continues until December 1.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

One Brosik, or some such a man with like name has found it don't pay to disturb our Mayor's peaceful sleep when once that official begins to pound the pillow with his ears. It all happened after the dance last Thursday night when the gentleman from near Hayfield opened he cutout on his car along after midnight and began using the Main Drag for a three ring circus. Mayor Gruetzmacher couldn't catch the speeder but he got the number and the rest was easy. Mr. Speeder paid into the city coffers ten bucks and costs, amounting to $13.85 Mayor Frank Gruetzmacher says it will buy several loads of gravel for the streets. Fine business, go after them again and lets get the whole town graveled We need it!

We heard a couple of guys arguing the other day about Doc. Anderson's new hat which he was seen wearing a short time ago One man said it was a Stetson felt. The other bird insisted it was a Saturday evening hat. "What do you mean, 'Saturday evening' hat?" he inquired Said the other, "Well, don't Doc wear it on his week end?'

Down at the Northern where Editor Grange of the Northern Light, writes his heavy editorials, is also a very fine fountain in the yard which causes quite a bit of comment and strangers pause to look at the fish in the pool The other day we happened by after train time and two Jews were discussing the scenery in about the following manner: "O A. B. C. D. Goldfish. L. M. N. O Goldfish. S. M. R. Goldfish. C. M. P. N. O G. I. C. M. P.

The town dads have been putting some gravel on the Main Drag the past week. How many loads do you expect to pay for?

We heard a joke on one of our sky pilots who recently visited in a home where triplets had been born. Upon greeting the father the minister said, "Well, my good man, I see the Lord has smiled on you" "Smiled on me! Why, man, he laughed out loud!" exclaimed the proud papa.

You have two guesses on the above!

They say it gets real quiet around Cooney Quandt's restaurant after nine p. m. They have run out of soup by that time.

Our little suggestion last week to have a celebration in Klemme this fall has a least stirred up some talk We should have an annual event of some kind here every year. Set the date and have it that day each year One man says it can't be done without a commercial club, or some kind of organization back of it. If that is all that's standing in the way, then why not organize such a club, a commercial club, Lions Club or any other kind of club with a handle on it?

We heard a man say the other day that Klemme had gone baseball mad. Well, I guess they have a right to go crazy once in forty years

There hasn't been much going on along the Main Drag the past week and so we don't have much to blow about We have to fill this column with bunk of some kind, and so we welcome contributions. We might "doctor" them up to fit local conditions. You don't half to believe all you read in this windy corner. It don't cost you anything extra. And as Ring Lardner might say, "If you are a hunter shoot your gentleman cow along the Main Drag."

The Main Drag welcomes a new member into the business circle this week We want to introduce Mr. C T Thompson, of Clear Lake, who has leased the Idle Hour threatre and is going to give us some real shows in the future. You young fellows should take your best skirt to Thompson's show every night he has the theatre open. He has told the Main Drag that he does not object seriously to young folks holding hands in the theatre. He says they might just as well hold hands at his show as down in the park They can watch the pictures at the same time and down at the park there is nothing to watch only the moon

This column is for everybody. We haven't said much about the farmer but here's a little poem that's been hanging on the old copy hook long enough, entitled "Out Where The West Begins":

Out where the sun beats down a little stronger;

Out where they work about four hours longer;

Out where they raise the corn and clover;

But have nothing to show when the year is over—

That's Where The West Begins.

Out where the mavericks bellow and bawl.

Where the farmer weeps at the long freight haul;

For he knows that the railroads will get it all;

Where the risks are great and the profits small—

That's Where The West Bgins.

Out where the farmers rave and cuss;

But do not strike and raise a fuss,

As they pay for goods sold Pittsburg plus!

Where things are in a gosh-awful muss—

That's Where the West Begins.

Iowa Cotton Wood Tree Now Has Value As Box Material

The humble cotton-wood is coming into its own. Millions of feet of this variety of wood is worked up into thin sheets to be used in making egg cases, a thicker board of the same material being used for the ends and the partition in the middle of the case. Thus far, Missouri cotton-wood trees have been used, but buyers are now looking over Iowa in an endeavor to find a sufficient number of trees in a given locality to justify the location of a saw-mill

Match factories have secured all available bass wood in the state and in the near future cotton-wood will be worked up into egg cases Conservationists aver that if instead of straightening streams in Iowa, the land that is made worthless by overflow were planted to cotton-wood and walnut trees future generations would laud the wisdom of their forbears.

GOOD PROGRAM AT BAYSIDE NEXT SUNDAY

The Algona Concert Band will play at Bayside Park, Clear Lake, next Sunday, September 5th. This is an excellent band and will no doubt draw many visitors to the Park for a good time Sunday. The vaudeville entertainment includes the 3 La Moures in two acts, a comedy acrobatic act and a clever hand-to-hand balancing feature. King and Benbow, blackface comedians, will also amuse you next Sunday afternoon and evening They will sing, dance and offer clean, delightful comedy the whole family will enjoy.

The Bayside Park entertainment program next Sunday is one of the best offered this season and a big crowd of visitors is planned for. Friday night, September 3rd, the regular Bayside dance will be held. A big Labor Day dance will be held at the White Pier next Monday night with Hurst's Club Royal orchestra furnishing the music.

Peace, Goodwill

Columbia, Peace and the Spirit of Brotherly love have been joined in one person, a beautiful woman. This young lady was one of the central figures in a pageant staged at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia, celebrating 150 years of American Independence. The Exposition continues until December 1.

The Ford Motor Company is said to have offered a $5,000,000 loan to Bulgaria, the money to be used for road building.

There are more peaches in market now than potatoes, 7 car loads being shipped last w and no other crop had half that volume.

Peter Quigley passed away Monday morning after nearly a week's illness. Summer flu seemed to be the cause. Mr. Quigley was a well known man of this community. His family have the sincerest sympathy from his friends.

In 1925, 15,250,000 maple trees were tapped and yielded 34,750,000 pounds measured as sugar.

FORMER KLEMME BUSINESSMAN SELLS OUT AT AMES

C. W. Wiles, Former Klemme Garage Owner Sold Filling Station At Ames To Standard Oil Co.

Mr. C. W. Wiles, of Ames, was in Klemme Tuesday evening calling on friends.

Since moving from Klemme to Ames, Mr. Wiles purchased some city property at Ames which was favorably located for a filling station and which project he developed.

His location became more valuable when a new street was cut thru from the college and the Standard Oil Co. wanted the property. Mr. Wiles closed a deal the other day selling out to the Sandard Oil Co., who take possession of the station Sept. 3rd.

Klemme people would like to see Mr and Mrs. Wiles return to this city and they will find a warm welcome awaiting them here.

GOODELL SCHOOLS WILL OPEN MONDAY, SEPT. 6th

Goodell High School Offers Three Courses Of Study This Year

The Goodell Public Schools will open Monday, September 6th.

Superintendent E. R. Blue will teach Agriculture, Typewriting, and Mathematics and will also instruct the orchesra again this year.

G. O Nelson, High School Principal will teach Latin, Bookkeeping, and Physics, and is also the boys athletic coach.

Miss Grace Littschwager will teach Home Economics and English.

Miss Evelyn Thomas, 7th and 8th grades.

Miss Louise Ahrenkeil, Intermediate grades.

Miss Lela Marie Given, the Primary yrades.

Mr. Jake Bachman is the janitor for the Goodell schools.

The Goodell High School offers three courses—College Preparatory, Commercial and Agriculture

The College Preparatory course contains those subjects which are required for entrance to college. Pupils expecting to go to college should not elect any of the vocational subjects.

Since it is necessary to alternate many of the subjects, we allow pupils in the tenth grade to elect a Commercial or Agricultural subject in order that they may complete the course in the twelfth grade.

The second year of Home Economics and Manual Training are given whenever a sufficient number of pupils desire those subjects.

KLEMME GIRL WILL TEACH AT CHARITON, IOWA

Miss Nina Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Johnson of this place, will leave Friday evening for Chariton, Iowa, where she will teach school this coming year.

LUDEKE'S HAD FINE VISIT IN WISCONSIN

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ludeke and son Paul, accompanied by their niece Lucile Ludeke, of Klemme, Ia., returned home Monday, after a four days' visit at the home of Wm. T. Greene, spending part of the time over the river with their brothers Lisle, Ray, Neil and sister, Mrs. Roy McDaniel, also at uncle Go. Greene's. All met Sunday at the parental home with the exception of their daughter Esther, who remained in Iowa. The children presented their father and mother with a beautiful set of silverware. Miss Wilda Greene accompanied the Iowa folks on the trip home.—Boscobel (Wis.) Dial Enterprise.

Why The New Ford Is Better--

The FORD Car is better today, in both workmanship and materials, than ever before in its history.

For 22 years the Ford Car has been constantly improved in workmanship and materials. For 22 years it has been a leader in the automobile world in price, design, and quality, and it is today (and the greatest industrial organization on earth will continue to make it) the most economically operated and altogether and by far the best value—a car supreme in its class.

17 Reasons Why--

1. All steel body (giving same protection to human body as steel railway coach.)
2. Polished, balanced crankshaft (found only in high priced cars).
3. Light-weight, polished, tight fitting pistons (give increased mileage with reduced gas and oil consumption).
4. Lighter, perfectly weighted and balanced connecting rods (makes a smoother running motor.)
5. Balloon tires standard equipment (greater tire mileage and increased riding comfort.)
6. Baked enamel on open cars—Duco finish on closed models.
7. Improved, enlarged copper radiator. 100% perfect water circulation.
8. Closed cars equipped with rear vision mirror, windshield wiper, dash light, sunshade.
9. Improved, heavy weight rolled crown fenders (no fender braces needed.)
10. New thirteen plate, rubber cased battery.
11. Brake surface increased 100%, plus other transmission improvements.
12. Rear wheel braking surface increased from 25 square inches to 52 square inches (or more than 100% increased braking efficiency.)
13. Longer, lower bodies with "streamlines."
14. Curtains on open models open with doors.
15. New type crankcase makes it possible to adjust all bearings without removing the motor.
16. Gas tank under cowl (no vacuum tank troubles and gas to make any hill.)
17. 5 to 1 reversible steering device. Now the easiest steered car made.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

(Copy for This Depa ment Supplied by the American Legion News Service.)

LEGION CONVENTION PLANS ANNOUNCED

Arrangements have been completed for a great program of entertainment for the eighth annual national convention of the American Legion at Philadelphia on October 11 to 15, under the direction of the general committee on arrangements.

Among the things planned for the great gathering of thousands of Legion and Auxiliary members from all over the United States and several foreign lands, are:

A Legion ball in the Sesquicentennial auditorium, a military circus, the first world's baseball series for boys, fireworks displays, drum and band contests, with the best musical organizations in the Legion competing, the Legion parade, and a world's fair with millions of dollars' worth of displays and exhibits.

Music for the ball in the auditorium accommodating 20,000 persons will be furnished by two orchestras, a band and the $150,000 exposition organ. Special efforts are being made to provide the sort of dances Legionnaires in various sections of the country enjoy. Suggestions may be sent to the American Legion Ball Committee, 301 City Center Building, Philadelphia.

Two thousand picked men will go through their trick military stunts for the pleasure of the convention throngs. Huge lights will shed a noonday brilliance on the scene.

Lighting will be one of the most spectacular features of this year's convention arrangements. At the convention grounds there will be a light with a candle power of 0,300,000,000, said to be the most powerful ever contrived by man. Fourteen superpower searchlights will provide the concentration. At the entrance to the sesqui grounds will be a giant replica of the Liberty bell with 25,000 lights of 100 watts each, concentrated upon it. The bell, weighing 42 tons, is suspended from supports 70 feet high.

For the first time the Legion's All-American junior world series will be played at the convention. Four teams, representing four regions into which the country has been divided, will play in the municipal stadium These games are the culmination of a nation-wide sequence of contests in which champions have been chosen to represent their cities, their districts, their states and their regions.

Arrangements for the convention have been in charge of National Vice Commander Vincent A. Carroll of Philadelphia, who is chairman of the convention committee. E. E. Hollenback and H. Harrison Smith are vice chairmen.

Edward J. Meehan, lieutenant colonel in reserve, is executive secretary of the convention committee. Upon him devolves a very large part of the practical details of staging the convention.

Colonel Meehan, who holds the Distinguished Service Cross and the Croix de Guerre for his World war services, is a native Philadelphian. He served with the One Hundred Ninth infantry in the Twenty-eighth division overseas. He wears two wound stripes from that service.

When the Paris caucus set in motion the activity which resulted in the formation of the American Legion, Colonel Meehan was present as a representative of his division. Returning to Philadelphia, he affiliated with one of the first posts organized.

Take No Cars to France

Legionnaires who make the great pilgrimage with the organization to France in September, 1927, will be advised by the National France convention committee of the Legion against taking automobiles with them, the cost being estimated in the neighborhood of $500. It will be cheaper to buy a car in France, then sell it before returning, or, better still, to rent a car there. A question of space also enters into the matter.

STOCK CENSOR PLAN PUT UP TO STATES

President Favors Financial Statement Publicity as Best Protection.

Paul Smith's.—Enactment of state laws for the protection of the 20,000,000 Americans—an average of one to a family—who now own securities is urged by President Coolidge. The President, it was officially stated by his spokesman, is keenly interested in protecting the public not only against out-and-out swindling operations, but against misrepresentation as to the financial status and earning capacity of corporations in the sale of their stocks and bonds.

Mr. Coolidge feels that the power of the federal government, under the Constitution is limited to the interstate commerce clause and this would not provide sufficient power to obtain the desired results, in view of the fact that corporations receive their grants of power from the states.

Discussion of the proposed regulation of stock and bond issues by the federal trade commission was provoked at the summer White House by inquiries with respect to a recent article in a magazine by Prof. William Z. Ripley. Mr. Coolidge had not read the article, and the view was expressed that he would prefer to study it before commenting in detail.

It was pointed out, however, that the individual states, by passing laws regulating the sale of securities within their limits could compel statements as to financial conditions and earnings of corporations which would accomplish the same result as though federal government were empowered to make the same demands, and without the constitutional handicap under which the federal government labors.

The best protection to investors, it was declared, would come from the publicity for such financial statements, which could be required by state laws, and in some states are now required.

At the same time the President realizes, it was said, that neither the federal nor the state governments could go further than to prevent misrepresentation.

Maniac Drops Bomb in Bank; 2 Killed; 100 Hurt

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Enraged because his demand for $2,000 was not granted immediately, Collins Barley dropped a bomb in the Farmers' Deposit bank here. The blast killed George Ortman, one of the bank's special policemen, and Barley, who was an escaped patient from the Mayview county home for insane.

Twenty persons were seriously injured and more than a hundred others hurt by the blast.

May Probe "Slush" in Wisconsin Campaign

Washington.—Likelihood that the Reed committee of the senate on campaign expenditures will be asked to investigate the cost of the primary campaign in Wisconsin is being talked of in Washington. Opponents of Senator Lenroot, who is making a hard fight for renomination, are charging that the stalwarts who are supporting the senator are using "slush funds" in large amounts.

Rail Workers Agree to Arbitrate Wage Demand

New York.—Representatives of the eastern railroads and the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen have signed an agreement to submit the controversy centering about the union's demands for higher pay for conductors, brakemen and switchmen to a board of arbitration.

The higher wage scales are asked on all railroad systems east of Chicago and north of the Ohio river.

Sharks Snatch Youth From Arms of Rescuer

Seaside Heights, N. J.—The decapitated and limbless body of Charles A. Burke, eighteen, of Trenton, washed upon the beach, strengthened the belief that he was snatched from the arms of a rescuer by sharks. An unidentified bather who went to the youth's rescue said the boy was pulled from his grasp by a large fish. Later three sharks were sighted.

Doisy, French Aviator, Does 3,427 Mi. in 36 Hrs.

Paris.—Capt. Peletier Doisy, the aviator who flew from Paris to Tokyo, returned to Paris after completing a remarkable experimental flight over southern Europe and northern Africa. Captain Doisy flew more than 3,427 miles in 36 hours. He was accompanied only by his mechanic. He flew over Italy, Tunis, Algiers, Morocco, and Spain and back to France.

MINE BLAST DEATH TOLL IS PUT AT 44

30 Bodies Have Been Recovered From Workings.

Clymer, Pa.—An explosion which occurred at the Clymer mine of the Clearfield Bituminous Coal corporation crushed out the lives of 42 men. With 30 bodies recovered from the blasted workings, mine officials expressed the belief that 14 others unaccounted for were dead in the debris-swept ruins of the mine.

Figures given out by A. J. Musser, vice president and general manager of the corporation, subsidiary of the New York Central railroad, and Dr. Fred St. Clair, coroner of Indiana county, revealed that 58 miners were trapped by the explosion.

Ten miners escaped with their lives and four others are in a Dixonville hospital suffering from gas and shock.

J. J. Forbes, supervising engineer of the United States bureau of mines, of Pittsburgh, emerging from the mine after a long exploration, reported that the mine was being reventilated and cleared of poisonous gases.

Forbes said it was impossible at present to give a cause for the blast because of the general destruction in the mine chambers.

Forbes is in charge of a federal investigation. A second investigation is being made by state authorities.

Mine officials believed that 150 children were made fatherless by the explosion, the second in this territory within three years.

In January, 1923, 56 lives were lost at the Starford mine at Shanktown.

Order Inquest Into Death of Rear Admiral

San Francisco, Calif.—A coroner's inquest into the death of Rear Admiral George H. Barber, third ranking medical officer in the United States navy, who died here a few days ago, was ordered upon the request of naval officers.

Coincidentally, it was revealed that shortly before his death the naval officer bequeathed $75,000 to his nurse, Miss Helen K. Ashley, in a codicil to his will, and that the two had planned to marry.

Rear Admiral Barber died supposedly from ptomaine poisoning caused by eating tainted fish. A week previous he had been discharged from a hospital following his recovery from a major operation.

Commander Rodgers Is Killed in Air Crash

Philadelphia.—When his plane crashed in the Delaware river as he was attempting to glide to a landing from a height of only 150 feet, Commander John N. Rodgers, hero of the Hawaiian seaplane expedition, received injuries which caused his death in a hospital shortly afterward. His mechanic, Samuel Schultz of Philadelphia suffered a broken back.

Commander Rodgers was just ending a flight from Anacosta field, Washington, to inspect some new planes of the type used on the historic cross Pacific flight at the navy yard.

MEXICAN CHURCHES NOT TO BE REOPENED

Episcopate Bans Any Services for Present; Calles Will Not Relent.

Mexico City.—Hopes for a speedy settlement of the religious controversy were crushed when the Roman Catholic episcopate unanimously decided not to resume church services for the present.

The situation remains the same as before the recent conference between President Calles and representatives of the episcopate. The boycott will continue and in the meantime the Catholic church leaders will discuss plans for a congressional campaign with the object of amending the constitution.

No date has been fixed for further conferences with the President and there is some uncertainty as to whether there will be any more.

Bishop Diaz, secretary of the episcopate, declared it was considerably influenced by the statement attributed to President Calles by the newspaper El Universal in which the President was quoted as saying:

"If the priests return to the temples, they must do so subject to the laws."

In the view of the episcopate this does not harmonize with the attitude taken by the President a few days ago, and the episcopate decided that it leaves the situation precisely as it was before and that the church's constant and unqualified position was that it cannot accept these laws.

There are indications that the decision also was influenced by the strong belief in certain Catholic circles that the episcopate's statement regarding the recent conference was issued too hastily and that the church should not commit itself to resumption of service without more definite promises from the government.

The episcopate's formal statement after its meeting says:

"The situation continues the same as before the conference with President Calles. Services will not be resumed, because it is necessary not only to discover a method to give instructions to priests without sacrificing the rights of the church, but also to discover how to obviate the destruction of liberty of conscience by these laws pending their amendment or repeal through congress. Methods of taking this question to the chamber are being discussed."

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

To protect American citizens in Central America, two American destroyers will be sent to Bluefields, Nicaragua, because of the revolutionary outbreak there, the State and Navy departments announced.

Secretary Kellogg has made no new proposals for settlement of the Chile-Peru, dispute over the Tacna-Arica provinces, the State department announced.

Senator William B. McKinley of Illinois has been removed from his residence in Washington to Martinsville, Ind., to a private sanitarium, where he will remain indefinitely in the hope of having his health restored.

The American Federation of Labor through Sir Esme Howard, the British ambassador, has petitioned the British government not to permit the employment of nonunion labor in construction of the new British embassy here.

Retirement of A. A. McLaughlin as general solicitor and assistant director general of the United States railroad administration is announced by Acting Secretary of the Treasury Winston.

Injured Flyer Crawls Five Miles to Safety

Bellefonte, Pa.—With his left knee broken and his skull fractured in two places, Lieut. Cyrus K. Bettis, army flyer missing three days, was found alive by searchers in the Seven Sisters mountains. Despite his injuries he crawled five and a half hours through brush to a roadway where he was found. He is expected to recover.

25 Prisoners Make Dash From State Reformatory

Ionia, Mich.—A riot broke out in the state reformatory here, and 25 prisoners escaped through the front entrance after breaking into the officers' quarters, arming themselves with automatic revolvers, and donning guards' uniforms.

Some of the men fled in automobiles commandeered at the institution and others scattered about the city and open country.

Belgium Opposes Poland

Paris.—It is announced that the Belgian government has changed its attitude of last year with regard to giving Poland a seat on the council of the League of Nations and is now opposing a permanent seat for that country.

Auto Hits Tree, Five Killed

Bridgeport, Conn.—Five young men were killed at Nichols when their automobile left the road and crashed into a tree.

More Than One Way to Get Rid of Bore

One of the amusing and original characters in Paris is M. Sacha Guitry, who made his fame as actor and playwright and who has increased it by the oddities of his temperament. He is a witty, versatile and quick-minded man and is naturally inclined to be impatient with bores. Recently there was one who plagued him with unnecessary calls. One day he burst in on Guitry, who greeted him warmly though that morning the appearance of the man put him more "on edge" than ever.

"Just in time," said Guitry. "I want you to see the new conjuring trick I have thought out," and he grabbed the unsuspecting visitor's hat and exclaimed, "Watch!"

Then Guitry poured a jugful of water into the hat. The owner of it got up in alarm.

"There now," exclaimed Guitry petulantly, "you've made me forget my trick!"

The "trick," however, is reported to have worked admirably. The same visitor has not troubled M. Guitry since.—Youth's Companion.

Charlie stepped into the jail; the rider sent his horse at a walk through the belt of shadow into the light of Main street. At a run I rounded the corner after him. I caught up, slowed down just behind him, and followed. Still at a walk, he was weaving through the late traffic. Before the Black Jack he stopped, threw the horse's reins over a pin of the hitching rail, walked a little unsteadily through the door. I waited until he was gone, and made a swift inspection of his mount. I had not been mistaken—a rangy American horse, buckskin in color, and with that distinguishing mark on his flank. I entered. There stood the rider at one end of the crowded bar, tilting into himself a glass of whisky. I pushed into the convivial knot next to him, watched him furtively. His hand, as he reached toward his waistcoat pocket to pay, missed twice; then came down hard as he rang his silver dollar on the bar. His gray eye, as he turned it casually a moment in my direction, seemed filmed. He had been drinking," as we expressed it in that day—not yet drunk, but on the way. His face, seen now in full light, was less comely than at first glance. There lay a kind of blackness under the smooth, young blond skin. He was dressed like a miner or a prospector; but he wore his rough frieze coat, his corduroy trousers, his top-boots and his blue flannel shirt with a touch of jauntiness; his trousers seemed draped above his boot-tops rather than tucked into them. He gathered up his change, stabbed it into his pocket, rolled upstairs to the gambling-room.

When after a discreet interval I followed him, he had just staked a twenty-dollar gold piece at roulette. I joined the group of spectators, who stood watching with fascinated interest the descending whirl of the wheel. He lost; the dealer's hand raked in his coin. He was reaching again to his pocket, when from the spectators a man stepped up beside him as though to play; but instead laid a hand stealthily on his arm. This was a tall man; I caught a glimpse of a full, black beard. The smaller man turned angrily, then froze for a second in position. Some signal, evidently, had passed from eye to eye; a movement of the larger man's beard showed that he was speaking; though I could not catch even the sound of the words through the babble of night in the Black Jack. The smaller man's hand went away from his pocket. He pushed through the crowd to the stairs. I followed him closely as, with only a second of hesitation when he passed the bar, he walked on out of doors. Through the front windows of the barroom I watched to mark the direction in which he rode. But he did not advance toward his horse. A moment he stood as though undecided; then turned to the right and strode rapidly down Main street.

Thrilled with the adventure of shadowing a man, exulting with the thought of a scoop I was going to score for the Courier, I shot as unostentatiously as possible through the door of the Black Jack, followed. For a moment I lost him in the congested crowd before Myers' Variety theater. When I had crammed my way through that, I picked him up again at the head of Main street. There he turned to the right toward the Addition, the route which I followed every day to my meals. That was odd—did he live in the Addition? Had the enactors of this stage robbery dwelt so near me—and Constance—all this time?

Past Mrs. Barnaby's he strode, and stopped dead. Here was a contingency I had not foreseen. If I went on, I should pass him and forfeit my usefulness as a shadow. If I too stopped and he saw me standing—he would suspect. Hastily, I dodged into the shade of the big tent. I waited for a few seconds, then ventured a cautious look round the corner. He was nowhere in sight. Just above Mrs. Barnaby's the street threw off a side-trail running up the hill. Doubtless, he had taken that. I sped on tiptoe to the other end of the tent. There he was again—but he was not taking the trail. He had stopped before the little tent where lodged Mrs. Barnaby and Mrs. Deane.

"Hoo-hoo!" he was calling, gently.

I dropped to the ground, less from caution than from a weakness in all my limbs.

The edging of light along the tent-flap became a triangle. Some one had emerged. It was Constance Deane. I could not see her face in the moonlight, but did I not know the tripping move and trim figure of her, the poise of the bare head? Surely, he had mistaken the place! She would tell him so, and go back. But she laid a hand on his arm, led him a little way from the tent; they stood talking in whispers whose vocalization did not reach me; talking with swift gestures. Now I could see her face in the moonlight, upturned toward him. . . . Again she laid her hand upon his arm . . . she who had told me that she would not receive men in the evening . . . she who had kissed me . . . she who had been on the robbed stage. . . . In letters of red fire that phrase of Mike's note danced before my eyes . . . "Somebody in town informs."

Was this Mr. Deane? . . . She had been curious, overcurious about affairs in the camp . . . and Eldridge was agent for the stage company . . . Hutchins worked in the bank . . . and I . . . I had told her everything I knew. . . . She had advised me to leave her, to go away. . . . Ah, but she knew I wouldn't. . . . She had played with me. . . . Oh, but it was impossible. . . . I would rush upon her and beg her to tell me it was impossible . . . no, unwittingly, I was an eavesdropper, a spy . . . I had not even the consolation of a dignified position. . . .

Suddenly the group in the moonlight broke. She had darted back inside the tent. The man stood still a moment as though hesitant; then turned, disappeared round the boarding-tent, emerged a moment later into the moonlight, retracing his course. I followed no longer. When he was gone out of sight, I lay there, my eyes on the dim blob of light which was the tent, the brilliant slash which was the opening of the flap—lay and dug my fingers into the ground and panted. Suddenly the light in the tent went out. I rose and stumbled blindly down the hill to Main street.

CHAPTER X

When I came back to a semblance of reason and sanity I was looking down, from a dump of Liverpool hill, on the streaks of blobbed light which marked Cottonwood camp. Since I saw my betrayal I had been wandering through camp, aimlessly and insanely. I had kindled in my heart and soul every invidious emotion. My conviction, formed so hastily as I watched that couple in the moonlight, had set, frozen. There was no hope, no faintest doubt. Stern, dramatic plans of action had floated into my imagination to be blown away by others just as violent and fanciful. I would go and accuse her to her face—tell her what she was and what she had done to me. No, I could not do that. My pride had been seared enough already; besides, what would she care? I would leave the camp tonight and never again see her or the spot where she had tormented me, used me. But even while I imagined this, I knew that I could not abandon the game half played. I would follow him, her accomplice and lover, to the ends of the earth; and when I found him I would kill him as a man should. I would kill myself—I had the weapon there on my hip. Even was there a terrible vision of Constance Deane's tender throat gurgling to flabby quiet in my clenched hands. . . . It was this sudden, primeval lust for murder which, imparting an unnatural energy to all my members, finally drove me on the run up Liverpool hill. Altitude and the limitations of the body had their way with me at last; my breath gave out; I dropped on the rough prisms of the dump, exhausted.

Oddly, I kept one tiny impulse of responsibility. I had no sooner settled into my state of relative calm than I remembered the Cottonwood Courier, struggling on toward press-hour without me. Marcus Handy at least had done me no wrong. I owed him the courtesy of decent resignation. I rose, started down Liverpool hill in a leaden mood of profound but inactive melancholy.

Through the clear, carrying night air came the sound of a pistol-shot—two shots—a crackling fusillade. These sounds blew into a blaze the embers of my violent mood. The sense of dynamic power in the explosions, the imagination of the bullets with their terrific, satisfying punch into flesh or into wood, gave some devilish satisfaction to my nerves. Then the world of practical realities again flowed in upon me. This was no joy-fusillade of drunken miners or prospectors. The tempo was that of a general fight. Again I broke into a run.

As I passed the straggling row of cabins which fringed the road leading into the foot of Main street, I caught the noise of the crowds. It came in an irregular, roaring babble, quite unlike the ordinary rhythms of night in Cottonwood. And there was no music; something had muted the orchestras and bands. I rounded the curve toward the jail. Men were cinching saddles and mounting; a moment revealed by the swerve of a horse, in a moment concealed, stood the figure of Chris McGrath, one peremptory finger pointing a command.

A nondescript citizen stood with his hands in his pockets, regarding proceedings from the concealing shade of a slouch hat.

"Bank robbed!" he answered casually to my inquiry, and spat a stream into the gutter.

"But the shooting—anybody killed?" I panted.

"Three, I hears," he replied as casually.

Down the roadway of Main street I pushed my way toward the bank—there was no room on the sidewalks. All Cottonwood—clerks, faro dealers, miners, tenderfoot, visitors, painted ladies—had rushed out of doors. In gesticulating knots stood the citizens of our town, talking it over. Fragmentary, expletive sentences, whetting my curiosity, snapped out of the babel —"got clean away—that's funny"— "five killed"—"gold shipment." Out of Main street, three buildings from the bank, ran one of our straggling side streets. It was jammed. The focus of interest seemed to be the back door of the bank. With hasty explanations of my identity, with much discourteous wiggling and pushing, I bucked my way forward. By the entrance stood two guards, their .45-caliber sidearms slung forward on their hips as though for instant action.

"I'm the Courier reporter," I panted. "How many were killed?"

"Nobody, as I saw," responded the guard.

"But there was shooting!" I objected.

"D—n bad shooting," snipped the guard.

"How much did they get?"

The guard hesitated.

"Ask the boss," he said finally. Then I was aware that the back window was opened a few inches, that a voice had whistled and called my name. I leaned down to the space between sash and sill, and was looking into the lean face of Mr Taylor.

"Better go to your office, Gilson," he said. "Handy has been looking for you."

"Did they kill anyone—how much did they get?" I asked.

"No one hurt—but Handy will tell you what to say about all that!" replied Mr. Taylor enigmatically, and closed the window.

As I threaded among the dark cabins, sheds, rude warehouses which made a maze of the alley behind the bank, I saw that the crowd was thinning out. Just then, a band down the street gave its preliminary roll, struck up a march tune; Cottonwood, the fires of excitement already dying out, had resumed its normal night life But not quite, I reflected as I came up the side street toward the Courier. Considering that it offered no lures of pleasure, it was singularly crowded for that time of night. Men were standing in knots; only they did not gesticulate, and if they spoke at all it was in low whispers. The excitement had abated only on the surface, I felt. Deep below ran a sense of tension. . . . I was hardly surprised when from the doorway of the Courier a stranger stepped forward, laid his hand on a scabbard swung forward from his hip, and said:

"You can't come in here!"

"But I work here!" said I.

"Wait a minute," he replied, and disappeared. An instant later the keenly lined silhouette of Marcus became visible against the light.

"It's all right—come along!" he shot out in his executive voice.

I entered. Marcus, his sleeves rolled up, his store clothes protected by the ink-spattered apron of his trade, his mallet in hand, stood at the stone. I had never seen his eye so bright.

"Where the h—l have you been?" he inquired. I answered nothing. The search for an excuse brought up the blackness of the past two hours which excitement had momentarily dissipated; if I had tried to speak, I would have choked. Marcus, indeed, gave me no time to answer.

"Well, rustle!" he growled. "Did you get anything on that bank robbery?"

"Not much. Taylor told me to see you."

"Just as well," replied Marcus. "You take this story exactly as I lay it out for you." With news to write, I was no longer his partner; he had become the boss, executive and exacting. "Don't touch it up too much. Make it straight and cold. All ready? Go! The Bank of Cottonwood was robbed last night"—as morning newspaper men must, he was dating the event one day behind. "Let yourself out a little in the introduction. Call it an insolent performance or something like that. Oh, yes, and say: 'due to the inefficiency of the administration which has made this camp a paradise for crooks, road-agents and sure-thing men.' Or words to that effect. Then the straight stuff. At ten-forty-five, a fusillade of shots from the alley back of Main street announced the daring crime. A few minutes before that time four horsemen rode quietly up to the entrance of the alley behind the bank, and left their horses. One horse, it was noticed by the spectators, was a buckskin"—here Marcus hesitated in his steady flow of language, then went on more slowly: "a buckskin with a peculiar spot on his flank had been noticed about the camp all evening. It is perhaps more than a coincidence that a few minutes before the crime occurred a prominent citizen, passing down the Liverpool hill trail, saw a group of men treating the hind quarters of a buckskin horse with something suspiciously resembling yellow whitewash"—it was well that Marcus here paused again in his narrative; for the rush of blood through tense channels deafened and blinded me. But my ears and eyes cleared; and Marcus was proceeding: "No, I guess you'd better leave that out. Not a word of that—or the color of any horse.

"Owing to the danger of highway robbery ever present in this camp, the Bank of Cottonwood has been taking unusual precautions in moving its outgoing shipments of bullion and its incoming shipments of coined gold and currency. The transfer to and from the vaults of the bank took place usually after dark. Last night a consignment of"—a pause again—"what is reported to be gold coin was due to arrive at about ten-thirty, an hour when most of the revelers in camp would be in the dance-hall and varieties, or wooing the elusive goddess of chance. The bank was all ready for the shipment. The police department had been notified." Another pause. "Unfortunately, our efficient guardians of life and property—get in some sarcastic shot like that—were waiting at the wrong entrance to the alley, and did not participate in subsequent events. H. A. Taylor, president of the bank, and Horace Hutchins, his teller, themselves acting as guards, waited at the back door. At the appointed hour the shipment arrived in a democrat wagon, driven by John F. Gruder with—what the blazes are his initials? —oh, yes, Pete Hannan—as guard. Drawing up the wagon and dismounting, they prepared to unload the money, which was inclosed in two locked strong-boxes. Having reached the bank safely, the guardians of the treasure relaxed their vigilance—put in something like that. Anyhow, Mr. Taylor and Mr. Hutchins, instead of remaining on guard, started to help. At the moment when they had their hands full four men sprang from a doorway in a cabin which faces the back door of the bank. Before either the guards or the bank officials could get to their guns each felt a muzzle poked into his ribs. To resist would have been to invite certain death. With muttered words of command, the road-agents backed their victims against the door, took away their guns. Then, while two of the bandits kept them covered, the others rapidly removed the treasure-boxes to the entrance of the alley, loaded them on to their horses. So well had the criminals apparently informed themselves of the bank's habits that a spectator who noticed this act without comprehending its significance said that the saddles of their animals were fitted with rope slings. The operation took but a minute. When this was done, the pair who had been covering the bank officials backed away to the entrance of the alley, still covering their victims. With a final warning that they would shoot the first man who emerged, they swung into their saddles and rode away in the darkness.

"Pluckily disregarding the warnings of the bandits, the banker and his assistants hurried to recover their guns, which had been tossed into the dark space between two cabins. Mr. Taylor was the first to succeed. He ran to the entrance of the alley and turned loose at the bandits as they disappeared in moonlight. They returned the fire at long range, fortunately with no effect.

"The police were at once notified. The crime, as before stated, occurred at about ten-forty-five. At eleven-thirty the posse which Marshal McGrath immediately started to form was still engaged in interesting conversation at the jail. Cinching a saddle is an operation which takes time—or something sarcastic, better than that. Rub it into them. And end like this—take it down as I say it:

"'The aftermath of this affair will doubtless be known to all before this issue of the Courier reaches its readers.'"

I could endure it no longer. That side of me which had been burning all night in the dark flames of my own inner hell burst to the surface. It manifested itself in violent, physical action as I struck the point of my pencil into the table and cried:

"Why are you keeping me in the dark? Why am I on the outside of all this?" A dozen circumstances had come together in my mind—the mysterious absences of Marcus, the hints of secret events underlying that bank robbery, the operations of Mike the Barfender, the guard at the door of the Courier, this last, cryptic sentence. Under it all flamed a deeper, fouler, more tormenting misery. Some one had informed the bandits as to the very hour when the treasure would be delivered at the bank. Some one had informed them as to the very character of its packing. Some one . . . numbly I could feel the nails digging into my clenched palms.

And the face of Marcus Handy took on a curious expression. Almost, he looked ashamed. He dropped his eyes to the stone.

"Sorry, I can't tell you now, kid," he said hesitantly. "Right sorry I can't. You've always played square with me. But wait until we've gone to press. Then I'll tell you, if you sure want to know. Now get to work. Shove over your takes to the printers as fast as you write them."

Had Marcus replied to my outburst with his accustomed energy and authority, I do not know what I might have done. But this touch of sentiment served to cool and steady me. My working side took hold again. Furiously I ripped through the story, the printers taking away the uncorrected copy as I wrote. However, I noticed dimly certain irregularities in the night routine of our office. I heard parleys at the door; evidently the guard was still turning visitors away. One man, however, was permitted to pass—Cohen the jeweler. He held a whispered conference with Marcus over the stone, nodded, departed hastily. Marcus was keeping the front page open for my story of the robbery. I had scarcely finished when he set the last take into place, inserted a filler, locked the form. And now my hot, black impatience surged again.

"You said you'd tell me—" I cried from my desk.

"Wait till she's run off," replied Marcus. "Keep workin'. Start a column of telegraph news. We'll need it. There may be d—n little work done in this office tomorrow—today—" he corrected himself; for the hands of our old station clock pointed to half past one. Again I forced myself to work. Then the press began its rickety clang; and Johnnie, the office boy, as was his routine, laid the wet, unfolded sheet upon my desk.

My eye flew mechanically to my own story; then was deflected by a curious typographical feature, unique in the Cottonwood Courier. Sprinkled over the front page, a "door-mat" to each separate item, ran a single legend, repeated again and again in assorted job type:

"SACRAMENTO DIGGINGS"

Those words—where had I heard them? Memory worked in a blinding flash. It was the phrase Buck had slipped to me so casually that day by the claim. A faint perception of the truth crept into my mind, opening the way for horrible considerations. . . . Marcus stood over me, his face seeming to struggle with conflicting emotions, among which the chief was embarrassment.

"Nobody will be leaving the Courier for half an hour or so," he said. "I guess I'm betrayin' no essential secrets if I tell you some things." He hesitated, and then, as though thrashing around the edges of the subject, he added:

"My fault at first that you didn't know. I like to play a lone hand. Then afterward—" He hesitated. And I burst out again:

"Why have I been left on the outside?" My voice must have rung disagreeably, for Marcus colored an instant as though with contagion of anger, that died out before he answered hesitantly:

"When we formed a certain organization—there was one party objected—"

"You mean," I said, coming out brutally with my conjectures, "when you formed the vigilance committee?"

"How did you know?"

Life's Turning Point in Wonderful Career

Shortly after John W. Gates—"Bet-You-a-Million" Gates—became head of the Illinois Steel company, and was just coming into recognition as an important figure in finance, he lost almost his entire fortune through speculation in grain on the Chicago board of trade. Though Gates made no mention of his loss to his private secretary until many years later, he made no attempt to keep secret from his wife the details of his reverses.

"Dell," I guess they got me at last," Gates told Mrs. Gates that evening as he unfolded the story of his unfortunate speculation, according to O. A. Owen, who was private secretary to the financial wizard, writing in the Saturday Evening Post.

"You are not whipped," she exhorted. "Your credit and reputation are intact. I am the only one who knows you are cleaned out. Tell no one else, strain your credit and you can raise enough money to keep you going until the tide turns."

That appears to have been the true turning point in the career of "Bet-You-a-Million" Gates. Never again after that time was he within $50,000,000 of destitution, and at the time of his death in 1911 his personal fortune aggregated more than $100,000,000.

His Injury

John J. Brownlee brought suit against the Traction company in the Second Judicial district. The auto in which he was riding was struck by a car several months ago and he was thrown to the pavement. . . . He was confined to a hospital and his whole right side was decapitated for many months.—American Mercury.

Woman Astronomer

How many people, who think that a scientific woman is a Twentieth-century product, know that Caroline Herschell was, a century and a half ago, assistant astronomer royal?

Her brother was the famous astronomer, but her mother in Hanover would let her have no accomplishment outside household duties, except knitting. Her father, however, gave her violin lessons on the sly.

Then her brother offered her a home in England, and she came over and became a successful singer. Taking up astronomy, she became her brother's assistant, and herself was responsible for the discovery of eight comets. Undoubtedly a very clever woman, she rejected all praise, thinking it might detract from her brother's reputation.

KLEMME STRUCK BY TWO TWISTERS TUESDAY EVENING

KLEMME SCENE OF TWO CYCLONES TUESDAY NIGHT

A. G. Koerner Place Struck By Big Storm In Northwest Part Of The Town

Other Storm Swept East Main St., And Albert Barz Farm

At about ten thirty o'clock Tuesday night Klemme was swept by two terrific wind storms or cyclones that struck at about the same time. One storm centered in the northwest part of town where the Koerner place was wrecked. The other cyclone swept a path further to the south and centered along the east end of Main Street and then northeast to the Albert Barz farm, one-half mile east f Klemme.

A strong wind blew from the southwest several minutes before the hurricane broke, and was accompanied by heavy rain. The cyclone struck with but little warning and only the characteristic roar was heard by some who were trying to get into their cellar.

Koerner Place Badly Wrecked By Cyclone And Wind Storm

The A. G. Koerner place in northwest Klemme was the storm center of the twister passing over that part of town and his place suffered a great deal of damage.

The new brick barn and garage built a couple of years ago was sadly demolished. The roof was torn off and scattered over the yard for a hundred feet; the reinforced concrete and brick wall of the second story was ripped off and scattered about. A fair size chicken house was completely wrecked and boards and debris scattered everywhere. Several windows were blown or broken out of the house, and a chimney falling crushed a hole through the roof over the kitchen.

Koerner's service car was badly damaged by the falling walls of the barn, and another Ford Coupe left in the yard was badly dented and windows broken by flying wreckage. The large grove around the Koerner residence was a mass of twisted and splintered trees. The large trees at the Henry Lau residence just east of Koerner's was likewise a scene of uprooted and splintered trees.

Falling trees all over town crippled the Koerner telephone lines and some phones were out of service until repairs could be made.

Kermit Koerner Has Narrow Escape In Big Storm

Tuesday Kermit Koerner son of Mr and Mrs. A. G. Koerner, was congratulating himself on his fortunate escape from the furry of the storm. Kermit was sleeping in a tent in the grove west of the house when the storm broke. Kermit woke up after he heard trees crashing and felt the tent blow away. When he picked himself up he was lying underneath the camp cot and quilts in among a lot of brush and fallen trees. It all happened so quick he didn't realize where he was at or what had happened. However, he got into the house without a scratch and is still wondering how e escaped.

Many Other Places Damaged In Klemme

The office and weighing house belonging to the Iowa Valley Sugar Co. of Belmond, was totally wrecked. This was a frame structure and was located just south of the Standard Oil Co. Tanks.

Three large plate glass windows at the Wellemeyer Co. store were blown in by the storm. Two of the large plate glasses in the store front and one in the second story above the front. Several windows in the J. N. Day store were destroyed, and one in the Wilson drug store.

Mart Bachman's Barn Took Wings

Mart Bachman's barn, on East Main street pulled off a queer freak when it was lifted by the storm and telescoped onto the rear of Henry Linne's house next door. A few shingles were stripped off the Linne house by the barn falling on it, but apparently no other damage was done to the house. Mart had his Buick car in the barn and it was not even scrached when the barn was lifted by the cyclone. The footboards were blown out of the car, but otherwise it was left just as Mart had put it away.

A large chicken house to the west of Bachman's place, and which s rented by Dr. Anderson, who also has the barn for his car, was turned over. Doc. had just put his car in the barn when the storm struck and overturned the chicken house. Dr. says he got out of there quicker than the chicken and passed two rabbits getting to the house.

To the east and a little south of the Bachman place the storm destroyed a small barn on the Chas. Busch place, which was scattered about the yard with other debris. A coal shed and other small buildings at the Bachman place were also destroyed

To the north of the above scene a hundred yards the storm destroyed Larsen's slaughter house in the east part of town.

From here the storm went east a half mile to the Albert Barz farm.

Albert Barz Has Big Loss

The storm seemed to terminate at the Albert Barz farm east of Klemme The twister here evidently made one last dip, missing a large group of buildings and lowered just in time to wreck a basement hog-house and over-turn and twist the windmill to a mass a tangled steel. The hog house was flatened out and a few hogs were caught in the wreckage. A concrete silo standing between the hog house and the windmill escaped the fury of the storm, with the exception of the roof which was blown off and scattered over the pasture. A large machine shed and a corn crib were twisted out of line, but otherwise the many other buildings on the Barz farm were not injured.

The large fruit orchard on the Barz farm was practically ruined by the storm.

Another freak of the cyclone was again displayed on the Barz farm. At the southwest corner of the farm are two straw stacks, near the machine shed. The stacks are only a few feet apart., but the cyclone took half of one end of the stack, left the other half intact and did not seem to stir a straw on the second stack.

Central States Electric Lines Torn Down In Storm

The storm caused serious damage to the high tension electric lines of the Central States Electric Co, in the northwest part of town when falling trees put the lines out of commission. Linemen from Garner came to Klemme at midnight and cut the wires which were sputtering and flaming and endangering anyone who might come in contact with a live wire. Some poles were broken down and a transformer was damaged. The Electric Co. had men at work in the morning rebuilding the lines and service was established to that part of town in a few hours.

Many of the Koerner tplephone lines were likewise damaged by the storm and service was established as rapidly as lines could be repaired.

Many Fine Shade Trees Go Down In The Storm

Many beautiful trees all over the town were up-rooted, twisted and blown down, and nearly every resident in Klemme had to clear away broken trees and limbs Tuesday morning.

Storm Centered Around Klemme

The storm was not far-reaching and was but slightly felt outside of town. Southeast, in the vicinity of the Herman Schuldt and R. W. Elder farms, only a strong wind was noticed. North of Klemme at the C. J. Krause farm the storm was not noticed. Southwest of Klemme on the John Larsen farm, it was more severe and uprooted some large trees.

This was one of the worst storms Klemme has experienced for a number of years and was a real cyclone in every way. Had the two storm-centers united, Klemme might have suffered more wreckage.

CIVIC AREA DEMAND IS INCREASING

Realty Firm Reports More Deals And Heavier Inquiry From Eastern Arrivals

"That there is a strong demand for real estate near the civic center was proven last week when the Freie Realty Company consummated three deals in excess of $125,000 and a ninety-nine year lease for a consideration of $130,000, according to F. B. Freie.

"He said that in the past thirty days they have had a number of inquiries for property in this setcion from arrivals from the East They declare with all the developments and improvements in this part of the city property will increase in value very rapidly.

"The above firm also purchased 384 acres of land in the Vista irrigation district in San Diego county near Oceanside which they are subdividing in five and ten and twenty-acre tracts with plenty of water piped to each tract, the water being supplied by the Henshaw dam at a very low cost. The soil and frostless climate have proven to be best adapted for avocados, figs, oranges, and winter vegetables E. V. Franke, operating in the Wilshire district for several years, has become associated with the Freie Realty Company."

GRECIAN DANCERS AT THE SESQUI

These dancers have selected for their graceful performance the keystone shaped pool in the court yard of the Pennsylvania State Building at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia, which celebrates 150 years of American Independence. The spot is one of the most beautiful and artistic on the exposition site. The Exposition continues until December 1.

SENIOR CLASS BACK LYCEUM COURSE TO BEGIN SEPT. 27

FIFTY SIX STUDENTS ENROLLED IN KLEMME HIGH SCHOOL

There Are Now Twenty Students In Freshman Class

OTHER NEWS OF OUR SCHOOLS

Besides those reported last week, we have enrolled in our Freshman Class Helen Lemke and Arthur Tibbitts. Both these young people are welcomed to our school for both are students of good industry and good ability. This makes the enrollment in this class 20 in number. There are 15 Sophomores, 10 Juniors and 11 Seniors or at present 56 high school students.

Practically all are now supplied with books and are well started in their subjects. If any others are to enroll this semester or this year they should enroll this week or run the risk of failing to make the regular number of credits.

Gary And Hockey Have Organizations Completed

Mr. Gary has his orchestra going and Mr. Hockey his base ball fellows engaged at regular practice. We believe with these two men leading and with the interest already indicated there will be a good showing in both of these school activities this year.

High School Picnic Enjoyed

The School Faculty and high school students went for some whole some recreation to the Bayside Bathing Beach Tuesday evening of this week and after an hour or two in the lake they removed their bathing suits, donned their street clothes and put on roller skates and perspired freely on the rink near by. All are back at work without loss of time despite the calamities experienced, such as being locked in the bath house, a badly lacerated finger, and sitting in an open car during the storm that broke after most of us were home.

Base Ball Game Here Friday With Goodell

The base ball boys of our high school are out to avenge the defeat suffered at the hands of Goodell last spring and will play like demons here next Friday evening at 4 P. M. We invite all fans for miles around to attend the opening game of the Autumn base ball season.

We very much appreciate the splendid support given our high school games last year and hope this same interest in our school activities may be continued without interruption this year.

Two Day Vacation Next Week

Schols will be closed next week on Thursday and Friday for the County Institute which according to state law forces each member of the faculty to attend. This will furnish parents and pupils an opportunity to attend, without loss of school time, tho County Fair which is to be on at the same time.

P. T. A. Has First Meeting This Year

At the first meeting of the Klemme P. T. A. on last Monday evening the following officers were elected, for president, Ray Jorgenson; for vice-president, Mrs. Leonard Sampson, for secretary, Miss Marie Gauger and for treasurer, Mrs. Lena Schoeder. We believe with these officers the Association work will be well conducted and trust all of our parents who possibly can will become members and make this school year the best possible. This will offer an opportunity for an exchange of ideas as to school improvement in our community and a better understanding of school problems without which misunderstandings arise between parents and teachers. The next regular meeting will be at the school house on October 5th, Tuesday evening.

Senior Class Lyceum Course

Our Seniors have assumed the responsibility of furnishing our community a first class lyceum course of three numbers. They are each numbers that we feel sure will please all who attend. The first is a program by the Larcher Duo, two people who play a number of musical instruments and impersonate. They have been entertaining audiences in both this country and Canada and come highly recommended. They have been coached by the famous Elias Day, probably America's foremost impersonator and dramatic coach. They will be here September 27th.

The second number of the course will be given by Robert O. Briggs or Smiling Bob. Bob sings and plays, draws pictures and cartoons, impersonates funny people he has met from Maine to California and from Dixie to Canada and tells of his funny experiences all over the country. Everybody likes Bob. He comes to entertain Monday evening, Nov. 1.

The third and last number is to be a lecture by Robert L. Kemple, who has been addressing American audiences for several years. His will not be a dry-as-dust lecture but one brim full of interest for everyone present. His lecture is amply long but you'll wish it were longer. If you wish to get rid of the blues, hear Kemple. If you enjoy a good blend of humor and philosophy, entertainment and common sense, hear Kemple. He is a big man with a big message. He closes the course on December 9, a Thursday evening.

We believe the community will enjoy these numbers and that they will be well attended. The Senior class will canvas the town and country adjacent and offer for sale season tickets to the three numbers at the very reasonable price of $1.00 for adults and 75 cents for children. Should there be any surplus left over after the talent has been payed for and local advertising, the Seniors will appropriate it to their graduating expenses which is no small item these days. Everyone should purchase the season tickets and take in all three numbers for it is cheaper to do so and it will insure against a deficit, if enough of such tickets are sold before the first number. Let's us all get together on these three dates and laugh and be well entertained and inspire together.

Single admission tickets will be sold at the door for 50 and 35 cts. But let's all get season tickets, admitting us to all three programs and get each one reserved at Wilson's Pharmacy and if late our seats will be held for us. We can buy the ticket of a Senior, take it to thePharmacy any time after noon Friday, September 24 and get our choice of seats. But take good care of the purchased tickets. They are often lost if carelessly laid away.

Remember the dates, Sept. 27, November 1 and December 9.

CENTRAL STATES GIVEN FRANCHISE TO OPERATE IN KANAWHA

Special Election Held Monday With Large Majority For It

At the special election held at Kanawha Monday, the Central States Electric Company were granted a twenty-five year franchise to operate in the town of Kanawha. The proposition carried by a large majority. There were only 13 votes cast against it and there were 233 voters in favor.

At present the electricity is being supplied from Humboldt, but the Central States will have their lines in operation in sixty days.

The people of Kanawha are not making a mistake by granting the Central States this franchise. The company give excellent service at all times and are always very prompt in establishing service after storms have broken down their lines.

Klemme has been served by the Central States ever since they took over the Iowa Falls system and we can say they have given Klemme the very best of service. The service has been unbroken, with the exception of a few hours only in several years when storms had caused damage to lines, and then the company established service in a short time.

The people of Kanawha will find the Central States Electric Co., a fine company to do business with.

COMPENSATION FOR VETERANS' FAMILIES

Enactment by congress at its session recently closed of the Green bill amending the Adjusted Compensation act will make it possible for dependent relatives of more than 25,000 dead veterans to obtain from the government over a period of the next four years the sum of nearly $12,000,000.

These dependent relatives have hitherto been unable to receive compensation for the death of these men because they had found it impossible to prove to the satisfaction of the government under a strict interpretation of the law made by the comptroller general that they had actually been dependent on the men in the military forces of the country.

A large proportion of those who will benefit by the Green bill, which embodied recommendations for changes in the Adjusted Compensation act suggested by the American Legion, are mothers and fathers of men killed in action.

Under the interpretation placed by the government on the original act, these mothers and fathers had been required to submit long and humiliating affidavits as to their financial condition in order to collect compensation. Many of them, according to Watson B. Miller, chairman of the Legion's national rehabilitation committee, who had an especially active part in obtaining passage of the changes in the law, preferred to undergo hardships rather than submit to this humiliation.

Other benefits to veterans and their dependents from the Green bill will bring the total amount obtained in their interest up to some $13,500,000. This sum is exclusive of the cost of an amendment authorizing payment of $60 cash in a lump sum to dependents or beneficiaries of men killed in action or deceased before discharge.

At the end of the war a $60 bonus was paid to all men in the military forces upon discharge. When the Adjusted Compensation act was passed it was provided that this amount should be deducted from the total which would otherwise have been due the veteran. The law was general in its terms in this clause, and no exception was specifically provided for in the cases of men who, dying before discharge, had never received their bonus. The amendment now enacted remedies this injustice to their dependents, which resulted from an extremely literal reading of the law by the government.

Widows of veterans who died between May 19 and July 1, 1924, without making application for compensation may now apply in their stead, under the Green bill. Two thousand women are expected to benefit by this provision at an estimated cost to the government in excess of $1,000,000.

Payment of $249,526 in 358 cases where a veteran died while his compensation application was in the mail was authorized.

Claims of $108,386 on account of indebtedness to the United States were forgiven to 1,300 veterans.

ROOSEVELT'S OPINION

"ANY man who signs a pledge that he will not enlist or volunteer in the army or navy in the event of war should be promptly disfranchised and then should be sent to the front to dig kitchen sinks, bury dead horses and do other jobs which would relieve brave men of the unpleasant but necessary hard work of a campaign. Pacifists and poltroons would be made of some small use to their country. At present they are none."

That is the opinion, voiced with characteristic vigor, which the late President Theodore Roosevelt expressed of signers of "slacker oaths" and "no-more-war pledges."

It was written in a letter to Mrs. Russell MacLennan, now president of Redondo unit of the American auxiliary at Redondo, Calif. The letter, breathing the fiery spirit of the Rough Rider President, is carefully preserved by Mrs. MacLennan

Signs Up a Grave Digger

Wright Tarbell of Watertown, S. D., champion member-getter of the American Legion, went to a cemetery the other day to arrange for a burial plot for a veteran. There he found a veteran digging graves. He signed him up for the Legion. And then waited while the new member borrowed from the sexton the money to pay his dues.

Pacoima Dam Near Los Angeles Is Being Built

The first concrete in the base of the gigantic $2,000,000 Pacoima dam near San Fernando, Calif., was poured recently. Engineers estimate that the construction will cover more than a year and more than 170,000 cubic yards of cement will be hurtled from the top of the dam through the long pouring chutes. Pacoima dam is one of the most important of the many flood-control projects of Los Angeles county, and when completed will rank as the highest dam in the United States, rising to 395 feet above the flood-threat bed of the river.

The first oil well in Nebraska was found recently in Franklin county, having been located by A. J. P. Bertschy of Omaha with the aid of an electrostatic balance devised by him. He is shown above with the instrument, which he says detects the presence of highly volatile hydrocarbons.

WON'T LOSE FORTUNE

It is not going to cost Marie Kryl, a pianist of Chicago, $100,000 to marry Spiro Hadje-Kryiakso, a titled Greek, this fall. Ten years ago her father, Bohumir Kryl, promised Marie and her sister, Josephine, $100,000 each if they would stay single and study music until they were thirty years old. Three years ago Josephine married Paul Taylor White and forfeited her $100,000, now Marie has announced that she, too, will give up the money for the sake of love. But Papa Kryl has capitulated.

Community Building

Employing Idle Land for Public Forests

Two-thirds of the cities in New York state have started, in one form or another, municipal forests, chiefly on city watersheds, and several already have planted more than 1,000 acres. Some of these forests in addition to the young plantations contain mature trees that may be utilized for lumber and wood. In the Albany city forest, which contains more than 600 acres, a considerable portion of the land is covered with mature pitch pine, a recent survey showed $30,000 worth of lumber for piles besides 2,000 cords of wood.

The conservative commission is receiving inquiries from all parts of the state in reference to the planting of municipal forests by counties, cities, towns, villages and school districts that are considering the use of idle land to grow lumber and wood to meet their local needs. Many cities in Europe have such forests that are more than one hundred years old and are steady sources of revenue. In Switzerland the city of Zurich regularly employs one man for every 33 acres of its forest, and in the winter and times of industrial depression employs more. What Europe has been doing successfully and profitably for two centuries American cities are just beginning to do, and are using for that purpose land not suited to raising agricultural crops, of which there are large areas.

Make Garage Conform to Style of Home

The majority of the houses that are being built today—at least the better houses of today—are being carefully planned and executed so that when finished they are a credit to the neighborhood They will always remain so, for they are not flimsy in construction nor structurally ornate with gingerbread work. In other words, they are planned on conservative lines.

However, even yet, we often find a house that is well built, following some certain type of architecture, such as the English cottage, the Dutch colonial or others equally well known, and this house is really a source of pride to the owner and the whole neighborhood, but many of these same houses have garages on the rear of the lot, simple boxlike structures without thought as to design. These detract from the general appearance of the property.

The garage should harmonize with the house in physical structure and finishing. It costs practically no more to build a garage after the Dutch colonial style than it does to build an ordinary shedlike garage. Trellises may be placed against a garage, adding to its decorative value.

Landscape Planning

In building a new home it is of course important that the landscaping be arranged in keeping with the house. Where the home is pretentious the services of a good landscape gardener are desirable. A good landscape man is an artist who knows how to eliminate the unsightly features of your home and how to accentuate its attractiveness by the use of shrubs, trees and vines, not to say anything about proper grades and terraces. Even in the home of lesser cost and smaller dimensions, such an outlay proves in every case a good investment.

Yet any number of home builders feel that they cannot afford such an expenditure. That may be true in a number of cases where the home purchaser is straining his resources to meet payments. However, that is no reason why such people should not try to make their homes attractive as those owned by people of greater means.

Color Scheme Important

We give scant thought to the colors that we paint our houses, to the tint of the body color, to the contrast of the colors of body, trim and roof, and to the relation of the colors to the surroundings, natural and artificial.

We apparently tell the painter that the house is to be white with green shutters, and accept his idea of the shade of green without considering that it may make the difference between charm and mediocrity. The house of loveliest design may be ruined by inappropriate colors, and color may give distinction and charm to a house that in itself is commonplace in the extreme.—Detroit News.

Home Needs Care

Are you one of those home owners who takes pride in his home and its surroundings and strives at all times to keep it at its highest efficiency and attractiveness? Or are you one who has the mistaken idea that your home will take care of itself without any effort on your part? If you are one of the latter, you are likely to find that your home-owning experience is not going to be as profitable and as satisfactory as you have every right to expect.—Chicago Evening Post.

Sound Waves

The bureau of standards says there are two methods by which sound waves may be neutralized, namely, by interference two waves are combined in such a way as to produce silence. It is necessary in doing this to have both sources of sound coupled in some way. This method, however, could not be used to neutralize a sound the source of which is not under control. The other method of neutralizing sound waves, by absorption, is simply a question of interposing suitable screens of sound-absorbing material. Hair felt is the best sound deadener so far discovered.

I pointed to the legend sprinkling the front page of the Courier. "That—I take it for granted it's your signal for action—and the guard at the door and the other things I've seen. I'm not entirely a fool, perhaps," I added resentfully.

"No," said Marcus in a mollifying tone, "I figured you'd read the signs."

"Well—go on—" I snapped.

"There was a certain party objected to you. Nobody's doubted your squareness," he added, "but it was a delicate question, sort of. You see—we've watched everything closer than you know—he thought you were too—too well acquainted—with a certain other party that some think is not wholly above suspicion—" He stopped.

"Shorty—was it he who objected?" I asked with a flash of intuition.

"I'm not saying it wasn't," replied Marcus.

We were silent for a moment. Marcus never then or thereafter spoke the name of the person under suspicion. I knew. And an illogical, paradoxical feeling of necessity for protecting her—whose slender neck I had choked in imagination but an hour before—prompted me to ask:

"You don't intend—to harm her?"

"We don't harm ladies in this camp," said Marcus. "No. Not ladies. Though there's some women on Pearl street nobody calls ladies who will be traveling to lower altitudes this morning. I want you to understand," he went on, shifting back to my personal considerations, "that it wasn't suspicion of you on the part of the boys. Just delicacy."

Just delicacy! The hot murder within me surged again. This was the crown of her offenses. For I knew that it was more than delicacy—Marcus was simply trying awkwardly to be kind. Of course, if I had the secrets of the vigilance committee I could not be trusted not to tell her . . . she had made a fool of me. . . . But Marcus was talking on; and I, for very shame and pride, was forcing myself to listen, even to make intelligent answers.

"By the time you or anyone else leaves this building, what we're going to do will be public property. I can trust you with most of the rest. That robbery didn't happen spontaneous-like. It was kind of managed."

"What?" I said sharply. "Was it just pretended?" A hope began to dawn in me; a hope which Marcus dashed with his next words:

"It was a robbery, all right. But you see—we needed a kind of dramatic episode—something that would get the whole camp het up, so we'd have public opinion with us. Some of the boys were for waiting—thought it was only a matter of time until something of the kind happened. I wasn't. We had the insiders up to the proper heat. They might cool off if we waited. The wrong people might get killed—and the wrong people hanged. So we arranged—"

"Who is 'we'?"

"Oh, Taylor and Cohen and your friend Buck Hayden and a few others—inside ring, you know—we arranged to inform certain parties just when and how that shipment would reach the bank. It worked. I was sure it would, Taylor and Hutchins showed nerve. Consented to be held up. It was dangerous, of course. If anybody blundered into the picture, one of the bandits might get nervous with his trigger finger. Still, we were looking out pretty careful to see that nobody walked across the stage. There was a man hidden in every cabin along that back alley. We watched 'em when they came in—saw 'em mask—watched 'em come out. They were the people we were after—same outfit that held up the Cottonwood stage twice—same outfit that held up the Stonewall Jackson paymaster."

"Why did you let them go?"

"Dangerous, d—n dangerous, to start a fight there. Probably they'd have got Taylor and Hutchins first crack. Then everybody on Main street would have rushed up to see what the shooting was about. We'd not only have killed a lot of innocent people, but we'd have spoiled the whole beauty of our performance and maybe turned public opinion against us. No, Taylor wouldn't stand for that."

"But he let them get away—with two boxes of gold?"

The face of Marcus broke into a smile and his sharp eyes twinkled.

"I suppose I'm talkin' too much with my mouth," he said. "But there's some things you can't resist. They got away with our hell-box—just that worn-out job-type that I junked last week. Shut up tight in two steel strong boxes. Combination locks. Can't be opened without explosives—we're takin' some risks of losin' our men. But when we do get them, there's no need of any decent citizen getting killed."

"And afterward?"

The smile went from his face, his expression set.

"Lynching," he said. "Trial before a regular miner's court. Open and above board. . . . No masks. Our affair—Cottonwood City." Then, though I said nothing but only sat with my eyes on his face, he broke into self-justification:

"You'd shoot a rattlesnake, wouldn't you? You'd step on a tarantula! Which is better—to string up a set of bandits, or to let a lot more innocent citizens get killed?"

"And if you don't get them?"

"There'll probably be one lynching just the same!"

"Marshal McGrath?" I inquired, throwing out the most natural conjecture.

"Lord Almighty, no!" said Marcus. "That shooting fool! Though he may be among the missing by night," he added cryptically.

I paused before I asked my next significant question:

"Did you—did your people—watch them from the time they entered camp?"

"Yes," said Marcus. A moment of charged, electric silence, and he added:

"You were watching one of them!"

I could get no voice to answer. My eyes still interlocked with his, I nodded.

"I'm sorry, boy," he said, softly for him.

"To h—l with your sympathy!" I exploded so loudly that the printers, busily distributing type, craned their necks at me.

What Marcus might have answered to this, I do not know, for just then Taylor of the bank and Cohen the jeweler pushed through the door. Outside of their conventional business suits, they wore full cartridge belts from which dangled scabbarded .45-caliber revolvers. Drawing Marcus into the single unoccupied corner, they held a close, whispered conference. Glancing round the office, I felt—tension. The printers and Mannie Leaventritt had stopped work, drawn together; with anxious, wondering eyes they were regarding that group in the corner.

So suddenly that we all jumped, Mike the bartender appeared in the doorway.

"The marshal is back. And he's got," he announced.

"Any shooting?" asked Marcus anxiously.

"Not a chance. Boys dropped on him from behind."

"And—?" inquired Marcus. He glanced at the printers, and his lips appeared silently to form a name.

"He's with us," replied Mike.

"Unaccountably, Taylor and Cohen broke into strained, hysterical laughter.

Marcus turned to the carriers.

"Get those papers out on the streets—rustle!" he said. "Let anybody out that wants to go!" he called to the guard at the door. And then to Mike:

"Cut the wolf loose!"

Mike disappeared. There was a moment of silent tension. Then from the street before our office sounded the note of a gong, beaten furiously. The distances gave back an echo of that metallic sound; all quarters of the horizon seemed to be imitating it, as though strong men were hammering every washboiler in camp, every dishpan, every implement capable of imitating a bell.

"Let's look it over—if we get separated, reassemble here in an hour," said Marcus. Taylor and Cohen swung their revolvers to handy positions before their hips and in nervous haste followed Marcus through the door, leaving me alone in the blackness of my own thoughts.

A shuffle of many feet, which evolved from confusion to steady rhythm, sounded on the unpaved roadway without. The printers and even the press-boys were tearing off their aprons, scrambling into their coats, rushing through the doors. Numbly, almost indifferently, I rose and followed; and astonishment lifted me out of myself. Those knots of men whom, when I entered the office, I had marked loafing and whispering along the sidewalk, had crystallized into military formation. Four abreast they stood; and constantly the column grew as more and more shadowy figures emerged from the moonlight, fell into line. While I watched, a file-closer near me took off his wide, black hat, tossed it away—pulled from under his coat the old, slouchy, long-peaked cap of the Civil war, put it on.

I walked round the column. Noncommissioned officers, busily arranging the ranks, shoving the men who carried rifles to the fore, imposing silence, stopped me again and again. Always the answer "Marcus Handy's assistant" gave me passage. A third of these men were wearing either that old Union cap, the black swashbuckling G. A. R. hat or the slouching wideawake of the Confederate army. And the reason for that quiet discipline of this mob-movement began to dawn on me. We were little more than a decade from Appomattox. Scarcely an American in camp beyond his twenties but had wallowed in the trenches of Vicksburg with Grant, dashed north to Gettysburg with Lee, marched through Georgia with Sherman, swept the Shenandoah with Sheridan, or raided Ohio with Morgan. Trained soldiers, they had fallen at command into the old habit of discipline.

A voice low but authoritative sounded from the entrance of the street, where dimly I saw the outline of a man on horseback.

"Right-shoulder—arms!"

As the pieces slashed the moonlight, I could divide the veterans of the war from the young, undrilled recruits by the smart motion with which their guns came up to position. I perceived, too, that the rear ranks carried, instead of rifles, new hickory-wood pick-handles. But every man, whether equipped with gun or club, had a revolver belted outside of his coat.

The camp, before these shadowy instruments of vengeance and grim justice formed in the moonlight, had gone to bed. There was no music in the air, no distant clamor of crowds. Then out of that silence came a woman's scream, a distant, hoarse chorus of male voices. I could see a jerky reflex action in the ranks, heard one or two quick, profane expletives which were silenced, as abruptly as though a sound-proof curtain had been drawn, by the busy noncommissioned officers. A horseman, pulling up at the corner where our little highway joined Main street, made a moving blotch in the night. The other horseman—who seemed to be in command—rode out from the shadows, took the head of the column. And his word of command came out clear and strong, for all Cottonwood to hear:

"Forward—guide left—march!" As he wheeled his horse, his face came out clear in the moonlight, and I recognized him. This was Brown the assayer. I remembered then that he had been a major of cavalry under Sheridan. Feet shuffled; a drum gave a short roll; then began the "Thump, thump, thump-thump-thump" of an army march-step. The column swung left into Main street. I trailed along on the edges. Before Huffaker's hardware store, Major Brown gave the command "Halt." Officers began splitting the column, dividing the riflemen from the pick-handle men. The riflemen, at command, marched on. From the others, a squad fell out of line, broke in the door with half a dozen kicks. Lights came on within; a moment later, the squad emerged with its arms full of assorted rifles, distributing them along the ranks. I became aware, now, of the street. The sidewalks were filling with half-dressed men and women. They spoke in whispers or not at all; and along the gutters walked guards with drawn revolvers, keeping line.

The distant, regular tramping of the riflemen stopped; then changed to irregular foot-beats. Evidently, the focus of interest lay in that direction. I hurried on. Lanterns, backed by reflectors and hung onto the seats or wheels of the wagons which always fringed the Pioneer corral, made a glaring blotch in the moonlight. There, as hazy with shadow yet as definite and characterized as though Rembrandt had painted it, stood the officials of the vigilance committee. Shorty squatted on the ground, his stocky figure hardly less tall than when erect. His face lay in the shadow of his broad hat, but his attitude implied alertness and command. He was pointing to a document. Above him leaned Cohen, his hands resting on his flexed knees, his derby hat pushed back. Buck, Marcus Handy and Myers of the Variety theater stood in conference, central group of the composition. Strung about them, I identified Siegel of the beer-hall, Taylor of the bank, Hutchins his teller, Lockhart superintendent of the Stonewall Jackson.

Round the pole corral, built heavily to resist the rushes of wild horses in process of breaking, ran a circle of riflemen. Hammers sounded; through the slash of light passed two men stringing barbed wire. At one side the remainder of the rifle company kept its column of fours; and as I watched, a squad on some special mission marched away at a quick-step.

Just as I stepped up beside the central group, Shorty and Cohen rose erect, staring. I followed their glance. A company of men was coming round the corner. Some one twisted the reflector behind the lantern. In the circle of light advanced Town Marshal McGrath, handcuffed, a guard holding his arms on either side. Shoulders square, head erect—he was a beautiful figure of defiance.

"Book him, Mr. Cohen," said Marcus in his most matter-of-fact, businesslike tone.

"What charge?" asked Cohen, balancing a pencil above a black notebook.

"I don't know," replied Marcus. "I swear I don't, whether to put you down, McGrath, as an all-round crook or just a d—n fool. Make it 'suspected person' for the present, Mr. Cohen."

But now the marshal had found that splendid singing voice of his.

"D—n you, Handy!" he cried. "This is how you're getting even. You ain't man enough to fight me. You can't fight except in your filthy newspaper—" he choked.

"My way of fighting," replied Marcus cheerfully. "I can't shoot for cold beans, Mr. Ex-Marshal. And now I'm forced to give you some advice by way of saving your life, at least temporarily. This corral is the county jail of the new municipal government. These guards here are armed with rifles containing genuine lead bullets. Their instructions are to shoot anybody who approaches the fence. Chuck him in, boys!" McGrath and his guards became shadows in the darkness beyond the reflector-light; vanished through the latch-gate of the corral.

"May have to hang him anyhow, if he maintains that attitude," remarked Taylor sotto voce.

"Keep the rope dangling over him—he'll be a good boy before we're through," said Marcus Handy.

Another group had come into the light—Conway, guarded by three men. Deeper than ever over his gambler's face lay his mask of inscrutability. And gambler-fashion he bluffed, squaring his shoulders jauntily as he passed these his strange judges. But from stiff lips, which managed nevertheless to achieve a jocular tone, he inquired:

"When does the hangin' commence?"

"You'll have time to think over your sins!" replied Marcus. "Book him as accomplice of thieves and confidence men, Mr. Cohen," and, rattling off the words mechanically, he repeated the warnings and instructions he had given Chris McGrath.

Now the groups were arriving fast, two or three guards to each prisoner. From scattered spurts of conversation, heard then and afterward that night, I learned that the vigilance committee at the first call—issued by runners, within ten minutes after the bank robbers went their way—had raised the curtain on a drama already rehearsed. A squad had dropped into the establishment of every person marked for arrest, loafed on thin excuses until the capture of Marshal McGrath. Then came the signal: beating on tin pans in lieu of a bell. Immediately, the committeemen had drawn, held up the place, secured their man—or woman. Not more than a hundred men had done the whole job; claim owners of Hayden hill, members of the "business element," including the squarer of the saloonkeepers, mine owners and managers from Liverpool hill, a few plain miners. Twenty of the most determined had attended to the Black Jack, center of trouble. Si Conway and his working force were no sooner removed than the committee closed the bar and games, counted and sealed the money on the tables, and opened a recruiting office. Constantly, even at that moment, the squad thrown about the corral was growing as men emerged from the shadows of Main street, gave some password, and fell in.

Next after Si Conway arrived three of his dealers. The first in line, whom I had last seen raking in winnings at the roulette wheel with an air of careless authority, walked on sagging knees as they say men go to the scaffold; his mouth was a slobbering chasm in a waxy face.

"What—are you goin' to do—with me?" he asked in jerks.

"As much as you d—n well deserve, probably," replied Marcus. The sagging form of the dealer vanished; behind him his two companions, maintaining like Conway their gambler bluff, went the same way of mystery. Among the succeeding arrivals were both strangers and acquaintances—sharp-faced batteners on the wages of prostitutes whom I had seen loafing about the entrance to Pearl street, a faro dealer whom "Judge" Colliver the lawyer had got free of cold-blooded murder, and, behind a knot of shuffling men whom I recognized but dimly as faces seen in saloons and dives, Colliver himself. Evidently he had been dragged out of bed; for a red undershirt showed beneath his open overcoat, and his raven-black hair stood up like a mangy hairbrush.

"This illegal proceeding is an outrage, sir," he began. "In the name of the law you are violating—" A dozen angry voices broke in on this; presently Marcus dominated the clamor. "What you've needed for a h—l of a time is a gag," he said. "You'll get it, too, of you don't shut up. Go on inside, and keep away from that fence or you'll die quick."

Round the corner sounded the high-pitched voice of a woman, pouring a steady flow of talk which quavered and shrilled with expletive. Into the light came Red Nell, keeper of the most expensive and notorious "house" in Cottonwood. As she swung out both arms in a vain effort to rid herself of the guards, there was a flash of many diamonds; and the paint on her lips and cheeks, overlaying a face contorted with uncontrolled anger, gave the effect of some grotesque mask. She got one hand loose, and pointed.

"You!" she began, "You, Shorty Croly—you, Izzy Cohen, you—" Her language exploded into filthy epithet. None answered. Even the ready Marcus seemed silenced. But suddenly the brutal and direct Shorty heaved forward his squat frame, laid hands on her, thrust her on. The rest was drowned in the clatter of the latch-gate.

Marcus turned to Taylor.

"That's all, isn't it?"

Taylor consulted the list in his hands.

"Yes, all checked up except—" He broke off there. And, just then, an armed guard in a Union cap emerged from the latchgate into the light.

"That roulette dealer of Si Conway's is beefin' for a preacher," he said.

The group by the wagon wheels exploded into harsh, nervous laughter.

"How 'bout it?" inquired Marcus. "What brand of preacher does the gentleman desire?"

"He's askin' for the Methody—this here Mr. Orcutt."

"What say, boys," inquired Marcus, addressing his fellows, "if we let Mr. Orcutt into the bullpen on condition he don't interfere with municipal affairs?" Silence appeared to give consent.

And then, just as another squad of the armed forces detached itself, wheeled round the corner into Main street, there approached the largest prison gang of all—a dozen disheveled men walking in a hollow square of the Vigilante "troops." These, by one or two recognized faces, I identified as the prisoners from the county jail. It had been cleared. Why? Taylor's remark, "all checked off except—" jumped into memory. In the front of my mind grew the picture of that face for which I had been searching subconsciously as squad after squad of prisoners entered the latchgate. He had not been among them—the man whom I had shadowed to. . . . Save for the criminals from the county jail and perhaps Chris McGrath, those prisoners in the stockade were probably held for the public safety, were merely in process of being frightened half to death that they might accept deportation quietly. The humorous hints of Marcus all pointed to that. But Marcus talking to me in the office, had spoken bluntly of grimmer events to come.

Big "Scoop" Credited to Virginia Gazette

The Virginia Gazette is said to have been the first newspaper issued south of the Potomac river. It was also the first paper to publish the Declaration of Independence. The Gazette was established by a man named Parks at Williamsburg in 1736. It has recently been revived by the William Parks School of Journalism of William and Mary college. As established by Parks the Gazette was a single sheet, 12 by 6 inches, and was sold for 15 shillings a year. The first issue of the new series is in tabloid form and contains 12 pages. According to the first issue of this series, which was prepared by William and Mary students, one of the earliest numbers of the Gazette "scooped the world" on the Declaration of Independence. During the Revolutionary war three papers bearing the name Gazette were published in Williamsburg. One was edited and published by a woman, Mrs. Clementina Rind. She successfully conducted her paper for two years. She is given the credit of being the first woman in the United States to edit and publish a paper.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Woman Invented "Cocktail"?

The origin of the term "cocktail" is not known. The drink is supposed to have been invented by Elizabeth Flanagan, who was the widow of an Irish soldier, who fell in the service of his country. She appears, after his death, to have been a sutler and in that capacity to have followed a troop of Virginia horsemen under the command of Colonel Burr. She took up quarters in the winter of 1779 in a place called "Four Corners." Here she set up a hotel and it was in that hotel that the drink that is known as the cocktail was invented.

Vanity Cost Job

In the old days in the West, when saloons, instead of being blind pigs, were saloons, a circus magician, down on his luck, obtained a job as bartender. One day a traveling conjuror visited the saloon where the magician was employed, and in exchange for a few drinks did a number of tricks. The proprietor was greatly impressed, and, after the conjuror left, remarked, "That was a clever fellow. His coin tricks were wonderful." The magician, who had said nothing of his true profession, but whose pride was now aroused, remarked, "I don't think much of them. I can do better myself." He thereupon took a dollar from his pocket, and made it disappear before the eyes of the proprietor. When he had recovered from his astonishment, the proprietor said, "You're too smart to handle my money. You're fired."—San Francisco Argonaut.

What Is a Diuretic?

People Are Learning the Value of Occasional Use.

EVERYONE knows that a laxative stimulates the bowels. A diuretic performs a similar function to the kidneys. Under the strain of our modern life, our organs are apt to become sluggish and require assistance. More and more people are learning to use Doan's Pills, occasionally, to insure good elimination which is so essential to good health. More than 50,000 grateful users have given Doan's signed recommendations. Scarcely a community but has its representation. Ask your neighbor!

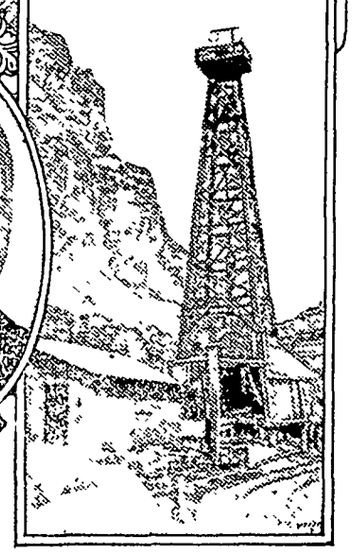
Where the Grand Canyon Is Grandest

World's Premier Scenic Region Suddenly Produces a New Development of the Greatest Economic Interest to the Entire Nation.

U. S. Senator Cameron



Just Room for the Derrick

By JUDSON C. WELLIVER

THE Grand Canyon of the Colorado River, widely regarded as the world's most imposing natural wonder, has suddenly taken on a new and startling interest.

A few years ago, when it was as inaccessible as the North Pole, John Wesley Powell won fame by making the first trip through it. A little later another adventurer conceived opening a trail from the canyon's rim down to the river, a mile below It seemed grotesque, but the impossible was accomplished, and its accomplishment has made the canyon's innermost wonders accessible to thousands of tourists each year. They come from all quarters of the world every season in greater numbers to traverse the Bright Angel Trail. That trail is truly a monument to the daring and devotion of its builder. He worked at it for ten years, almost without help or financial backing, at one period spending almost half a year alone in the vast gorge. But today Ralph Cameron, builder of the Bright Angel Trail, occupying a seat in the United States Senate voted to him by the people of Arizona, has his reward.

Greatest Artificial Lake

But the conquest of the canyon had hardly been realized when the engineers discovered a new use for it. At Boulder Canyon, Arizona, the greatest dam in the world, a third of a mile high should impound a lake which, spreading over a great area in Arizona and Utah would be, next to Lake Michigan, the largest fresh water body entirely within the United States. Passed to mighty turbines, the water falling hundreds of feet, would produce a power greater than Niagara, and irrigate an area several times that of the Nile Basin, which served for uncounted centuries as granary of the ancient world

The Boulder Canyon dam has not yet been built, but the people of the Southwest are as confident of its construction as that the Colorado will continue to flow between its giant walls

Now comes a new chapter in the romance of the Colorado. The intrepid "wildcatters" of the oil industry, scouting for new sources of petroleum, have brought in an oil well right in the canyon! Drilling from a narrow shelf at the gorge's bottom, they have overcome unbelievable obstacles. Perpendicular walls of rock grimly forbade construction of road or trail to transport machinery and supplies. From the river a succession of rock walls rise in gargantuan terraces to a height of 3.000 feet.

The "Great American Desert"

The little Mormon town of Moab, eighteen miles up-stream, is the nearest supply base. But Moab is not a railroad town; a drive of forty miles is still required to reach the Denver & Rio Grande railroad. Salt Lake City is 250 miles away, to the northwest.

Standing at the foot of the derrick which marks the site of the new oil well, one's back is fairly against an 800 foot cliff, which is matched by another immediately across the river. Looking up, one imagines that if he could climb one of these walls he would be "outside." But, trying this, he finds himself on a plateau or terrace, with another cliff a little way ahead. To climb this, in turn, would only bring him face to face with still another cliff and so on till he had mounted full 3,000 feet from the river

Not only must this succession of cliffs be mounted, but to traverse the rock terraces, gashed and torn is only less difficult And finally, the ascent to the outer rim accomplished, one confronts a waste of ridged, seamed and boulder-strewn desert, endless save for distant mountain peaks

Manifestly the oil "wildcatters" could not make roads, so they built a flat-bottomed boat and floated down from Moab It was a daring performance, for the stream twists constantly; unseen rocks and shifting bars add to its difficulties, and the canyon's perpendicular walls threaten instant wreck.

But it was done. Materials were brought, a derrick reared, machinery placed, a camp built and drilling begun. Now, with oil flowing from a depth of 2,035 feet, the Crane Creek well is suddenly the wonder of the whole intermountain country.

A Maze of Difficulties

Just about a year from the beginning of drilling the well began to flow, with every indication that when the drill goes somewhat deeper into the producing sand it will be an important producer. For the present, drilling has been suspended, awaiting provision for taking the oil away. It is doubtful if in all the history of the 600,000 wells that have been drilled in this country, largely in regions difficult of access, any one has ever presented such a category of obstacles as this canyon well in Utah. How the oil will be transported to a refinery is still sheer guess work, but a way will be found, for the ingenuity and resources of the oil engineers have never failed

The "bringing in" of this well illustrates the difficulty of petroleum development Convinced that the geological structure was particularly favorable, the projectors determined to gamble $75,000 on drilling. Before they got oil they had spent more than twice that

For years wells have been drilling in various parts of the state—fully 200 in all—at a cost of probably $5,000,000, and this canyon well is the first real producer! It is only by dint of such persistence in coping with natural obstacles and financial hazards that the country's supply of oil is maintained. The first oil well in Western Pennsylvania became a producer at the depth of 69½ feet. Nowadays wells a mile deep are not uncommon, and they have gone down as far as a mile and a half

Every Well Is a Gamble

A large proportion of wells produce nothing whatever and represent total loss. It was recently estimated that in the last twelve and a half years $1,200,000,000 was sunk in wells which were failures Despite every effort of science, engineering and long experience, and notwithstanding the stupendous depths now reached, 25 per cent of wells last year were dry

The "wildcatter" is the Columbus of oil. He is to petroleum, to gasoline, to the fuel supply of the country's 20,000,000 automobiles, what the old time gold prospector was to building the empire of the far west. He is essentially a gambler; good loser or good winner The lure of enormous winnings keeps him tirelessly searching, and sometimes he finds his reward. But in the aggregate, offsetting all winnings against the total cost of this engrossing gamble, it is not improbable that all the oil that has been taken from the soil of this country from the beginning cost more than its producers got for it.

A World in the Big Game

But their huge gamble is the basis on which the whole industry rests The ice-bound Arctic and the fever-festering tropic jungles alike attract the hardy "wildcatter" To them the world owes its newest and best in transport by land, sea and air. They help light its homes and streets, provide an astonishing share of its power, furnish an endless list of necessaries which are by products of petroleum. The "wildcatter" is well nigh the Atlas of this modern mechanized world.

MORE ABOUT THE SURPLUS IOWA APPLE CROP

Ames Writes Arthur Wellemeyer How To Make Vinegar And Sterilized Apple Cider

According to information just received from the Iowa State College, it appears that the Iowa apple crop amounts to between three and four million dollars per year, and the pity of it is that half of this apple crop is wasted.

Several of our customers who have experimented in the making of vinegar on the farm have complain- that that it takes from 2 to 3 years to generate vinegar.

Ames says that cellar temperatures are too cool; a warmer room would be better, say at a temperature of from 50 to 80 degrees. Under these conditions your cider will turn to vinegar in from 6 to 8 months Others of our customers say that their home made vinegar is lacking in strength. Ames says that weak vinegar is the result of using dirty utensils.

Following are the suggestions sent by Ames.

Arthur Wellemeyer.

HOW TO MAKE CIDER VINEGAR

The most important and most necessary point in making cider vinegar is to use clean utensils and barrels. Old vinegar barrels or other containers, as well as the cider press, harbor all kinds of fementing bactria and molds unless they have been properly cleaned and sterilized. If th fresh cider is contaminated with these bacteria and molds, the resulting fermentation is likely to be of the wrong kind and part of the sugar is likely to be changed into products of no value, instead of alcohol and acetic acid. Thus the vinegar will never reach a high enough acid content for satisfactory use or sale.

The cider press should be scrubb d with soap and warm water, thoroly rinsed and scalded with boiling water. Other dishes should be well cleaned and the barrels should be thoroly cleaned and then scalded with boiling water or, if possible, sterilized with steam.

The apples should be sound, not rotten; if frozen, they should be used before they begin to spoil. The juice pressed out should be filtered thru clean muslin into claen barrels or jars. Cover the bung-holes of the barrels with cheese-cloth or muslin tightly tacked down to keep out flies Jars or large earthenware crocks might be used instead of barrels if they are well covered so that contamination by means of vinegar flies is impossible.

According to our experience the vinegar can be left in the same container thruout the whole fermentation and is best oft undisturbed. If the thick film of vinegar bacteria which floats on top is disturbed and sinks, a new film forms, probably delaying the process of fermentation The more important objection to this occurrence is that the sunken film is often subjected to a different kind of fermentation, in the absence of air, which uses up some of the sugars and produces a disagreeable flavor.

The most active part of the fermentation, accompanied by rapid production of carbonic gas, takes place during the first two weeks The cloth allows the passage of the gas wihout the possibility of contamination. After the first fermentation is over and the acetic acid formation has begun, the free passage of air into the barrel is still necessary in order to furnish oxygen for the second step in the fermentation, namely, the formation of acetic acid from the alcohol. Other forms of bacteria which produce acetic acid directly from the sugar are also present and are aided by the presence of oxygen.

The fermenting vinegar should be kept, if possible, at a temperature averaging about 65 to 70 degrees F This is warm enough to gain some advantage in time over the rate of fermentation at ordinary cellar temperature, but it is not so warm as to be unsafe with respect to unfavorable fermentations. The barrels or other containers should be protected from dust and remain absolutely undisturbed for about five o six months. At the end of that time a sample may be taken, using care to avoid contaminating the vinegar, and sent to the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station at Ames for determination of acidiy. This is a simple test and can be done for people of this state who make vinegar at home acccording to these directions.

When the amount of acetic acid in the vinegar has increased to about 4 to 7 percent the fermentation is complete. The vinegar may be drawn off into other barrels which have been thoroly cleaned, as described above, filling the barrels or other containers full and corking them up tight. The vinegar should be filtered thru clean muslin or cheese-cloth in making this transfer, and it would be well to give t a furher opportunity to sele and get rid of all sediment. Then, if it is tightly corked so that air cannot pass into the container, no further fermentation will go on and the vinegar should keep perfectly. Under these conditions it also improves somewhat in flavor if stored for a few months.

STERILIZED APPLE CIDER

Sort the apples carefully and throw out all wormy, rotten ones Wash thoroughly before pressing As soon as the juice comes from the press, strain thru two or three thicknesses of cheese cloth and run into bottles or jars. Be sure to leave a small air space in each bottle or jar so that the liquid may have room to expand when heated Cap the bottles and seal the jars, then sterilize in hot water at 160 degrees F for 30 minutes. If the temperature goes higher, the cider may have a scorched or burned taste and should be used as boiled cider.

After sterilizing store the product the same as canned fruit. If a light, clear cider is wanted, treat product the same as above and allow to settle, then filter by use of cotton filter or filter paper, rebottle and sterilize the same as above

And There's A Good Western On For Friday And Saturday Nights Of This Week

The bewildering maze of intrigue that held the world in its grip during the Great War, while diplomats, secret agents, officers of the armies and navies of all nations vied with one another in the great game of wits behind the flaming barriers of the trenches, forms the vivid background of "Secret Orders," Evelyn Brent's newest melodrama which is to be shown at the Idle Hour theatre Tuesday and Wednesday night Sept. 14-15. The first show at 7:30. In addition to the feature will be a snappy comedy, "Goat's Whiskers."

Real Western For Friday And Saturday Nights

A real son of the open ranges in a real Western story. That briefly tells the theme of all the Bob Custer productions, the latest of which, "No Man's Law," comes to the Idle Hour Friday and Saturday nights of this week, Sept. 10 and 11.

A point in which Mr. Custer's newest vehicle differs from many of the past in its comedy elements. The humor of the story is stressed. It has vigor, too, but the comedy highlights are doubtless the phases which will be longest remembered by those who see it.

Custer's rise to stardom has been amazingly swift. A green youth off the ranges a little more than a year ago, he has surged into the front ranks of Western screen headliners. Don't fail to see this excellent picture Friday and Saturday nights. A good comedy has also been booked, "Roll Your Own." It's full of good laughs.

M. E. CHURCH RECEPTION FO RTEACHERS FRI. NIGHT

Tomorrow evening, at the Parish House, the members of the Methodist Church will hold a reception for the teachers of the Klemme Schools.

If there are any who have children in the Sunday School and who have not been personally invited, we want these parents to come anyway. The invitation is extended to all.

ALMOST YELLED

Just before a Scotchman and his wife started for their first airplane ride, the aviator bet the man $10 he could make him yell. The bet was on and the airman looped the loop, flew his machine upside down, nose-dived 'neverything.

When they landed the aviator shook the Scotchman's hand and congratulated him on being such a brave man.

"Yes, but I nearly screamed when my wife fell out," the canny Scott replied.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

This windy corner of the Main Drag had a lot of competition Tuesday night when the cyclone struck. We ventured forth, clad in pajamas and a rain coat to sack up some of the wind going to waste. All we got was a lot of rain down our neck and a cussing from the better half for getting our feet wet. But, say, wouldn't all that wind have made a peach of a column?

Thompson, the manager of the Idle Hour had a full house Saturday night to his picture show. There was "S R O"—standing room only and many bought tickets and stood up anyway We would advise the movie fans to go early so they won't get in on the S. R. O Thompson is going to have good shows here every week, on Wednesday and Saturday night regularly, and perhaps a few nights sprinkled in between.

And ju t as we were out of plums along comes our old friend Bill Schlawin with a great big bucket full and toi l us to stuff some down our necks and cut out some of the wind Bill gave us enough to choke a cyclone and right now we are faring highly on plum butter, plum jell, plum pudding, and plum foolishness

Ed. Jacobs the hardware dealer on the Main Drag. is going to pull off some kind of a chicken demonstration September 15th and has rented the Idle Hour theatre We got all excited when Ed mentioned "chicken," but he informed us it was for the feathered variety. Well, we don't know what it's all about but if you are raising chickens or pigs we would advise you to take it in And, the admission charge is absolutely free You might read Ed's ad in this issue It will tell you more about it.

Supt Penrod got into a tight place Tuesday evening over at Clear Lake. He was in company with the high school kids on their picnic and all had tarried to enjoy a swim at the beach Everybody got out of the bath-house after the swim and the manager there had visions of a hot supper at home and wanted to lock up He presumed everybody was out Soon a couple of young men heard someone yelling and pounding on the wall It proved to be Penrod It was impossible to pry the door open to let him out He finally managed to push a screen off a small window and squeeze himself thru the small opening And, of course, Mr Penrod being Irish, he saw the funny side of it—that is, after awhile

W F. Pavey, of the Stormizing Shop, has further added to his good equipment of tools, a ten foot lathe, eighteen inch swing, and all cutting tools with it Wallace has not had time to get the outfit belked up and running but expects to in a short time With the new equipment he will be able to turn out everything from a wooden leg for a one-eyed mosquito to a drive shaft for a locomotive whistle, and all sizes in between Yes sir!

Quite a number of the cranberry peddlers and others along the Main Drag are taking, or did take in, a few days at the Minnesota State Fair Among those who are celebrating with snoose chewing Scandihoovians are, Chris Gram, of the Ford Garage, and wife; Frank Kluckhohn, of the general store, and his wife; W. C Keraus, of the Wellemeyer Store, and wife; C G Waterman, of the First National, and his wife and daughter Chris can get by all right with the Norwegians, "Bally" can qualify as he can eat snoose with the best of them. C. G looks like one and he can get by, and if Bill Keraus would dye his hair light, leave off his specs and learn to say WHAA? he can hobnob with the rest of them.

And here's one we swiped from a school kid who wrote the following composition for his grammar class: "CATS—Cats that's meant for little boys to maul and tease are called Maltease cats. Some cats is reckernized by how quiet their purs is, and these is named Persian cats. Cats with bad tempers is called Angoria cats, and cats with deep feelings is called Feline cats. I don't like cats."

Don't forget the Hancock County Fair next week, Sept. 14, 15, 16, 17. Tuesday is entry day, and all the others are have-a-good-time days. This will be absolutely the biggest fair in Hancock County this year. Sure Plan to go at least one day. All the school kids can go next Friday as there won't be any school And that's all because Co. Supt. J. R. Baggs can remember he was once a boy himself. He has arranged to have institute then so the school kids could go to the fair. John is a regular feller! Oh, yes, we forgot to mention that there will be no school on Thursday either, better yet!

Haven't had any contributions to the Main Drag this week. Shoot your stuff along, we need it!

And after the storm was all over Tuesday night and the wind had quit whistling thru his whiskers, "Heinie" Suckow lit a cigar and said, "I feel like a millionaire, yep! 1 per cent million and 99 percent air."

BREAKING IT GENTLY

Foreman: "Pat, go tell Mrs. Murphy about her husband's fatal accident; break the sad news to her very gently."

Pat (arriving at the Murphy home): "Hello, widow Murphy!"

Mrs. Murphy: "I'll have you to understand Mr. O'Brien, that I be no widow."

Pat: "Faith, and ye wait til ye see what they be bringing on the stretcher and ye'll change your mind."

LIVELY VOLCANO ON UNCLE SAM'S DOMAIN

But Old Gentleman Cannot Control Mauna Loa.

It is one of the United States' own volcanoes, Mauna Loa, on the island of Hawaii, that is on a rampage in the mid-Pacific. Mauna Loa is almost ten thousand feet higher than the Italian Vesuvius and four thousand feet higher than the Sicilian Etna; were it not on a small and sparsely settled isle its present titanic display would have done greater damage and caused more serious concern throughout the world than it has.

However, it shot its columns of flames high into air, blanketed the Hawaiian landscape with great clouds of smoke and rolled its streams of lava down unpeopled slopes. The only witness to its outbreak were passengers on an inter-island steamboat and a few frightened islanders. It buried beneath its river of molten fire only one native village; it took no toll of human lives.

Mauna Loa has been an active volcano as long as man can remember it. In an island group of many volcanic mountains it held the distinction of being the highest volcano in the Pacific. It is only about five thousand feet less in altitude than the loftiest volcanic peaks of South America and only three thousand feet under the height of famous Popacatepetl of Mexico. Mauna Loa is in about the center of its island.

Within a radius of ten miles are the volcanic mountains of Mauna Kea and Kusani, the extinct crater of Hualalia and the almost constantly active and more famous Kilauea.

Mauna Loa's last previous serious outbreak was in 1885, when its flow of lava came within five miles of Hilo, the most important port of the island. Five years before was its most destructive outburst in the memory of the white inhabitants of the Hawaiian islands. At that time it was feared that Hilo was doomed; the river of molten lava came within a half mile of the town and, according to native belief, was halted by the intercession of the Hawaiian goddess of the subterranean fires.

In 1916 the government did Mauna Loa a good turn by making it the principal attraction in a national reservation and including Kilauea and some minor peaks in its realm.—New York Sun.

Fruit Juices for Health

In England many people go on fruit juice diets for health, and report amazing results. The juice of three or four oranges is heated by the addition of boiling water and the mixture is taken hot three times a day. After three or four days of this diet lemon, grape-fruit juices or sweet cider are substituted by way of variety No solid foods are taken.

During the first two or three days extreme hunger is felt, after which the fruit juices seem to satisfy all the cravings of the body for food. According to the reports from England, the fruit-juice diet has been maintained for 80 days with beneficial results, particularly in eliminating superfluous fat.—Thrift Magazine.

Egret Species on Increase

Because of its popularity with women, the white egret was at one time threatened with extermination.

The government took drastic steps to stop the slaughter of the mother birds on the nest—the wavy white plumes are then at their best—and now they are staging a comeback in Florida, according to latest reports from a reputable source.

Although the marshlands are being reduced in the development of Florida, wild life under protection is definitely on the increase in Florida and southern Georgia. Up until two years ago the outlook for the egret was discouraging. This year there is a definite increase among these and other varieties of herons.

Auto for Tiger Hunt

Motor expeditions against tigers are planned by an Indian prince, who has had a special automobile built for the purpose, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. One of its principal features is a sliding door in the top, permitting the hunter to stand on the seat and shoot at the game through the roof. The front seats are of the "fly-up" kind, for quick exits or entrances, and between the rear seats is a cabinet. A dickey seat on the rear is intended to carry two natives. The body is of polished aluminum, and there are five headlights, a powerful searchlight, two lamps at the rear and a bell warning signal.

Turkey Taxes Amusement

An amusement and consumption tax law, adopted by the grand national assembly of Turkey, became effective May 1, according to a report received from Trade Commissioner Julian E. Gillespie, Constantinople. The tax will be borne by the customer who obtains food, refreshment or amusement at hotels, restaurants, beer halls, cabarets, moving picture theaters and similar places.

Explaining Static

Stripped of technicalities, static is a natural atmospheric interference observed in sending or receiving by radio. It is caused by stray natural electrical discharges. They are more prevalent by day than by night, and are more troublesome in summer than in winter. Science is working toward a method of harnessing them.

Mania for Collecting Takes Strange Forms

Rich men are often ardent collectors. Their fancy may lead them into philately, numismatics, bibliomania, art or it may wreak itself on humbler articles. Even for an old piece of glass or a historic watering trough they will pay big prices if the desired object completes a collection.

When they die and their heirs sell their treasures, the rush that other enthusiasts make for the prizes is understandable. To the philatelist a comb-back Windsor chair is simply something to sit on while he looks at stamps, but to the collector of Colonial furniture it is a precious gem.

In the yearning of such individuals for certain possessions there is no mystery, but it is puzzling to see ordinary citizens squabbling over sink strainers and tea kettles at an auction just because they once belonged to a rich man. What unfathomable motives drive a housewife to bid up the price of a food chopper? What magic properties attach to a millionaire's butcher knife? If the purchaser pays several times the market value for it she surely will not put it to ordinary uses. It should be venerated like a relic of a saint and hung in the place of honor with a blue ribbon on it. Perhaps the new owner regards it as a shrewd investment. Duplicates could be cheaply bought and spurious relics have been known to bring as high prices as have genuine.

The impulse referred to is hardly like the mother's comprehensible instinct to preserve her baby's worn shoe. It is more nearly related to the human failing which made it necessary for old Delmonico's to replenish the stock of teaspoons every six months. Part of it springs from the perverse pleasure of paying more for something than it is worth.

Like Jane Carlyle's simple housemaid, many people make the cost the only standard of value. Their cry of admiration, like hers, is "How expensive!" For those to whom a kitchen utensil is merely a thing to cook with, the spectacle of bidders paying three times the asking price is comic. It lacks only the auctioneering Marx brother to make it complete.—New York Times.

Hell Gate Power

The size of some of America's great electric power stations can be appreciated from the fact that one plant alone—the Hell gate station in New York city—produces more energy than all the plants of Greece, Denmark, Latvia, Yugo-Slavia, Poland, Hungary, Norway, Rumania, Turkey, Switzerland, Sweden and the Netherlands. These countries have a combined population of 109,000,000 people whereas the Hell gate plant provides but about one-fifth of the electric current consumed by the city of New York alone with its approximate 6,000,000 inhabitants. The annual output of the plant is now about 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours each year. No other steam-operated station in the country equals this, though there are some building which will rival it.

No Time to Lose

The man and the girl stood entranced at the scene. It was the Lake district and—the third day of their honeymoon.

"Darling," she whispered, "isn't this heavenly?"

Her husband sighed.

"Do you know," he exclaimed, "life doesn't seem long enough for our happiness. Just think, even if we are fortunate, our married life can hardly last longer than 50 years."

"Is that all?" she queried, edging closer.

"Yes. Only 50 years in which to love each other."

"Then kiss me quickly, dear," she said; "we're losing time!"—London Answers.

Home of French Royalty

The famous palace of the Tuileries is in Paris. This structure which derived its name from the tile-kilns (Fr. tuileries), that formerly occupied its site, was commenced by Catherine de Medici in 1564, continued by Henry IV and completed by Louis XIV. The palace was sacked by the revolutionary mob in 1792, 1830, 1848 and 1870, and was almost destroyed by fire set by the Commune in 1871. Napoleon I., Louis XVIII, Charles X, Louis Philippe, and Napoleon III, all resided at the Tuileries. Its union with the Louvre, which adjoined it, was accomplished by Napoleon III in 1852-56. The gardens of the Tuileries, west of the palace, are ornamented with trees, flowers, fountains and statuary.

Poor Prospect for Mother

Electric Service at Pole

The penetration of electric service into the polar region aided both Amundsen and Byrd in their recent successful attempts to fly over the North pole. Electric light furnished at Kings bay, Spitzbergen, enabled the crews of aids to erect the Amundsen hangar for the Norge (pronounced in two syllables with a hard g) and helped Byrd's men handle materials about that intrepid flyer's base

Work, forgetting all responsibility of time, appreciation or censure; enjoy it or make believe you do, and in time you really will. TASTY TIDBITS

When there are several pieces of cheese going to waste, grate them and add to boiling hot cream, stir until the cheese is dissolved, add paprika and cayenne and pour into cream cheese jars. The cheese will be creamy and delicious.

Cheese Salad.—Take a cream cheese or two, add thick sweet cream to soften, mix well and add chopped chives, green pepper and nuts. Make into balls and serve with a good boiled dressing on lettuce. Cottage cheese enriched with cream and served with dressing on lettuce makes a fine salad.

Olive Salad.—Peel olives, remove the stones, then roll them up over blanched almonds. Cover with french dressing and a handful of chopped mint. Let stand overnight to season. Drain in the morning and add fresh mint. Serve on head lettuce with thick mayonnaise.

Banana Cream.—Slice three ripe bananas, press through a sieve, add a box of ripe crushed berries, reserving some of the juice; mix lightly with enough powdered sugar to sweeten and set aside to chill. Serve in sherbet cups with sweetened whipped cream and some of the berry juice on top.

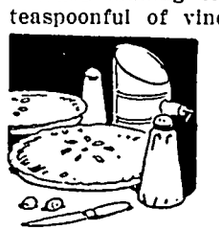
The orange is rich in vitamines and is given early to the small baby, between feedings, always straining the juice. They are rich in sugar, have salts of high value while the flavor is especially attractive. Taken at night they are especially good for constipation. A glass of orange juice can be taken by the most delicate stomach and is especially recommended for biliousness.

Dredge the tenderloins with flour, season well and brown in a hot frying pan, turning often to keep from scorching, then cook slowly until cooked to taste. Baste during the cooking. Serve rare with baked bananas.

Fruit Ice Cream.—Take the juice of three oranges, three lemons, three bananas mashed and put through a sieve, add one or more cupfuls of sugar and a quart of thin cream. Freeze as usual.

Choice Recipes.

When making blueberry pie add a teaspoonful of vinegar or a handful of seeded unripe grapes, a tablespoonful of molasses, sugar to sweeten and a teaspoonful of butter. Wrap a two-inch strip of white cloth around the pastry after wringing the cloth out of cold water. This will keep the juices from running from the pie. Remove as soon as the pie is baked.



Dream Pie.—Whip the whites of four eggs very stiff, add four heaping tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, and beat again, add four more tablespoonfuls of sugar and beat until well mixed, then fold in one pint of berries (if canned, drain). Pour this mixture into a hot baked pastry shell and leave in irregular mounds. Bake until brown.

Butterscotch Cake.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one cupful of sugar, when well mixed add two egg yolks, beat well, then add two-thirds of a cupful of milk slowly, beating well. Sift two cupfuls of flour with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, add to the first mixture. Add a teaspoonful of vanilla and fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of the eggs. Bake in layer tins in a moderate oven. For the icing boil two cupfuls of light sirup, one-half cupful of butter and one-half cupful of milk until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Cool without stirring. When it is almost cold spread over the layers and top of cake. Decorate with halves of nutmeats.

Pecan Pie.—Mix one cupful of sugar and three-fourths of a cupful of sirup, add three eggs, one at a time, beating thoroughly after each egg is added; next add one-half cupful of butter melted, and one cupful of coarsely chopped nutmeats. Pour into a rich pie crust and bake one and one-half to two hours. Have the oven very hot the first few minutes to bake the crust, then lower the heat and bake slowly.

Ice Box Pudding.—Take one pound of vanilla wafers, one can of shredded pineapple, one cupful of nutmeats, one-half pound of butter, four eggs and two cupfuls of sugar. Cream the sugar and butter thoroughly, then add eggs one at a time; beat twenty minute. Put nutmeats and wafers through the meat grinder. Make alternate layers of the nutmeats and wafers with the pineapple and cream filling until all is used. Let stand in the ice box for twelve hours. Serve with whipped cream.

Nellie Maxwell

Rich Embroidered "Coolie" Coat; School Dress of Woolen Plaid

FROM the extreme of simplicity, the world of fashion is turning its attention to modes of more sophisticated type. This fact is being verified through the first showings of autumn and winter-style collections. Every detail of the newer costumes shows it, from our hats, which are being more elaborately created every minute, to our shoes, which are taking on a super-ornateness. And as to jewelry! Barbaric splendor marks the ear pendants, necklaces and "slave" bracelets which fashion dangles before us.

Wonder if little folks realize what a furore of excitement they are stirring up in fashion circles, just about now. And all because "first day of school" is at hand and oh me, oh my, what heaps of good-looking clothes it is going to require for the weeks and months to follow.

One thing is encouraging, the new bright plaid flannels, said to be in the very top notch of fashion, are certainly going to do a powerful bit in making it easy for mothers to plan little daughter's school dresses.

Beautiful Oriental Garment.

In the creation of our lingerie and negligees, frocks and wraps and overblouse tunics, it would seem, as if not only fabric elegance was never so accented, but as if the artcraft of every nation had been called upon for its best and most beautiful specimens of handiwork.

One of the most interesting departures into the realm of embroidered garments is the coolie coat, such as shown in the picture. Its uses are versatile. While it serves admirably as a handsome "at home" negligee, if milady chooses to call upon it to play the part of an opera wrap de luxe, it will yield most gracefully to the occasion. These beauteous oriental garments are styled of rich satin canton and are to be had in exquisite colorings both dark and light, with a preference for black.

No less beautiful than the embroideries from oriental countries are the brilliant shawls from sunny Spain. These are finding place in the wardrobe of the majority of women of fashion. If not a mammoth square silken shawl, at least a wide evening scarf embroidered and befringed a la Espagnole.

Perhaps the most unique application of native embroidery themes is finding expression in the new separate tunic blouse, which is vivaciously colorful and is expected to be worn over a velvet skirt made in tiers scalloped or plain. These striking tunics are of fascinating styling in that sleeves, front openings and necklines show artful needlecraft of mayhap Spanish, Japanese, Chinese, Russian or Czecho-slovakian inspiration.

With materials decided upon, the next move is for "ideas." It is going to be no trick at all to find them this season. Why this season any more than any other? Well, just this. We are going to borrow them from the grown-ups. In other words fashion decrees that little folks' frocks adapt the style details of adult mode in belts, vestees, collars and in other various ways. Of course they must be changed sufficiently to effect the simplicity of childhood, and the latest juvenile style displays assure that this is being successfully accomplished.

One of the details which will feature children's frocks will be belts of leather or self-fabric on both one and two-piece models. The new plaid dresses are of very smart appearance when accompanied by a narrow gilded leather belt. And are the children going to like to wear these new silver or gold kid belts with a sure-enough buckle? Ask the first little girl you meet.

Child's Frock Simple, but Pleasing.

Oh, yes! about the new sleeves, some of them will have wrist ties as a sleeve finish, just like mother and big sister wear. Then, too, there will be little vestees studded with rows of tiny buttons, if you please, and scarf collars and oh! just too many new "wrinkles" to enumerate in the limits of this article.

In regard to the plaid dress here pictured, note the turnover collar, the blouse effect, the buttons and the piping of contrasting color—all important style details.

When you buy a car on credit

When you buy a General Motors car on credit, you may be sure that the purchase plan is as dependable as the car itself.

The purchase plan offered by General Motors dealers is another way by which you secure greatest value for every dollar you spend for a General Motors car.

This is the GMAC Plan, operated by a member of the General Motors family. It combines sound credit practice with very low cost.

The General Motors line is a complete line—"a car for every purse and purpose." And under the GMAC Plan, purchase may be arranged according to the circumstances and assured income of individual buyers.

ROAD BUILDING

FEDERAL AID FOR HIGHWAYS CERTAIN

Construction work on the national system of interstate and transcontinental highways is now financed for another three years as the result of the recognition by congress of the federal government's obligation to support financially these recognized means of communication and transportation.

Passage of the Dowell bill, authorizing appropriations of $165,000,000 for federal-aid highways for the two-year period ending June 30, 1929, definitely assures the Middle West the financial assistance necessary to permit the continuation of the program of highway construction laid out. Money from previous appropriations is now available for use of the states during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927.

"The overwhelming support given the Dowell bill when it passed the senate with only six opposing votes, definitely establishes the federal-aid principle in highway construction, and is practical assurance that when the funds now appropriated are exhausted, congress will continue appropriations until the federal-aid highway system is completed," according to a statement issued by Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club.

The Dowell bill authorizes appropriations of $75,000,000 annually for federal-aid highways for each of the fiscal years, 1928 and 1929, and also provides appropriations of $7,500,000 annually for each of these two years for national forest roads and trails.

Reviewing the campaign which has been carried on for the past year to secure the continuation of the federal government's support in highway building, Mr. Hayes declares that passage of the Dowell bill by the senate concludes one of the greatest good roads campaigns carried on by the organized motorists of the country. He commended particularly the efforts of the American Automobile association which has worked in close co-operation with its 810 affiliated clubs in developing public sentiment to the Dowell bill so effectively that it passed the house without a dissenting vote and was approved by the senate with only six contrary votes.

"Passage of this measure, which is the life blood of highway construction in the western states, was not secured without a great deal of organized effort on the part of the motor clubs affiliated with the A. A. A," Mr. Hayes declared "Owing to a misconception of the federal-aid principle, strong political opposition to the Dowell bill developed during the past year in certain states.

"Following passage of the bill in the house, an attempt was made by opponents of the measure to defeat it by permitting it to die on the senate calendar. However, through the efforts of the A. A. A. and affiliated motor clubs, consideration of the measure was secured, and its passage by an overwhelming vote followed a short debate on the floor of the senate."

General Pershing Is in Favor of Good Highways

Probably no testimony would carry more weight as to the importance of good roads in the nation's defense scheme than that of Gen. John J. Pershing, commander of the World war and until recently chief of staff of the United States army.

Looking over the records, the American Automobile association finds that General Pershing testified before the senate committee on post offices and post roads as follows:

"The country roads will be of tremendous value in time of war. The roads must be relied on to obtain the needed food supplies."

Ever since the co-operative work began on the building of the federal aid highways, all roads constructed with federal funds have been required to be built so that the culverts and bridges shall be constructed to meet the requirements of the army.

Good Roads Hints

The bureau of public roads predicts that the United States will have twice as many automobiles in 1930 as it had in 1925.

Fairy Story—"Once upon a time there was a state government which experienced very little difficulty in raising highway funds and disbursed them in a manner which was eminently satisfactory to all concerned."

A total of $14,500,000 will be available for new road construction in Michigan during the coming fiscal year. This expenditure, coupled with the $175,000,000 road system of 21,000 miles which Michigan already has, will be a further guarantee of safe, comfortable motor travel in the state.

WHY DENY YOURSELF
THE BEST IN MOTOR CAR BODIES

The finest of the new cars in all price classes have now been announced—Cadillac, Buick, Chevrolet, Oakland, Oldsmobile and Pontiac.

All offer vastly greater values than ever before in motor car history.

All register amazing advantages in performance and ease and economy of operation.

But the greatest factor of their new glory is described in a single phrase—Body by Fisher.

Here is their supreme beauty—setting absolutely new standards in charm of design and interior fitting.

Here are unequalled factors of safety which add so much to your comfort and confidence.

Here are exclusive conveniences and niceties which do, indeed, make the car with Body by Fisher superior in its class.

No matter what mechanical developments may allure you, it is the body of your car with which you live most intimately—that is why the General Motors units, makers of the best of the new cars in all price classes, point so proudly to the emblem—Body by Fisher.

With the finest of the market to choose from there is no reason why you should deny yourself the greater safety, beauty and comfort which only a Body by Fisher can give.

Riveting Hammer Has Electrical Competitor

Is the voice of the riveting hammer to be stilled? For years it has ranked close to the flivver's cough as "the great American sound," but now a new method of fabricating steel frames is rising. Electric welding which erects the skeleton of a building of many members melted into one piece instead of as a collection of beams riveted together, is looming. A two-story garage of this type has been built in Canton, Ohio, and now contracts have been let in Pittsburgh, Pa., for two five-story buildings—the first in the world whose members and joints have been designed especially for electric welding. The speed of construction is far greater than by the well-known catch-hot-rivets-in-a-bucket-and-hammer-'em-home method, and the cost is estimated to be less.

Mainsprings Susceptible

The mainsprings of his watch having longer refused to function early in the week, he took it to a local jeweler to whom be ventured the suggestion that a new high-grade timepiece ought to last more than a few months—it was a Christmas gift—without needing repair.

"I was surprised when the expert repair man told me more mainsprings broke during the heated season than at any other time during the year. Thunderstorms and rapid changes wreak havoc with them. It was a new one on me. We learn something every day," he confides.—Brockton Enterprise.

AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

L PLAN NEW FARM BUREAU PROGRAMS

Farm Bureau Board In Iowa on Will Meet To Decide On Activities For Coming Year

is month and during the fore of October every county Farm u board in Iowa will meet to e the program of farm and activities for the coming year. ch county Farm Bureau in the has a definite program of work is more or less continuous year to year, according to Murl nald, state county agent leadong the activities on the vari- ounty programs are boys' and club work, home projects deal with many kinds of home ems and projects of community ization and cooperation in attention is given to the vari- hases of the agricultural indus- ncluding marketing and distri- as well as production probaddition to carrying out the Bureau program, which has ed from year to year in the number of projects, hte leaders must maintain the membership of their organizations as well as to raise a large portion of the funds in the form of membership dues with which to finance the projects

Even tho the securing of members and collecting of membership dues is required by the law which governs such work in the state, these duties of local leaders apparently are not generally understood.

An indication of the interest in and immensity of the Farm Bureau work is gained by the report of last year which shows that 24,000 volunteer Farm Bureau leaders donated 90,000 days of service in carrying out projects. This would be equivalent to 300 workers giving full time for a year in Iowa in assisting with the various problems of the farms and farm homes.

Most of the meetings of the county Farm Bureau boards, will be attended by workers in the Extension Service of Iowa State College who will assist in helping to plan the programs.

CREAMERY CAN BAR USERS OF OLEOMARGARINE

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 15.—The federal trade commission has upheld the right of a Washington creamery to refuse to buy cream from a patron who uses oleomargarine, according to information which has reached the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

Oleomargarine interests contended that this action on the part of the creamery company was in restraint of trade, but the trade commission decided that the creamery was within its rights so long as its action did not contain any threats to discourage the using of a substitute for the creamery's product.

This decision is in line with a former decision and it would seem to definitely decide what a creamery can do in protecting its product.

KLEMME CREAMERY ADDS EQUIPMENT

ANOTHER NEW MACHINE HAS BEEN INSTALLED IN THE KLEMME CREAMERY

Old Steam Engine Has Been Sold To The Kanawha Creamery

The manager and officers of the Klemme Creamery always have their eyes open to new machines that will improve the service and lower the operating costs at the local butter factory.

The Creamery has just installed a machine for coating the inside of butter tubs with a thin, air tight layer of parafine. The parafine will prevent shrinkage in shipping the butter and also prevents any odor from the wooden tubs from penetrating the out layers of butter. It is figured the new machine will, in a short time, pay for itself from the saving in butter shrinkage. Butter shipped in parafined containers is also a better quality when it reaches the eastern markets.

The parafining machine is simple and automatic in operation, and the cost of operating is a mere trifle as a large number of tubs can be coated for a few cents.

Old Steam Engine Sold

The old steam engine, which was replaced some time ago with a new, more powerful engine, has been sold to the creamery at Kanawha, and is amply large enough to take care of their needs in the creamery.

Big Shipment Of Tubs

The creamery has just received a big shipment of spruce butter tubs, made at Menasha, Wisconsin. This is the first shipment of spruce tubs they have received. Before they have used tubs made of other kinds of wood. Manager A. D Gimer says the shipment they just received are the best tubs they have ever had

MAY CAN MEAT ANY SEASON

Put Up Fish In Spring, Chicken In September, Other Kinds In The Winter

When should the housewife can meat, fish and poultry? A good general answer is "when thy are most available." Chickens are best canned when they are just nicely mature, or about September The fishing season in May and June is generally the best time to can fish. Other meats are usually most available during the winter butchering season on the farm.

Meat, fish and poultry may be cold packed raw, seared or precooked. Pre-cooking before processing shortens the time required. It is very convenient to have these products ready for use. Very seldom can good poultry, that is commercially canned, be purchased.

AVERY TWIN LAKE HOLD JOINT MEET

MISS RAMER DEMONSTRATED DECORATION IDEAS

Sample Curtains And Drapes Were Made At Meeting

The Farm Bureau Ladies of Twin Lake and Avery Townships held a combined sewing meeting in the basement of the U. B. Church at Goodell last Friday. The meeting was led by Miss Ramer, Home Economics demonstrator of Ames and applied to window decorations and the inexpensive, but very artistic window curtains, also drapes. She gave some fine ideas along that line. All those present were very much interested in the work and all enjoyed the work very much. The members each made samples of curtains and drapes with trimming and then compared them, thus giving the desired ideas and color schemes.

The ladies of Avery Township who were present were as follows: Mesdames C A. Arnold, Wm. Johnson, D. A Marshall, Wm Gealow, W. L. Sherwood, J. J. Cook, J. T. Griggs, M. J. Kearney, Ed. Hemenway, Len Wilson, Dr. Snearly, and W. L. Thada.

Those of Twin Lake were Mesdames E. J. Schneider, Framer Cordes, Landon, and Albert Etchen. The visitors were Mrs. Rev. Scott and Mrs. Fred Etchen.

A hot lunch was served in cafeteria style at noon which was prepared by Mesdames Snearly, Wilson, Thada, Sherwood and Cordes.

The meeting was adjourned at four o'clock and all complimented Miss Ramer on her instructiveness.

The next meeting will be in about a month, Oct. 10th.

APPLE SYRUP

Apple syrup may be made from all fall and winter apples and some of the better grades of summer apples. Extract the juice the same as for cider, add four-tenths of one ounce of calcium carbonate to each gallon and boil vigorously for 5 minutes. Calcium carbonate is a cheap chemical that may be obtained at any drug store. Strain and pour into pitchers or jars and allow to stand for several hours or until thoroly cold and settled. Pour off the clear liquid and boil until the product is as thick as desired for syrup. The syrup may be used the same as other kinds of syrup. Six to seven gallons of cider will make one gallon of syrup.

A hundred thousand acres of farm land were abandoned in New York state annually between 1875 and 1920. At present the rate of abandonment there is twice this amount.

KLEMME TEACHERS ENTERTAINED BY SUNDAY SCHOOL

Reception Given In Honor Of The Klemme Teachers Friday Eve

The teachers of the Klemme public schools were given a reception and entertained by the Methodist Sunday school at the Parish House last Friday evening.

After all present had become acquainted and the new members of the faculty introduced a program was enjoyed.

Mr. Gary and his orchestra gave a number of selections. Mr. Gary has an excellent orchestra and the numbers were greatly enjoyed by the audience.

Miss Kidder, a new teacher in our schools this year, favored the gathering with two vocal solos. She has a beautiful, strong alto voice and her solos were much enjoyed.

Rev. A. W. Gauger gave an address of welcome, which was responded to by Supt. Penrod.

After a social hour had been enjoyed a light lunch was served, consisting of ice cream, cake and coffee.

SUNDAY BALL GAME WAS REAL BATTLE

KLEMME LOST HARD FOUGHT GAME AFTER 13 INNINGS

Corwith-Klemme Game Sunday One Of Fastest This Year

Quite a crowd of Klemme fans took in the Corwith-Klemme ball game at Corwith Sunday, which was one of the fastest and best games played by either team this year.

Klemme started the fireworks by hammering in two runs in the single frame and followed up by another in the second. Corwith held the visitors for no gain in scores the next four innings. In the last half of the seventh Corwith brought in three men across the pan and tied up the score. The score stayed tied for five innings and it was beginning to get dark. Klemme brought in another man in the thirteenth and it put the score one ahead of Corwith. The latter still had a bat coming and swiped off two more, and evened things up and put one better than Klemme.

The game was exciting from the very beginning and when the game was twice tied the fans about went wild. Both teams put up some good lively plays that gave the fans plenty of entertainment for their money.

Following is the box score of the game Sunday:

COMING ATTRACTIONS AT THE IDLE HOUR THEATRE

For Friday and Saturday night of this week Manager Thompson has booked Tom Tyler in "Let's Go Gallagher." The story of an insolvent cowboy, a dog, a little tad, a pretty girl, a gang of villians and a rheumatic victim are fmxed up in an absorbing story filled with warmth, sentiment, sincerety, laughs and big thrills. A good comedy also.

For Wednesday, Sept. 22 we will how a big entertainment feature, Lefty Flynn in "Smiling' At Trouble." The story may be told breifly It concerns a young civil engineer assigned to a hazardous job. He finds that the dam on which he is at work has been built of rotten cement. The bully foreman tries to bare him into silence. They fight in a bitter battle in an aerial tram car high in the air. The dam bursts, releasing tons of raging water that engulfs the countryside miles around. But,—come and ee the big story for yourself. Also comedy.

OVER 75 BILLION CIGARETTES MADE

Back in 1870, when whiskers were in style, cigarettes and safety razors were rare and little known. Yet, last year 75,025,064,791 cigarettes were manufactured in this country, according to statistics. Tobacco growers of the south have modernized their farming system with tractors, new type fertilizer drills, plows and cultivators to keep pace with the demand.

After The Storm In Klemme Tuesday Night

An idead of the havoc wrought by the tornado which struck Klemme last week Tuesday night is to be obtained from the above pictures, which were taken the next morning after the storm.

The picture on the left shows what is left of the new brick barn and garage at the A. G. Koerner place in the northwest part of town. The roof was torn off and scattered over the yard; the reinforced concrete and brick wall of the top story was ripped down. In the picture is also seen protruding from beneath the collapsed wall the service car belonging to the Koerner Telephone Co. The car was badly damaged by the falling wallsand debris.

The picture at the right was taken at the Mart Bachman place on East Main Street. The barn seen in he foreground was lifted bodily and telescoped onto the rear of the Henry Linne house next door. A few shingles were stripped off the Linne house by the barn falling upon it but no other serious damage was done. An automobile in the Bachman barn was not even scratched when the barn was blown away by the tornado. The footboards were blown out of the car but otherwise it was untouched.

A dozen or more places in and about Klemme felt the effects of the storm and property damage of several thousand dollars was done.

Uncovering Hoard of Crazy Miser

Forty-one sacks of coins—pennies, dimes, quarters and half dollars—were found by policemen in the filthy New York city hut of Matilda Ries, pencil vendor. When arrested Matilda had bills of every denomination from $1 to $100 sewed in her clothing. Patches in her dress revealed $10 bills. There was $1,800 in all. She was committed to an asylum when doctors pronounced her insane. Photograph shows searchers taking coin bags from the stove.

COL. H. E. HARTNEY

Col. Harold E. Hartney, vice president of the Argonauts, who are backing the transatlantic flight to be attempted by Capt. Rene Fonck, the French ace, has come out squarely in support of the stand taken by Capt. Homer Berry in the latter's controversy with Fonck, as to whether he should be a member of the crew. Colonel Hartney said that if three men went in the plane Captain Berry would be the third man, although Fonck has said that he would take a radio man or mechanician and that Berry would not go.

Community Building

"Fresh Pastures" Best for Dissatisfied Man

Many living in the large centers of population long for the freedom and quiet of the countryside. They want to be away from the din, the tension and the nervous strain incident to life in the cities where the per capita per city block is far too high. And to large numbers living in small communities and the sparsely populated rural country, city life has a fascination that is well nigh irresistible—that leads some to violate the law in order to enjoy the intoxication of the crowd.

But the truth is that being satisfied with the place where you live does not depend upon the place so much as upon the individual himself. If he makes an honest effort to adjust himself to the conditions in the community, be it large or small, in which he lives, he will grow to be satisfied, to be comfortable and happy. If he is making the most of his talents there, he cannot ask for more. If he is dissatisfied, he is doing himself an injustice. Those who nurse a grievance against their communities should find new locations. They are harming themselves and the place they call home.—Rushville (Ind.) Republican.

Wardens Employed to Protect Roadside Trees

The roadside tree law, passed by the 1914 legislature in Maryland, was the result of the complaint of many citizens concerning the abuses chargeable to pole line companies. Under this law the services of a warden are required to supervise the work of tree trimming by any pole line company when the trees are within the right-of-way of any public road. The administration of the law lies with the state forestry department. Compensation to the wardens is paid by the forestry department, which, in turn, is authorized to collect from persons or corporations requesting assistance in roadside tree planting.

The Maryland Court of Appeals extended the constitutionality of this law at the time of a telephone company's suit on April 9, 1915, and at present there are about 50 wardens assigned to tree work, most of them supervising the work of the different pole line companies.

The Maryland forestry department is to be congratulated on the large number of cities and towns in the state which, through the department's work, now have tree census information and improvement plans for their streets.—Kansas City Times.

Planting the Home

There is an old saying to the effect that "it's not a home until it's planted." A house may have cost thousands of dollars, but if it stands stark and bare, with nothing to tie it to its surroundings, as the landscapers put it, it lacks the atmosphere of conformity, of "homeiness." Therefore, in the planning for a home the lawn should be considered as a most important feature, for it forms, as it were, a setting for the picture. The planting of the trees and the shrubbery must be done with the idea of bringing out the best in the surroundings and of hiding any defects that may exist. A portion of the grounds should be reserved for an unbroken stretch of green grass to be kept clean and well mowed, with no shrubbery scattered over it to mar the effect of velvety smoothness. Where short walks are necessary, stepping stones are now regarded as preferable to solid cement.

Benefit of Zoning System

With the zoning system becoming general there is a brighter outlook for American cities, most of which have grown in rather haphazard fashion. The comparative benefits to these cities will depend largely on the intelligence, the taste and the courage of the zoning authorities. Some of these authorities will have much larger vision than others; they will plan for the indefinite future; they will make changes and adjustments as time and conditions direct. While in some instances they will prevent selfish exploitation, and make impossible certain profits that selfish indulgence might produce, the great result will be city-wide gain, materially and culturally.

Good in Civic Pride

Pride in the home is a very beautiful, and withal, a very common virtue in American life, but civic pride is this and much more. Civic pride is one that sets the high standards both for the individual and for the community. And when civic pride has succeeded in beautifying the community a very forward step has been taken toward beautifying the lives of those who dwell in that community.

Up to the Citizens

No city can be beautiful, no matter what its building regulations may be, if its people are slovenly in keeping their places of business and residence, and if the administrative forces are ineffective in enforcing the regulations that may be had in spite of this individual indifference.

Moral: Never Pet Strange Black Cat

Two girls of the flapper type and their boy friend were motoring near Goshen not long ago when one of the girls uttered a scream.

"There went a black cat across the road," she cried, "and now we'll have some kind of bad luck."

Whereupon the other girl announced a new angle to an old tradition. Somebody had told her that if the cat should be captured the jinx would be broken. Well, the cat was sitting by the roadside not far away. It seemed to be gentle and mild mannered. With one accord they climbed out of the car and started in the general direction of the kitty. They smiled at the kitty and spoke to it in dulcet tones. Then they made a rush to see which could catch it first.

(The curtain will be lowered a moment to denote the passing of a considerable period of time.)

After the boy friend had taken the girls to their homes, he went out and buried his clothes. The black cat was a skunk.—Indianapolis News.

Horse Comes Back in Great Britain

A contributor to the Manchester Guardian declares that the horse is coming back in Great Britain. There are more horses in service in the streets than there were three years ago, and harness makers find business brisker than they did.

This return, to quote from the article in question, "is due in no small measure to the growing congestion of traffic in our streets. It has origins, too, in the fact that in the smallest sphere of haulage, the horse is still an economic factor. It cannot be beaten, in the matter of cost of haulage, for short hauls where many stops have to be made."

Another influence, which, like narrow and crooked streets, may not be as important in England as in America, barring Boston, is the fact that loading and unloading arrangements at warehouses and factories are out of date. The time that the motor vehicle gains between two given points is therefore more than lost because of the waiting it has to do at one end or perhaps both ends of its trip.—Living Age.

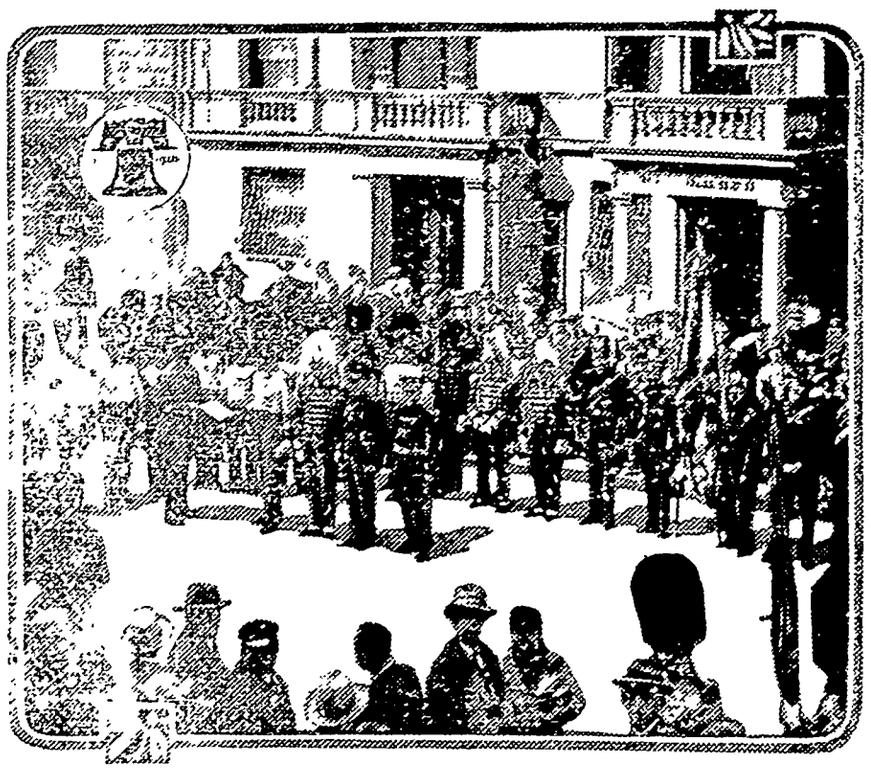
New York's Old Guard Coming to Sesqui



At an imposing ceremony before their headquarters in New York City the famous Old Guard of New York under the command of Major E Havemeyer Snyder, commandant of the organization, received the invitation from the officials of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, opening in Philadelphia June 1 and continuing to December 1, to celebrate 150 years of American Independence, to attend the Flag Day exercises on June 14, when all the historic military commands of the thirteen original colonies will assemble for a big military display and parade headed by General Pershing Captain James A B Franciscus, of the Old Guard State Fencibles, of the Sesqui city, is presenting the invitation to Major Snyder At Major Snyder's left stand the commanding officers of the Philadelphia organizations, while the members of the two famous commands are grouped about their leaders in their striking dress uniforms.

Hopeless Case

Gen Smedley Darlington Butler's arrest of a colonel in San Diego on a charge of drunkenness reminded a Philadelphian of an anecdote.

"General Butler," he said, "was displeased with the work of one of his Philadelphia sleuths and, as a gentle hint, presented the man with a copy of 'Sherlock Holmes.'

"The sleuth took the book home and ran through it. He perceived the hint, and it riled him, naturally. He said to the general next day in a sneering way:

"'I guess you think, general, I'd make a great detective if I took enough coke?'

"The general shook his head.

"'Joe,' he said, 'there ain't that much coke.'"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Railroad Gets Bad Name

Due to a series of 31 accidents since the first of the year on the main line of the Central of Brazil railway, the only artery of direct transportation between Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, the world's greatest coffee center, Brazilians have given the name of the "Death Road" to this great railway line. During January alone 19 wrecks occurred on the main line of the Central of Brazil railway. In February only two wrecks were reported, in March, eight, and three during April Washouts resulting from heavy rains were the causes of most of the wrecks, but some were accredited to the negligence of employees of the railways, and others to mismanagement.

Deporting Him

"What was the cause of all that uproar down the street a while ago?" inquired a recent arrival

"Aw, I was just chasin' a feller out of town and threatening to club him if he didn't move faster," replied Constable Sam T. Slackputter of Petunia. "After I had arrested him for running his car against the corner of the Right Place store, instead of telling Squire Ramsbottom he wasn't going more than eight miles an hour, he owned right up that he was making at least forty."

"But I don't understand. Why did you run him out of town?"

"Lunatics are dangerous to have around They often jump right onto small children."—Kansas City Times.

AMERICAN YOUTH CANDIDATE

Miss Helen F. Dodge of Pennsylvania, holder of a Carnegie medal for heroism, has been nominated as a candidate for the American Youth Award established by the directors of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, which is to be held in Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 in celebration of 150 years of American Independence. Miss Dodge, the daughter of George H. Dodge of 5944 Walton avenue, Philadelphia, jumped into the Toms River at Ocean Gate, N. J., fully dressed, and, while having use of only one arm, saved the life of a drowning girl.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

A few days before Frank Gibbs went to College, he and "Fat" Kluckhonn were sweeping the dust off the walks on The Main Drag. "Fat" was industriously sweeping in front of his store, and Frank was pushing his broom around in front of the Post Office. The two piles of dirt had been swept toward the side walk when a young lady drove up and began to talk to Frank He was so fussed that he began sweeping the dirt back to the Post Office. He might have swept it clear thru to the alley had not "Fat" called his attention to the slight error.

And now George Lau, one of the members of the Klemme Legion, was around yesterday morning getting the opinion of the business men along the Main Drag on a celebration this fall George had a fine list of men who promised to meet at the Legion Hall Friday evening to further discuss the plan Let's wake up the old burg and cut loose! Yep! We're right with the Legion Boys in this worthy campaign.

That queer looking emblem attached to the wall at the rear of Wellemeyer's store is not a bootlegger's sign It may look like one and our suspicions were aroused. By careful tact we found that the jug roosting on a bracket attached to the wall will serve as a support for a vertical aerial for Jack's broadcasting outfit The jug will contain nothing but 'insulation," says Jack We never had a drink of "insulation" but presume it is "hot stuff" about the time Jack is upstairs pounding the key and talking to some other "ham" over in Australia or Japan.

Over at school the other day one of the grade teachers was testing out the knowledge of young America, and asked that a certain young man step to the board and write a sentence including the words defense, defeat and detail. Young America stepped to the board and wrote, 'When de dog jumped de fence de feet went over de fence before de tail."

Sometimes we think they still have queer customs in our churches of today and they are behind the times in some matters. Sunday we wont to church (as we do quite often) and had the pleasure of hearing the choir sing a very beautiful number The selection should have been greeted by great applause had it been given anywhere but in the church There everyone sat with a long face and solemn expression. How did the choir know their song had been a "big hit?" It's just at such times we nearly forget ourself and clap our hands Well, why not forget an ancient custom at such a time and show the choir how we really do appreciate their efforts?

Pat stopped in at one of the stores in Klemme one day which bore a sign that read: "Everything sold by the yard."

Entering the store with a grin on his face, he asked the grocer if he could buy some syrup.

Grocer: "Yes Sir!"

Pat: "All right, let me have a yard."

Grocer: "Here you are, sir,' picking up a can and pouring a tiny streamlet of syrup a yard's length on the counter.

Pat· "How much is it?"

Grocer: "Ten Cents."

Pat· 'All right. Wrap it up, I'll take it."

One of the main topics of conversation along The Main Drag these days is the age old worry, "Well, is it going to frost tonight?" There are more people worrying about the weather this time of year than at any other period They are forever wondering whether it will frost tonight if it clears off, and how near it come to freezing last night, and way back in '86 we had a frost on such and such a date. Don't it beat the band how people will worry about the weather, something they have absolutely no control over at all.

Well, anyway the weather is always a popular subject to talk about when one can think of nothing else.

Don't some of you people feel a bit guilty reading this column of free air when you know darn well you haven't paid your subscription since it became due. The date on the top of the front page will tell you the sad news. Read it and weep!

PROFITABLE TO HOG DOWN CORN

This is True Providing Corn is Properly Supplemented with Other Feeds, Experiments Show

Turning the hogs into the corn field, commonly called "hogging-down," is a profitable practice if it is rightly done, because it increases the rate and reduces the cost of gains of the hogs, saves time and labor in harvesting the corn and it leaves the fields in good condition because all the manure from the hogs is applied directly back to the land without requiring any labor from the farmer in handling.

Sometimes, however, hogging-down corn may not be profitable. Unless the hogs have access to other feeds of the right kind hogging-down down won't pay. Three years of experiments, very carefully conducted at the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station, Ames, show that hogs in the corn field should have at least minerals and tankage in addition of the corn, and if soybeans have been planted in the field, the results will be still better.

The minerals fed in hogging-down tests at Ames are made up as follows: Common salt, 20 pounds; raw ground limestone, 40 pounds; bone black from sugar refinery, 40 pounds (steamed bone may be used in place of bone black); and .04 of a pound of potassium iodide. This mineral mixture is put into self-feeders and the hogs have constant access to it. The tankage also is fed in self-feeders, free-choice style.

Adding only minerals to the corn is not enough. The tests have shown that it takes about a half more feed for a hundred pounds of gain where only minerals are fed than where tankage and soybeans are allowed in addition to the corn and minerals.

The cheapest average gains in the three years experiments have been made where soybeans were planted in the corn hills at corn planting time, and then tankage and minerals were placed in the fields in separate self-feeders at hogging-down time.

To attempt to substitute soybeans for the tankage in hogging-down corn has proved profitable in the tests, even tho the minerals were fed along with the corn and soybeans. Tankage has proved highly essential in the tests.

In all three years the hogging-down of corn, when properly done, proved much more profitable than feeding similar pigs husked corn even tho the pigs were given tankage and minerals and ran on a good rape pasture.

About 1 acre out of each 14 in Iowa is now hogged down, according to John M. Evard, chief in animal feeding experiments, who has charge of the animal feeding experiments at the Iowa Station.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES THE PAST WEEK

Items Of Interst About School And Community Happenings

Faculty Enjoyed Reception

Our Faculty very much appreciated the royal reception accorded them at the Parish House last Friday night. With a display of such good will and interest in our work we all feel that we should give our best efforts for the parents and young people of Klemme. With genuine good will toward all concerned and a spirit of co-operation maintained between parents, teachers, school board, and students, school problems are quite easily solved. With the beginning that has been made we feel confident our schools can be made equal or better than at any previous period.

First Number Of Lyceum Soon

Our H. S. seniors are disposing of the season tickets for their Lyceum Course to begin Sept. 27th with a program by the Larcher Duo. We know our community will want the Course to go over and will do what they can to support it. Besides they will enjy the numbers and get the uplift which good music, wholesome entertainment and good lectures furnish. We are anticipating a splendid program by the Larcher Duo, two experienced platform artists of more than average ability. Season tickets admit bearer to three numbers and may be had for $1.00 for adults, and 75 cents for cildren. The single admission tickets will be 50 and 35 cents. Get the season tickets of any one of the Seniors. Then have them reserved at Wilson's Pharmacy, beginning at noon on September 24. The single admission tickets can be had at the door But get a season ticket which will hold your seat until you come and you can enjoy three programs for the price of two.

School Closed For Institute And County Fair

Our schools are closed on Thursday and Friday for Teachers' Institute and Fair at Britt. We hope to be able to visit the Fair for a few hours and to see the best Hancock County can produce. It's our own County Fair and we shall see there what our neighbors have been doing and come back home to emulate or excell them. This insures progress. As public school instructors we hope to get something worth while from the institute, something that will strengthen or stimulate us for our school tasks this present school year. Unless we do, our time has been wated and the public's money has been spent in vain.

Our faculty are all members of the State Teachers Association for this year and are in this way co-operating with the rest of the profession over the state in an effort to keep Iowa schools and Iowa youth in the front ranks of American education and progress.

Ball Team Won First Game

Our boys last week end defeated Goodell by four scores, shutting them out. They made a splendid beginning and seemed determined to keep up the pace for they just this week, on Wednesday evening, defeated our town team by a score of 7 to 1. We have arranged for games with Swaledale, Renwick, Corwith and Thornton, one game a week until Oct. 22, but have next week end open. If there be any changes they will be reported next week.

More Students Back This Year

Oral Gibson has returned to our community and has enrolled with us We are glad to welcome him back. Mr. Lloyd Carpenter is furnishing him a home this winter and Dr. Anderson wil provide him a way to get to school and back. We appreciate what these men are doing for Oral and know full well Oral will, too. Ora wil be a vauable addition to our athetic teams this year. Better still, he is a good student and unafraid of hard work when required in doors or out.

Lela Bachman is also back with us doing good work. She was compelled to cease her school work last autumn on account of ill health.

Last Year Seniors Go To College

Our best wishes go with our last year's Seniors as they go to higher institutions of learning.

Harl Gimer and Frank Gibbs departed last week for Morningside College, Sioux City and Wayne Lemke left this week for Iowa City to attend our State University.

Mabel Schaefer left also last week for State Teachers College, Cedar Falls. Beatrice Busch, we understand is taking work or will when school opens at Northwestern, at Evanston, Ill.

Others of the class will try to attend college later on. We are rather proud of the Class of 1926 and expect big things of them.

Teacrers Will Spend Week End At Homes

Three of our faculty will spend Saturday and Sunday out of town. They are Mr. Hockey, Miss Kidder and Miss Bell. Misses Bell and Kidder will visit their parents in Des Moine, while Mr. Hockey goes to a destination known only to himself—probably Williams, Iowa.

Americans lead the world as apple eaters, consuming about three apples a week per capita.

Why Not Make The Profit Yourself?

As a patron of The Klemme Co-Operative Creamery you are a manufacturer of a product that finds a ready market. Do you think a manufacturer of tiling spades would be buying of a competitor at higher prices than he could manufacture them for in his own factory? We hardly think so. Why should you be content to accept a lower price for your cream than you, as a manufacturer, can get through your own manufacturing plant? The old adage that "if you watch the pennies the dollars will take care of themselves" applies to the dairy business as well as some other lines. Eight or ten cents per pound for your butterfat may not seem very much of a loss on one small batch of cream but in the aggregate it amounts to a sizeable sum in the course of a year. Patronize yourself and take ALL the profit.

SAVING TO ATTEND FRANCE CONVENTION

While more than 500 banks in the United States have established American Legion Savings clubs to encourage Legionnaires to save their money for the trip to France with the Legion in 1927, stories are pouring in to the France convention committee of the Legion at Indianapolis of men who are doing extra or unique work to earn additional money for the pilgrimage.

One of these is Charles R. Adams, 20 South Church street, Waynesboro,

Pa., a rehabilitated World war veteran who is raising chickens during extra hours. Adams went through the whole gamut of war's horrors, including German prison camps, after he was captured when a tank with which he was serving was hit by shells three times in two gas attacks and finally was set on fire.

Unable to resume his pre-war occupation of machinist's helper, Adams was taught auto ignition. He now is a partner in an auto electrical company, is manager of the electrical department, owns his own home and has three fine children.

Directors Named for Boys' Baseball Program

Regional athletic directors to have charge of the American Legion's national baseball program for boys have been appointed by Frank C. Cross, director of the National American commission, which is developing the project.

Roy E. Rice of Waterbury, Conn., was placed in charge of the First or Eastern region. Included in this are the New England, the Atlantic and the Chesapeake bay states.

Forrest A. Burke of Springfield, Ill., directs the Second or Central region, including the Seaboard, Great Lakes and Southeastern states.

L. B. Allison, director of athletics at the University of South Dakota, Vermillion, S. D., is director of the Third or Middle Western section. In this are included the corn belt, the northern and the southwestern states.

D. L. Templeton, director of athletics at Leland Stanford university at Palo Alto, Calif., directs the Fourth or Far Western region, embracing the Pacific Northwest, the Pacific and the Rocky mountain district.

The Legion boys' baseball plan contemplates the holding of contests and championships in local cities, in districts, in states and in four regions, with the junior world's series in connection with the national convention of the Legion each year. The first junior world's series was scheduled to be a feature of the Legion convention at Philadelphia from October 11 to 15, 1926.

May Have New Building to House War Records

Erection of a splendid public archives building at Washington to house World war records and other valuable government documents, will probably be a thing of the near future.

Provision for the erection of the archives building was included in a public building bill passed at the last session of congress. The archives building project has been actively supported by the American Legion ever since the Legion's third national convention at Kansas City in 1921.

Interpreted

The Girls—God bless 'em!—were talking it over.

"I asked him if he loved me," stated Flossie, "and he said, 'Mon Dieu'!"

"Oh, how wonderful!" gushed Tessie. "That's French for 'My dear'!"—American Legion Weekly.

For Crippled Children

A hospital for crippled children is to be built by the American Legion at St. Petersburg, Fla. Both boys and girls are to be admitted to the hospital

FRANCE CUTS ARMY AND PLEDGES PEACE

"We've Had Enough War," Briand Says—Germany in League of Nations.

Paris.—Provision for reduction in the French army was contained in a decree just issued by the ministerial council. The scheme provides for reduction of the army by 2,700 officers during a period of years and the elimination of 1,200 officers holding temporary rank.

The number of men called to the colors will be gradually reduced—first, by calling men to service at the age of twenty-one instead of the present age of twenty, and later by reducing the period of military training to one year. The number of skeleton regiments will be reduced from 35,000 to 28,800.

Geneva.—"For France and Germany this day means that war is finished between us. Machine guns have yielded to peace. . . . We have had enough glory on the battlefields to satisfy both of us. . . ."

With his hands extended toward Germany's delegates, Aristide Briand, French foreign minister, uttered these dramatic words in welcoming Germany, long the traditional enemy of France, into the League of Nations amid epochal scenes of enthusiasm.

Herr Stresemann, German foreign minister, had prefaced Germany's entry into the league with a speech declaring Germany's policy to be one of peace and voiced a plea for general disarmament.

M. Briand replied to Herr Stresemann with a speech that must go down in history as making the final ending of the great World war, a speech which pledged France to consider Germany a friend in the future.

When M. Briand had finished his dramatic utterances, the German delegates rose from their seats and applauded wildly, showing signs of great emotion.

Germany was named as a member of the subcommittee to consider enlargement of the number of nonpermanent council seats. It was significant that Stresemann in his speech alluded to the treaty of Versailles. He did it in a subtle and tactful way.

The Streseman speech was universally adjudged a dignified, intelligent and restrained effort. Outside of his reference to the treaty there was another allusion which in former times would have created a storm.

That was his reference to disarmament. When declaring Germany is completely disarmed he urged other nations to do likewise.

Madrid.—A note containing Spain's resignation from the League of Nations has been delivered in Geneva. It reads: "The League of Nations is about to receive a note from the Spanish government. The document was sent from Madrid to Geneva by Foreign Minister Yanguas y Messia and it expresses the gratitude of the Spanish government for the attention shown by the league to Spain and for the solicitation made to Spain to continue co-operation, but it is firm in saying that Spain is resigning."

Death Toll Is 27 in Colorado Train Wreck

Leadville, Colo.—Excessive speed on curves was held responsible for the derailment of the Scenic limited of the Denver & Rio Grande Western railroad near Waco, Colo., with a loss of 27 lives and 50 injured, President J. S. Pyeatt of the road declared in a statement issued here.

The list of known dead in the wreck was increased by four with the recovery of the body of J. D. Turner of Hastings, Neb., and those of a woman and two girls, one about three and the other about seven years old.

U. S. Delays Action on Chinese Attack on Ship

Washington—Shooting of American sailors by Chinese soldiers in the fighting about Hankow will not be considered sufficient provocation for armed intervention by this government at the present time, Washington officials indicated, following the receipt of reports that two seamen had been wounded on an American gunboat on the Yangtze river.

To Put Starvation Diet Case Up to U. S. Court

Tekamah, Neb.—Opponents of County Judge Orville Chatt's bread-and-water sentences for liquor-law violators, led by the judge's own brother, J. H. Chatt, Bancroft farmer, are considering plans to carry their fight to the Supreme court of the United States, unless Roy Carson, latest victim of this sentence, is released or given regular food.

President Markham Quits I. C.

Chicago.—C. H. Markham, president of the I. C. railroad since 1910, has resigned. He will become chairman of the board of directors, a newly created position. L. A. Downs becomes the new president.

P. O. Clerks Want More Pay

Philadelphia — Increased compensation for postal clerks was urged at the convention of the United National Postoffice Clerks' association in session here.

TO BOSS LONG FLIGHT

Maj. Herbert A. Dargue, assistant chief of the war plans section of the army air corps, has been selected as commander of the army's proposed 18,000-mile flight around South America, visiting every country south of the Rio Grande.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, SAYS BOARD

Ships Are Not to be Sold to Other Countries.

Washington—The government has no intention of changing its policy to do its utmost to encourage a privately owned American merchant marine and it will not sell its ships to any but American citizens.

The United States shipping board gave this reaffirmation of policy in answer to the suggestion recently made President Coolidge at White Pine camp by Matthew T. Brush, president of the American International corporation, that the shipping board fleet should be sold without regard to nationality of buyers or guarantees that the shipping would be under the American flag.

Commissioner Philip S. Teller, chairman of the ship sales committee of the board, issued a statement vigorously attacking the suggestion attributed to Brush and condemning it as probably "a last and frantic attempt on the part of certain insidious foreign interests masquerading under the title of American ownership to withstand and overcome the competitive element of ocean transportation which the slowly but persistently growing American flag merchant marine has unquestionably created to the benefit of shippers and travelers alike."

The shipping board, according to Mr. Teller, proposes going ahead with its plans for disposal of its fleet to American shipowners for the enhancing of American commerce. Not only does it intend seeking American purchasers for the United States lines plying across the Atlantic, but it plans offering the three remaining freight services which it operates to South America.

Million Is Willed to Each, France, Belgium

Mercer, Pa.—Judge J. A. McLaughry, in Mercer county court, authorized Mrs. Julia Buhl and F. W. Koehler, trustees of the estate of F. H. Buhl, millionaire steel manufacturer of Sharon, to pay $1,000,000 to France, as provided in the will of Mr. Buhl, who died June 8, 1918. Mrs. Buhl is the widow of the millionaire.

Attorneys for Mrs. Buhl and Koehler appeared before the court and announced that an organization had been formed in France, as provided in the will, of which Myron Herrick, United States ambassador in France, has been made the head.

It is planned to pay the money in three installments, one of $476,250 immediately, and two other payments of $238,125, and the balance, less tax, later. Mr. Buhl also left $1,000,000 to Belgium to be used among persons who suffered as a result of the World war.

Alfonso Checks Spain's War; Army Is Restless

Madrid.—The state of war proclaimed throughout Spain a few days ago as a result of mutiny in the artillery corps of the Spanish army was ended by a decree signed by King Alfonso. This act, however, does not mean the end of Spanish troubles, it is said here, because unrest in the form of passive resistance still is rampant throughout the army and an open revolt is considered likely at any moment. The dissatisfaction, it is said, is caused as much by acts of Gen. Primo de Rivera as by the new army regulations governing promotion, which provide for elevation by election instead of seniority.

$441,000 PAID FOR AWARD, SAYS GERMAN

Steel King Testifies in Post War Claim Allowed by United States.

New York.—Richard Merton, multimillionaire German industrialist, told his story of the Miller-Daugherty conspiracy to a jury in the Federal court here. It was a dramatic story of flowing wine, scheming fixers and enormous bribes in the plot to defraud the United States of millions.

Brought to America as the government's pivotal witness in the special case against Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, and Col. Thomas W Miller, former alien property custodian—charged jointly with corruption in carrying out their duties of high office—Merton related how he won a $7,000,000 claim against the United States through the use of champagne, "fixers" and the payment of $441,000 in Liberty bonds.

The popping of champagne corks accompanied the delivery of two government checks aggregating $6,453,379.97, which had been brought from Washington by Colonel Miller, the witness declared.

The checks were turned over to Merton, he said, by Miller at a private $15-a-plate dinner in the fashionable Ritz-Carlton hotel here on September 30, 1921. Merton was the host. John T. King, alleged "fixer," who engineered the claim through official channels in Washington, supplied the champagne.

"The morning after the dinner," said Merton, "Mr. King and I went to the office of my brokers in Wall street. There I gave Mr. King a package containing $391,000 in Liberty bonds as a five per cent fee for successfully pressing the claim.

"Two months earlier," the witness declared, "I had given King a check for $50,000 as a retainer.

"After I delivered the bonds we shook hands and said good-by. He entered a taxi or subway and went his way. I went mine.

"I didn't see him again for several years."

It is from these $391,000 in Liberty bonds that Emory R. Buckner, the federal prosecutor, told the jury that he would trace, either directly or indirectly, $174,000 into the bank accounts of Harry M. Daugherty.

Another $50,000 has been traced into the brokerage accounts of Colonel Miller, the prosecutor said.

Col. William Rand, chief counsel for Miller, opened the cross-examination of the distinguished German metal magnate and revealed that the defense will attempt to prove that the $7,000,000 claim was a bona fide one and should have been allowed.

Through the answering of Colonel Rand's questions—which dealt entirely with the formation, management and financial structure of the Societe Suisse, a holding company for Merton's two huge German metal companies, which had been organized in Switzerland, Merton aided the defense.

It is upon the nationality of this holding company—whether it was a neutral or an ally of an enemy during the World war—that the validity of the claim depends.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS

The Department of Agriculture has announced 19 commercial classes for beans, the result of a reclassification suggested by the trade.

Commissioner Henry H. Glassie, Democrat of Maryland, was given a recess reappointment to the tariff commission by President Coolidge.

The Northwest Airways, Inc., of Detroit, Mich., will take over the operation of the Chicago-Minneapolis-St. Paul air mail route on October 1.

Postal receipts at fifty selected cities throughout the country showed an increase of $1,629,657, or 6.50 per cent, for August, 1926, over receipts for the same month in 1925, according to figures made public by Postmaster General New.

Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, in a statement in Capper's Weekly, predicted that if the fall elections result in Republican control of congress and if prosperity continues, President Coolidge will be a candidate for another term and will in all probability be elected and "break the so-called 'third-term tradition.'"

GIRLS OF SCHOOL AGE LEARN VALUABLE LESSON

Find Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Dependable Medicine

LOUISE LOUTHAN
ROUTE 2, CHARLESTON, ILLINOIS

From the days of the polonaise to the days of the radio, mothers have given this dependable medicine to their daughters. School girls are often careless. They get wet feet. They overstudy or they tire themselves with too many dances and parties. They get run down.

Many an active girl of today, like the demure maiden of the 1870's, has found that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is helping her to find better health and energy.

"I gave my fifteen-year-old girl Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it did her a wonderful lot of good. She had been out of school for four months. I read the advertisements of the Vegetable Compound, and since she has taken it she has improved and has gone back to school again. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to other mothers with girls who are not as strong as they should be."—Mrs. ALICE LOUTHAN, Route 2, Charleston, Illinois.

"My daughter was out of school two terms. I have known about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound all my life and finally decided that she should try it Three bottles helped her in various ways for the next couple of years."—Mrs. W. E. GILLETTE, 986 E. 52nd Place, Los Angeles, Calif.

"I have always been sickly, and until I was fourteen my father was very strict about my perfect attendance at grammar school. I have gone to school through hard storms and often taken cold. When I was fourteen I took to my bed and did not get up for eighteen months. Everyone thought I could not live. Just four months ago I began taking your wonderful medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I could notice a great change almost at once. Now I feel like a new person. I wish all girls would try Lydia E. Pinkham's wonderful medicine."—Mrs C. M. SMITH, Union Village, Vermont.

Laboratory on Wheels

John Graham, the premier pathfinder of the United States, has been traveling between 40,000 and 50,000 miles a year for the past 14 years. He now has a nation-wide job of checking road maps for one of the largest map firms in the world. His scout car looks like a laboratory or a power house, and on the instrument board are found a tachometer, aneroid barometer, ammeter, oil gauge, gasoline gauge, ignition and light switches, speedometer, odometer and clock. Among the equipment are shovels and tow chains, ax, portable typewriter, compass, sleeping outfit, a gallon of gas, a gallon of oil and clothes for eight or ten weeks.

Interesting Collection

For twenty years or more Mrs. Harry Sproule of Los Angeles has been collecting picture post cards, some onh er own account, but mostly from friends traveling abroad. Her collection is amazing, nearly 30,000 of them, all pasted neatly in books according to country She has them from all sorts of remote places and can turn up any one of them for reference at a moment's notice. She bemoans the fact that post cards used to be much more interesting and of better quality. She says they are getting shoddier every year now.

e central committee squatted d the tailboard of a wagon, ghost- rms in the moonlight and the ows. Save for inarticulate whis- gs from this group and murmurs, fying in the implication of their d, from the huddled prisoners n the corral, noisy, optimistic, nwood now lay under the moon- as silent as death. Occasional- ndeed, distant footfalls resounded the board sidewalks. They beat nger with a cheerful staccato, but the determined, concerted thump marching troops. Yet everywhere e moonlight stood the b'otted, in- nct forms of men—waiting . . . night seemed full of devils. . . . e slight, nervous form of Mr. Or- walking beside the guard, slashed the lantern-light. The guard re- ed casually to the central commit- received a nod, vanished with the gyman—and now out from the cor- drifted his voice, resonant, rhyth- —praying Into his prayer broke hysterical squalling of Red . . . .

do not know by what curiosity of human soul these sounds of com- nd despair tore away within me last of those barriers which civili- on, cultivation, education had built nd the natural, primitive, killing age. Something burst in my head; I became at one with the best worst of this orderly mob. They re going to kill—hideously, im- ably And I, whose wrong was most all—I wanted to kill with them. one moment, I seemed to myself angel of justice, a rebirth of my ritan forefathers who smote and red not in the name of the Lord; another, merely the cheated, tricked er burning for revenge on him ose touch had polluted the unwor- beloved. Life and life's normal ires were over for me . . . if I d valiantly before another moon, ter so . . . if only I got him. . I strode back and forth between wagons; the one moving figure in t tense, static, moonlit landscape. And then came opportunity.

The circle about the wagon had en. I stepped up to Marcus. He s bending beside a lantern to con- lt his bull's-eye watch.

"An hour or so before daybreak," he ld. "Better start the cavalry." A k of Taylor's head brought one of e guards to attention. There was a dispered order, a nod; and the guard nished. Marcus stood a little aside om the rest. And so when I asked question drawn from me by my emo- ns, none else heard.

"What's next?" I inquired.

Marcus hesitated, and then:

"Startin' the boys out for the main erformers," he replied.

"The bandits?"

Marcus gave a slow, meaning nod.

"I want to go, too," I said. My ngue filled a dry mouth. I heard my oice as though someone else were peaking, and it was thick.

Marcus hesitated.

"Well, it will be the story of the ay," he said, as though finding an xcuse. Then, "Shorty!" he called. 'm sending Gilson along—to report , you know"

Shorty, inspecting his side-arm, ar- anging the cartridges in his belt, ooked up.

"No you don't!" he growled.

I blazed. I found myself standing ver Shorty, cursing him with round an-oaths, challenging him, if he had nything against me, to fight it out ere and now

Whatever doubt Shorty had of me his blast of genuine emotion seemed o dissipate He ignored my insults nd my challenge; only regarded me ritically from the shade of his hat nd then, addressing Marcus, re- ponded·

"All right, old hoss! We'll take him long. But he's got to be a d—n good oy!"

"Five minutes from now—alley be- hind the Courier building—keep your mouth shut if anybody asks you what ou're doing. Here, Joe—give this man a long gun and a belt—get your horse, and rustle!" directed Marcus.

We sat, our horses in the shadows, waiting; so still that now and then a long breath, drawn involuntarily from the laboring lungs of excitement, would pull my spine up stiff as though I had heard a pistol-shot. The moon- light had begun to pale; and the in- spiration of death that announces the dawn blew from the peaks. Must we wait there for ever?

The rattling lope of a horse sound- ed from the roadway beyond. The rid- er came into sight from the sickly shadows, pulled up, fell in beside Shorty at the head of the column. He was talking—in a low tone but stead- fly, emphatically.

I began to catch his words.

"I says to him, 'You can't bluff me,' I says. 'I know what you're doin',' I says. 'I'm just watchin' you,' I says. 'No, you don't dare put me off the force,' I says. 'I suspect too much—'"

Emphatic, over-emphatic to the point of insincerity—whose voice was that? He pushed back his sombrero and the leaden light caught his face. It was Charlie Meek.

Into his monologue cut Shorty's sharp command:

"Forward—march!"

As we emerged from the alley, rode at a sharp trot eastward toward the moonlit pinnacles of the Pyrites, I saw that Charlie Meek still rode beside Shorty, leading the column.

CHAPTER XI

Now, as early dawn and late moon- light began to blot out the blazing mountain stars, I looked up from my own sulphurous misery to perceive that the expedition had swung round the camp, turned the shoulder of Liv- erpool hill, cut into the Forty-Rod road. From the single file which we had maintained on the trail, we fell without orders into double column, Shorty and Charlie Meek still leading, and, as the road began its sharp as- cent, slackened our lope to a fast walk. Then, when the posse broke into a lope on a level stretch and lost formation, I worked my fast and eager roan through the press like a jockey. When a sharp grade compelled us again to slacken our pace, I was just behind Shorty and Charlie Meek. Charlie, as though by shadow of his old authority, seemed to be in com- mand.

Out of the shades came that castle rock beside which I had met Con- stance Deane and kissed her—so long ago! Why, it was only a night since I had dwelt in a fool's paradise over her; tricked myself into believing in her! And I found myself praying that I might never see another night. But the relaxing memory of her kiss would creep into my meditations, so that I closed my eyes and relived that mo- ment. But the thought of her coming tainted to my arms from her cherished rogue relit the flames of my torment.

Looking back as we topped a ridge, I could see that a faint, pink glow was beginning to rim the snows of the giant range behind us; and that Cot- tonwood Camp, a crazy pattern at the bottom of the vista, was streaming through the violet valley-mists trails of gray smoke from breakfast fires. Another ridge, and we broke into sight of Forty-Rod creek—a cabin or so and a square-fronted store beside the road, a red dump or a gray roof peeping here and there from the dwarf trees, white patches of columbine fringing a shallow gulch. Shorty and Charlie Meek pulled up, Shorty raising his hand to halt the column.

"What's the new idea now?" asked Shorty, almost deferentially.

"My notion that they'll make for the Ludlow Pass country," replied Charlie. "That's where they've held out before, according to police infor- mation. There's three trails cut out just below timberline, all toward Lud- low's. First breaks south about a mile above Forty-Rod. S'pose we look into them trails for tracks.

"Good idea, I guess," responded Shorty. "All right, boys?"

"Sure!" came from the nearer fringe of the posse.

"Then s'pose we start," said Shorty. "Quiet now!" At a fast walk, we passed Forty-Rod. I was riding just behind Shorty, to left of the double- filed column; I could see but dimly the saw-toothed, mustached profile of Charlie Meek. There was a nervous- ness, a special tension, in his attitude. He was talking again; but his voice jerked:

"Bad place here. Could shoot into us, and git clean away." I saw his hand go to his pistol-scabbard, and wondered why the cowboy, riding at my right, had pushed forward until he was opposite Charlie's saddle.

"My G—d—what's that!" jerked out Charlie Meek, and then things hap-

"An Hour or So Before Daybreak," He Said. "Better Start the Cavalry—" pened so swiftly that only long after- ward could my mind arrange them into the memory of an ordered event.

Charlie, drawing, had fired three times into the forest. The first two shots came close together, the third after an interval like a single letter heard on a telegrapher's key. But hard on these two shots came two more, in the same rhythm; and though I was looking in the other direction, I knew that this time it was Shorty who fired. My own gun-shy roan danced and side- stepped. I sat and curbed him by in- stinct; for my eyes were on the cow- boy. As with one motion, he had forced his horse up beside Charlie's, had vaulted from his saddle to the rump of Charlie's horse, had thrown the crook of his left arm about Charlie's neck, had with his right arm laid across Charlie's elbow a hooklike grip. Shorty leaped from his saddle, hung like a squat bulldog to the bits of the snorting double- loaded horse.

"The gag—quick—" he cried. And as my own horse shied again into the shrubbery, horsemen and footmen crowded past me. I saw Charlie, with the cowboy still hanging like a bar- nacle to his back, tumble into the road- way; saw a confused struggle in the shadows by the ground. Then Charlie Meek was lifted to his feet. I dis- mounted now; drew near. His arms were trussed behind him; his light eyes stared with inexpressible terror from a gray face; his jaws were mum- bling and slobbering over the wooden gag, as though he were trying fran- tically to speak. Shorty poked a gun into his ribs.

"Shut up," he said, "or you'll cash in premature. We've learned all we wanted to know about you. In case you're mixed up in your mind about these proceedings, let me inform you that the 'one-two, one' signal means 'scatter out and hide,' and was fired by somebody in the posse—meanin' you—after the last stage robbery. And 'one-two, one-two-three' means 'all clear, git to the claim.' It was fired similar after the holdup of the Stone- wall Jackson payroll. We were d—n certain you was the party that fired it. Now we've got you, dead." The me- chanical mouthing at the gag stopped; Charlie's jaws seemed to drop and set; he sagged down onto the shoulders of the men supporting him. "And you tried to hitch the blame onto that poor fool, Chris McGrath!" concluded Shorty. He turned to the posse, now grouped about him on foot. "Steady, boys, and keep your guns quiet. I'm goin' to repeat that signal just to make sure." He drew a second re- volver; aiming at the bole of a tree, he fanned his hammer in five shots with that same rhythm—"pop-pop, pop-pop-pop!"

"Now," said Shorty as the reverbera- tions died out, "leave your horses here. Hitch those that won't stand. You, Matt"—this to the cowboy— "you're guard to this prisoner. Bring him and his horse along. But keep to the rear so you won't show. If he tries any monkey-business, kill him. Don't anybody try to git ahead of me —I've looked over the land." His eye fell on me. "You leave your horse. And you keep entirely to the rear. You ain't in this." Something of Shorty's old suspicion seemed to sharpen his black eyes as he added: "Orders is to shoot anybody who tries to spoil this per-formance." The posse shifted six-shooters to workable posi- tions, drew rifles from the scabbards of their saddles and hitched their mounts to bushes.

"Come on!" cracked Shorty's voice. He turned round the thick bole of a pine, ducked between two bushes. The posse followed in single file; I, as or- dered, at the rear. Some twenty yards of tiptoeing through the sparse under- brush, and we had taken an abrupt turn to the right on a well-defined trail. Behind me I could hear the padding of the led horse. Once Charlie's voice mumbled through the gag, and the cowboy muttered: "Shut up!" I could imagine the swift motion toward his gun.

The trail came out into an open dip. Beyond rose a low, sharp ridge, bristling with dwarf firs which topped thick underbrush. And no one was watching me. Even the cowboy guard- ing Charlie Meek had his eyes on the focus of interest. Fully realizing that I was taking a chance with my life— and for the moment wholly indifferent —I dipped into the underbrush at the left of the clearing, worked as quietly as I could through it, came out at last into a trail, evidently an offshoot of the one down which we had marched It ran in the general direction which I wanted to follow. Suddenly, I was aware that there was no longer a hill- side at my right, but the bright morn- ing air. I dropped at the foot of a spruce which edged the trail, crouched among its low-lying branches. In the dim light, I reflected, I must be invis- ible. I looked about me.

Below lay a bowl of the mountain side, traversed by the head waters of Forty-Rod creek. At the bottom of the bowl stood a prospect hole with winch and bucket, beside a small dump of yellow earth and red rock. Instinct and the lay of the land told me that this was the center of interest, the focus of those invisible eyes along the ridge.

I lay and waited—five minutes per- haps, though it seemed hours.

The claim below lay deserted—or was it? My perceptions sharpened by all hateful emotions and now by sus- pense, I felt about it a sense of life, of interior movement. Somehow it seemed inhabited, packed, a-quiver with life. . . . I could have sworn that I even heard something stirring within it. . . . How much longer must I await the beginning of that ac- tion for which my hell-burned soul longed? My hand went instinctively to the revolver at my belt. Then I re- membered—and, remembering, cursed myself for an inept fool—that I had left my rifle in its scabbard with my horse. No matter. If battle there was to be, I would charge in with my pis- tol or charge in naked-handed, so I got my man.

And then—a figure emerged slowly, cautiously, from the tangle of bushes beyond the dump. He stood a mo- ment. Yes—there was life in the cabin. A hand, waving a white cloth, had been thrust from the window. The solitary figure stepped back into the bushes. A moment more, and four men emerged, walking in pairs, each pair carrying between it a box.

And then—far off to my right sounded a light shot as of a pistol, a heavier one as of a rifle—and there was a distant crashing of branches. I had jumped involuntarily at this sound, but my eyes never left the four men by the dump. I saw the leading pair straighten up, saw the nearest flash a hand toward his hip, saw the trailing pair drop the box, turn—

And the bowl below reverberated with explosion. From the cabin, from some place near the dump, from the woodpile, streaks of red flame laced the dawn. One of the leading pair went down with the slow motion of a toppling building; he fell across the box as limply as a bag of old clothes. The other dropped his handle and spun half way round before he pitched onto his face. Behind him, a man was flop- ping on the ground. A scattering burst of fire from the ridge to my right, where my fellows of the posse lay concealed, and he was still; I could even hear between reverbera- tions the hollow sound of the bullets striking his flesh. . . . It was over, and I had not acted, only stood aside, an inert spectator. . . . Or was it over? Only three bodies lay down there by the stream. And the posse was charging. They came scrambling down the ridge, weapons at ready. Two or three stopped by the fallen men, turned them over. The rest crashed uphill through the bushes. One of the trailing pair must have acted more quickly than the other— leaped into the bushes at the sound of the first shot, got away. . . .

And still I crouched under the spruce tree, shame and self-pity added to my inner hell. With all the rest, she had sapped my manhood from me. . . the moment of action had come and I had not even drawn my pistol to fire. . . . Others had taken my revenge.

Footsteps — quick, stealthy — were coming along the trail to my left. As by reflex motion, I leaped suddenly through the branches; leaped face to face with—the man I had come for, the young, spruce man whom I had shadowed to my misery last night. It was still the dusky dawn there among the trees, but I knew him. His wide black hat shaded his face, but I knew him. Recognition and action came together in the instant while his hand was starting toward his hip.

Only, I acted not according to my plan, but on instinct. I never thought of my gun. I fought as I had been taught to fight—on the field at Har- vard, in the rough, primitive football of those days. I dove at him in a high tackle, into which I put all my de- sires of violence engendered by that night. My embrace caught him about the arms, pinned them; my rush car- ried us to the ground with him under- neath. He was smaller than I by thir- ty pounds; yet the moment I touched him, I had a sense that he was elec- tric with nervous strength. An in- stant, so, we struggled in desperate silence. Then I felt him wilt in my grasp, go limp. I raised my head, looked into his face. He was my man —but I knew that already. His eyes had closed. I began to relax my hold, and his hand whipped like a striking snake at my belt. He had my gun— with the quickness of fear, of excite- ment, of hate, I got his wrist, threw my body across him to hold him down, twisted his hand backward until he dropped it. But he was struggling like a tied cat now, and what with the timberline altitude, the sleepless night, my hours of emotion, the false energy that had electrified my first attack was going fast. I managed, however, to grip his left hand as it began strug- gling toward his own belt; and so, with him spread-eagled under me, I put all the breath I had left into a yell for help. Welcome footsteps pat- tered from both directions. He quit struggling and:

"Murder! He's killing me!" he cried.

"He lies—don't let him get away— grab him!" I panted.

That member of the posse who came first up the trail I did not know, and to this day I have never identified him. But whoever he was, he had discretion and experience. He kicked away the fallen revolver, drew his weapon from its holster, stood covering us both. Gasping, as I gave ground, a demand that they secure my adversary also, I was hauled upright. A dizzy rush of blood blinded and deafened me for a moment. When my faculties cleared, I heard the voice of Shorty exploding in tones of admiration:

"Bully for you, kid! You sure got him!" I was aware that I stood supported on either side, that I was fac- ing my captive.

The nostrils of his fine, firm nose were distending as he fought for breath, his complexion was changing momently from a flush of exertion to a pallor; yet his carriage was debon- air, his green-gray eyes even chal- lenging, insolent. Then he spoke; and though the breath puffed between words, his voice gave an effect of poise, of calm.

"What is this all about?" he asked. "Haven't you gentlemen made a mis- take?"

There came a growl of indignant muttering from the posse, Shorty was first to find consecutive speech.

"Two d—d bad mistakes," he said. "It was necessary to do a little shoot- in' just when you fellows come out in front of the cabin or we'd have got you all alive. And somebody missed you."

"You've captured the wrong man, gentlemen," replied my unknown ene- my. "I was coming down the road when I heard the shooting and—"

"You can tell all that to the judge!" snapped Shorty.

Term "Jitney" Traced to Louisiana Negroes

The word "jitney," which has been used intermittently and in various sec- tions of the United States for many years, and which suddenly sprang into general use at the time the 5-cent busses and flivvers were striving to settle the local traffic problems of many cities, had a curious origin.

A minstrel troupe was playing in Ba- ton Rouge, La., in a theater where the highest gallery was reserved for ne- groes. No gallery tickets were sold, a member of the troupe being placed at the door to take cash. The door was in a poorly lighted space; and later the collector discovered two- score of plain metal disks the size of a 5-cent piece, that had been passed as nickels.

One of the minstrels showed the disks to a negro, who explained: "Dem's jitneys."

They were jettons—the metal disks used as markers in a gambling house. A negro attendant had stolen the jet- tons and was passing them as money. The minstrel troupe seized upon the word, and thereafter a 5-cent piece was a jitney, and the word spread until it came into common use.—Lib- erty.

Charleston's Distinction

A clay product closely resembling our present-day brick was among the earliest materials used for paving streets and roads. The first brick pave- ment constructed in this country, how- ever, dates back no further than 1872, and to Charleston, W. Va., belongs the distinction of having been the first American city to employ brick for paving.

Expert Counterfeiters

Chinese counterfeiters have a seem- ingly limitless assortment of tricks. Their glass dollar, thousands of which are known to be in daily circulation, is the same size as a genuine dollar, has the same ring when tossed upon a counter and the same weight. Yet un- der its thin coat of silver is nothing but a center of glass. Brass, lead, copper and many other amalgams are used in making spurious banknotes with which the market is flooded. These people are said to be the "best" counterfeiters in the world. Their work is so clever that all banks are forced to employ a staff of expert counterfeit detectors.—Exchange.

Is It a Fish or Not?

The olm or proteus is a curious, snakelike fish which is totally blind and its eyes would be of little value to it in the subterranean waters which it inhabits. The olm is both a lung and a gill breather, lying at the bot- tom of a stream at times and extract- ing oxygen through its gills and again rises to the surface and breathes through its lungs. If the olm lives in warm waters it brings forth its young alive, while transplanted to colder waters the same olm will lay eggs and hatch its young from them.

EARLY PICKED SEED CORN IS FREE FROM MOLD

Seed Selection Should Begin Soon As Ears Are Well Filled And Dented

It isn't too early to begin thinking about seed corn selection if one wishes to avoid seed affected with the common corn molds, declares M. H. Burns, plant disease extension worker at Iowa State College. As soon as the ears are dented and well filled, it is time to begin gathering seed.

Corn left in the field and selected later for seed is far more likely to carry the mold spores and thus infect the next year's crop, Mr. Burns says. If corn is selected early, from healthy green stalks and stored in a cool, dry place, the molds will not develop.

Selecting seed ears from dead or dry stalks with dry husks is not advisable because these are likely to be diseased or injured from insects which have cause premature ripening. Ears on this kind of stalks are likely to be chaffy.

Early seed selection will cut down on the labor in testing next winter or spring and less corn need be stored if it is picked early.

WHEN YOU COMPARE

The cost of everything else with electric service, you can't help but marvel at its cheapness.

When you think of how much higher now than "before the war" are clothes, groceries, rents, or taxes, you understand how well the Electric Companies have been managed in the public interest especially when you realize that electricity now costs actually less than it ever did before, in fact it is about ONE-SEVENTH cheaper than it was in 1913.

How does this compare with anything you eat, wear, or use?

Not only is electri service cheaper than it ever was, but it is much more plentiful, made so by your Electric Light Company so that everybody may have all they want.

Now all this has been brought about because electricity has proven itself essential, and because the work of men and money have been faithfully invested in your community to provide you with safety, convenience, and comfort, and to add to your prosperity.

To maintain and add to this universal service, all your Electric Light Company asks is a sufficient ncome to pay its expenses and a reasonable return to investors and to new capital necessary for future growth.

Students Should Attend School Regularly

We regret the irregularitp of at- dance on the part of some of our pils. Some of it, of course, can well be avoided but when it can should be, in justice to those ab- t and the other members of the s whose progress is necessarily arded thereby. We deire for ev- pupil the maximum progress in school work. We desire that his ool work be thorough and that interest be maintained at the best point to insure adequate ef- t. Failures in school ore occasion- by a lack of interest and lack of erest usually follows absence m classes. We invite the friendly operation of all parents toward elimination of unnecessary fail- s. We are supremely grateful the fine spirit of co-operation so y have shown toward our school. This goes far toward insuring first class work What we can do for the youth of today will largely determine the character of the citizenship of tomorrow. Spare us as nearly as possible the boys and girls every day of the school year, and encourage in them the correct attitude toward school and those in authority and if they have a fair degree of ability we feel certain their success can safely be predicted

Seniors Have New Class Rings

Mr Zeiger of Garner brought down this week the elegant class rings the dignified seniors are now wearing They were obtained that we might look at them and enjoy them. As the cost has been borne solely by the class we should avail ourselves of the opportunity.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

We are having a pecial program in preparation for both churches on the coming Sunday While the program of each church differs from the other yet both are of special interest to the congregations.

In Klemme we will begin with a baptismal service. After the sacred rites of baptism have been administered to a number of our little folk, we will receive a class into church fellowship by transfer or on confession of faith. This to be folowed by the Sacrament of The Lord's Supper.

We will again worship God by special song and music. Somewhat of a resume of the years work along the several lines of activity, baptisms, reception of members, funerals; activities along financial lines, work of Sunday school, W. F M. S and Ladies' Aid will be a part of this.

Elwyn Rohlf was the name given to the little son of Mr. and Mrs. E F. Jacobs last Sunday as he was baptized by the pastor. May he grow up to be a great, good man!

The services or program of Liberty will be a special and of vital interest to the entire congregation and all are cordially invited to be there There too a resume of the work will be a part of the program.

JACOBS POULTRY AND HOG CLINIC HELD LAST WEEK

Clinic Proved Interesting And Was Profitable To Those Who Attended

E. F. Jacobs, hardware dealer, was well pleased with the Poultry and Hog Clinic which he held last week Wednesday, co-operating with the Geo. H Lee Co., who sent their specialist here to diagnos cases. Dr. E A. McCain of the Lee Research and Clinic Department was the man in charge here.

The clinic was attended by a good crowd, despite the busy season of the year and those who attended were much interested and benefited by the various demonstrations and the explanations of th post-mortem work

Many questions were asked and information given about the care of poultry and hogs and proper treatment recommended.

Mr Jacobs says he will hold another poultry and hog clinic next spring as he considers the clinic last week was very successful.

FARMERS SHOULD GET COPY OF AG. YEAR BOOK NOW READY

Books Can Be Procured For Use At Farm Bureau Meetings

Des Moines, September 22.—Many new features are included in the 1925 Iowa Year Book of Agriculture which has just been issued by M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture. One of the interesting features is an account of the championship judging team which was sent to England and successfully defended their championship honors in judging live stock.

More complete statistical tables of Iowa's crops are included in this pear book than in former issues. In addition to complete information from the assessor's figures, there is also included a summary of the figures from the state census.

Reports from all of tho farm organizations of the state, as well as the different divisions of the Agricultural department, make up an interesting volume Copies of the book may be secured for schools, farm organizations and similar research organizations, upon application to M G Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture, Des Moines, Iowa

Of next importance to the well-filled coal house for the winter months is the well-stocked fruit cellar.

THORNBURG ISSUES WARNING ON SEED CORN

State Secretary Of Agriculture Advises Farmers To Gather Seed Corn At Once This Year

Des Moines, Iowa, September 23.—"Unless immediate steps are taken to save and thoroughly dry seed corn, we may have a repetition of our troubles of last year," states M G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture.

"Our inspectors and seed laboratory were busy last spring trying to protect the farmers of the stote against seed corn of low germination, as well as foreign seed corn which was shipped into the state on account of the shortage. In addition, a tremendous amount of work was done by farmers and other organizations"

"Figures of our Weather and Crop Service show that only a small portion of the crop is matured enough at present so that it will make sound corn in case of frost," states Mr. Thornburg. "If rainy weather continues, even sound corn will contain enough moisture so that the germination will be injured by a severe freeze like we received last year. It would seem to be good business to sav and thoroughly dry sufficient seed corn at the present time."

IOWA HAS POISON HEMLOCK

Plant Which Killed Socrates Found At Ottumwa

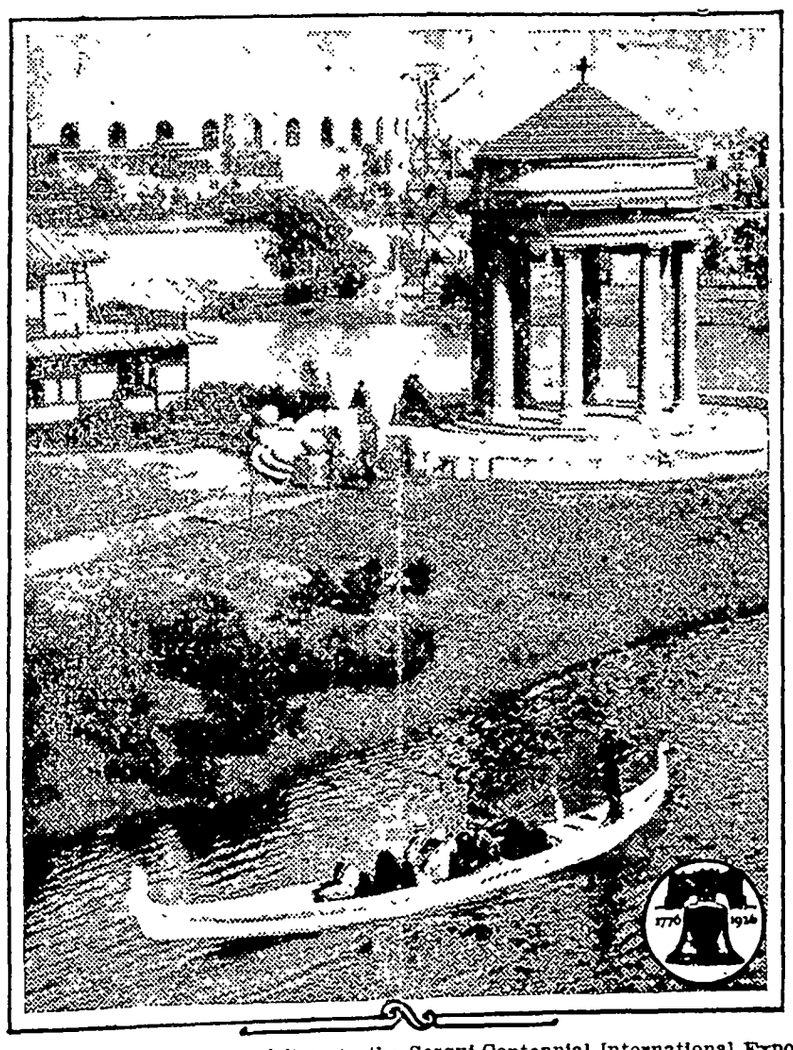
The poison hemlock, the same plant which was responsible for the death of Socrates, famous Greek philosopher, seems to be spreading in Iowa, according to reports eceived at Iowa State College.

A specimen was recently received from Mrs. Fred B. Tucker of Otumwa and it is found in several other places in the state. A considerable quantity of it is found near Bellevue.

The poison hemlock, Dr. L. H. Pammel, head of the Botany department, says, is very poisonous and its spread should be checked at once. It is a biennial with spotted stems and large compound leaves with small leaflets and white flowers. It is easily kiled by cutivation.

Because f his teachings the Athenians acused Socrates of impiety, reigious innovation and corrupting the youth of the city and he was condemned to die. The sentence was carried out by drinking poison hemlock.

ON THE SESQUI LAGOONS



Here are Americans, visitors to the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia which celebrates the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, riding about the lagoons in an Italian craft, a gondola, from which they view the buildings and displays from many lands. In the distance can be seen the mammoth Sesqui Stadium; to the right is the signal tower of the United States Coast Guard building and exhibit, and to the left is one of the Japanese pagodas which dot the exposition grounds. The Grecian pavilion is one of the permanent structures on the site before the city government decided to build the Sesqui at the front door of the great Philadelphia Navy Yard. The Exposition continues until December 1.

NEXT THURSDAY BIG DAY IN KLEMME

LEGION AND BUSINESS MEN OF KLEMME TO STAGE BIG CELEBRATION

There Will Be Something Doing All Day—Lots Of Sports And Contests For All

Next Thursday, September 30th, is the big day in Klemme, when the Klemme American Legion and the business men of Klemme have co-operated to stage a big Legion Day Celebration.

There will be something going on every minute of the day—no long waits or ull moments at the Klemme Legion Day. Come early and stay late is the general order for the day.

Bring your family and your friends to Klemme next Thursday. This will be the last big event in Northern Iowa this year, and it's your last chance to take a day off and celebrate this fall.

Stunts For The Kiddies

The children have not been overlooked in planning for the celebration. There will be a number of contests for both little girls and boys six years old and under. Some 'big money" will be given the little girls who decorate their doll buggies and enter the doll buggy parade right after dinner. And then there will be a scooter race for the little boys, six years old, or under. Get in the race and cop the money, boys!

Ferris Wheel Coming, Too

Already the "ride concessions" are booking in for Klemme and a Legion man informed us that a fine, brand-new ferris wheel would be in Klemme Legion Day. There will possibly be an air-plane ride and a few other concessions of a like nature. Besides these there will be a regular midway of stands and all kinds of concessions.

Races And Contests

The program is well crowded with races and contests of every description for young and old, fat and slim, men or women, boys or girls. Get in on the fun and get your share of the big money.

Horse Races—Running And Potato Races

Horse races are always popular and the committee in charge has arranged for some running races to take place at the ball diamond. A potato race with hores has also been added to the program. This causes a lot of fun and excitement.

Free Attraction Booked

As we go to press the report comes that a free street act has been booked for both afternoon and evening.

Greased Pig—Who Will Catch Him?

Catching the greased pig is an old stunt that always goes over big. Put on your old clothes or your overalls and g after him. The pig is worth about $15 and he is all yours if you catch him.

Real Ball Game Lined Up

Klemme and Corwith will put up a real scrap in the bal lgame which has been scheduled for Legion Day. This game will be a real battle to the finish to decide who has the best team. Klemme has one game on Corwith, and that team has also put the skids under the home team once and this game will decide the whole thing. The recent game between Klemme and Corwith was tied until the 13th inning when Corwith broke the tie and the game onded 4 to 5 in favor of Corwith. It was one of the best games played in Hancock County this year. The game for Legion Day promises to be a real treat for baseball fans.

Plenty Of Amusements

In the evening there will be a big Legion Dance, Band Concert, a big tug of war between four townships, and other events all day and evening.

Come to Klemme Legion Day, Thursday, September 30th, bring the family and have a good time.

THE AMERICAN LEGION

DELAWARE WINS IN MEMBERSHIP WORK

Delaware department, by its sturdy membership work and an unprecedented increase, topped the honor roll of all Legion departments when the books were closed at national headquarters at Indianapolis in June for determining honor position in the convention parade, housing arrangements and seating arrangements in the convention hall at Philadelphia.

First state in the Union to ratify the Constitution of the United States on its adoption in 1787, Delaware resolved to be the first in the great sesquicentennial parade of the Legion to commemorate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence.

To win this honor, Delaware rolled up a percentage of 208.33 for 1926, as figured against the average membership of the department for the four preceding years.

Not far behind Delaware came Florida, with 161.21 per cent. Idaho, winner of the Lindsley trophy, was third was 150.70 per cent.

The next ten of the forty-nine departments in order of rank were: France, 147.44; Wyoming, 139.01; West Virginia, 132.13; Arizona, 129.03; Colorado, 125.65; Canada, 120.83; Philippine Islands, 120.50; Alabama, 113.22; Georgia, 111.52, and Panama, 110.57.

An unusual feature of this year's race among the departments was the fact that 23 of them had at that date surpassed their average membership for the preceding four years as against only four departments to do so in 1925. Five departments had a higher percentage this year than enabled Florida last year to win first place.

One week after the closing of the books the Legion, as a national entity, had surpassed its total membership as of December 31 of the preceding year. This result, the first time it has ever been attained since the Legion was founded, was accredited to a national membership campaign launched by National Commander John R. McQuigg immediately following his election at Omaha in 1925. He then called upon department commanders to "go back to your departments and make 1926 the greatest membership year the Legion has ever known."

Paris Limits Number of Legionnaires to 30,000

The National France convention committee of the American Legion announces that the French government has limited the number of American Legionnaires who can be cared for in Paris during the Legion convention in September, 1927, to 30,000, that total being as many as the housing accommodations will permit. There are no large hotels in Paris, as Americans know them in the large cities of the United States. No other conventions will be permitted in the French capital during the proposed Legion convention week, September 19-23, 1927.

Because of this limitation, an allotment of space on the 24 ocean liners that will carry the Legionnaires to France has been determined, based on Legion membership in each state. the booking of berths, beginning November 15, 1926, will be done in each state by the department France convention officer until March 1, 1927, when those unfilled will be returned to John J. Wicker, Jr., national travel director of the committee, who will then fill them direct from his office from states whose allotments were not sufficient to care for the demand.

700 Candidates Are Initiated at One Time

More than 700 candidates were inducted into the American Legion at a recent monster outdoor initiation ceremony conducted on the athletic field of the General Electric company at Lynn, Mass., by Lynn Post No. 6. Fifty thousand persons watched the scene while giant searchlights played upon the field. Amplifiers made it possible to hear every word.

Preceding the initiation, 35 Legion posts and battalions of the National Guard and the naval reserves held a parade. A banquet attended by 475 persons was held earlier in the evening. Addresses were made by National Commander John R. McQuigg, Department Commander Francis J. Goode, Lieut. Gov. Frank G. Allen of Massachusetts; William J. Young, president of the Lynn Chamber of Commerce; Mayor R. S. Bauer of Lynn, and Post Commander Henry O. Silsbee II.

Legionnaires Assisted

When the Eucharistic congress was held at Chicago recently, 300 American Legionnaires assisted in marshaling the crowds at the call of Senior Vice Commander Ferre C. Watkins, of the Illinois department. They helped to conduct 62,000 children through down-town Chicago streets on one day. They restored several hundred lost children to their parents. Chicago Medical post acted as emergency units during the congress.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Franco - Italian Relations Strained by Attempt to Kill Mussolini.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THOUGH friendly relations between Italy and France are strained as a result of the latest attempt to assassinate Premier Mussolini, it is not likely there will be an actual diplomatic rupture. The Italian anarchist who threw a bomb at the dictator's automobile insists that he had no accomplices, but the Italian authorities are convinced that his crime was plotted in France and they accuse that country of deliberately sheltering conspirators against the Fascist regime. Immediately after the bomb throwing Mussolini, without naming France, uttered a warning to other nations that Italy proposed to "put a stop to certain culpable, tiresome conditions." The Italian press was more outspoken and berated France soundly, to which the French replied, officially and unofficially, with disclaimers of responsibility and advice to Italy to watch its own borders and keep out the plotters who might form their plans in other countries. There were demonstrations against the French consulates in several Italian cities, and the French charge d'affaires in Rome filed three protests. Premier Poincare called in the Italian ambassador to Paris and made it clear that France would regard further officially inspired criticism of its hospitality for foreign political refugees as an act of extreme unfriendliness. Notwithstanding this, the directory of the Fascist party issued orders which said in part:

"The land of France, for whose safety some of our 500,000 war dead fell, has been for years the most hospitable land for all those hatching in their perfidious hearts hatred against Italy."

It is there, the orders continue, that "spirits are excited, bombs are built, and those people are instructed who later will enter Italy to attempt the life of the head of the Italian regime. All this cannot longer be tolerated."

The orders declare that, if France desires to continue friendship with Italy, as the latter desires, it must change its line of conduct.

The Italian government published a list of political refugees, most of whom are living in France, and announced action that will deprive them of their citizenship.

COLORADO Republicans seem to have wrested the control of the party's affairs in that state from the hands of the Ku Klux klan and similar secret organizations. United States Senator Rice W. Means, directing head of the klan in Colorado, was defeated for renomination by Charles W. Waterman, counsel of the President's oil conservation board, who was supported by the anti-klan element. In addition, all the candidates for office who were sponsored by Senator L. C. Phipps were beaten by those supported by Clarence C. Hamlin and ex-Governor Shoup, leaders of the anti-klan faction in the party. The Democrats nominated former Gov. W. E. Sweet for senator.

In Maryland Senator Weller, Republican, defeated Congressman John Philip Hill for the senatorial nomination to oppose M. E. Tydings, Democrat. Governor Ritchie was renominated. Senators E. D. Smith of South Carolina and Wesley Jones of Washington won renomination.

Michigan Republicans had an exciting gubernatorial fight and Gov. Alex Groesbeck was badly beaten by Fred W. Green of Ionia, mainly because Groesbeck has been exceedingly liberal in the granting of prison paroles and pardons. The Groesbeck-Green contest was so bitter that the Democrats think it will result in a split in the Republican party and the election of William J. Comstock, their unopposed gubernatorial candidate.

Senator Butler of Massachusetts, chairman of the Republican national committee, and Gov. Alvin T. Fuller were renominated without opposition, and the Democrats of the state put up former Senator David I. Walsh and William Gaston to oppose them. The Democrats of Louisiana renominated Senator Edwin S. Broussard, though former Gov. Jared Y. Sanders gave him a close race. Senator Dale of Vermont was unopposed for renomination.

Republican national leaders have brought out the old saying, "As Maine goes, so goes the nation," following the election last week in that state. It was won by the Republicans with ease and their majority of about 20,000 was considered quite satisfactory for an off-year. Gov. Ralph O. Brewster and all four congressmen were returned to office. The Democratic congressional committee admittedly could find little encouragement in the Maine results.

CANADA'S elections last week were watched by the United States with unusual interest, and the victory of the Liberals, it was predicted, would result in reciprocity with this country. Leaders there said the defeat of the Meighen Conservative government meant the Canadian people refused to be hived behind high tariff barriers. W. L. MacKenzie King, leader of the Liberals, had urged the wisdom of freer trade facilities, and some of his Progressive allies in western Canada are out-and-out free traders. The Liberals won 119 parliamentary seats, and of their natural allies the Progressives won 8, the United Farmers of Alberta 11, the Laborites 3 and the Independents 2. It was certain Mr. King could muster a majority of about 50 votes for his policies. It was expected Premier Meighen and his cabinet would resign promptly and that Mr. King would be called to form a new government.

SEVERAL thousand delegates of the Ku Klux klan met in Washington for the annual convention, paraded down Pennsylvania avenue in robes, but without masks, declared themselves against the World court and also against Gov. Al Smith as a Presidential candidate, and re-elected Hiram W. Evans as imperial wizard. Evans also said the klan would wage war against alienism, bolshevism, Catholicism, modification of the Eighteenth amendment and European intervention in Mexican internal affairs. Resolutions were adopted demanding strict adherence to a "hands-off" policy toward Mexico's church squabble and expressing the order's sympathy with the Calles government in its "efforts to free the people from stultifying foreign influences and to popularize the education of the masses."

Every delegate to the convention took a solemn oath to attend some Protestant church every Sunday in the year, unless prevented by illness or some other emergency; and a similar oath is to be administered by the delegates to every member of the klan.

TORRENTIAL rains, the heaviest recorded for September, swelled the rivers and streams of the Middle West into roaring floods and immense damage to crops and real property resulted. Western Illinois was hardest hit by the rains, which descended on sections of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan. The losses ranged from $5,000,000 in Illinois to half a million in Iowa. About a score of persons lost their lives. Most of the damage falls on the corn crop.

ELECTION of non-permanent members of the League of Nations council by the assembly resulted in the choice of Poland, Chile, and Rumania for three-year tenure; Columbia, Holland and China for two years, and Belgium, Czechoslovakia and San Salvador for one year. By a special vote, Poland was declared re-eligible for election at the expiration of her three-year term, thereby becoming a semi-permanent council member. There are 18 candidates for the nine seats, including the Irish Free State and Uruguay whose representatives were bitterly disappointed by the result of the balloting.

August Zaleski, foreign minister of Poland, on behalf of the delegation from Poland, Sweden and Finland, presented a petition asking that the league enter the battle against alcoholism. He declared the evil of alcoholism was made worse by the lack of co-ordinated international action.

After the nations signatory to the Locarno treaties had deposited with the league secretariat signed copies of the pacts, Doctor Stresemann of Germany demanded that the Rhineland be evacuated by the allies. In an interview he said: "If Locarno has any meaning at all, it should mean the existing frontiers of western Europe are guaranteed against forceful revision, and consequently no other guarantees, such as occupied zones, are longer necessary."

Paul Boncour, French delegate, urged that a general conference on disarmament should be convoked at the earliest possible date. The league's disarmament commission adopted a modified resolution emphasizing the necessity of concluding as soon as possible a convention of the private manufacturer of arms

MEXICO has more trouble on its hands. The Yaqui Indians of the state of Sonora, who never have been really conquered, are in revolt and the government has sent large bodies of troops to the scene. One detachment of artillery is reported to have been destroyed by the Indians. The Yaquis stopped a train on which General Obregon was traveling and seized the former president, but he was soon released, presumably after paying ransom. It is believed in Mexico City that the Indians have been stirred up by revolutionary agents sent into the country by Adolfo de la Huerta, head of the revolt against the Obregon government in December, 1923.

Jacob Rosenthal, a wealthy New Yorker, was kidnaped by bandits while motoring from Cuernavaca to Mexico City and held for ransom. Federal troops were put on the trail of the bandits, who sent warning that if they were pursued they would kill their captive. This being ignored they murdered Rosenthal.

HENRY STEVENS, firearms expert, joined his brother Willie and Cousin Henry de la B. Carpender in the county jail at Somerville, N. J., on charges of murdering Rev. Edward Wheeler Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills, whose bodies were found under a crab-apple tree four years ago. The slain rector's three relatives by marriage and his widow, Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, were indicted for the murder by the grand jury. The indictment of Henry Stevens was something of a surprise, although he recently figured prominently in the revived investigation and it was officially announced that his alibi, considered ironclad four years ago, had been broken down.

PRESIDENT AND MRS. COOLIDGE and their summer household departed on Saturday from White Pine camp in the Adirondacks, their vacation having come to an end. The President has profited greatly physically by the outdoor life in the mountains and returned to Washington full of energy and brown as a berry. He found the White House all cleaned and repaired, and also found his secretary, Mr. Sanders, in good health again after a sea voyage.

CAPT. RENE FONCK and his crew selected for the transatlantic nonstop flight all went to the flying field at Westbury, N. Y., early Thursday morning prepared to jump off for Paris in the huge Sikorsky plane, which had been tested and approved by Lieutenant Curtin, navigator and alternate pilot. But when nearly everything was ready for the start a bad leak in the gasoline tank was discovered. So the plane was put back in the hangar for repairs and the start was postponed. Perhaps before this is read the flight will have been made or have failed. On the other hand, weather conditions may have caused indefinite delay.

SENATOR CARAWAY of Arkansas has broken out in a new spot. He says the graves of America's war dead in France have been desecrated with abusive and vulgar writings on the crosses, and urges that the bodies of all soldiers buried there be brought home. The War department says nothing of this character has been reported to it, and General Pershing, chairman of the American battle monuments commission, declared that during his recent stay in Europe he had heard nothing of such desecration.

Sees Bowlegs as Advantage in Life

Last spring a Kansas City boy, then aged two years, was observed by his parents and aunts to be quite obviously bowlegged. Great excitement was shared in by everybody except the child's father, who rather envies bowlegged people, being rather of an opposite persuasion himself. The child was taken to a specialist, who prescribed shoes with the outer soles built up. The shoes were obtained and lasted quite awhile, with the result that the boy is now knock-kneed.

A rehearing was granted by the specialist, who now recommends some more shoes built up on the inside soles. The shoes have been obtained, at cost of $9, and the father hopes for the best. He paid the $9 cheerfully, still in the hope that the boy may emerge bowlegged rather than otherwise.

"If he's knock-kneed," explains the father, "the best he can ever be is a pitcher. But bowlegs are suitable either for infield or outfield."—Kansas City News.

Betty's Comment Also Straight From Heart

Little Betty, age two, was just beginning to talk more or less fluently and had acquired the habit of picking up expressions from other members of the family and using them, though she had no idea of their meaning. She had somewhere learned the exclamation, "For heaven's sake," and though her elders tried to prevent her she persisted in its use.

One evening she accompanied the hired men to milk and was much interested, drawing very near the cow and asking questions. Suddenly Bossy, sleepily chewing her cud and apparently without malice aforethought, gave a vicious swish of her tail, narrowly missing Betty and hitting the hired men full in the face. He was irritated, to say the least, and what he said to the cow came straight from the heart. It may have shocked the cow, but Betty looked on with the greatest composure till he ended, then she spoke.

"Well, for heaven's sake," she said. —Indianapolis News.

Salt Water in Fire Mains

Seaside cities such as Lynn, Mass., may soon be fighting their downtown fires with salt water driven through high-pressure mains by electric pumps that are started by the fire alarm system. This type of fire protection is considered to be cheaper and more dependable than the ordinary method of using fresh city water for the purpose.

Women Smokers Barred

Women may be seen smoking in almost all public places in New York, but that liberty is sometimes curtailed as soon as the city limits are passed. On one of the principal railroads women who invade the masculine precincts of the smoking car are politely but firmly requested by the trainmen to leave.

Almost a Cripple, Routs Sciatic Rheumatism Completely From System. Thanks Tanlac.

The amazing recovery of Charles Rivett, 205 E. Holdrege St., Bethany, Nebr., has excited considerable comment. "I was almost a cripple," says Mr. Rivett. "Sciatic rheumatism settled in my left hip. My suffering became so severe that I could not work. I could not sleep at night or move freely in the daytime. The slightest effort caused me pain. "Now, thanks to Tanlac, that's over! The rheumatism never bothers me any more and I eat and sleep like a youngster. Feel fine and give Tanlac credit for my marvelous recovery. I gladly recommend it to all suffering as I was."

"Ah, these proceedings are legal, en!" exclaimed the stranger, with hat appeared to be an air of genuine lief. "In that case—"

"Miner's law. Best law that is. But u'll git a trial," cut in Shorty; and e captive's eyelid flickered. "That ll be all from you just now. Tie s arms, boys, and bring him along." ck toward the clearing we started, d by the group convoying the cap- e. He had an easy, athletic walk. erything about him, in fact—the ac- nt, the precise speech, the cool, for- al manner—suggested the gentle- en. Perhaps almost too much the ntleman.

We were well out in the clearing be- re I looked ahead; so much did this an whom I had captured for death old my insane attention. Out of the oods came the cowboy, leading that ttle black horse on which the posse d mounted the gagged and helpless harlie Meek. The saddle was empty. saw then that a figure lay shrunken nd huddled across our path. The ading group stopped beside it. The hole frame of the captive gave a rk and then settled back, as by ef- ort of the will, into a pose of easy onchalance. I hurried forward.

Charlie Meek. He was bleeding rom a hole in the chest; the side of is head was all asmear with another round. The gag still stretched his aws; over it ran a bloody foam. But is wounded torso heaved; and there as a pleading intelligence in his yes.

"Better git that thing out of his outh," said Shorty with a touch of oftness. "'Tain't needed no more."

Some one untied the gag. His eyes olled until they showed only the hites; the muscles of his face drew; is jaws moved as though the last in- tinct in him, the talkative, was for peech.

Then his throat rattled and:

"He's gone!" said Shorty. I looked up at the captive. And other eyes, now that the curtain had fallen on Charlie's tragedy, followed mine. He was perhaps a trifle pale; but so, I suppose, were we all.

"Would one of you gentlemen mind slipping that rope a little farther up my right arm?" he asked. "It will hold me just as securely and won't chafe so much—thank you."

They led him on; seated him by the clump of trees. But Shorty, looking down at the body, vouchsafed unasked a word of explanation.

"Darn thoughtless of me," he said. "Ought to tied him to a tree up by the horses. Had some loony idea of keeping him where we could all watch him. When those road agents come out by the cabin, the boys there on the ridge showed a little excitement, I guess. Anyhow, Matt, that fool cowboy from the slaughter house, lost his head and let go the bridle. And this"—Shorty dropped his contemptuous pronoun not untenderly—"took his chance and dug his heels into his hoss. Matt got him here"—he pointed to Charlie's breast—"and—and somebody in the posse got him here. Then the boys down below had to shoot— Hey! Here comes the Killer!"

Over the ridge marched another captive—tall, rangy, bearded. Vaguely I had been trying to account for the fifth bandit. This evidently was he. Led toward the clump of trees, he passed me. He had a pair of strange, staring, light-brown eyes, which seemed to look through and over the members of the posse, crowding round or following like little boys. Shorty ran forward, barking an order. Left alone, I followed. The tall man and my captive were facing each other; and their eyes showed no recognition; only faint curiosity. Then they were led away, made to sit down under separate trees. Shorty, all executive force again, sent one squad up for the horses, another down for the bodies.

A half-score of us, temporarily unoccupied, withdrew beyond earshot of the captives. Tongues began to wag. They questioned me about my feat; for I, who had gone on this hunt a suspected person, was now a hero. I had taken my man with my naked hands. I evaded answer. Then the posse fell again into boasting and reminiscence; and to me, as reporter for the Courier, all addressed their narratives. Never did journalist hear any story less curiously, for my own moment of exultation in tragedy was passing. But I heard nevertheless, and absorbed half consciously the background to the night's events. I have heard it many times since from better authority, have put it together in logical detail. And because I have much more to tell, let me here finish with that.

Even before the robbery of the Cottonwood stage, the bank and express company had taken serious thought concerning the raids on their treasure shipments. From their own funds—for an appeal to the county was worse than useless—they had hired Mike the bartender and two other detectives who never then or thereafter showed their hands or revealed their identities. The criminals and extortionists of our camp were all roughly interlocked; one group knew the gossip of the others. Moreover, they had grown careless with immunity. Every night Mike the bartender plucked gems from drunken lips. Suspicion fastened on the five men who worked—occasionally—that remote, unpromising claim above Forty-Rod. One of them had followed the futile chases of Marshal McGrath after the latest stage robbery and the hold-up of the Stonewall Jackson pay roll, and, matching notes with his fellow who watched the claim, had learned "some one's" code of signals by gunshot.

The place of Marshal McGrath in this criminal scheme of things long remained a matter of doubt. Finally the detectives and their employers rated him for what he was—an anachronism, a back number, representative of an era from which Cottonwood camp had emerged.

Meantime Mike had plucked another gem of information from the tipsy gossip of the Silver Dollar. The "Killer," that member of the gang who had wanted to torture the Stonewall Jackson paymaster, had grown dangerous. On any big job he was likely to shoot prematurely, recklessly. The rest of the bandits had quarreled with him. What pressure they could put upon a wild man like him, unless it was knowledge of his manifold crimes, I know not. At any rate, they subdued him to their policy. The next time they went out they would leave him behind to guard the cabin and watch the approaches.

On the night of action, a band of eight men, picked from the vigilance committee for nerve and marksmanship, hid in the bushes above the claim. After supper, they saw four of the inmates start through the moonlight to the little horse corral on the hillside above. A candle still burned in the cabin; by which they knew that things were going as expected. Two expert plainsmen stalked the claim—this, it seems to me yet, was the most valorous deed of that night. Luck served them; the Killer went out presently for a pail of water. When he returned, his right hand occupied, they rose up behind him, poked two muzzles into his ribs. Having satisfied themselves that he would not talk, the squad bound and gagged him and, disposing themselves in the cabin or in the woodpile, waited for dawn. When the bank robbers, having received the double signal for "all safe," should return to the cabin, the vigilantes intended to let them enter, to get the drop, and to capture them alive.

By prearrangement, Charlie Meek was not arrested with the marshal. Marcus wanted to see what he would do. As Marcus expected, he turned on the marshal, announced his own virtue, asked to lead the posse. Letting him fire the signal, thereby putting in our hands the last piece of convincing evidence, was an afterthought, a final detail arranged between Marcus and Shorty before we started.

So far, the elaborate program had gone through with machine-like smoothness—not a break or slip. I marvel yet that in taking possession of the town and arresting so many dangerous characters the vigilantes never had to fire a shot before Charlie Meek was killed.

* * * * * * *

The horses had come. Up from the hollow, men had borne the three corpses. All, by virtue of good marksmanship, had mercifully died in their tracks. They rolled Charlie's body over, roughly composed it, laid out the others beside it. The first was that man with a short black beard whom I had seen giving orders to my captive in the Black Jack the night before. Last night—every time my mind formed that phrase, I had a kind of vague wonder to think that years and ages had not passed since the setting of yesterday's sun. He had been struck squarely in the forehead by two heavy bullets at once, and mutilated most horribly. . . .

Shorty was bellowing orders—"Git those bodies onto horses! Tie up the prisoners and mount 'em! You, Matt, rustle back to camp and tell Mr. Handy we're comin'—ride! Don't anybody else go ahead—this job ain't over."

Glad for anything that would break my tumbling, fluttering thoughts, I hurried to my horse.

CHAPTER XII

The sun had fully risen over the Pyrites, was dancing even on the westward slopes, when from a grove of dwarf pine our shoddily solemn procession emerged into the straggling litter of cabins bordering Cottonwood. Horsemen were swinging now round the line of shacks which marked the rear approaches of Main street. Behind them ran pedestrians. One man had recognized Charlie Meek, was shaking his fist at the dead bandits . . . he would know better presently. . . . Before and behind, riders of the posse were slipping bits of news from the corners of their mouths to friends in our fringe of camp-followers . . . my own name. . . . Men were pointing me out. . . . "And never even went to his gun," I heard. . . . My captive ahead rode with his back straight, his head up . . . if he would only sag or droop . . . his spirit defied mine. . . . This was Main street. How the vigilance committee had grown! A cordon of armed guards stretched on both sides of the way. . . . A woman looked from a cabin door, raised a hand to a pale forehead, crossed herself. . . . I must not look at the crowds again. . . . I might see—what matter if I did see . . . ?

Men crowding about me . . . congratulations on my nerve . . . Marcus repeating: "It's great, boy!" . . . Buck reassuring me that he always said I ought to have been in the game from the first . . . others . . . the touch of their hands were loathsome . . . would they ever let me alone? . . . Ah, now the committee had gone into conference . . . flashes of light on their intentions. . . . "He won't take long," I heard from Shorty . . . Mayor Brown was to be judge. . . .

"Well, come on! Let's get it over with!" Marcus commanded. Then his sharp, strained countenance turned my way and he seemed again aware of me.

"Coming along to the proceedings, boy?" And that inquiry jerked me out of the haze into the light. I would not, I could not attend that trial because of what I knew and would not tell, but mostly because that softening picture rose again—the blue eyes of Constance Deane. Guilty she might be—guilty of course she was; nevertheless, I could not face her reproach. And Marcus, peering into my face, must have guessed something of this; for his expression softened and:

"All right!" he said. Then, as though finding for me a logical way out, he added:

"S'pose you stay here on guard." Others were listening now; and for their benefit he went on with a jocularity I knew to be assumed: "You brought him in, and you keep him. Hey, McNeill, Bowles! You're to stay here on guard. Mr Gilson's in command." The door had opened again. The Killer emerged between two guards, his hands now unbound. There was a welt above his wrist where the rope had cut. . . . But he walked straight.

Some one had given me the key. Some one had commanded that I was to open the door only on signed order or personal demand of the central committee. Down the street walked the captive and his guards.

The beelike swarm about the courthouse became active, moved, shifted. Heretofore it had been silent or nearly so; merely buzzing with subdued conversation. Now, its members broke into audible speech, even into vociferation. A large squad of guards had detached itself, marched away; it disappeared into that alley which led to the Pioneer corral. Ten minutes later it emerged—augmented. Between the ranks I discerned the tall form of Chris McGrath, framed by an unranked crowd. Ah, there were the prisoners of the Pioneer corral, they who were held for deportation. There was Colliver; there was Red Nell. The squad aligned itself and its captives before the log assay office beside the courthouse. From the peak of its gable extended a new timber. It had not been there before. . . .

A horse was being led into the crowd—a barebacked bay horse. The guards were beating men away from him; and the babble had stopped. The only sound was the shuffle or thump of feet on the board sidewalks. Men had come through the courthouse door. Above them emerged a form, bareheaded, blindfolded, hatless—they were lifting him on to the horse. They were leading the horse toward the beam. The Killer's head was wagging as though he was talking.

There seemed no benefit of clergy—and Marcus had summoned a clergyman for the gambler who lost his nerve. I knew then that his speech was but blasphemy; that the Killer, on whose departing soul lay the blood of twenty men, was dying as he had lived. There was a man on the beam . . . tying a rope. . . . Some one standing on a chair had dropped the loop over the Killer's neck. His head wagged; was still. The horse gave a violent leap out from under him. . . . A murmur that was a wail from the crowd. . . . A man on the outskirts pitched over on to his face. . . . The heaving shoulders, the blinded head, visible above the spectators, were spinning. . . .

And a voice wailed and choked in my ear:

"Oh, G—d—oh, G—d!"

The prisoner stood at the window; His hands clutched the bars. His eyes stared. His loose mouth had fallen open. His head was wobbling on his shoulders. And his despairing glance clutched at mine.

"Let me go!" he pleaded. "Let me go!" I shook my head.

"Then send for my wife"—the words came out of him in spurts, in jerks. "She'll—she—might get me out of this. For G—d's sake, send for my wife!"

"Who is your wife?" It was as though some one else spoke.

"Mrs. Deane—Mrs. Constance Deane—Mrs. Barnaby's place"—he was sagging from the bars now. "She came to get me out of this. All the way to make me stop this. My God, if I'd listened to her, I'd have been a decent man—" and then, as though the sense back of his emotion warned him that he was making a fatal admission, his mouth snapped shut, something like intelligence returned to his eyes, and he finished weakly: "Send for my wife."

Mechanically I repeated, I do not know why:

"Get back from the window!" For I was Robert Gilson again; like a naked soul at the judgment seat I saw what insane jealousy had made of me, what I had done to the woman I loved, what a thing I had been. . . .

And I turned, as though the motion would relieve me of my thoughts, and saw her; and thought for an instant I was seeing a vision. She stood at the jail door. One hand rested on the latch. The other clasped round her head a black shawl. Her blue eyes, swimming in anxiety which I took for reproach, seized mine, clutched them.

"You!" she said. "You!"

"Is this your husband?" I asked.

"Yes. Quick! Have you the key?"

"Yes."

"Then give it to me!" Her hand, her eyes pleaded. "You say you love me—"

"No," I said, "I will do it myself." And while I was saying that—so quick is thought—I had formed both a determination and a plan. All save us stood watching that drama of a passing soul, their eyes captives of horror. My fellow guards were not watching. My roan, with his trick of speed, stood at the door. I moved forward to act. She raised her hand as though to protest, dropped it as though realizing that she would waste time. I threw the reins over my saddle horn, I turned the key in the lock. It grated. I glanced involuntarily over my shoulder. McNeill and Bowles had not heard the sound. My captive was crouched on the floor, half collapsed. As I entered his eyes went wild.

"Listen," I said, "and get yourself together if you want to live! There's a horse at the door. Here is my hat. It's a different color from yours. Follow me out. Get on to the horse as quietly and quickly as you can—"

Instantly control came to his face, his limbs. But I staggered the six steps to the door.

"Wait a moment!" I said. I placed myself by the saddle, on the side toward the crowd. A tiny practical consideration troubled my mind for an instant and was as instantly dispelled. I was tall, he short—but I rode still with the short eastern leather—he could reach my stirrups. He mounted so suddenly that his foot, crossing the saddle, struck my back. The beat of a trot, a lope—he was gone. . . . I looked back toward the crowd. McNeill had turned his head. . . . but this phenomenon of a galloping horse appeared neither to warn nor to interest him. His gaze turned back toward that suspended torso, again moving and swaying toward those bound, convulsed arms. No one else had seen.

I was facing Constance now. "Oh, you must go, too!" she cried.

"And you?" said I.

"I am responsible for this—I will face the responsibility!" she said simply. And her eyes were superb.

"No, I am responsible," I said. "It was I who caught him. It is you who must go. I will face it."

"And I will not go!" she replied simply, firmly. I saw I could never move her.

"Then we will both stay."

Looking into my eyes, she must have read a determination equal to her own. Her look lightened a little. "Perhaps I can find a way out," she said.

For her, I knew there was a way out. They were not hanging women. Marcus had elected only to deport Red Nell, and had withheld even that punishment from Constance herself, suspect though he held her. For me—the vigilance committee had only one punishment for such as me. It was immunity or death.

* * * * * * *

The Killer was gone at last. He had been a long time dying. Some one, probably one of the doctors, had announced this, I felt. For the crowd buzzed again in talk. Now the guards were carving a way between the courtroom and the jail; and I filled my lungs and squared my shoulders for my ordeal. If I died—I must carry one thing across with me. And as a slow-moving body of men emerged from the courthouse, moved between the lines, I spoke it like a last request.

"Constance, you love me, don't you?" I asked.

"Yes," she said simply, and pressed my hand before she released her hold. "But I have tried to do my duty. And how I have blundered—" Her voice, her delicious voice, broke here. But she controlled herself and smiled reassurance into my eyes. So we stood until the central committee reached us, and Shorty, marching with two guards, said:

"Give me the key!" And as he said this, he cast at Constance a frown of surprise and disapproval.

I had been forming my plan. I had not dared confide it to Constance. It would give the refugee more time—all or nothing for me now! I saw that Taylor was not with the central committee. And' swallowing my sickening fears, I lied.

"The key?" I said, affecting surprise as well as I could. "Why, the door's unlocked. No one's in there. Mr. Taylor came and took him away—with a guard!"

"Sounds to me like a d—n lie!" said Shorty, his eyes traveling from me to Constance. "What—" but Marcus cut him off.

"Taylor was in the courtroom last time I saw him. One of you guards—you, Robertson—go look for him." The face of Marcus seemed ten years older. His bright eyes had gone dim; the dark bristles of his unshaven cheeks emphasized the waxy yellow of his complexion. And through my anxiety, my mounting terror, my battle for resolution, I spared energy for regret that I was deceiving him, my friend, my partner. Buck, too. . . .

Between the file of guards Taylor came running. The crowd, sensing some hitch in the proceedings, was pushing toward the jail. The guards were forcing them back. Taylor had reached our group.

"What's this?" he panted. "What's this about taking away the prisoner? I haven't even seen him!"

The voice of Constance, rich, level, even:

"No, gentlemen. I let him go."

"That isn't so!" I cried. "I had the key. I unlocked the door and released him."

Singer Outspoken as to Masculine Faults

Mlle. Spinelly, popular Parisian music-hall star, has not a high opinion of masculinity. "Men," she declares, "do everything wrong. If they make money they lose it. They take the wrong wives, then divorce them and take others, also the wrong ones. Send a man to shop and he will buy absurd things. Ask him for some favor and he will blunder. Take the trouble to listen to his declarations and you will hear nothing but trivialities and stupidities. At home man is a devastating plague. He smokes, spits, coughs and sneezes. Noise enervates him, heat suffocates him, cold irritates him. In less than an hour he will find ten puerile things to complain about. But he will pour coffee on the tablecloth, burn the carpet with his cigar and slam doors. If an intelligent woman knows one man she knows them all. Men lie, but not well. To read their faces is easy for a woman. To be constantly with one man would be a sort of heroism if we did not know that changing from one to another means only changing from one evil to another. So it is better to stick to one."

A Guide Needed

"What do you do when winter breaks up?" asked a man for whom Toofus had been guiding.

"I may go to Niagara falls," responded Toofus, "and be a guide."

"But what is there to guide about at Niagara falls? Everything is in plain sight."

"A guide goes around with honeymooners," said Toofus, "and keeps them from walking into those falls."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Stopped in Time

The defendants were all certain that they had not been overspeeding.

"We may have been putting on speed when we got to the hill, but we could be down to 20 miles an hour within two car-lengths," said the first one.

"I'm sure," said the next man, "that we weren't doing more than 15 miles an hour, and at the crossroads we were down to ten."

The third merely put it: "We were practically at a standstill when the policeman came up."

"If I hear any more witnesses, I shall have the car backing into some one," said the justice of the peace, "I'd better stop the thing now. Ten dollars fine."

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

Oh, Boy! Won't we have fun next Thursday in Klemme when we celebrate Legion Day? We'll tell the cock-eyed world we will! Sure, everybody.

We are feeding heavy on spuds this week so we can make the required weight for the fat dubs' race. If we ack a few pounds of hitting the mark we will load our pockets with lonotype metal pigs, they won't squeal!

And speaking of pigs, wonder who will have intestines enough to go after the greased pig Legion Day? If we were sure we could run faster than the pig, we would try our luck with the porker. He's worth $15, and we could have a lot of fun with the fifteen.

Mayor Gruetzmacher wants to have a dog show His Molly dog came home the other morning with eleven other doglets—eight were police dogs, and three were police matron doggies.

Over at school the other day the teacher asked a boy to correct the following sentence. "Before any damage could be done the fire was put out by the Klemme fire department."

Mike (that isn't his real name) thought over the subject awhile and remembered all the fires we had last year He stepped to the board and wrote, "The fire was put out before any damage could be done by the Klemme fire department."

A young Klemme man looked a bit down hearted the other morning and we asked him what was the matter He told us he bought his girl some garters over at the dime store at Mason City last week We asked him, "Well, what about it?" and he replied, "she gave them to her mother So that's the last I'll ever see of 'em"

Down at the depot the other day Agent Barr was trying to tell an old man that the train goes to Iowa Falls and points south The old boy couldn't get it through his head and remarked "Well, I want a ticket for Goodell, and I don't give a d—m which way it points."

The duck season opened up last Thursday morning There were hunters than ducks Some son-of-a-sea-cook must have mistook us for a duck by the way the shot peppered down our neck C G Waterman and Ed Jacobs had an awful round-up on who shot a duck. When it got light enough to see, the duck was a mud-hen and then each one swore the other hit it first. Sumner Trumbell went along to show us where to get a good pot shot at 'em Now he is blaming the weather because we didn't get more. We believe these hunters are bigger liars than fishers We admit we are all three

Getting back on the subject once more don't forget the Legion Day Celebration Bring the wife and kids and if you haven't got any, borrow some, the main idea is to be ehre if you have to sneak away to get here

John Pritchard says about the dumest guy he ever saw was the man who came into the garage the other night and wanted some red oil for his tail light.

Art Wellemeyer was "down in the mouth" last week, and we inquired of our otherwise jovial undertaker and merchant why all the gloom He said that since Jack was on his vacation the store is too quiet for comfort and he missed the rackety bang-bang from the grocery corner Art said, "I haven't been bumped all week, Jack is always rushing around like blazes and forever running into me when I get in his way, and I'll be darned if I don't miss all those bumps, that's what ails me." Well Art is happy again as Jack got back on the job and bumped into him the first thing.

Klemme Locals

Charles Gibbs returned Monday from Minnesota where he went to get a carload of sheep. He shipped in 150 head and they will be fattened on farms around Klemme. He has them at the Harry Gibbs farm.

Henry Ludeke was all bunged up last week. He caught his foot in a rake while raking sorghum and badwrenched it Previously he had injured his hand coupling pipes at the sorghum factory.

The business men and the Legion held a joint meeting last Friday evening in the Legion rooms and definitely decided to put on a celebration September 30th is the day set. Read about it elsewhere.

A number of ladies had a birthday surprise party on Mrs Fred Ridder yesterday afternoon. All bought well filled baskets of good things to eat and all had a fine time. Mrs. Ridder was given a number of nice presents.

Phone or send your news items to the Klemme Times. We appreciate having items sent to us.

Hancock County Fair would not be held any more, due to lack of support. We do ntt know whether or not this s true However, the fair has had hard "sleding" making all ends meet in the past few years.

Mr and Mrs. Louie Knoke left last Friday for South Dakota, to spend a few days visiting relatives. Some relatives at Clear Lake took care of the children while they were gone Harvey Stille drove Louie's express truck for him for a few days

A Chevrolet coach belonging to Lloyd Carpenter aught fire and was totally destroyed near the Sandry place last week. Lloyd was seeking silo filling help when his car caught fire probably from a "short" as it was raining at the time.

Mr and Mrs Otto Lemke took their son, Wayne, and Rhine's boy, and Edwin Bock to Iowa City last week Tuesday, where the boys entered the State University. They were quite impressed with the college grounds and Iowa City Mr and Mrs Lemke returned Wednesday, and found the roads quite muddy near Iowa City.

Marian Waterman had a birthday party last Friday afternoon to which a number of her little friends were invited Mrian received many fine gifts A good time was had by the kiddies playing games, after which Mrs. Waterman served a delightful lunch

As a patron of The Klemme Co-Operative Creamery you are a manufacturer of a product that finds a ready market. Do you think a manufacturer of tiling spades would be buying of a competitor at higher prices than he could manufacture them for in his own factory? We hardly think so. Why should you be content to accept a lower price for your cream than you, as a manufacturer, can get through your own manufacturing plant? The old adage that "if you watch the pennies the dollars will take care of themselves" applies to the dairy business as well as some other lines. Eight or ten cents per pound for your butterfat may not seem very much of a loss on one small batch of cream but in the aggregate it amounts to a sizeable sum in the course of a year. HOW I IMPROVED MY HEALTH

Did It in Less Than One Month

As Mrs. Weaver herself says, "I was never very strong." This is a mild statement describing her condition, for, according to her letters, she was subjected to no small amount of ill health. Fortunately, her sister was familiar with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged Mrs. Weaver to try it. "After three or four weeks," writes Mrs. Weaver, "I felt a great difference in myself. I would go to bed and sleep sound, and although I could not do very much work, I seemed stronger. I kept on taking it and now I am well and strong, do my work and take care of three children. I sure do tell my friends about your wonderful medicine, and I will answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound"—Mrs. Lawrence Weaver, East Smithfield St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

If you knew that thousands of women suffering from troubles similar to those you are enduring had improved their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, wouldn't you think it was worth a trial?

In some families, the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Too Much "Acid?"

Excess Uric Acid Gives Rise to Many Unpleasant Troubles.

AUTHORITIES agree that an excess of uric acid is primarily due to faulty kidney action. Retention of this toxic material often makes its presence felt by sore, painful joints, a tired, languid feeling and, sometimes, toxic backache and headache. That the kidneys are not functioning right is often shown by scanty or burning passage of secretions. Thousands assist their kidneys at such times by the use of Doan's Pills — a stimulant diuretic. Doan's are recommended by many local people. Ask your neighbor!

Community Building

Duty of Citizens to Work in Association

The city would profit greatly from a cultivation of the spirit of neighborhood pride, to keep their own premises in order, and beautiful, and also to work in association with one another to beautify the entire neighborhood in accordance with an agreed-on plan, says the Indianapolis News. A great deal could be done in this way through private effort, and in the doing of such a work in such a way we should learn to value more than we do now individual initiative. Also there would be a development of neighborhood spirit which would make for better citizenship.

It ought not to be difficult to organize—in as loose a way as might be thought desirable—neighborhood associations for the carrying out of what is as much a neighborhood as a municipal purpose. The coming together of neighbors to consider ways and means and methods would itself be helpful. It would be worth much for the citizen to realize that he is not dependent on government for everything he wants, and to discover that there is a great deal that he can do for himself. But, of course, beauty is the prime object to be sought, a beauty that would undoubtedly spread from neighborhood to neighborhood. Perhaps there are such associations already. There can hardly be too many of them.

"Get Together" Spirit Builds Up Community

There are little communities dotted here and there all over our vast country which are dull and uninteresting because they are a mere aggregation of individuals and not a community, as such. "A real community is a number of people so united in spirit and so interested in the advancement of their town that they are willing to drop their little differences and unite to form one great brotherhood."

If your town is dull it is because there is no organized effort to overcome that dullness. If the people who go about bemoaning the bareness of life in the rural districts would just meet together and in a sane, hearty way face the proposition, they would discover avenues of development of which they never dreamed. Wherever there are three or four families in a group there is almost invariably talent which will make for the welfare of all concerned. No community appreciates its resources until it places the social emphasis on its community life. Unsuspected talent is displayed when team work is adopted. Men and women who have never been tested are drawn out by the inspiration of doing something in common with others.—Marion Dallas in Montreal Family Herald.

Neighborhood Enterprise

There is no reason why the citizen should look to the city government to do everything for him. It is doing much as it is—perhaps too much. People residing in a certain stretch of street—say a few blocks in length—could easily, and at low cost, through combined action, make the whole neighborhood, both inside and outside the property line, beautiful beyond anything now imagined. Other neighborhoods would be quick to follow the example, and the whole city would be the gainer. The streets thus improved and cared for would be more desirable than they are now, residence in them would be sought and prized, and as a result property values would advance.

From whatever point of view the matter is looked at, the effect would be good.—Indianapolis News.

Eye to Property Value

People who are most vociferous in their appreciation of the sentimental values of their homes, who let it be known to all and sundry that they would never sell their home because of old associations, are frequently the readiest to sell if they get what they call a "good offer." They are really good salesmen, and their boasted affection for their homes is merely good sales talk. While this attitude may be a trifle calloused, there are few of us who do not keep a weather eye upon real estate values. We are proud and pleased when there is a "boom" in our immediate neighborhood. And rightly so. We are pleased whenever the property value of our home advances, because it has materially increased our potential estate, and proud that our purchase has proved to be a wise investment.

Protect Home Investment

It is indeed curious that, while we avoid, in so far as we can, any depreciation of our other investments, many of us do not adequately protect our home investment. We are constantly paying "neglect taxes" on our properties, which may be greater some years than the government taxes. Some idea of the extent of our carelessness may be gained from the knowledge that repairs to property, due entirely to neglect, cost American property owners about $1,800,000,000 a year. This truly appalling figure indicates a very deplorable condition. It is a sum nearly four times as great as the annual fire loss. —Exchange.

COATS OF UTILITY TYPE; MILADY'S SHOES COLORFUL

IT IS high time to be buying one's new coat for fall, and just what shall it be? It all depends, for there is a most clean-cut distinction drawn this season between informal and formal coats. As to the practical utility coat, and it is the one which interests most of us who are either at school or at business and if at leisure planning health-giving hikes over countryside and moor, the major trend is to handsome and striking novelty woolens, fur-collared and often fur-cuffed, generously pocketed and sturdily built in fashion smart as smart can be.

When it comes to dressy wraps for social occasion, that is a different and endless story of whims and fancies, of intricacies of design and elegancy of fabric sometimes gleaming with gold and silver interweavings, richly fur-laden and garnitured with handiwork of world-wide attainment.

Tweeds of durable promise accent deep rich colorings this season and the very last word in practical cloakings of irresistible attraction is the fabric of ombre coloring, that is plaids or stripes shaded in gradations. There are such combinations available as red ombres in wide stripes, plaids; also small block designs. Then there are soft brown ombres done in complementary tints and the new greens in ombre styling also the lining which is of quality-kind crepe de chine. The raglan sleeved topcoat is very much in evidence this season.

Let's talk of something cheerful—shoes for instance, for never have they been more fanciful, more colorful or more beautiful than at this very moment, and for time to come according to displays of advance autumn modes. Not only are the leathers of which present-day shoes are made almost sensationally unique, but there is also an interesting use of fascinating color.

To be sure, for practical utility wear, there are excellent styles which help us keep in mind that "shoes is shoes," but when it comes to the dressier modes, oh me, oh my! where are the adjectives to describe them. Perhaps this picture of four of the reigning styles will best tell the story of the elaborate trend of modern shoe-ology.

In the list of shoe fashions the pair shown first in this illustration register as strap sandals. In line with the thought that the smartest footwear this season invariably features a combination of colors, narrow underlays and heels of blond kid combine with champagne kidskin.

A French tie-model is shown to the right which declares most frankly the supremacy of the extremely ornate, in that it combines royal blue lizard skin on a background of pearl gray kid.

The newest note in Paris is the slipper which appears from the outer side to have but one strap, which develops into three narrower straps across the inside. This modish pair in the picture, shown to the left, are of parchment kidskin.

Cutout effects are very fashionable as defined in the exquisite kid slippers are exceptionally handsome. Black and white plaids in deep-pile wool are stunning trimmed with either black or white fur.

It seems as if novelty woolens call for fur as unique and it is a fact fur trims are almost without exception included in every coat styling. A fur collar is almost a certainty on every topcoat for sports or utility, and often there are wide fur cuffs, likewise frequently neck to hem revers, but hemline borders are conspicuous by their absence.

The attractive topcoat in the picture aptly defines the popular trend in coats for schoolgirl, business woman and for general practical wear. The fur collar is toned to the browns in the fabric patterning, as is which conclude this interesting group of leading footwear styles.

The close relationship between fall dress colors and the tones and tints of new leathers is a subject to ponder over. Many snakeskin slippers appear to have been dyed to match the costume. Bright green, royal blue and red are shades noted in footwear now at fashion's rendezvous.

In practical daytime styles for fall, favor is expressed for black patent leather, also tan in both dark and light shades. Growing demand for moderate cuban heels is noted, especially among American women, although abroad the higher heels are very much in evidence.

FIRST to adopt DUCO

THE General Motors Research Laboratories cooperated with E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, Inc., in the development of Duco — an achievement ranking in importance with the invention of the self-starter.

DUCO is not only far more lasting than paint and varnish; it is finer, more beautiful and more economical to apply in factory production.

DUCO was first adopted by Oakland, and immediately thereafter by the rest of the General Motors cars.

BUYERS of General Motors cars have profited by the development of this finer, more enduring finish. Their cars wear well longer.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

We must be as courteous to a man as to a picture which we are willing to give the benefit of a good light.—Emerson.

SEASONABLE FOODS

The tender new cabbage which is now on the market makes a vegetable which is delicate and full of flavor. But to cook cut into halves or quarters according to the size, removing the hard core. When cooked in as little water as possible, or better, steamed, dress with cream or milk and butter, season with salt and pepper and serve. Grated cheese added to the hot cream adds much to the nourishment of the dish as well as its flavor.

Nut Loaf.—For those who enjoy the meatless diet this recipe will appeal: Take three cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, one cupful of milk, a teaspoonful of salt and one egg well beaten, one cupful of pecan meats. Sift the dry ingredients, add milk, egg, and nuts. Pour into a greased pan and let stand twenty-five minutes. Bake in a slow oven nearly an hour. Nice for sandwiches with a salad, making a well balanced meal with a hot drink.

Spiced Tongue.—This is pre-eminently a warm weather dish, but seldom seen served in any home. Drop a fresh beef tongue into boiling water to cover, add a pinch of salt and a small pepper pod. Cook gently until the tongue is tender. Remove from the broth, cool and peel off the skin. In a saucepan with four tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful each of ground cloves, allspice, and one cupful of water, and one-half cupful of vinegar, simmer until the liquid is entirely evaporated. Turn the tongue often. Chill and cut into thin slices and garnish with lemon and parsley.

Cucumber Soup.—Peel and slice two large cucumbers, remove the seeds and boil in salted water for ten minutes. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a deep frying pan, put in the drained cucumber, cover and cook gently for half an hour; drain, put through a sieve. Mix two tablespoonfuls of butter with two of flour, add a quart of white stock and a pint of milk, add the cucumber and simmer for a few minutes. Beat the yolks of two eggs with two tablespoonfuls of heavy cream, add to the soup and serve at once.

Riches are so great a temptation to ease and self-indulgence, to which men are by nature prone, that the glory is all the greater of those who were born to ample fortune, nevertheless take an active part in the work of their generation. Keeping busy, doing something worth while, saves many a doctor's bill and many hours of suffering.

Children's Lunch Boxes.

Packing a school lunch box five days a week for thirty weeks or more on a stretch is powerful constant and monotonous. Of course children to do good work must be well nourished and when possible it is best to give them a warm dinner at night. For the outdoor worker and the office woman the lunch must vary in quantity and somewhat in quality, but there are general directions which will apply to all lunch packing.

There is no one who is so blind to the niceties of life that he does not appreciate a well-prepared and packed lunch, though it be nothing but a sandwich. Throwing together a mess of food, totally unrelated, mixing flavors and making a messy, unsightly appearance would disturb the digestion of an ostrich.

The daily sandwich is almost a necessity, though at times scoop out a roll or two and fill with a salad, not too moist, which will make a most palatable dish.

Personal tastes must always be taken into account when preparing a lunch basket.

The one who likes a hot or cold drink can carry it in a thermos bottle.

For those who are fond of fresh ripe tomatoes a most appetizing sandwich may be prepared. Place a slice of tomato, a thin slice of cheese, with a little salad dressing between slices of buttered bread. Two of these with two of some other variety, with a cup cake and an apple or other fruit will make a good lunch with a glass of milk.

In many of our country schools where domestic science is taught the children prepare one hot dish at noon. This helps out the mother with her lunch packing.

Two sandwiches of bread and butter with jam or jelly and two of chopped ham and a glass of apple salad, a piece of ginger bread and a cup of hot cocoa is another good day's luncheon.

A handful of nuts, a few dates, a piece of candy, a fresh apple, pear or banana will always delight the child.

Those of us who can remember when we carried a lunch to school, what a thrill we had on finding down in a corner or hidden carefully a small treat all wrapped away to surprise us, will be happy to do the same willing service for those who must carry lunches.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

GENE TUNNEY WINS DECISION IN TEN ROUND BATTLE

Jack Dempsey Lost Championship Title Which He Won From Jess Willard

One hundred and thirty thousand fight fans saw Gene Tunney wrest the heavyweight championship from Jack Dempsey at the Sesqui Stadium at Philadelphia last Thursday evening.

Tunney won the battle on a decision at the end of ten rounds. Jack Dempsey, the Manassa man mauler, who has been the idol of the prize ring since he won the title from Jess Willard, after a severe clubbing at Toledo, was badly outclassed and outboxed by the former United States Marine. The fight ended with Dempsey's left eye completely closed and his face mangled and bleeding from the hard blows Tunney put over in the spectacular fight.

Dempsey tried his rip-roaringr tactics in the beginning of the fight, just as he did when he was acclaimed the terror of the pugilistic world For a few moments things looked a bit bad for Tunney and the hearts of his supporters sank for a brief period. Dempsey was a three to one favorite in the betting circle and it looked like a win for his backers.

Soon the flurry passed. Tunney took control of the situation. He seemed to sense that he was the former champion's master He settled down to business and landed lefts and rights to Dempsey's jaw and chin, occasionally jolting Dempsey's famous synthetic nose.

The big stadium was quickly cleared after the fight. Rain fell in torrents during the last rounds and the army of spectators were a bedraggled lot as they went back to the city.

The $800,000 that Dempsey received as his share of the purse will go a long way towards healing the pang caused by the loss of the heavy weight championship, while the $200,000 going to Tunney will bolster his ecstacy on being declared the winner.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY ADOPTS TEXT BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS

Plymouth county recently adopted text books for its rural schools, to continue in force for five years. Under the owa law the price in each county must be as low as such books are sold anywhere. In Plymouth it will cost pupils in the eighth grade the following prices for such tert books as may be required: eighth reader, 72 cents; grammar, 75 cents arithmetic 78c; geography, $1.47; spelling, 39c; history, $1 20; physiology, $1 05; music, 24 cents, domestic science, 66c; elements of agriculture, 90c; civics, 60. For grades below the eighth the price is much lower. If an eighth grade pupil were to use all of the books in the list above it would require an outlay of $8.86, but no one pupil would need the entire list. An observing school teacher says that the cost of books and that of a pair of shoes is about equal.

Heard At The Klemme Park

"Let me kiss those tears away!" he begged tenderly. She fell in his arms, and he was busy for the next few minutes. And yet the tears flowed in. Are you suffering? Can nothing stop them?" he asked, breathlessly sad.

"No," murmured the sweet young thing; "it's only a cold, you know. But go on with the treatment."

FARMERS AND FAMILIES VISIT AMES CAMPUS

9,000 Farmers And Families Made Summer Trips To Iowa State College

Nearly 9,000 Iowa farmers, their wives and children, motored to Ames during the summer to tour the campus of Iowa State College.

Grant Chapman, of the Agricultural Extension Service, made arrangements with farm bureaus or community clubs in 32 counties of the state and set aside a certain day for each county's journey. The total attendance to date has been 8,990.

Seven counties are now making plans to take the trip to Ames within the next few weeks, and Mr Chapman expects at least five more to negotiate with him to name a county day for them. Grundy, Sac and Tama have already set return dates for June of next year.

The visiting farmers spend most of the day at the agronomy farm, livestock barns, alfalfa plots and meat laboratory, while their wives visit the library, greenhouse, gardens, home economics and dairy buildings. In the course of the day the groups gather for a picnic dinner, have their pictures taken, hear an address by a member of the faculty, and visit the radio station, WOI

Entertainers and speakers from 14 Iowa counties, either at the time of the farm bureau tour or by special trips have broadcast programs from WOI. This inceased interest of the home county listeners in Iowa State College, and discovered some novel and valuable talent.

The Commercial Club of Eldora also made one of the tours, 100 attending. James F. Hardin, '76, and Willet M. Hays, '85, were in the Eldora group.

Greene and Jasper Counties led in attendance, each scoring 800.

MILLION PERSONS IN U. S. ARE WITHOUT A COUNTRY

"The man without a country," is a touching story and yet if it was revised at the present time it would have to be made applicable to at least one million persons in this country at the present time, according to a recent estimate made by Harry T. Hill, Commissioner of Immigration.

"It can safely be said," he stated "that almost 1 per cent of the population of this country can claim citizenship in no land, and yet many of them are unaware of the fact. This huge total is composed mainly of immigrants who have overstayed their temporary entries and those who have stopped here while enroute to some other country and obtained work without going to the formality of taking out naturalization papers."

PEAT LANDS GOOD FOR RAISING BIG POTATOES

Iowa "White Elephant" Can Be Made Good Use Of

Iowa peat land, which is oftentimes nothing but a 'white elephant' to its particular owner, will produce high class Rural New Yorker seed potatoes. The best Rural New Yorker seed grown under the supervision of the Agricultural Extension Department of Iowa State College has been on the farm of Ray S. McWorter of Burt, Kossuth County. The variety has been grown on peat land for nine years and the yield has been greatly increased.

There are three reasons why peat land will produce high potato yields. First, since peat is cool in the spring and the potatoes are late in starting it is equivalent to a late planting. Second, peat soil is high in nitrogen, which means vigorous growth and a crop high in nitrogen. Third, the potatoes mature late, the tops usually being killed by the frost, which insures the grower against an overripe product.

Fine Early Ohio and Irish Cobbler potatoes have been grown on peat soil

POPULATION OF IOWA PRISONS GROWING; REPORT SHOWS

About Twice As Many Prisoners Out At Expiration As Parole

On September 1st the population of the state penitentiary at Fort Madison was 1,031 and of the men's reformatory at Anamosa 1,006. The average population for August at Ft. Madison was 1,039. A year ago it was 988. The average population at Anamosa was 1,002. In August a year ago it was 963. During the first eight months of this year the men's reformatory at Anamosa has received 266 prisoners and has discharged 250. Of the 250 men discharged 127 went out at expiration of sentence and 105 on parole. Fort Madison received 181 prisoners from January to September and discharged 168. About twice as many prisoners went out at expiration of sentence as on parole. Ninety-three men were released at expiration and forty-eight on parole Four men died during the eight months at Anamosa and seven died at Fort Madison. There were four suspensions of sentences in each prison. Five men escaped from Anamosa and three from Fort Madison.

ALBERT LEA CAR BURNED IN DITCH SOUTH OF GARNER

Garner, Sept. 25.—A new Buick sedan owned and ocupied by persons from Albert Lea, upset and burned south of Garner Saturday afternoon. The driver said that he was driving about 40 miles an hour when the tire on a rear wheel blew out. The car swerved and went into the ditch and caught fire. None of the occupants were injured. The automobile was a total loss, as there was no way to extinguish the flames. The occupants of the car were brought to Garner by motorists who happened along and later they went on their way home to Albert Lea.

PAGE COUNTY HAS THREE BIG BROADCASTING STATIONS

Is Only County In United States With That Many Stations

Page county may be termed strictly rural as far as its industrial activities go and its residents point with pride that as such it is the only county in the United States that has three broadcasting stations. These are KFNF, supported by Henry Field, KMA, operated by the May nursery and KFO, under the jurisdiction of the A. S. Berry people. These stations appear in the official catalogue of broadcasting stations.

COMING ATTRACTIONS AT THE IDLE HOUR THEATRE

The elements of comedy and young romance have been pleasantly stressed in the development of Bob Custer's latest and breeziest western, "The Ridin' Streak," at the Idle Hour, Saturday night, Oct. 2nd.

A Chinese Vase of untold antiquity and unbounded power of evil, reputed to bring death every year, its artist-power, scornful and disbelieving; a desperate struggle in the studio; a silent, straining battle for a revolver, a muffled shot, the heavy crash of a falling body; again the vase has fulfilled its destiny! See "The Jade Vase," starring Helen Brent at the Idle Hour next Wednesday night, Oct. 6th.

Jesse James Special

Jesse James, Under The Black Flag, played by his son, at this theatre Friday night this week, Oct. 1.

Coming! Tom Tyler in "The Cowboy Musketeer," Friday and Saturday, Oct. 8 and 9.

INDIAN "DOC" IS RELEASED

L. D. McMichael, Of Eldora, Dismissed by Judge Tankersley

(Marshalltown Times - Republican, September 17, 1926.)

L. D. McMichael, Eldora Indian doctor, arrested several weeks ago charged with selling a mortgaged auto was released by Judge B. O. Tankersley when the banking company holding the mortgage failed to appear in court.

McMichael's counsel explained to the court that the mortgage on the car had not been signed at the time of the sale and that the defendant did not know it had been drawn. McMichael said he took the car on a debt and sold it to realize on the account.

Many local people called at the office of L. R. Sheets, the defendants attorney, seeking a method by which they could secure medicine from McMichael while he was confined in the county jail. Sheets named a number of prominent persons who were using the Indian doctor's herbs in an effort to regain their health.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Southern Florida Ravaged by Hurricane—Life and Property Losses.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PROBABLY five hundred men, women and children dead. More than six thousand injured, many of whom may not recover. Property losses approximating $200,000,000. Between 50,000 and 75,000 persons homeless and great numbers of them rendered destitute.

That in a few words summarizes the situation in southern Florida after the terrific West Indian hurricane that swept across the state from the region of Miami, moving northwest and across the gulf to Pensacola and Mobile, where the property loss was heavy though no fatalities there were reported.

Miami, the "wonder city," and its beautiful suburbs were the worst sufferers, though Fort Lauderdale, Hollywood, Moore Haven and other towns were virtually ruined and scores of other places were devastated. With the wind blowing 150 miles an hour, the waters of the Atlantic ocean were driven clear over lovely Miami Beach and far inland at Miami and all along that part of the coast. Vessels of all sorts and sizes were piled upon the beaches totally wrecked, thousands of houses and other buildings of wooden construction were leveled and nearly all the towering palms, Australian pines and other trees were torn up by the roots. Automobiles by the thousand were swept off the Miami causeways into Biscayne boy or piled up in heaps of junk in the streets. The buildings of steel construction in Miami resisted the hurricane in most cases, and the handsome homes of many millionaires, though damaged by the invading waters, were not ruined. But the palatial hotels of Miami Beach were badly shattered. Of the Miami suburbs, Coral Gables, where there are few wooden structures, came off best.

The Miami storm relief executive issued this appeal:

"To the American People:

"The city of Miami is compelled to issue an appeal to the people of the United States for the relief of Miami and Dade county. Six days ago this city of 200,000 was one of the most prosperous, beautiful and delightful communities in this country. Today, as a result of a disastrous tropical hurricane which devastated our coast last Saturday, it lies prostrate.

"We have 100 dead and nearly 1,000 patients in hospitals, hundreds of whom are grievously injured. While conditions are being rapidly restored by means of most wonderful and efficient co-operation of its citizens along all important lines, the problems confronting them are almost insurmountable. Food and other necessary supplies are coming in in great quantities and we have been blessed by the arrival of a sufficient number of physicians and nurses and ample medical supplies for the immediate present.

"But more than 5,000 homes have been either entirely destroyed or made unfit for human habitation. Twenty-five thousand people have been made homeless. These are being cared for in thousands of instances by neighbors who themselves are suffering. Miami needs money quickly and in large amounts.

"It needs it to take care of the poor, sick, and injured. It needs it to rehabilitate the homes of thousands who have lost everything in the world and who will die of exposure if assistance does not come promptly and amply."

Instantly upon receipt of the first news of the disaster relief measures were organized by the American Red Cross and by communities all over the country, and along every railway to the southeast the trains streamed carrying physicians, nurses, medical supplies and food. The trained workers of the Red Cross were speedily on the field, as they always are. Sanitary measures and steps to prevent disease that follows so often in the wake of storm disaster marked the first steps taken after the work had been organized. Workers and persons remaining in many areas were required to submit to typhoid vaccination, and residents of Davie and Moore Haven were ordered to evacuate those towns because the water supply was polluted and an epidemic threatened. Vessels of the United States navy were put at the disposition of the Red Cross, and the destroyer Downe was rushed from Charleston to Miami with serum and the destroyer Cassin carried a load of general supplies. Under the direction of Henry M. Baker, national disaster director for the Red Cross, great numbers of refugees from the shattered towns were removed to near-by cities in trucks, special trains and automobiles.

Moore Haven, which was overwhelmed by the waters of Lake Okeechobee with a loss of more than 100 lives, may never be rebuilt. But steps already have been taken for the reconstruction of Miami Beach, Hollywood and other places, while of course Miami itself purposes soon to regain its former splendor.

Damage done at Pensacola was estimated at $3,000,000, and it was heavy at Mobile and other places on the gulf. St. Petersburg and other towns in that vicinity reported no loss of life but considerable to property. The hurricane, before reaching Florida, had killed a score or more in the Bahama islands and done tremendous property damage, and Bimini island was ravaged.

From Buenos Aires comes the report of another hurricane that struck the town of Encarnacion, Paraguay, on the Parana river, killing about 400 persons and leveling thirty of the city's blocks.

CAPT. RENE FONCK, the French aviator, undertook to hop off for his non-stop flight from New York to Paris in the giant Sikorsky plane built for the project. Overloaded at the last moment, the machine rushed down the prepared runway at Roosevelt field on Long Island, staggered along for a short distance with two wheels collapsing, nose-dived into the earth and burst into flames. Fonck and Lieut. L. W. Curtin, the alternate pilot, crawled from the wreckage unhurt, but Charles Clavier, the French radio operator, and Jacob Islamof, the Russian mechanician, were trapped in the fuselage and were burned to death.

Grief stricken but undefeated, Igor Sikorsky, the Russian designer and president of the Sikorsky Manufacturing corporation, briefly announced his plans.

"Officers of the corporation," he said, "are shocked at the tragedy, but we believe the best tribute we can pay to their memory is to begin immediately the building of another plane to carry out the project for which these men gave their lives."

THE states members of the World court agreed to accept the United States' reservations for adherence to the court with the single condition that by a two-thirds majority the court powers could repudiate their acceptance of the reservations regarding advisory opinions and the right to amend statutes without the consent of the United States.

The forty states participating approved the drafting committee's protocol covering their terms on America's entry, and the joint note which will be circulated to the various signatories as the basis for framing their individual replies to the United States. The United States will be invited to take part in a conference with the court states to frame a special protocol to translate the five American reservations into the language of the court.

BRIAND and Stresemann, motoring from Geneva to a French town near the border, laid plans for a rapprochement between France and Germany that promises great things for both countries and for Europe generally. Briand reported to the French cabinet and was given a free hand to proceed with the agreement, while Doctor Stresemann, returning to Berlin, prepared to fight the Nationalists and Communists who alone oppose the negotiations. It is understood the projected accord includes a plan for the immediate flotation of reich railway debentures, as provided in the Dawes plan, and that France's share of these amounts would be 780,000,000 gold marks, which would help to stabilize the franc. Germany demands reduction of allied forces of occupation and complete evacuation of the Rhineland earlier than had been intended. The first fruits of the negotiations were the departure of detachments of French troops from the occupied area, with the prospect that by the end of September about 6,000 of them would be withdrawn. This was immensely pleasing to the Germans.

GEN. GEORGE KONDYLIS, premier-dictator of Greece, has dissolved his own party and will retire from politics because political leaders have been complaining that he was working for his own interests. He advises his friends to join other parties and announces that his government will continue to function for the time being and that parliamentary elections will be held under the proportional representation system. Dispatches from Athens say it is believed the former king of Greece is in Bucharest awaiting a possible recall to the throne.

SO SUCCESSFUL is the Red army of Canton in its operations against the troops of the north that the British cabinet has been seriously considering abandoning its policy of the last two years and recognizing all de facto provincial governments in China, especially the Canton regime. This would mean the abandonment of the fiction of a central government in Peking. Meantime the third British destroyer flotilla has left Malta for Chinese waters to protect British interests. The Cantonese are pushing back Marshal Wu in Honan province and are attempting to make a junction with the army of Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang, now their ally. Wucharg, several times reported taken by the Cantonese, is still holding out though the garrison is facing starvation. All the women and children and 21 Americans were permitted to leave the city.

QUEEN MARIE of Rumania insists that she is going to leave Bucharest for a visit to the United States about October 2, and she has had her hair bobbed in preparation for the trip. The Rumanian foreign office some time ago denied the queen was going to make the journey, but it now declares it has approved of her plan. King Ferdinand, who is ill, says nothing about it for publication. Court circles are criticizing her majesty, who is past fifty, for cutting off her golden hair.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has given his approval to the selection of Maj. Gen. Charles P. Summerall as the next chief of staff of the army, to succeed Maj. Gen. John L. Hines in December. General Summerall entered the war as a colonel and made a brilliant record in France, where he commanded the artillery brigades and afterward the First division. He is considered a stern but just disciplinarian, highly respected by his subordinates for his forcefulness and his ability to get things done.

NEARLY eight thousand veterans of the Civil war gathered in Des Moines for the sixtieth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the members of the auxiliary organizations and members of the delegates' families swelled the number of visitors in the Iowa city to about 50,000. Much of the time was given up to entertainment and to reunions of various units.

MAJ. GEN. ROBERT LEE HOWZE, commanding officer of the Fifth corps area, United States army, died in Columbus, Ohio, following an operation. He gained fame in the Indian warfare in the Northwest, for which he was given the congressional medal of honor; in the Philippine revolt, the Mexican border troubles and the World war.

GENE TUNNEY, ex-marine, is the new heavyweight champion of the world, having taken away Jack Dempsey's crown in ten rounds of rather mild fighting in the stadium at Philadelphia. The spectators numbered 132,000, and the gate receipts were about $2,000,000. Dempsey's power and judgment of distance were gone, and Tunney won easily on points. The victory was popular with all except those who had bet on Dempsey.

ISRAEL JOURNEYING TOWARD CANAAN

LESSON TEXT—Numbers 10:11-36.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come thou with us and we will do thee good.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Journey of Long Ago.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Journeying in the Wilderness.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Israel Learned in the Wilderness.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How God Guides His People.

Israel remained almost one year at Sinai. It was a veritable schooling for them. Their stay was necessary.

1. To allow them to recuperate from the effects of many years of slavery

2. To train them morally and spiritually for the great work before them. The wonderful transactions at Sinai served to inspire them with courage and hope, for through them they came to know God as their king and themselves as His covenant people.

3. To have them thoroughly organized.

This was not only necessary for the march, but for the warfare in gaining possession of the land of Canaan.

I. Marching From Sinai at the Hand of Moses (vv. 11-28).

The nation had now grown to a great host—the army itself of 603,550 strong. Allowing three persons to every soldier, there would be 1,810,650. The army was organized into four great sections or divisions with three tribes to each division. The Levites were organized on the basis of the three sons of Aaron—Gershon, Kohath and Merari. The Kohathites had the principal place about the tabernacles—charge of the most precious things. The Gershonites had the next place of honor, while the drudgery fell upon the Merarites.

1. The signal given (v. 11).

The lifting of the cloud from off the sanctuary was the signal for the camp to be broken and the march to begin.

2. The signal given to rest (v. 12).

Just as the sign to march must be recognized, so the sign to rest must be obeyed.

3. The Commander (v. 13).

God was the Commander through His servant, Moses.

4. The order of the march (vv. 14-18).

As they marched the division led by Judah went forward, followed by Gershon and Merari bearing the coarser part of the tabernacle. Then marched Reuben's division, followed by the Kohathites bearing the sacred utensils of the tabernacle. These were followed by the division of Ephraim and Dan. The ark occupied a central position with the moving caravan.

II. Moses Seeking the Help of Hobab (vv. 29-32).

Hobab was a shrewd child of the desert. Moses thought therefore that his knowledge thereof would be helpful. The children of Israel were going forth under the guiding care of the Almighty. Surely He could be trusted. Certainly He knew that dreadful wilderness.

1. "We will do thee good."

Moses had faith in God's promises to Israel and could well assure Hobab that good would come to him by identifying himself with God's covenant people.

2. "Thou mayest be to us instead of eyes."

Moses still insisted that Hobab should go along, not only for the good he could get but for the good he might do.

III. Marching to Canaan With the Lord as Leader (vv. 33-36).

Even though Hobab did go with Israel, we never hear of his leading the people. The Lord will not have it so. Observe:

1. "The ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them" (v. 33).

The ark, the symbol of the divine presence, moved out of its place in the midst of the camp and took its place at the head.

2. The cloud of the Lord rested upon them (v. 34).

This was an indication that God was not only leading, but governing His people and protecting them.

3. The Lord's vindication (vv. 35, 36).

Moses' unbelief caused a reproach unto the Lord. This action on the part of God vindicated His leadership. Moses gave recognition to this act of God in identifying himself with His people. When the ark rested and set forward, he exclaimed, "Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered and let them that hate Thee flee before Thee," and when it rested—"Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel."

God's Love

We are taught to think that God's love is the biggest thing in the universe. Let us think of some of the biggest things we know, and then we will lift our eyes upon one that is bigger than all.—J. H. Jowett.

Happiness Counts Most

. . . The will of God respecting us is that we shall live by each other's happiness and life, not by each other's misery . . . men help each other by their joy, not by their sorrow.

Welsh Bards in Yearly Session

Once upon a time (Sixth century) Welsh harpers cast their harps into the River Conway, dived in themselves, swam, towed, hauled out their harps upon the further shore, plucked manfully but inaudibly at sodden strings. Followed a troop of Welsh singers. Having swam the Conway they sang no better and no worse than before. Prince Maelgwn Gwynedd of North Wales thereupon welcomed the singers to the first recorded Welsh Eisteddfod, heaped their palms with gold, banished his harpers, proclaimed the confirmation through "trial by water" of his pet theory: That song is superior to instrumental music. Since then the Eisteddfod (literary "cession," actually "contest") of Welsh bards has become a yearly recurrent cultural diversion.—Time.

Aviator's Life Insurance

Fascist Italy's latest step in the promotion of aviation is a decree granting free life insurance to military aviators and to civil aviators if they are members of the Italo Aero club. The decree states that "men engaged in the magnificent defense of the serenity of our skies" are naturally above any fear for themselves, and must not be worried over their safety, but that their families deserve every aid and protection. There is also a proposal on foot to give free airplane rides to children interested in aviation.—Chicago News.

Youth and Age

Cortlandt Bleecker was talking at a New York supper club about a dance of very much undressed young girls that had just electrified, or at least shocked his guests.

"An aged captain of industry," Mr. Bleecker said, "was here the other night, and when this dance began he was all excitement.

"'Would you kindly remove your hat, miss?' he said to a girl who sat in front of him.

"The girl turned and sized him up contemptuously.

"'Certainly not,' she said; 'and besides, you're too old a man to look at a dance like this.'"

Germany's Game Bag

Despite an area less than one-seventeenth as great as that of the United States and a density of population 10 times greater, Germany's fields and forests yield each year an amount of game that probably exceeds the total bag here. The total number of deer of all kinds shot yearly is estimated at about 250,000, equivalent to more than 5,000 head for each of the 48 states of the Union. Nearly 3,000,000 hares and rabbits are shot each year in Prussia alone. Germany places the food value of its annual game bag at $13,000,000.

George Was Good to Her

The bride had but recently returned from her honeymoon and her mother was paying her first call since the wedding.

"Well, daughter," she asked, "is George good to you?"

"Just darling, mother!" exclaimed the wife. "Only yesterday he showed me how to open a can of milk with a nail and a hammer."—American Legion Weekly.

Murky, Maybe

It was in the recent rainy spell. Billy, age four, came running in to the dinner table from outdoors, and said excitedly to his mother:

"Oh, mamma, the clouds are all dirty; I think it's going to rain."

Fine

"Anything worth while at Skibo beach, Jack?"

"They have lady life guards."

FEELING LOTS BETTER NOW

Writes Ethel May Snider Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Hartford City, Ind.—Doing her work and taking care of a sick woman proved to be much for Ethel May Snider, R. F. D. of Hartford City, until she started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Overwork had undermined her health that she had to give up all of her side work and when she saw this medicine advertised in the "Star" and other papers, she went to druggist and got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She took it regularly, was greatly benefited and now feels very much better.

Ethel May Snider's experience is similar to that of thousands of other women in all walks of life, who have sent testimonials to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass.

Among those who praise the Compound are young girls who have been enabled to attend school regularly—working girls who have gained strength and endurance so necessary to them, housewives and mothers who have found that the tonic-effect of the Compound has enabled them to perform their daily tasks more easily.

Senator's Court Dress

The Smithsonian Institution in Washington has a new addition to its "costume" collection. It consists of a handsome black velvet jacket, white silk waistcoat and black velvet knee breeches. Black patent leather pumps with silver buckles, black hose and a black tricorn hat complete the ensemble, which reposes in an imposing glass case and bears this placard: "Diplomatic costume worn by H. Cabot Lodge on the occasion of a reception at Buckingham palace, London, 1895. Presented by the Lodge estate."

Magazines Popular

Such is the varied demand for magazines in New York that a store in one of the large subway terminals keeps 500 different publications on its racks. Not all are fiction or popular magazines, however. Many of the publications are trade journals with limited circulation.

A Girl's Critical Age

READING between the lines, it takes a mother or sister to divine the needs of a girl just budding into womanhood: "My sister was not very strong and had been taking all sorts of pills and stuff for constipation. She was fourteen and of course embarrassed with pimples. So I bought her a large bottle of Syrup Pepsin. She has had no constipation since, her complexion is good and she is much stronger, healthier and happier. Now I always recommend Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin." (Name and address will be sent on request.)

Has Brought Up Entire Families

Syrup Pepsin is a mainstay from infancy to full growth. Sour, bilious stomach, headache, coated tongue, colds, feverish daily ills—all vanish. Children play right after a dose. Mothers stop their own terrible sick headache, indigestion, constipation. Makes old folks happy, contented. Truly a family medicine in its highest meaning. Get it today—any druggist, anywhere.

A confusion of voices. Men jostling d pushing all about me. Shorty's ce shoved close to mine; Shorty king:

"Which way did he go?"

"I'll never tell!" I replied.

More confusion. Some one had ruck me on the side of the head. hey were forcing back my struggling ms, tying my hands. Some one yell- that my horse was gone. Shorty dering the cavalry to saddle and art. A voice was crying: "String him !" Constance speaking, her tones itting sharply through the babble: Don't—oh, don't! I did it, I tell you! did it!" My own voice gasping: Steady! It will be all right!" Mar- s and Buck by very authority clear- g a space about me. Marcus crying: No lynching without a trial in this mp!" Constance, her voice controlled ow, saying: "It is not necessary to nch me, gentlemen. I will go with u." A hollow square of guards forc- g us on; I, remembering how the iller walked to his death, trying to old my head as high, to move my gs as firmly.

Through an agitated, hysterical rowd we popped into the door of the urthouse.

In my picture of life, Major Brown d been another dim, suggested bit background. I knew him as our ost reliable assayer, as the first lo- tor in the rush to Hayden hill, as a bstantial personage about camp.

As they unbound me and led me up the table at which he sat in judg- ent, I studied his face. I saw de- rmination there, but no mercy. And y soul within cried out for mercy ther than for such justice as this urt was administering.

They had seated Constance in a hair beside the judge's table—odd at I had not looked for her before! hat hysterical moment of hers when ey laid hands on me by the jail oor had changed to a great stillness. never saw a face and form of the ring so quiet and so beautiful. Her nds lay clasped in her lap, but osely; they did not clutch or move. had that morning imagined her eyes oking at me across a courtroom with utterable reproach. They looked on e, indeed; but with no more emo- on than is in the blue petal of a ower. Above all, they were not afraid. y little terrors of the flesh van- hed.

"Shall we try these prisoners one t a time—the man first?" asked ajor Brown. This was a miners' ourt, and democratic in its forms, perceived. The judge merely pre- ded.

Constance stirred and spoke. At the ajor's words, a buzz of debate had tarted in the rear of the room. But er rich voice with the dropping syl- bles muted that:

"I presume you are trying this man or letting your prisoner escape? hen I should remain to testify. Be- use I am wholly responsible."

"That is not true," I said, as firmly s I could. "I did it alone. This lady trying to save me. I let him go. ecause—" There I stopped. How ould I, without betraying her, sham-

g and humiliating her, say why I did t? What excuse could I possibly in- ent? I clutched at a weak one. "Be- use I didn't want to see him hanged. brought him in," I added. "I caught im. And I had a right to let him go." Major Brown struck the table with is gavel.

"Prisoner, you are getting ahead of e proceedings," he said. "Gentlemen, nder the circumstances hadn't we bet- r let this lady stay?" There was si- nce. He paused a moment. "Very ell, if no one objects. Clerk, book e lady." He did not look at Con- nce, and neither did the clerk, as e answered to the formal inquiries: Constance Deane—Mrs. Martin Ros- er Deane—of Providence, Rhode Is- nd."

His name! I had never heard it be- re. Odd that I should hear it first such circumstances! Everything s odd; even comically odd. Never ve I been able to reconstruct in mory the events of the next few nutes. They were handing me a book. I was being sworn. Constance Deane sitting so quiet! I had kissed her once. Should I ask to kiss her again—before—?

I was talking. I must remember not to say that I gave him my hat and horse. They might identify him by my hat and my horse Shorty—he seemed to be prosecutor—was asking me about that. I must dodge, dodge. I was saying that it was some horse which stood by the jail. And saying it badly. They would never believe me Marcus was talking. About my previous reputation. A strange court! They let advocates testify. Buck was talking. About my squareness. And:

"We will hear now—from the lady!" said Major Brown. I came conscious, wide awake, every sense preternaturally acute A drawing of many breaths agitated the room; then as Constance rose, absolute silence even outside. Her lips parted once or twice; then she was speaking in that low, lovely voice with its dripping pause between syllables—and fluently.

"In the first place, gentlemen, the man who escaped a few minutes ago was my husband—Martin R. Deane. I married him in Providence five years ago."

A shuffle of feet changing position; a composite suspiration of breath like one long sigh.

"I think you will allow that a wife in any circumstances should do what she can to save her husband's life Of course, you intended to kill him. I did not know until this morning what happened in town last night. Then I learned—I suspected—that you had my husband in jail. I reached the jail while—while you were—killing—the other man. I felt my husband had no chance. I saw an opportunity. And I released him."

Major Brown sat with his eyes on the cover of Judge Cowan's law book. Without looking up, he asked:

"Mrs. Deane, will you explain how you accomplished this? The jail was guarded, and Gilson had the keys."

"How does a woman make a man do anything? He was alone in front of the jail. The other guards were watching—what you were doing." Here she paused and drew a breath so deep, held it so long, that I thought she would never release it. Then, as though realizing that she must shrink from nothing, she went on. "The hanging, I mean. Mr. Gilson had captured my husband. He didn't know it was my husband. I told him. He is my friend. He did not want to break my heart. I begged him. I entreated him. I made him feel that if you—hanged—my husband, it would kill me. He unlocked the door. My husband got on Mr. Gilson's horse. He has told you differently. But if you believe him, you must believe that he was at least an accomplice in stealing a horse." How quick was her intelligence! I hadn't thought of that! "When he says it was some unknown horse, he is only trying to make my husband's escape more certain—trying to save me and mine. I cannot let him do that. He has done enough. He took his life in his hands like the gallant gentleman he is. But I made him do it. If I had asked—" She stopped there. What she had intended to say, what she had cut off with a little intake in her breath, I could supply. So, I think, could the rest. It was a boast of the power of her sex. "If I had asked any one of you—I with these eyes, I with this appeal of my youth and womanhood and goodness and grief—what would you have done?" Any man in the room must have read that in her silence.

Major Brown cut in with his dry, unemotional tone:

"Mrs. Deane, how much have you had to do with your husband's operations in this camp?"

For the first time her smooth pallor broke into color. As from a sudden, intense flame, a spot burned instantly on either cheek, was instantly gone.

"Allowing that my husband's business here was criminal—which I do not allow—I had nothing whatever to do with that. I have not communicated with him in any way—except as I have told you. When we talked, it was only about coming home with me. I cannot prove this, of course. But you cannot prove the contrary." Again her cheeks grew vivid, melted to pallor. "Gentlemen, I acted this morning on impulse; but if you hang anyone, you should hang me. I did not see the end of what I was doing. I did not know that I was putting in danger a fine, brave, good man, worth ten times—" Her voice broke a little here, but she caught back her sob. "And if you hang him, you must hang me. I do not care to live and realize what I have done. That is all." Firmly, Constance sat down.

Major Brown lifted his face to the crowd, opened his mouth to speak. But Buck, shoving past Marcus, stood before the table.

"Gentlemen," he said without the formality of addressing the court, "before we do any votin' I've got a few brief remarks to make concerning where we are at. This vigilance committee wasn't formed just to give the boys a treat. We was after somethin'. We wanted to make this here a decent camp. And we took the only way there was. Some day, I suppose, this here imperial state is goin' to come snoopin' round inquirin' into these proceedings. What'll they find? That we cashed in five tarantulas that was better dead anyhow. No kick. Everybody satisfied. We've had that bunch looked up. Goin' on any law that ever was, they all would 'a' got a long term, an' most of 'em the rope. We've saved the state a heap of board. But you've struck a different question with the kid here. He's—he's good. He's helped make this here camp. He was in on the carbonate discovery. He's been workin' on the paper fightin' the bunch of crooks that was runnin' us. He's got nerve. I know. It's all right to go up against a man with a gun in your hand. But I don't see myself tackling a bandit barehanded like he done. I dunno why he turned this here Deane, alias Maxwell, loose. Maybe I'm guessin', as maybe you all are, but I don't know. Anyhow, if he did it, I'm bankin' he had a good reason, a d—n—" Buck checked himself here, vainly tried to bite off the profane word he had dropped in the presence of a lady.

No one answered him at first. Then Shorty gave a growl, preliminary to speech.

"Shut up, Shorty!" snapped Buck. If anyone wanted to know why it was called Hayden hill, not Croly's hill, the answer was here. For Shorty did shut up; and Buck continued:

"I ain't goin' to let it happen. Not if I can stop it. The vigilance committee has worked harmonious so far. If you go on with these proceedings, there's two of us will take objection, strong. Marcus Handy and me, his partners. And I guess there'll be others. Boys, let's call this thing off. Of course, nobody expects to do anything to the lady. While we're at it, I don't see any sense in chasing that husband of hers—unless the boys have rounded him up already. We've got five out of six of the men we wanted. That's doin' da— mighty well." Buck paused as though searching his vocabulary for the proper parliamentary expression before he finished: "I make that in the form of a motion."

"You make what in the form of a motion?" inquired Major Brown dryly.

"All them things," vaguely responded Buck.

It was a challenge. Buck's very physical attitude suggested that. Although he had finished speaking, he did not move away from before the table but stood there straight and poised, facing the crowd. From the belt round the waist of his store clothes hung his holstered 45-caliber revolver. His hand rested lightly, suggestively, on the butt. Voices broke out; some of them—but a minority, my hopes told me—angry, arguing, protesting.

Major Brown rapped the room to order.

"All in favor of hanging Robert Gilson for betraying the vigilance committee, say 'aye.'"

Silence.

"The 'noes' have it," announced Major Brown. "Unless there is a motion to the contrary, this court stands indefinitely adjourned."

CHAPTER XIII

Marcus Handy and Buck, standing by to the end, kept us in Judge Cowan's courtroom until the vigilance committee had evaporated, leaving us alone.

A ruffle of drums sounded without; men were running and clamoring. A shiver which jerked her shoulders against the back of her chair ran over the form of Constance. The ready, understanding Buck was first to see what this meant.

"Don't worry, Mrs. Deane," he said, "that ain't him. That's the crooks being run out of town!"

This time, fascination drew us all to the window, even Constance. There was no emotion left in me now except a vague curiosity; my own languor of mind and soul seemed to heighten my perceptions; and from my night and day with tragedy I carry away no pictures so vivid as that of the procession which emerged from the Pioneer corral.

"Rogue's march!" commented Marcus briefly. "Curtain's up on the last act of our show!" And into view marched the prisoners of the Pioneer corral. Conway's stubble of beard had grown in the night. His cheeks were as dark as a chimney sweep's; but he faced his disgrace with a calm and humorous smile. The gambler who had lost his nerve and got religion walked with his head down. Among the dirty and depraved camp followers of Pearl street were those who cringed as they came under the eyes of our outraged city, and those who still managed in the pose of head and shoulders to express defiance. Colliver, the lawyer, walked straight, glaring right and left, his eyes made terrible, insane, with suppressed anger. A little, indrawn "Oh!" from Constance signaled the passage of Red Nell. The powder on her cheeks had gathered dust during the night; the spots of rouge were no longer bright carmine, but a dull and dirty Indian red. Her frizzes fell in wisps over her forehead. But Red Nell raged no longer. She walked with her eyes down, her hands clasped before her, a ghastly and grotesque caricature of a maiden martyr led to the stake. Whatever womanly dignity remained to her had at the end of all her indignities come to the surface.

Chris McGrath was coming; among his separate entities, this one was new. I saw that in the first flash, before my eye began to pick up details. His shoulders, once so erectly confident in their carriage, sagged as though he had suddenly grown old. His steps stumbled. His head was bowed. It did not imply sullenness, this averted gaze. Rather was it the attitude of a broken man who cannot bear to look upon disgrace. I understood the policy of self-preservation which Marcus Handy had been applying to this enemy of his. To expel the old, self-reliant Chris McGrath from camp was equivalent to prolonging trouble. He was bound to come back when opportunity served, and to shoot. But his night of mental horrors in the Pioneer corral, the sight of the lynching, the very psychological weight of public opinion, had served to break his spirit. I remember him as I saw him first when he stopped the lynching in the Black Jack—a dominant, heroic figure, dowered with a compelling masculine charm—and found it in my heart to pity him. After all, he was only misplaced. His virtues of courage, decision, generosity to his friends, rough personal good fellowship; his faults of rampant individuality and muddled moral distinctions—they belonged to the old era of gun law. Sudden, offhand Cottonwood had entrusted this anachronism with enforcing that book law to which our camp and all the West must necessarily come in the end. His night of horror and disgrace and spiritual loneliness may have given him black understanding, taught him that he had been fighting the current of the human spirit. That, possibly, explained the change in him. He was not so much terrified as overwhelmed. At any rate, Cottonwood never heard from him again. Years later, I picked up the remaining threads. He had become a drifter from camp to camp, a protector of gamblers, a dangerous drunkard, until a shot in a brawl at Miles City finished his career. He passed like the grizzly; crushed by progress.

Chris McGrath marched between solid lines of crowd, his bent head now visible, now concealed. A phalanx of vigilante guards followed; the crowd closed in behind; the Rogue's march stopped, to be succeeded by the beat of the drums; the deposed king of Cottonwood had passed from his kingdom.

"Where are you sending her?" asked Constance.

"Wagon's waiting to take 'em over the range to Plested's, all comfortable, and drop 'em," replied Marcus.

"Will she—" began Constance, and stopped. For a horseman loped down the street, pulled up at the door of the courthouse, threw his bridle over a lathered head, strode within. The hands of Constance went together; I, who had thought there was no emotion left in me, found my breath coming and going in great sighs.

"Boss," began the messenger—then saw Constance and me, paused.

"All right," said Marcus, "go ahead. These people are safe—they're acquitted."

"Well, we've got no line on where he went," said the horseman. "Trails is too d—n trampled. He started down the Ludlow pass road all right. After that, we loses him. What we need's a regular tracker. Wasn't one in the whole d—n outfit."

"Let's see," mused Marcus. "Boys' pretty tired, I suppose?"

"Dead!" said the messenger. "Look at me. Up all night. And done a hard day's work yesterday. Horses too."

"All right," announced Marcus. "They're ordered to come in and put up their horses." He paused. "I've already taken other measures to have our man followed—tell 'em that."

"Best news I've heard today!" commented the messenger as, with a haste betraying fear lest Marcus should change his mind, he shot through the door, remounted, loped away.

"Another public embarrassment removed from the path of progress, as Henry Ward Beecher would say," remarked Marcus. "If the boys had brought him in, I don't believe this camp would have wanted to hang him—now. Buck, guess our job's done."

Buck and I were looking not at him, however, but at Constance. Across her pallor a flush was mounting, as when the rose-dawn touches the snows of the Divide; in her deep-blue eyes a light was shining as when the sunrise strikes on mountain lakes. She held out hands—the right to Buck, the left to Marcus—who took them sheepishly Buck, indeed, started the pumphandle motion of a handshake; then, as he perceived that her gesture meant more than that, retained her hand; and a blush inflamed his tanned brow. So she stood for a moment, looking from one to the other.

"I have had friends," she said. "And perhaps you wouldn't like to have me call you friends. But I never dreamed that I should ever ask any friend to do for me what you two wonderful men have done today. I can't thank you. It would be ridiculous to try. But if you ever want anything I can do or can't do—let me—" She broke off; her eyes became lakes indeed; she released their hands.

"It's all right—'twasn't nothing!" Buck managed to say.

"I'd do it again for you and more, Mrs. Deane," began the readier Marcus. "You're—" but the lakes were overflowing. Buck first, then Marcus, backed out of the room.

"I want to cry, Robert," said Constance. "Don't—try—to—comfort—me—please. Just watch—to see if anyone's coming—"

So I stood for a long time, as it seemed to me, and studied Main street as it settled down to normal.

The voice of Constance, sweet with passing tears, spoke behind me.

"I think I'd better go home now," she said.

"I'm going with you," I replied.

She hesitated, as though restrained by some little, instinctive fear of the proprieties; then, as realizing how ridiculous that was in the face of our situation, smiled—firmly now—and replied:

"Do—I want, of course, to tell you everything."

So we walked together into Main street. Naturally we attracted attention. I could feel with the back of my head that the crowd about Doc Evans' window had turned from that old sensation to this new one, had stared and pointed. Now and then a head

"Don't Worry, Mrs. Deane," He Said, "That Ain't Him."

craned from a window, or I heard a rush of feet at a doorway. Eyes ahead, we walked in silence up the familiar path—should I ever tread it again?—to Mrs. Barnaby's.

Constance was not entirely reassured that Deane had escaped. I must needs give her comfort on that. Once I asked: "What you said before they arrested me—you mean that, Constance?" She answered: "I meant it then. I mean it now. I mean it forever!" But we did not then kiss or clasp hands, as unfettered lovers may after such words; only sat for a time silent and looked at each other.

A spurt of sleep or what resembled sleep; when I came out of it, feverishly awake, she was talking:

"—my own fault, my very own in the beginning, Robert. A little of it sin—if you want to call it that. The rest just folly. Perverse folly. I was only seventeen when I eloped with him from Miss Gorham's academy at Providence. That was the beginning. I shan't lay that to anyone else. But I will tell you how it happened:

"We lived at Warwick—do you know it? A little old Rhode Island town. The family had been there forever. My mother was younger than my father. She died when I was six years old. I had no brothers or sisters.

"My father married again—a beautiful woman, a brilliant woman, but unbalanced. Perhaps insane. I wouldn't have had the charity to make that excuse for her once. I hated her. But I think, now, I shall never hate anyone else so long as I live. She was cruel to me—insanely cruel—because she was jealous. I have been beaten, terribly beaten, in my day, Robert. But more than that. The trick of putting me in the wrong. . . . Perhaps that was why father sent me away to school—to Miss Gorham's in Providence. From the time I was seven until I was seventeen—just school. At first I came home for the holidays. But finally she spoiled even that. She had a terrible hold on father. I can understand that, too. She was a beautiful creature.

Inkfish That Blinds Enemies With Light

A cuttlefish that confounds its enemies with light instead of darkness is the interesting creature described by Prof. E. Newton Harvey, student of what is popularly known as "cold light," who devoted eight months to research in the marine laboratories of Naples and Messina, Italy.

Ordinary squid or inkfish that live near the surface escape their pursuers by throwing out a cloud of black fluid, as a kind of submarine smoke screen, Professor Harvey explained. This abysmal form, which lives at depths of probably ten thousand feet, where no light ever penetrates, has only a rudimentary ink sac, which instead of the usual inky sepia contains a luminous substance. When disturbed it discharges a jet of this luminous material and thus blinds its enemy with light instead of darkness.

Professor Harvey is of the opinion that this deep-sea squid is a descendant of surface-living animals, but that as it evolved in darkness it found that this reversal of its ancestral mode of defense was useful in insuring its survival.

Alloy for Gold

In the manufacture of jewelry the usual alloy for gold is copper, but in the making of white gold nickel is used. This causes the white color, and, at the same time, makes the gold harder and more brittle. The price varies, according to the amount of the alloy used.

Her First Case

In a Kansas City federal court the other day the defendant Ruth Kelly, twenty-five, was charged with selling morphine. The prosecutor for the government, Margaret Latchem, twenty-one, slender, bobbed-haired girl, was trying her first case When the judge fixed Ruth's sentence at seven months Ruth burst into tears—the disgrace of going to jail appalls even bad women. Then all eyes were turned on the girlish prosecutor. She saw the prisoner's tears. Her own chin quivered in womanly sympathy. Otherwise she retained her composure. . . . It was a contest between professional dignity and a woman's heart and professional dignity won by a narrow margin.—Capper's Weekly.

Lead for Cancer

Out of 227 "hopeless" cases, 30 have had no recurrence of cancer after treatment with lead, according to an Edinburgh hospital authority. Lead salt injections are poisonous however, and an effort is being made to find a lead colloid that will not have poisonous results. The 30 cases reported cured showed no effects of lead poisoning.

Nosey Neighbors One of Life's Real Peeves

There are two kinds of neighbors, good ones and nosey ones. The nosey ones almost invariably mean well They function as they do because they were born with a mania for attending to other people's affairs.

One of these will knock at your door in the early morning and say, "We have a man mowing our lawn and I noticed yours needs it and thought maybe you'd like to hire him while he's here."

Another will hear the crash of glass when you drop a pitcher and appear breathless at the door to ask what has happened. Another will come because she smells something burning; another to tell you your gardener is loafing or your right rear tire is flat.

Minding other people's affairs affords their chief joy in life; and the more they meddle the more virtuous and useful they feel.

There was a time when distance and the difficulty of communication limited the number of meddlers who could torment any given neighborhood. The pests bothered only those within earshot or walking distance.

But the things we call "modern improvements" made all of America one neighborhood, and now the nosey folk are in their glory. The field of their activities is unlimited.

In a metropolis, where nearly all are strangers, there are few neighbors and fewer meddlers. But the metropolitans do not escape. Their activities are watched by nosey folk who live hundreds of miles away, and these stand ready to offer advice and censure when the occasion offers.

It is generally believed that the number of meddlers has increased, but the belief has little foundation in fact. The apparent increase is due to the fact that those who once were content to torment the people next door have discovered means of tormenting people far away.

It is a sad state of affairs, but little can be done about it until some prophet comes along to teach the conscience ridden that each has a divine call to attend to his own business.—Baltimore Sun.

No Li'ns for Little Rastus

Little Rastus was on the train on his way to the country for the first time to visit his uncle Rastus for whom he was named.

Uncle Rastus hitched his team up to the spring wagon and went to meet the train which arrived in the little village after dark. After helping little Rastus into the wagon he said: "Boy, hold dese lines til Ah gets de baggage."

When Uncle Rastus had gathered up the baggage he was surprised to see little Rastus running at breakneck speed back toward the train. Uncle Rastus exclaimed: "What in de name o' goodness you runnin' back to de train for—boy?"

Little Rastus all out of breath, panted. "Ah doan wanta ride in no wagon what's got lions hitched to it."—Everybody's Magazine.

Speedways for Europe

There is a movement in Germany for the construction of speedways running directly from one large city to another and reserved for high-speed cars As these roads would be used only by a limited class of drivers they cannot be built with public money Such a scheme, to embrace Europe, has been undertaken by a society incorporated in Italy, under the management of Engineer Pricelli. Deliberations have already taken place regarding a Hamburg-Milan route, to go via Hanover, Thuringia, South Germany and Switzerland. Later lines to the Ruhr district, Berlin and into Czechoslovakia are planned.

Identified Himself

Stories of absent-mindedness were being related in the smoking room of a transatlantic liner

"I am very absent-minded myself," said a hitherto silent man. "I often find names and telephone numbers written in my notebook, but can't remember what persons they represent. Lately I had a general checking up. The name and address of one man baffled me, so I wrote to him asking if he had ever heard of me and if I was supposed to do something for him. He wrote back a cordial, almost an affectionate letter, saying I had already done it. He was my wife's first husband."

Facts and Figures

"How much do you weigh now?" asked the beauty expert, on whom she had called.

"One hundred and seventy pounds," answered the client.

"When you are ready to tell me your real weight," she said, "I will be ready to talk business."

The customer blushed and told the truth Then she asked how the beauty expert knew she was heavier than the weight she first gave.

"Madam," answered the woman, "surely you know that figures never lie."

Storehouses of Gold

Gold is either found in veins or in a placer or gravel deposit. Placers are the result of shattered and eroded veins in the mountains. Streams carried the bowlders, cobbles and fine gravel, with the released gold, down to the valleys, where it settled and partly solidified Some of the gravel and gold was deposited along and in the beds of streams. This is either hydraulicked or dredged. Gold in veins may be found in almost any rock, such as slate, schist, diorite or greenstone, granite and quartzite.

ARCTIC HAS TAKEN TOLL OF BRAVERY

Long List of Expeditions That Failed.

The successful return of MacMillan and Amundsen from their latest expeditions to the North recalls that many earlier explorers gave their lives to Arctic adventure and that a long line of sturdy ships have surrendered to the ice. Less than two years ago William Nutting and three companions set out from Norway to follow in Viking trail to America in their little ship, the Lief Ericson. They disappeared after leaving the coast of Greenland. Earlier centuries had their Arctic expeditions. In 1500 Gaspar Cortereal, a Portuguese explorer, ventured into Hudson strait in a small craft and was never heard from again, says Popular Science Monthly. His brother and a number of companions who organized a searching expedition likewise were lost. Four hundred years before there was a map of the Arctic, Sir Hugh Willoughby sailed into the North, later to be found dead with his crew and the ship frozen fast in the ice Sir Martin Frobisher's search for the Northwest passage in 1590 met with partial disaster when one of his three ships foundered in a gale.

Bering made many expeditions during the middle part of the Eighteenth century, but was finally wrecked on the island that now bears his name and died there, legend says, of broken heart. After a successful voyage into northern seas with Peary, in 1893, and a relief expedition, a year later, the Falcon, commanded by Capt Henry Bartlett, a skilled navigator was lost with all her crew. The first "mariner of the air" to be claimed by the Arctic was Solomon August Andree, who, with two companions, left Spitzbergen in 1897 in a balloon fitted with sails and trailing ropes. They hoped to reach the pole and return, but a few of the buoys dropped from the basket as a means of tracing the expedition and a message brought by a carrier pigeon, were all that came back from the ill-fated venture. In May, 1845, Sir John Franklin, with 129 men and the Erebus and the Terror, set out to find a northwest passage. Neither the ships nor any of the men returned. Thirty relief expeditions, over as many years, were sent in search of them, although a message found 14 years after the men had sailed stated that the ships had been crushed in the ice.

To Stop Walls' Scaling

The brownstone of which old Trinity church in lower New York is built is succumbing to time and weather. The scaling of the fine old church has progressed to such a point that something has to be done about it. The whole exterior of the building is to be heated to 250 degrees Fahrenheit by means of an electric air blast and then melted paraffin is to be applied. The paraffin is expected to be sufficiently absorbed into the "skin" of the stone to make the crumbling stone waterproof so that moisture and frost can do no further damage. This was the process by which crumbling of the Egyptian obelisk in Central park, New York, was stopped several years ago.

Correct Posture

Correct posture is more a product of well-balanced muscular activity and development than a habitual assumption of a certain approved position. We were formerly told that children and others should lie straight in bed, so that they would be able to stand straight the next day. As a matter of fact the body assumed a very different and more relaxed position just as soon as sleep began to dull the consciousness. The purpose of sleep is to give rest rather than serve as a time for discipline.—Exchange.

Human Alarm Clocks

In parts of the Orient some natives have developed the ability to sleep a predetermined number of hours to a remarkable degree. An Indian scholar, for instance, slept three days and awoke within a half minute of the time set for arising. Others are said to have such power of mental concentration that they can submit to minor surgical operations without apparent pain. Generations of study along the lines of applied psychology have produced these faculties in the opinion of investigators.

Counter Suggestion

Mother had promised that Billy should have a birthday party and the boy was sending out invitations. "I think I'd just call it a party, dear," said his mother. "I wouldn't mention the birthday; it looks too much like asking for a present."

Billy protested vigorously against the suggestion, but finally gave in. "Well, mother," he said, "I won't mention the birthday, but don't you think it would be all right if I draw a picture of a cake with candles at the top of the paper?"—Boston Transcript.

Believed Work of Watteau

What is believed to be a two-hundred-year-old painting by the Frenchman, Watteau, has been discovered in a humble home in a suburb of Johannesburg. It depicts Mary Queen of Scots being led to execution. The signature, "A. Watteau," appears in the left-hand corner, but the value of the find, even if an original, is lessened by the fact that the canvas has been pierced in two places. It is said to have been brought to South Africa by a Huguenot.

KING OF ICELAND HAD BRIEF REIGN

Two Months' Sway Probably Shortest on Record.

Iceland once had a king of its own, but its independence was short-lived and within two months the island was under the Danish flag. It was during the first years of the last century, when Napoleon was all but master of Europe. Hating Britain with all his heart, he endeavored to cripple her time and again by closing all Continental ports against British ships. But taking time by the forelock, the British navy blockaded Copenhagen in 1807, captured the Danish fleet and interrupted all intercourse with other lands.

It was at this stage that Iceland, the smallest and most remote country in Europe, suffered indirectly for Napoleon's sins. For two centuries Denmark had enjoyed the monopoly of trade for supplies of all kinds. But with the capture of the Danish fleet and the British blockade, shipping to Iceland became almost impossible, and the Icelanders were reduced to the verge of extremity.

At last Britain, hearing of the plight of the islanders, took means for their relief. A ship, under the direction of a young privateer captive—Jorgen Jorgensen—was allowed in 1808 to take provisions to Iceland. Jorgensen decided to take matters in his own hands. He captured the Danish governor and imprisoned him on his ship; took over the reins of the government, called himself king and proclaimed that Iceland was no longer a Danish possession. He confiscated property belonging to Danish residents, declared Iceland at peace with Britain and opened the port to ships of all nations.

For two months Jorgensen remained at the head of the government, the people greeting the revolution with joy, for it put an end to the extortions of the Danish merchants. But one day a British cruiser arrived, heard the imprisoned governor's story, arrested Jorgensen and restored Iceland to Denmark. Jorgensen's sovereignty passed without bloodshed, just as his capture of the island had been effected. He was taken to London and imprisoned, but later allowed to go to Tasmania, where he died in 1845.—Edinburgh Weekly Scotsman.

Price of a Knife

A friend was showing a Scotsman round his cutlery works at Sheffield. "Here's a souvenir for you, Mac," said he, when the visit was over, and handed him a presentation pocket knife. "But," he added, "you'll have to give me a halfpenny for it so as not to cut our friendship!"

With some reluctance the Scot searched his pockets and at last produced a penny.

"Hae ye got change?" he asked anxiously.

"Sorry," replied the friend, "I'm afraid I haven't!"

Mac thought for a minute, "Then you can just give me another knife!" he said.

Ancient Steering Gear

Paul E. Garber of the Smithsonian institution says that the rudder of a Spanish galleon swung on pintles fastened to the rudder by iron straps, but free to turn in the bend of similar straps on the hull. The rudder straps were above the hull straps and the pintles were recessed into the rudder, flush with the hinged edge. The rudder extended above the water line and was shaped into the rudder post below the bend of the poop. The rudder post passed through the poop to the lower deck. The tiller had at its rear a rectangular mortise through which the rudder post projected.

Horseless Horseshoes

If any one fears that the game of pitching horseshoes will die out for want of implements as the automobile replaces the horse, he may set his mind at rest. "Horseshoes" that are not shoes and could not be worn by horses are now manufactured especially for use in the game.

They come in pairs of a regulation size and weight, painted and numbered for easy identification. In most outward aspects, even to the presence of calks, they resemble their prototypes, but they betray themselves for what they really are by the absence of nail holes.

Not That Cruel

It was Mary Jane's first week at school. Each day she hurried home with a story to tell mother of the day's occurrence.

One evening she rushed into the house, saying to her mother: "Mother, do you know what the teacher wanted us children to bring her tomorrow? Cat-tails! She told every one who could bring some to raise his hand. But, mother, I didn't raise my hand, cause we haven't any cats, and, anyway, I knew you wouldn't let me cut their tails off."

Wise Old Cat

A London householder is responsible for the latest story of animal sagacity, and inasmuch as we have had so many tales of sea serpents and other such varmints, it would be cruel to cast doubt upon its veracity.

The householder says that his pet tomcat developed the habit of begging for cheese from the dining table. A watch was kept on the cat, and it was discovered that after eating the cheese he would go to a mousehole and breathe heavily down it.

SCHOOL NEWS

The Seniors' Lyceum Course has been paid for in full and the firts number by Mr. R. O. Briggs was praised very highly. The Seniors deserve a lot of credit for uhstling about our community and disposing of enough season tickets to cover the cost of the course.

Our base ball team played a good brand of ball against Corwith yesterday afternoon, but Corwith left with the long end of the score.

Vernon Turgason struck out eleven men, while Frances had eight strike outs. Our boys got three hits off of Frances; one of these was a two base hit by Vernon. Tanner also made one safe hit. Only one safe hit was made by Corwith. Our team was crippled in this game by the ineligibility of three very substantial players, but our subs did surprisingly well. We play Swaledale next Friday evening there.

Miss Kidder spent the week end at Indianola, presumably visiting class mates and possibly another more dear. Our coach vanished again Saturday P M. but reappeared Monday at 9 A. M.

Our small boys and girls have lived all week in eager anticipation of a big time on Thursday P. M. School is to be closed for our community celebration on Thursday afternoon. If it should rain out the celebration there will be school.

Next week marks the close of the first six week's period of our school year and examinations will be the order of the last few days of the week.

Let's hope all do some reviewing for them and there be few who fail.

We again urge parents to assist us in maintaining a high standard of school attendance. Only in unusual circumstances should pupils be kept from their classes to assit in outside work. In the interest of good work and adequate school progress we feel it necessary to with-hold the opportunity of making up work lost by non-attendance if the reasons for absence are not satisfactory ones. Sickness of parents or pupils themselves and brief tasks of unuual or infrequent occurrence may prove to be satisfactory reasons for absence. Lets all do the best we can for our boys and girls.

"KEEP IT COOL FOR PRESIDENT COOLIDGE"

The White House kitchen is being equipped with an electric refrigerating system. The new equipment, Major U. S. Grant 3rd, Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds said, has been installed in the ice box which has been in the White House since 1924.

This new attachment, it was explained, will obviate the necessity of conveying manufactured ice to the White House from the ice plant maintained by the State, War and Navy Departments, and which heretofore has supplied the White House ice box.

In connection with the installation of this modern refrigeration equipment, it was recalled by Major Grant that ice used by Presidents Adams, Jefferson and other early occupants of the Presidential Mansion was cut from the Potomac river and stored in deep trenches, which were scattered all over the city. The first White House, it was declared, had an ice house built into it. This was a cellar 20 feet in diameter and 15 feet deep, with a staircase leading to the bottom.

Kennebec river ice was used shortly before the Civil War, and up until about 25 years ago natural river ice was still in use. Then artificial ice came into use and in 1911 the ice plant for the State, War and Navy Departments, was constructed, which also supplied the White House with ice.

At the outset of the Lincoln administration, Major Grant said, an improved ice box was installed at the Presidential Mansion and remained in use until Cleveland's first administration. It then was replaced by a larger one of modern type, which, in turn, was used until 19[illegible] when the present refrigerator [illegible] installed.

Why Not Make The Profit Yourself?

As a patron of The Klemme Co-Operative Creamery you are a manufacturer of a product that finds a ready market. Do you think a manufacturer of tiling spades would be buying of a competitor at higher prices than he could manufacture them for in his own factory? We hardly think so Why should you be content to accept a lower price for your cream than you, as a manufacturer, can get through your own manufacturing plant? The old adage that "if you watch the pennies the dollars will take care of themselves" applies to the dairy business as well as some other lines. Eight or ten cents per pound for your butterfat may not seem very much of a loss on one small batch of cream but in the aggregate it amounts to a sizeable sum in the course of a year. Patronize yourself and take ALL the profit.

BE IT ORDAINED, by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa,

Section 1. That there is hereby granted to the Koerner Telephone Company, its successors and assigns, the right to erect, construct, maintain, reconstruct, operate and use poles, wires, cables, and whatsoever other materials and fixtures necessary or convenient, upon, over and under the streets, alleys, highways and public places of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the construction, operation, maintainance and use of a Telephone system, both local and long distance, for a term of Twenty Five (25) Years under the provisions hereof

Section 2. The lines of poles, wires, cables and other materials and appliances as heretofore installed and now used in connection with, and appurtenant to, said telephone system is hereby recognized and appoved, and additions thereto and betterments thereof shall be so placed and maintained as not to unreasonably interfere with public travel; it being understood that the street and alley committee of said Town shall supervise the placing of additional poles, wires and cables upon and under the streets and alleys of said Town, and all thereof shall be subject to statutory regulations now existing or hereafter legally enacted with reference thereto. Whenever an adequate deposit of money for the use and benefit of said Koerner Telephone Company shall have been made with the Mayor of said Town of Klemme, and upon twenty-four (24) hours' written notice by the Mayor thereof, the said Koerner Telephone Company shall remove such of its poles, wires, cables or other appliances as may be necessary for the passage of buildings beingmoved within the said town or for excavations being made under the surface of the streets of said town, at the expense of the party requesting the same, but said telephone company shall not be required to remove poles or wires nor cables unless the route selected by the applicant shall be the most practical and expedient in the judgment of the Mayor of said Town, all interests and rights being duly considered.

Section 3. All ordinances or parts of ordinances of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, in conflict herewith, are, upon the final adoption hereof, repealed.

Section 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Klemme Times and its adoption by the Council of the Town of Klemme and by the qualified electors of the Town of Klemme at a special election of said Town to be held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1926, and after the cost and expense of such submission and special election shall have been paid by the said Koerner Telephone Company.

Passed and adopted by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme and approved this 6th day of September, A D, 1926.

Klemme Locals

Sunday was Mrs. Clarence Johnson's birthday, and to help her celebrate the event and eat birthday cake with her, the A. D. Gimer family, of this city, and Mr. and Mrs. Ray Gimer, of Wellsburg, and Mrs Cora Homan, of Abbott, all drove out to the Johnson farm Sunday to celebrate with Mrs. Johnson. A good time was had by all.

A. G. Koerner is rebuilding his brick barn and garage which was recently destroyed by the cyclone. The roof was torn off and some of the wall badly damaged. Al will rebuild with bricks for the first story and from there will go up with a frame structure. The new barn is to be twice as large as the building which was destroyed.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson and son, Buster, accompanied by Rev. A. W Gauger and daughter, Marie, took in the Hampton-Garner football game at Garner Saturday afternoon. Garner lost by the overwhelming score of 59-0. Garner lacks "beef" in their football machine this year and have a light, green team, not to be compared with their heavy team of last year.

Rev. Gauger, in company with Rev Ortmeyer, of Kanawha, left Tuesday morning for Sioux City, to attend the annual Conference of the Methodist Church. Rev. and Mrs. Van Metre, of Garner, also left Tuesday for Sioux City. The ministers expect to arrive home next Monday night. Appointments are not given out until Monday and so this news cannot be published until next week.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

The busiest place along the Main Drag is down at the creamery, the place where quality butter is produced for the exclusion eastern trade. We happened by there the other a. m. and stopped in to see where all the noise came from. Art Gimer was playing Yankee Doodle on the cream cans and Paul Mueller was singing "I Wonder Who s Kissing Her Now?" as he walloped golden butter around in the churn. The boys hauling in the cream were real busy unloading and helping weigh the cream. Those boys at the local anti-ole factory sure know how to sling some wicked butter, alright!

One fellow suggested why not kid the women a little in this column. And why not? We allow them to vote and as this corner of hot air hits everybody, we let them in!

The gates are down and Mabel Smith and Geneva Schuldt are the first victims. The other day a reporter from the Times spied them putting out a lot of sticky fly paper in John Day's 'pay before you leave', and as this is a closed season on the innocent flies, their act aroused the suspicion of our reporter Casually asking the young ladies if they expected to catch flies they said, No, we're setting this out to tangle up some young men; we haven't been able to catch them any other way!

We therefore warn young men to steer clear of carelessly placed sticky fly paper in the future.

Well, another worry is now over. We had our first killing frost Saturday morning, and to make sure the weather man gave us another shot of the same stuff next morning All the green stuff has departed to the happy hunting ground

It's a good thing some men we know didn't get caught outdoors with their hats off. Some of these soft-shelled sea animals won't stand much freezing above the ears—yep! They're dead from there up now.

And still there are more hunters than there are ducks Some men must think there is an open season on hunters the way they recklessly swing their shotguns around when they shoot. This getting a load of shot down your back is no sport The hunters are so thick at the lakes now days that they have to pin a "No Hunting Allowed" sign on their backs to keep the other hunters from walking all over them

The other morning we were duck hunting (not shooting) when we got a mess of shot down our neck. We yelled to the guy to lay off on the bomb-bardment. Hastily he thumbed through the game laws and came over to where we were knocking the mud off of the mud hens and says, "There's no place here where it says there's a closed season on Editors."

The only safe way for an editor to go hunting is to rent a "tank" from the army.

And speaking of hunting, they say we will have an open season on pheasants in this part of Iowa sometime next month; perhaps. That is good news for many sportsmen.

IF PRESENT plans are carried out, the United States is to have a new national monument wherein will be commemorated the name and fame of the greatest native military genius this country has ever known, a red man who has been called by military experts, who know whereof they speak, "the Indian Napoleon." He is Chief Joseph of the Nez Perces, and linked with his name in the proposed memorial will be that of one of our most successful Indian fighters, the late Gen. Nelson A. Miles.

For years the residents of Chinook, Mont., and Blaine county have sought to have set aside as a national memorial the site of the battlefield in the Bear Paw mountains where General Miles and Chief Joseph fought a five-day engagement and which just 49 years ago this month took place one of the most dramatic surrender scenes in all American history. Now it seems likely that the ambition of these Montanans to honor these two great warriors will be realized, and it is believed that the new national monument will be erected by presidential proclamation within the next year. If this is done a shaft probably will be erected on the site of the surrender and the dedication will take place a year hence, on the fiftieth anniversary of the event.

Not only is the name of Chief Joseph to be emblazoned on this shaft but further honor is being paid him by one of America's foremost sculptors. Cyrus Dallin, already noted for his Indian sculptures, has begun work on a memorial wherein, according to press dispatches, he "hopes to immortalize in bronze the bravery, patience, loyalty and sorrow of the American Indian." That being his ambition it was inevitable that he should choose Chief Joseph for his subject, for there never has been an Indian of whom bravery, patience, loyalty and sorrow were more characteristic and the story of him and of his people, the Nez Perces, is a pathetic page in American history. It is a story, too, which reflects little credit upon the American people, one of those sordid stories of greed and oppression of a weaker race which has so often marked the relations of white men and red.

From time immemorial the Nez Perces had dwelt in the vast region in Idaho, Oregon and Washington, including the valleys of the Snake, Salmon, Clearwater and Grande Ronde rivers. In 1855 Gov. Isaac I. Stevens of Washington territory made a treaty with the Nez Perces confirming their title to their ancestral home, but in 1863 by a new treaty with the tribes of the Northwest the lands of the Nez Perces were greatly reduced.

Old Joseph of the Nez Perces declined to sign the treaty, even though other chiefs did, refused to live on the proposed reservation and continued to occupy the fertile territory, especially the beautiful Wallowa valley, which his people loved most of all. Old Joseph died in 1872, bequeathing to his son Young Joseph, whose Indian name, "Hinmaton Yahlatkit," has the impressive meaning of "Thunder Rolling in the Mountains," his love for the Wallowa valley and his opposition to giving it up to the encroaching whites. For the next four years there was constant friction between the whites and the Indians and in nearly every case the whites were the aggressors. Finally in 1876 a commission decided, in defiance of all right, that the Nez Perces must go on the reservation assigned them and Gen. O. O. Howard, commander of the military department of the Columbia, was ordered to carry out the decision.

After several councils with the Indians, Chief Joseph agreed to obey the order of the commission and go on the reservation. He did this only because he felt that it would be better to submit to injustice than to provoke a war in which he knew well his people would inevitably lose. Unfortunately some of his hot-blooded young warriors refused to abide by his decision. On June 13, 1877, they murdered several settlers. There is one story of the return of the war party to the Nez Perce camp where the young warriors threw down several white scalps and announced dramatically to their people "Now you will have to go to war!"

Chief Joseph was absent from camp at the time, collecting some of his scattered tribesmen in preparation for removal to the reservation. When he returned he found that the die was cast and that he was committed to war. Even then he was resolved to make it a defensive war and not an offensive one and he conceived the bold plan of fleeing with his people to Canada, fighting only if the white men barred his path to freedom. Then began one of the most remarkable retreats in history. One historian of the Nez Perce war has written: "Xenophon has chronicled the retreat of the ten thousand; De Quincey has romanced about the migration of the Tartars; a thousand pens have recorded the annihilation of the Grand Army of Napoleon: the story of Joseph and his Nez Perces is my theme—the story of the bitterest injustice toward a weak but independent people to which the United States ever set its hand and of a military exploit of the first magnitude, which justly entitles this great Indian to take rank among the great Captains."

Undaunted by the almost insuperable difficulties of his problem—that of transporting a whole tribe, men, women and children, over a thousand miles or more of the roughest country on the North American continent and breaking through the lines of military barrier which were certain to be thrown out to intercept him, Chief Joseph set out. General Howard acted promptly upon hearing of the murders of the settlers. He began concentrating all available troops at strategic points. The first engagement took place on June 17 in White Bird canon where Captain Perry and a small body of troops rode into a trap which Joseph had prepared for him and were disastrously defeated. In this battle the Indian chief in the handling of his men first showed those qualities of military leadership which was a promise of the stern task before the soldiers before they could hope to obey the orders from Washington.

After Perry's defeat General Howard took the field himself and the great chase was on. Howard himself has paid high tribute to the military genius of his opponent and in the weeks that followed Chief Joseph amply proved that he was worthy of all praise. For the Indian Napoleon proved that he understood the Little Corporal's tactics of defeating the enemy in detail and did it. General Howard and Colonel Sturgis both learned that to their sorrow. Even General Miles, who finally brought him to bay, might have learned it had conditions been different.

For here briefly is the achievement of Chief Joseph during that remarkable retreat: Encumbered with women and children, which he refused to desert and allow to fall into the hands of the soldiers as he might have done several times to facilitate his flight, and having a fighting force that never exceeded 300 warriors, he fought eleven engagements, five of them pitched battles of which he lost but one; in the other six skirmishes he killed 126 and wounded 140 of the 2,000 soldiers who fought him, but he lost 151 killed and 88 wounded of his own people. Then having distanced his pursuers and knowing that he was only 50 miles from the Canadian line and safety (for he did not know of the approach of General Miles' troops) he made the fatal mistake of stopping for a little while to give his weary tribesmen a chance for a brief rest.

Here in the Bear Paw mountains, where the memorial to him is to be erected, General Miles attacked on September 30, 1877. For five days Joseph and his little band, greatly outnumbered, withstood the attack of Miles' soldiers. Finally artillery was brought to bear upon their defenses and on October 4 Chief Joseph gave up the contest. In the meantime General Howard who had pursued the fleeing Indians across three states arrived at the battleground. One of his (Howard's) officers, Col. C. E. S. Wood, has described the dramatic scene of Joseph's surrender as follows:

"It was nearly sunset when Joseph came to deliver himself up. He rode from his camp in the little hollow. His hands were clasped over the pommel of his saddle and his rifle lay across his knees; his head was bowed down. Pressing around him walked five of his warriors; their faces were upturned and earnest as they murmured to him; but he looked neither to the right nor to the left, yet seemed to listen intently. So the little group came slowly up the hill to where General Howard, with an aide-de-camp, and General Miles waited to receive the surrender. As he neared them, Joseph sat erect in the saddle, then gracefully and with dignity swung himself down from his horse, and with an impulsive gesture threw his arm to its full length and offered his rifle to General Howard. The latter motioned him toward General Miles, who received the token of submission.

At this surrender scene, too, Chief Joseph made the speech which deserves a place with Chief Logan's famous oration. These were his words: "I am tired of fighting. Our chiefs are killed. Looking Glass is dead. Too-hul-hul-sult (the medicine man or "dreamer" who had urged war upon Joseph) is dead. The old men are all dead. It is the young men now who say "yes" and "no" (vote in the council). He who led the young men (Ollicut, Joseph's brother) is dead. It is cold and we have no blankets. The little children are freezing to death. My people—some of them—have run away to the hills and have no blankets, no food. No one knows where they are—perhaps freezing to death. I want to have time to look for my children and to see how many of them I can find; maybe I shall find them among the dead. Hear me, my chiefs, my heart is sick and sad. From where the sun now stands I fight no more against the white man."

As he spoke those last words, the old chief raised his hand to the sky and with this simple gesture the career of the Indian Napoleon ended. For he kept his promise; he never fought again.

After the surrender, General Miles promised Joseph that he and his people should be returned to Idaho. As for the way in which the United States kept that promise—it repudiated it entirely! The captives were sent to Fort Leavenworth and kept there during the winter. The next summer they were put on a reservation in Indian Territory. It was an unhealthy place for anyone and for these Indians, accustomed to the high altitude of their mountain home, the hot malarious climate of the low lands was deadly. They died by the score. Chief Joseph protested and protested in vain, but the federal authorities turned a deaf ear to his pleas to be allowed to return to his old home before his people were exterminated.

To the everlasting credit of the soldier who had conquered him, it must be said that General Miles used his powerful influence to make the government keep faith. Finally in 1885 the Nez Perces were allowed to return to the Northwest, but not to the spot they loved most—the Wallowa valley. They were sent to the Colville reservation in Washington and there they lived for the next 20 years with Chief Joseph taking the lead in guiding his people in the white man's road. There on September 21, 1904, the old chief "nodding by the fire, dreaming perhaps of days of daring and deeds of valor, by which, savage though he was, he had written his name on the pages of history, slipped quietly to the ground and fell into his eternal sleep."

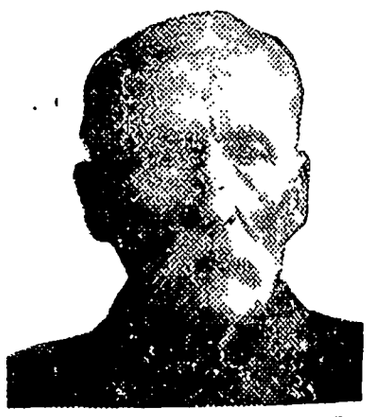
Well-Known Mason Restored to Good Health

Victim of Dizziness, Indigestion, Loss of Strength, Retired Farmer Restored to Health by Tanlac. Gains 12 Pounds



Brawn, muscle and splendid health that nature gives to us cannot withstand the terrible strain and stress of modern living. But health can be regained and protected against attack. Andrew Loucks, a well-known Stewartville, Minnesota, citizen, a member of the Pleasant Grove Lodge of Masons, says: "Tanlac has made me feel as if I could go out on the farm and do a big day's work.

"I was greatly troubled with my stomach. And at times indigestion would be so bad that I would have vomiting spells followed by cramps. I was restless and my condition shattered my nerves. At night I would toss and turn waiting for sleep that never came. Often I was so dizzy I could not keep my balance. I was getting weaker every day when I decided to take Tanlac.

"After the first bottle I noticed a great deal of improvement. I am on my fifth bottle now and am enjoying good health. I eat everything with a ravenous appetite. I have gained 12 pounds. Indigestion never troubles me; neither do dizzy spells. Tanlac has made me feel years younger."

Banish sickness and sufferings from your life. Benefit by the experience of others. Tanlac made from roots, barks and herbs according to the famous Tanlac formula, usually builds up weak, scrawny bodies, relieves suffering, restores good health. First bottle shows amazing results. Will Use Reflectors in Astronomical Work

New methods of research of astronomers call for the use of telescopes of enormous size, and the apparatus of the future, it is believed, will be the reflector. This type, of which there are several forms, employs a concave mirror with a silvered surface, instead of a lens. It is easier to construct in large sizes than the older form, the refractor. Large disks of pure optical glass are difficult to produce. That is why the biggest object-glass ever made is only 40 inches in diameter. In a mirror, internal faults that would be fatal in an object-glass do not matter. The light of the star does not pass through the glass, but is reflected from its concave face. This surface is covered with a highly polished film of pure silver deposited by a chemical process.

A few weeks' vacation from the gas range makes all the difference in the world—both ways.

The Crusades

A DWARF—misshapen, bearded, ungainly—sat on a lean, shaggy donkey in the midst of a shrieking multitude and brandished a huge crucifix above his head. His shouted exhortations were echoed and re-echoed by the crowd.

The dwarf was known as Peter the Hermit. He was pleading with his Eleventh-century audience to wrest the Holy Land from the grip of the Mahometan infidels. And so eloquently did the little priest urge his cause that he aroused a world wide wave of enthusiasm and set afoot a mighty international agitation which endured for centuries.

Mahomet's successors held the Holy Land. Christians on pious pilgrimages to the Savior's birthplace and tomb were robbed, insulted and even murdered by these Moslems. Sacred shrines were profaned or destroyed. These outrages aroused Peter the Hermit; and, in the latter part of the Eleventh century, he went from country to country, urging all Christians to sweep the Holy Land, and especially the Holy City, Jerusalem, clear of Mahometans and to avenge the injuries perpetrated on Christian pilgrims. Pope Urban II approved the plan and promised remission of sins to all who should enter on this holy war.

All Europe went mad with religious zeal. "Id Deus vult!" ("God wills it!") was their war cry. Thousands and hundreds of thousands donned the blood-red cross which was to be the badge of the mission.

Debtors, felons, servants, monks and other classes bound in one way or another were freed on promise to march against the infidels. An enormous international army was raised for the purpose, its chief commander being Godfrey du Bouillon, duke of Lorraine. But early in 1096, before the organized expedition could get under way, a disorganized mob of 200,000 men, women and children, under the personal leadership of Peter the Hermit, started across Europe for Jerusalem. They never reached their destination. Without discipline, food or sufficient arms, they straggled on eastward, their ranks daily thinning through desertion, disease and famine, until of all that vast motley horde a bare 7,000 reached the eastern banks of the Bosphorus. There they were set upon and literally cut to pieces by the Turks.

On August 15, 1096, Godfrey de Bouillon's host began its march to Palestine, reaching Constantinople on Christmas day. Wrangles of various sorts, disputes as to precedence in command, bad management and insufficient supplies hampered their movements from first to last. The expedition, which started with so holy an aim, began to feel the influence of politics, corruption and personal ambition. Nevertheless, held together by Godfrey's genius, they defeated, one after another, the Mahometan armies sent against them, and at last laid siege to Jerusalem itself. The Holy City fell after about a month's defense, and the victorious crusaders put to death in horrible fashion every Mahometan defender they could lay their hands on. Moslem men, women and even babies were slaughtered mercilessly by these upholders of the Gospel of Peace, and Godfrey was chosen king of Jerusalem.

A second crusade, urged on by St. Bernard and led by Louis VII of France, followed a few years later. An unsuccessful effort was made to capture Damascus, and, altogether, the venture was without any real results. For eighty-eight years the Christians held Jerusalem. Then the Moslems recaptured it.

In 1190 a third great crusade was begun, the prime mover and leader being King Richard I of England, surnamed Coeur de Lion (Lion Heart). Again the leaders quarreled among themselves and swerved from the true purpose of their mission. They won a few barren victories, but failed wholly to win Jerusalem.

Crusade followed crusade, none achieving true success. At length the belief spread that the expeditions failed because of the sins and worldliness of the men who embarked upon them. Churchmen declared that the Holy Land could be snatched from the infidel by none but innocent hands. Innocence then, as now, was not a common commodity among men of war, so it was decided to raise an army of little children and send them against the Moslems. The new venture was known as the Children's crusade. It was the saddest, most pitiful tragedy in all history.

Fifty thousand children, some of them mere babies, set out for Palestine in 1212. They went, assured by their parents and by the priests, that theirs was the solemn privilege of restoring Palestine to Christianity. They set forth with high hopes. But they starved, fell ill, were lost in strange lands, died or were sold as slaves.

The crusades were the most glorious, sublime failures in the annals of the world. They constituted a mistake that can never wholly be condemned. They accomplished nothing permanent, yet they did much to Christianize, unite and teach the brotherhood of man to Europe's warring nations.

They remain forever a monument of the life-sacrifices—magnificent, if futile—that men have made and ever will make, for their faith

TOPCOATS FOR SCHOOLGIRLS; SCHOOL FROCKS OF JERSEY

IN THE realm of junior fashions, coats tell a very different story from frocks for the coming months. In accordance with latest dictates the wraps young girls wear are quite conservative and sedate in appearance, while dresses are quite fussed up with all sorts of crafty handwork and gay trimmings.

If the little girl in the picture would let us catch a glimpse of the frock she is wearing, it would, very likely, be much be-trimmed and elaborated with cunning detail, perhaps have a clever narrow belt with a cunning buckle 'n' everything—but mark the simplicity and styling of the coat. Of the superior quality kind is this coat. The material is of the best, being a handsome bolivia cloth. It may be navy, wine, French blue, brown or jungle green, for each is fashionable for fall and winter. One outstanding feature is the flare hemline, achieved by godets inset in a tailored way. Other interesting style highlights are its fur collar, broad turnback cuffs and single button fastening.

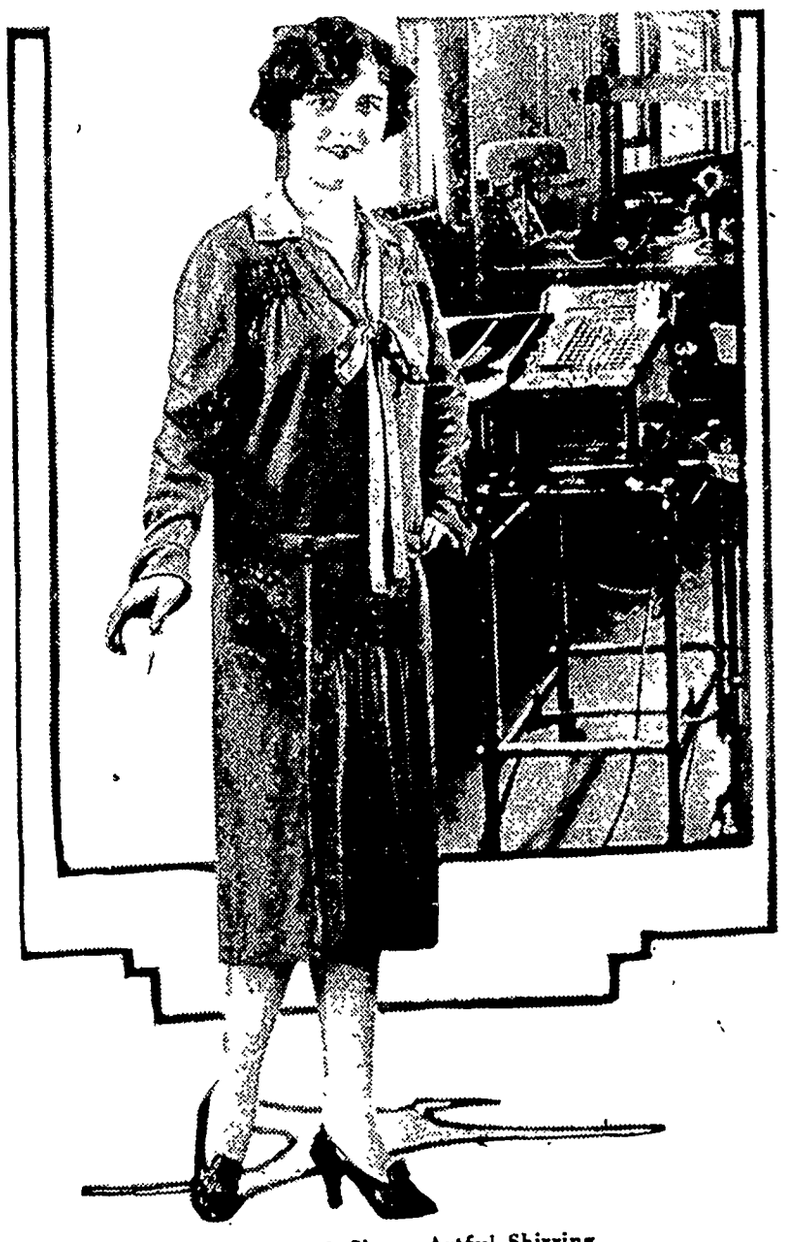
It is a noteworthy fact that the new cloakings are unusually good-looking and of finest texture. Favored weaves stress, first and foremost, chinchilla cloth, emphasizing cinnamon color, French blue, navy, various reds and many shades of green, notably jungle green. There are also included tweeds of every coloring.

Very interesting linings of suede-finished fabrics complement coats of chinchilla. Thus warmth and attractiveness is combined in the school-girl's coat. One does not have to draw on imagination to sense the charm of a navy blue chinchilla lined with red.

Splashes of color will brighten school room and campus throughout the coming months, also the high-practical worsted frocks are reds of every degree, especially chanel red and the deep wine tones. Equally fascinating are the new greens, placing emphasis on jungle green, and as to blues, navy competes with truly lovely French blues, also royal. Cinnamon color jersey is as smart as smart can be, but no more so than are the handsome nasturtium colors which are now so much in evidence. Which all goes to prove that there will be no lack of color when it comes to dresses planned for practical every-day wear.

One of the endearing qualities of wool jersey is that in its suppleness it yields most gracefully to any handling. Just now everything that can be is being shirred. As to wool jersey it puts forth its best appearance under this treatment. For proof of its eminently satisfactory adaptability to the shirring process, study this picture of a typical autumn 1926 school-girl frock. See how the necessary skirt fullness is massed so cleverly to the front by means of much shirring. Then, too, see the shirred effect across the front shoulder seams. This model is developed in wine color with a beige crepe collar and tie.



School Frock Shows Artful Shirring.

MONEY IN HOGS

The producer of pork at the present time is, and has, the past year or more enjoyed the most profitable market conditions in history. With the great range between Cost Production, and Selling Price, the farmer has for at least one time reaped a well earned PROFIT on PRODUCTION.

Looking into the future, none of us can accurately prophesy; but as we consider the small stocks of pork and lard on hand, the shortage of breeding stock, the terrible ravages of hog diseases, we can well expect another year or more of "HOG PROSPERITY."

IMMUNITY—All hogs have been vacinated against hog cholera. Buy your hogs from a healthy herd.

SEPTEMBER WAS RECORD MONTH FOR RAIN FALL

Weather Bureau Says We Can Look For Cold Winter

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 7.—Unprecedented rains in September that will total more than nine inches, have caused some expression of fear that the coming winter will be severe or that some other dire disaster may be pending.

The Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture has subjected the climatic records of the last 54 years to careful statistical analysis and finds no close relationship between wet Septembers and extreme conditions following for several months.

However, from a study of cycles of wintr temperatures, it seems fairly probable that the coming winter will be a little colder than last winter and colder than the long period average

LAY AWAY GRAPE VINES NOW

Tender Varieties Especially Should Be Covered With Dirt

With the grape crop picked and disposed of, Iowa vineyard keepers are now turning their thoughts to next fall's yield and the methods they should adopt to guarantee a high quantity production

The first step taken by good grape growers is to protect the vines against the rigors of winter The standard varieties, Iowa, Moore's Early, Worden and Concord, will survive four out of five winters in first class shape, but the grape grower who wants to be sure of his next season's crop always lowers the vines from the trellises and covers them with from one to three inches of dirt. Such practice is particularly good for vineyard owners in the northern tier of counties

Vineyards containing the more tender varieties, Agawan, Green Mountain Deleware, Brigton and Moore's Early, should always be covered

About half of the wood which s trimmed off in the ordinary pruning operations should be removed before the vines are covered The remainder can be pruned in the spring when the plants are lifted from their winter home Trimming off but half of the old wood in the fall guards against ruining the vine thru breakage while the amount of wood removed in the spring is governed entirely by the condition of the plant

C. V. Holsinger, of the Horticultural Extension Department of Iowa State College, advises against the use of straw in covering the vines He recommends instead a dirt blanket Mice and other rodents find it all too easy to build runways in the straw and gnaw at the shoots.

Quick Work

Eph Jones was testifying in a murder trial.

Lawyer: "You say Mr Anderson walked into the barber shop and, without a word, shot Mr. Rathburg?

Eph: "Yas, suh. Bang, bang! Jest lak dat."

Lawyer: "Eph, where were you when the first shot was fired?"

Eph "Shining Marse Rathburg's shoes."

Lawyer: "And when the second shot was fired?"

Eph: "Ovah cross the railroad undah a pile o' cross ties."

OPEN SEASON ON PHEASANTS OCT. 14

CAN SHOOT MALE PHEASANTS IN FIFTEEN COUNTIES

Season Opens For Three Days In Northern Iowa—Oct. 14-15-16

An open season on Mongolian, ring-neck, English or Chinese male pheasants has been declared by W. E Albert, State Game Warden, in Hancock and fourteen other counties in this part of the state Winnebago, Worth, Mitchell, Howard, Floyd, Chicasaw, Wright, Franklin, Butler, Bremer, Hamilton, Hardin, Grundy, and Black Hawk

The open season is for three days, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, October 14, 15 and 16, and provides that male birds only may be killed, and not to exceed three a day. The open season begins one-half hour before sunrise, October 14, and closes at sunet, October 16th Hunting or hooting these birds is prohibited between sunset and thirty minutes before sunrise of the following morning during the season

We want to caution our readers about hunting on public highways This is strictly forbidden by law at any time It is unlawful to carry a loaded or assembled gun in a car or on the highway at any time The law clearly states that a gun must be unloaded, and either knocked-down or cased when transported on a public highway.

Remember farmers' fields are private property and permision must be obtained of the farmer before you can hunt on his property It s not necessary for a farmer to post no hunting signs to ward off tress-passers

Very few farmers will turn down hunters they know, if first the hunter will ask permission of the farmer to hunt on his land

RAIN SPOILED BIG LEGION DAY HERE

GOOD CROWD DESPITE RAIN ON LEGION DAY

A fairly large crowd took in the doings in Klemme Legion Day, last Thursday, despite the rainy, cold weather and the celebration was put on as per schedule.

Klemme was unfortunate in having to contend with about a week's bad weather and rain before the day set and many concessions which had intended to arrive cancelled their dates on acount of the continued bad weather.

The street sports and contests proved popular and each race and contest had plenty of aspirants for first and second places.

The ball game was played on a wet, slippery field for the greater part of the game and a rather high wind was blowing, maikng playing difficult, but despite this handicap Klemme and Corwith put up a fine exhibition, ending in a 4 to 5 score in favor of the visitors.

The Legion-Auxiliary dance in the evening was a big drawing card and the dance floor was over crowded

The Klemme band furnished the music through-out the day and for the evening concert quite a number of players from the Meservey band came over and assisted the local band.

PLANT BULB FLOWERS NOW

This Is Also Good Time To Move Hardy Perennials

It's time to think of next year's flower garden, for there are two types of flowers which should be planted this fall; bulbs and hardy perennials.

The bulbs which should be planted now are tulips, narcissus, hpacinths, snowdrops and crocus. Narcissus bulbs will be hard to find this fall as the embargo on them by the Federal Horticulture Board is beginning to be felt. American growers have not had time to develop any for commercial sale.

In the hardy perennial group the outstanding families which can be safely transplanted in the fall are peonies, iris, phlox, columbine, gaillardia, coreopsis, pyrethus, dephinium and most any herbaceous plant with a fibrous root system.

Small plants can be moved bodily and the larger groups can be divided with a sharp spade or a large knife

It is a good plan, says Prof. E. C Volz of the floricultural department at Iowa State College, to transplant hardy perennials after they have been in one location a number of years Thus any faults in arrangement can be corrected

The Philadelphia of Our Ancestors

Here is shown a section of "High Street," a reproduction of Philadelphia's famous Market street in the days of 1776. It is one of the outstanding features of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition now being held in Philadelphia to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Every building has been built to actual size and in actual architectural detail. The furnishings of each building are exact reproductions of those used in the Revolutionary days. Many of the pieces on display are the originals and today are worth thousands of dollars because of their historic value. The Exposition continues until December 1.

IDLE HOUR THEATRE PROGRAM FOR THIS WEEK

Shows Nights Are Every Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday And Saturday

Friday and Saturday nights this week Tom Tyler, his horse, his dog and his pal in "The Cowboy Musketeer." The four musketeers of fun and gallantry in a show that's better than a rodeo and tingling with romance and action.

"Smouldering Fire" is the title of the comedy.

Next Tuesday and Wednesday another Maurice (Lefty) Flyn picture. This time he stars in "Heads Up!" A zooming thrill and fun show for the entire family. Imagine Lefty Flyn plunging headlong into one of those goofy South American revolutions We want you to see this picture.

VERNER SCHLAWIN AND MABEL ROSENDAHL MARRIED

We are informed that Mr. Verner Schlawin and Miss Mabel Rosendahl were married a couple of weeks ago at the Little Brown Church at Nashua, Iowa.

They stole a march on their many friends and have been successful in keeping it a secret from the Times reporters. We have not been able to get in touch with Verner or we would get the facts and a smoke at the same time. However, we forgive them for "putting it over" on the Times.

Both are mighty fine young people and have spent their enitre lives in this community and come from the very bst of familis. They have a host of young friends who join with the times in wishing them the best in life and a lot of happiness.

We presume they will settle on a farm as the groom is interested in that line of business.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

After a very profitable conference session we resume the work of the new conference year, hoping that this year may be even more profitable than the three preceding years. We trust that this year may widen the vision of every one in the interest of God's kingdom but especially deepen the spiritual life of all.

All services are regular next Sunday. The evening service however will bear this feature that the high lights of our annual conference will be reported. Things of peculiar interest to everyone will be related.

We will observe the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in the Liberty church on the coming Sunday. This is a splendid way to begin the new year and all should be present.

Prayer meeting will be held on Thursday evening as usual.

EXCESSIVE MOISTURE MAKS SEED CORN PROBLEM

A large amount of seed corn was collected in Iowa before the recent frosts but careful attention will need to be paid to drying and storing the supply on acoun of excessive moisture. If the corn is not properly dried and stored, it will be subject to injury by subsequent freezes, according to information given out by the Iowa Department of Agriculture.

People who were unable to collect an abundant supply of seed before the recent frosts, should collect seed by selecting ears that are well matured, some of which may have stood the frost without serious injury to germination power. This corn should be kept separate from the corn that was collected earlier, as there is a possibility that some of it has been injured by he freezing weather.

Pennsylvania is organizing a strong movement to enforce her laws against overloaded trucks which need lessly wear out state highways.

SIX WEEKS PERIOD ENDS AT SCHOOL

PARENTS SHOULD STUDY THE REPORT CARDS

System Of Grading Explained; Card Shows Progress Of Pupil

Six weeks tests are the order on Thursday and Friday of this week as reports should go to parents as to the progress their children are making.

The same system of grading will be used as was used last year. A will mean superior work; B above average work; C average; D below average; E unsatisfactory work or a condition; and F, unconditional failure.

We hope parents will give the report cards more than a passing glance and if their children are making good commend them and if not inquire into the reasons for the low marks on the cards We shall be very willing to confer with any of the parents at any time, preferably before or after school hours, and help discover where the difficulty lies. We desire that every pupil make good and want to do all we can to make this possible.

On the grade report cards teachers may heok some of the reasons why pupils are not doing better This will be done in the interest of the pupil and for no other reason and if parents will take note some improvement may be expected.

There seems to be a fine school spirit shown in general so far, most of our children behave well, are obedient, and courteous, and apparently interested in making their grades and carrying on to the advantage of others. This makes the school work a pleasure to the faculty and a school parents can take pride in.

State Laws Forbid Use Of Tobacco By Students In Public Schols

The state laws of Iowa provide pretty severe penalties for the use of tobacco by school children. We are very glad to report fewer of our boys are indulging here than other places we have been, but evidences of the growing habit are not lacking in Klemme We wish some of our parents might, in the interest of their children's physical welfare and satisfactory school progress, give this matter careful attention. With no exception all of the sudies made o reveal the effects of the use of tobacco on growing boys show it is injurious to both health and mental prgress. The people of Klemme are interested in the success of our school athletics. We had the best of evidence of this fact. They can help toward success in this school activity if they unite in discouraging our boys, on whom success depends, against the use of tobacco The world's greatest athletes forgeo the pleasure of using tobacco. The best basket ball teams of our state are not made up of members who smoke, very much at least, during the basket ball season. Newton's team is made up of boys, we understand, who do not have the habit. They won the state tournament last year. We have no conention with men who use tobacco but wish none of our boys wuld form the habit until their grwth has been made.

Base Bal Game At Corwith Friday Of This Week

Our boys got o Corwith Friday evening of this week to avenge the defeat suffered at the hands of that schol over a week ago. We hope a big delegation can go and boost for our players.

P. T. A. Meeting Held Tuesday Evening

Our P. T. A. gave a good program last Tuesday evening but it was not well advertised and too few were in attendance. We hope to make the Association worthwhile and hope every parent in our community will be ready to take out a membership and help all they can. Mr Wellemeyer and Miss Stoner contributed discussions that were worthwhile last Tuesday evening, while Mr. Gary with his orchestra and Miss Kidder who sang, helped in the entertainment. We appreciate the willingness of all of these to help out when given such short notice.

The Chicago Fire

FIFTY-FIVE years ago this month occurred a disaster which takes rank as one of the leading events in American history. For October 9 is the anniversary of the great Chicago fire, and although this country has known many catastrophes since 1871, it holds a unique place in the minds of most Americans. Just why this should be is not easy to determine. One reason may be because it was not only the first great catastrophe in our history to send its thrill of horror and sympathy for its victims all over the nation, but it was the most overwhelming calamity that had ever visited any community.

Perhaps the better reason is that its aftermath was what we like to think is so typically American. Here was a city that by persistent energy, daring enterprise and far-reaching plans had been built up to a high position with unlimited possibilities for the future. In one night all the effort of 44 years was swept away. A hundred thousand people were homeless and out of employment, 20,000 buildings had been destroyed and property worth nearly two hundred millions of dollars had vanished. In the face of all this it would seem that human nature would give way to despair.

But the hardy pioneer stock of Chicago's citizenry was not the kind that was easily daunted. For them there was no sitting down among the desolation of their city and giving themselves up to mourning over their shattered hopes. The moment the telegraph wires had been repaired, her bankers, with nothing but the future greatness of their city to offer as security, were borrowing millions from eastern capitalists and her merchants were ordering new stocks of goods. The case of one merchant was typical. Before the smoldering ruins of his store had cooled, he put up a sign on the site which read: "All gone but wife, children and energy!"

Out of her travail Chicago with her motto of "I will!" arose to begin building again and within three years there stood a new city beside the lake, new in brick and stone and new in spirit. Within twenty years congress had chosen Chicago as the site for the world's fair to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America and the World's Columbian exposition of 1893 set a new mark in such celebrations. Fifty-five years later finds Chicago citizens planning an even greater exposition for 1931, one which will celebrate her centennial and will show to the world that in a hundred years she has arisen to a position which challenges the achievements of any city, no matter how many hundreds of years of history it has behind it.

To appreciate how great was the disaster that overtook this city on October 9, 1871, it is necessary to review her brief history before the blow fell. The first permanent inhabitant on the site of Chicago was Jean Baptiste Point au Sable, a West Indian negro, who built a rude cabin at the mouth of the Chicago river in 1796. A Frenchman "jumped" his claim and later sold it to John Kinzie, who is often called "the father of Chicago." In 1803 the War department built a fort on the banks of the river—the first Fort Dearborn whose history was to end so tragically in the massacre of 1812. A second Fort Dearborn was built in 1816 and occupied for 30 years. But even the protection it afforded failed to attract settlers and in 1827 Chicago could claim only three families. First platted and named in connection with the survey for a canal route in 1830, the town covered only some three-eights of a square mile and when it was incorporated in 1837 its population was only 4,100, although there had been a boom after the Black Hawk war.

The panic of 1837 caused a period of stagnation and all that kept Chicago alive was the canal project and the indomitable grit of men who foresaw a great future for the city. A steady growth began after 1842, with a temporary setback by the panic of 1857, and continued through the Civil war. By this time the entrance of railroads, the development of manufactures and its strategic location as a trading center had caused Chicago to forge ahead until it was becoming truly a "wonder city." By 1871 it had a population of 350,000—from 4,000 to 350,000 in 34 years!

In its appearance the Chicago of 1871 was said to have resembled somewhat the great city of Paris. Mansard roofs, imported from Parisian architecture, were much in evidence, as was also the light-colored building stone which had the appearance of the famous Paris marble. It had many beautiful homes and gardens and an elaborate park system, so that it was often referred to as the "Garden City."

Into the midst of all this peace and prosperity came the fire dragon one Sunday evening. As churchgoers were returning to their homes, they were startled to hear the alarm of fire from the courthouse bell. It was the second alarm that had been sounded within 24 hours, for the night before the city firemen had battled a stubborn blaze all night long before they had succeeded in subduing it.

Cackling geese once saved Rome and a kicking cow destroyed Chicago. The fire of October 8 originated in the barn of Mrs. Patrick O'Leary, an Irishwoman living at 137 De Koven street, who kept a cow and sold milk to her neighbors. Tradition has always had it that Mrs. O'Leary was milking her cow that fateful night, but recent researches into the history of the event shows that it was one of the neighbors, and not Mrs. O'Leary, who was milking the cow at the unseemly hour of 9.30 p. m. Perhaps if Mrs. O'Leary had been doing it, the history of Chicago would have been different.

However that may be, the fact remains that the cow kicked over the lantern, the barn was ignited and the great Chicago fire had begun. It made strong headway despite the efforts of the firemen, wearied to exhaustion by their experience of the night before, and was soon out of all control. The flames swept east toward the river and there it paused, as though selecting its point of attack. On the east side of the river, between Adams and Monroe streets, stood the South Side Gas works. A blazing plank was blown across the river and lighted on these buildings. A moment later there was a terrific explosion and the South side was in darkness, save for the glare of the flames.

Blown by a terrific gale the fire had enjoyed a devastating sweep of four miles through a line of wooden buildings which were dry as the proverbial tinder, for there had been no rain for weeks. The fire department, driven back steadily by the onrushing flames, had hoped that the barrier of the river would check the flames. But when the fire reached this barrier about midnight and leaped across, they all but abandoned hope. Buildings of stone, brick and iron in what is now the loop district, which were supposed to be fireproof, crumbled and melted before the terrific heat.

Apparently aiming at the courthouse, the fire now selected as its avenue of approach La Salle street, the financial center of the city, and steadily ate its way along Madison and Monroe streets. Only one structure, the Nixon building, proved to be really fireproof. As for the others, the limestone and even harder stone melted before the terrific heat and ran down like lava from a volcano. The cupola of the courthouse was framework and burst in flames long before the remainder of the structure succumbed. Long after two o'clock in the morning, when the framework burned, the bell, operated by a mechanical device, continued to toll its warning to the citizens, but it was sounding the knell of a doomed city.

On the North side stood the Chicago water works containing the powerful engines which pumped the lake water for distribution through the city. While the courthouse was burning a brand from it went hurtling through the air and lighted upon a wooden outbuilding of a brewery. From this the fire spread to the tower of the waterworks and soon the entire mechanism was disabled and the water supply cut off. With it went the last hope for checking the flames—if indeed there still was any hope.

As the fire swept on toward the lake Gen. Phil Sheridan, comanding officer of the department of the lakes, whose headquarters were in Chicago and who had taken charge of the situation, tried to check the spread of the fire by blowing up buildings along Wabash and Michigan avenues. A few structures were saved in this manner, but against the gale that was blowing, but little could be accomplished. So from early in the evening of October 8 until late at night on October 8 the conflagration raged, a vast ocean of flame, sweeping over the city in mile-long billows and breakers.

Before it fled a horde of humanity in a frenzied search for safety along the lake front. But the refugees soon found that standing in the water was unsafe and they sought to escape by a mad rush to the south. The horrors of the scene, as well as some of the ludicrous phases of it, are described by an eyewitness as follows:

The scene was indescribable The great, dazzling light, the flash and roar of the conflagration, and the desperate flight of the crowd . . . They stood transfixed, with a mingled feeling of horror and admiration, and while they often exclaimed at the beauty of the scene, they all devoutly prayed that they might never see such another

To the roar which the simple process of combustion always makes, magnified here to so grand an extent, was added the crash of falling buildings and the constant explosion of stores of oil The noise of the crowd was nothing compared to this chaos of sound. . . .

I saw men, women and children, in every variety of dress, with a motley collection of effects which they sought to save. Some had silver, some valuable papers, some pictures, carpets, beds, etc. One little child had her doll tenderly pressed in her arms. An old Irish woman was cherishing a grunting pig There was a singular mixture of the awful, the ludicrous and the pathetic

A torrent of humanity was pouring over the bridge . . . drays, express wagons, trucks, and conveyances of every conceivable species and size crowded across in indiscriminate haste Collisions happened almost every moment. The same long line of men dragging trunks was here, many of them tugging over the ground with loads which a horse would strain at. Women were there staggering under weights upon their backs. Now and then a stray schooner came up and the bridge must be opened. Then arose a howl of indignation along the line audible above the tumult.

By Monday determined efforts already were being made to bring order out of chaos. Two thousand extra police were sworn in to stop the plundering, state troops were called out and Sheridan's regulars took charge. Relief bureaus were organized by the city officials. Immediately other cities came to the rescue of their stricken sister. Carloads of food and clothing were sent by St. Louis and Cincinnati, Chicago's trade rivals. To counterbalance the scenes of horror and baser human passions which had swept the city during the fire was the wave of sympathy and help which came from all parts of the country. It was in the form of money and provisions and offers of all kinds to help.

For several weeks the problem of living among the ruins was a real one for even people of wealth. The thousands of homeless people found shelter in hastily constructed shanties and leantos and did their cooking in the open. Gradually, however, conditions were bettered and Chicago emerged from the devastation and began the task of rebuilding. The debris from the fire was dumped into the lagoon that formerly separated the tracks of the Illinois Central railroad from the lake front, filling it up and paving the way for later improvements. Within a year the new Chicago had sprung, phenix-like, from the flames and exactly two years later the great glass-domed building of the Interstate Industrial exposition, erected where the Art institute now stands, marked the rehabilitation of a great city after one of the greatest disasters in history.

A Word With the Old Folks

Elderly People Are Learning Importance of Good Elimination.

IN the later years of life the bowel is apt to be a slowing up of the bodily functions. Good elimination, however, is just as essential to the old as to the young. Many old folks have learned the value of Doan's Pills when a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys is required. Scanty or burning passages of kidney secretions are often signs of improper kidney function. In almost every community are scores of users and endorsers who will claim the merit of Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

"Then I came seventeen, and was going to finish next year—music and needlework and Latin and French and riding and dancing and deportment, and nothing whatever about life I hadn't even read a novel, except surreptitiously. I wasn't a little girl any longer, of course. I had become a woman. That's the period, I suppose, when every girl ought to be locked up for a while. Probably the French are right. And of course with me—the one thing I never had was love.

"He was the first—Martin. He came to the seminary about a piece of land they were buying for a new building. You have seen him. He is bonny yet. But that was five years ago. I never thought of my ideal lover of nights after that—only him. Miss Gorham had to go to look for some papers. I was left alone with him for half an hour Before she came back it had gone pretty far. I had promised to write to him. He had arranged to put letters to me under a boundary stone on the new property. I wrote to him every night. And I saw him three times. A girl in love can manage that, you know. No one ever suspected me. I always seemed, I suppose, like an obedient little thing. His letters were wonderful. That isn't just glamour. I read them over again just before I came West. He truly loved me. There were other considerations. I'll tell about them later. But he loved me.

"And we eloped. I proposed it. I just walked away from the school one night after supper and met him. We took the train to Newport together and were married. He had arranged everything It had to be arranged. I lied, of course, about my age."

"It all got into the papers. Probably the marriage could have been annulled. But father did nothing about that. I suppose my stepmother was only too glad to get rid of me for good. I wrote to father. He answered with a dreadful letter. Martin Deane tried to see him, and couldn't. Martin was piqued. You see, father was rich. And—well, I have said that Martin's motives were all mixed up. But he loved me. He truly did. You see, if he hadn't loved me, he wouldn't have married me. I was so young and inexperienced he could have fooled me, easily enough. . . .

"And I loved him, but only in one way. I didn't know that then. I do remember watching him one day from the front window as he walked down the street, and feeling that there was something lacking—but just for a minute. I didn't know for a long time—I was so young and inexperienced—about the condition of his business. He was in real estate, as I've told you. We lived very prettily. I wasn't much taken with the business friends he brought home to supper; as I look back now, I think of them all as a little unclean spiritually. Nor their wives. I was hungry for my own kind of women. . . .

"He used to talk to me, of course, about his business. But I was like a nun, for all of the world. A more experienced woman would have understood much sooner—that it was all wrong—every bit of it wrong. Then he was arrested. It was all a very bad piece of business. The papers were full of it. We gave up our house. We moved into a furnished room. He was tried finally—and acquitted. Mostly, he'd been just within the law. But he hadn't done right, nevertheless; and everyone knew it. He took it hard, of course. He was—rebellious. We quarreled, too. But I made him understand that it was wrong.

"Troubles came all together. My father died. I went to him at the last—my stepmother could not prevent. I won't—I can't now—tell you all about that. But I knew that he loved me; and that if I hadn't made a wrong-headed little fool of myself by eloping with Martin Deane—we'd have found a way in spite of my stepmother Then I was very ill—typhoid fever I nearly died. Martin stayed by My father had made a codicil to his will a month before his death. He left me ten thousand dollars. Some of that was needed to pay our debts. . . .

"When I was better Martin and I talked it all over. There was no use of staying in Providence. He wanted to go West and start again—honestly. I gave him half of my money. He was to get settled and send for me. I wasn't in condition to travel. I got my strength back very slowly. I had much time to myself—I was very, very lonely. And I suppose when you're in such a state as I was then, and have been so near death—you see things more clearly. I had been greatly to blame. I ran away with him in the beginning as much to spite my stepmother as for any other reason. I didn't really love him as I might have loved—a good man. But I loved him enough. He'd never once been harsh or cruel to me. That's a great deal, isn't it? And I could show him the right way. I'd prove that. He had never grown up, on one side of him, and never would. He didn't see right and wrong clearly—just as a little boy doesn't. I won't pretend to you, Robert, that I didn't have moments when I was tempted to leave him. But I knew that if I did I could never be happy. I should always be thinking of him out in the world, with no one to take care of—of his soul. That's what it comes down to, Robert. Saving his soul. At bottom, you know, I'm religious. . . ."

She paused; her eyes, great and tender with shadow of old suffering, clutched mine and seemed to plead for approval. I could not withhold it.

"I see you believe all this, Constance," I said.

"It was my job. My job for life. He went to Wyoming—last summer. He wrote now and then. I wrote constantly. He was doing well, he said. Business. He wasn't very definite about the business. In the winter he moved to Denver I addressed him through the general delivery I wrote that I was coming to him in the spring. He advised me to wait awhile Said he wasn't quite settled But I knew the longer I waited the harder it would be. In the spring I started. I wrote to say when I would arrive. He wasn't waiting at the station. . . .

"One of Martin's notes to me was on the letterhead of the Canyon house in Denver. It's a hotel down by the railroad station. Not a very pleasant place. He had gone to Cottonwood a month before. I asked the clerk what Maxwell had done for a living in Denver. He evaded that.

"So I started for Cottonwood. You know the rest—"

Constance dropped her eyes to her clasped hands.

"I couldn't have said all this to you if I hadn't been through—what happened today. Even if things had gone—happily—if that had been possible—I would have been a long time bringing myself—to say this But when I looked at you first—I knew I knew you were everything I had ever loved in Martin Deane and, oh, all I was hungry for! To see you every day—and know you loved me—and to go to bed early—to think of you. But it was wrong. It was where I very nearly failed—"

I burst out here:

"You mustn't say that! I went out to capture your husband last night because I was jealous—"

"Poor Robert! I had given you much provocation'" was all she said to that. "And then—I found him. I was riding up the trail to Forty-Rod. He came out of the pines. He was riding a black horse. Of course he was astonished. And yet he was glad. He—I felt he still loved me, in spite of the way he'd kept me in the East. That was the main thing, Robert. Not that I wanted him to love me—with you in the world. But so long as he loved me—there was a chance. He was mining above Forty-Rod. They expected to strike it soon, he said. Three weeks would tell the story. Then he'd come down to me. And we'd go way together. If I wanted to go away. And I did. It hurt, but I did. I was afraid—with you in Cottonwood, Robert. I asked to go up and stay with him at Forty-Rod. But he wouldn't have that. He said the place was too rough. He asked me not to tell anyone, for the present, that I had a husband here. Just let things stand as they were—for three weeks. I said: 'Martin, you've gone wrong again!' He laughed and said: 'Not very.'

"And I came home, and did let things stand as they were. It was only three weeks, after all. And I would see you—and then no more.

"Last night he came to the tent. Came, he said, just because he wanted to see me. He had been drinking. That isn't one of his vices, usually. He said that things were going wonderfully. He'd be ready in two or three days to take me away. I made him promise to go straight back to the claim. I wanted to go with him to his horse. He objected to that. But he promised—"

"And broke his promise!" I interpolated hotly.

"I think he intended to, nevertheless. Mrs. Barnaby told me this morning—about the robbery and the vigilance committee. She's the only person I've ever taken into my confidence, and she not very far. Probably she's guessed some of the rest. I found they'd killed three men at Forty-Rod, and had two in jail—to hang. I went to the jail. Through the side window I saw Martin. I appealed to you. And you saved me. That's all, I think."

Her shoulders, held so proudly erect, drooped now.

"No, it wasn't all," I said. "Haven't you had enough, Constance? You surely don't hope—"

Her eyes lifted somberly to mine as she interrupted:

"I'm not thinking of hope. There is very little hope perhaps—now. All I know is that I am still the one chance he has. And that I still have a hold. I must follow him—try to find him. And when I find him—of course that isn't pleasant to contemplate. My money is nearly gone. I shall be poor. Perhaps—he will go to jail. And I shall be a convict's wife. But, Robert, what would you think of a woman who abandoned her child just because it was idiotic or crippled or vicious? I'd be doing the same thing. More. If I should get a common divorce and marry you, it would be to me as though we had conspired to kill him to get him out of the way."

Her eyes, until now so dry and solemnly thoughtful, welled for an instant with tears. But she checked them as by effort of the will.

"It is your soul I have been loving all this time, Constance," I said, "and I cannot deny your soul. I think you will fail, because I think you are trying something which cannot succeed. And then I will come to you again. For I shall never love anyone else. He may have you, but you are always mine."

"Yes, Robert, always!" she said.

"You must promise me that if the time comes when I may help cleanly—you will let me."

"I promise. What are you going to do, Robert?"

"I shall stay here and face it—if there is anything to face," I said. "I am a rich man, you know, Constance," I added. "I don't mean my mining property—but I never have to think of money. I could go East and put this behind me. But I want to face it. Because I'll be nearer you. And because you—because I can't let you be any stronger than I."

She nodded slowly, solemnly.

"That's good," she said. "Not the part about me—but about you. It is you as I'd like you to be." Then she smiled, almost like her old self in her merry moods. "Can't we forget this morning—for a moment? And oh, Robert, you are so tired! You've had a dreadful, dreadful night and day! You must sleep now."

"Sleep!" I said. "When I have a few hours with you and may not see you for years!" But even as I spoke a rush of inner drowsiness made insincere my words.

Constance looked outside. The tent-flaps gaped wide, making visible this rude apartment to all the world.

"This camp doubtless thinks about as scandalously of you and me as it can," she said. "Look, Robert—I'm going to make you lie down on my bed."

Constance Dropped Her Eyes to Her Clasped Hands.

Had I been myself, I should have protested. As it was, I yielded like a sleepy child. She wet a towel, washed my face. She loosened my collar. Her touch, which normally roused every fiber in me, was now heavenly soothing. She held my shoulders as I stretched out my aching muscles on the white sheet-counterpane; she knelt beside me, holding and patting my hand. Once she looked swiftly out of doors, then bent and kissed my forehead. I raised my other hand to embrace her, but she put it gently back. . . . I was gone. . . .

* * * * * * *

A light shone in my face. I sprang up sitting. Twilight without. Mrs. Barnaby shading an oil lamp with her hand.

"Seven o'clock!" said Mrs. Barnaby. "Your boss has been lookin' over the hull camp for you. Says he's wanted at town meetin' and you've got to get out the paper, though why it should get out—"

"Where's Constance—Mrs. Deane?" I asked.

"Her? Oh, she took the two o'clock stage to Denver. Didn't she tell she was goin' to?"

CHAPTER XIV

My decision to stay at Cottonwood and face it all down proved ridiculously more easy than I thought when I matched nobilities with Constance. Disgrace is a coward; it retreats before a bold front. The indifferent world in the end always takes toward it the attitude that you take yourself. Nor, indeed, did Cottonwood probably think me disgraced. They gossiped, of course; I had for a long time an uncomfortable sense that groups had pointed me out when I passed. But to my face men showed only cordiality—sometimes a trifle overdone, and more galling than public reproach.

Even that had passed. A mining camp runs with bewildering speed its course from birth to senile decay. Twenty years of Europe! In a month Cottonwood lived a cycle of Cathay. Before August blew the petals from the white columbines, decked the forests with their flaunting sisters in red and yellow, we had become a new entity. Events a few weeks before were as ancient history as though they had happened to my grandfather.

Constance wrote from Denver. On the surface this was merely a friendly letter such as any married woman might address to a young man who had rendered her service. Yet the intention shines through the written expression; and as by an arrangement of words too subtle for analysis I knew that Constance Deane had not changed toward me, never would change. She had found Martin Deane; had seen him once. "But he thinks it better, considering his position, that we should not be together for the present—either here or traveling," she wrote.

In all I had six letters from her that autumn—I have them yet. After that she did not refer again even to Martin Deane; only the fourth said:

"If there is any change in my situation I shall let you know at once."

Meantime I had resumed my regular correspondence with mother, much neglected of late. Into it I poured something of the soul and fervor with which I would have liked to infuse my letters to Constance. The shrewd eye of motherhood seemed dimly and uneasily to perceive the meaning behind this change; her commonplaces about Cohasset were sprinkled with hints that I must have had enough of the West. By November, indeed, she advised me openly to come home, at least for the winter. "I want to look you over, Robert!" she wrote. Poor mother—I thought—if she only knew! And I speculated on happiness, as one will in the depths of misery, imagining her in the capacity of mother-in-law.

If I had met Constance in ordinary happy circumstances, wooed her serenely and according to the normal pattern of courting in mother's time and place, I had no doubt but they would have got on wonderfully. They were just like enough, just different enough. The souls of both were built on a solid structure of honor. Both—to use a word much degenerate in meaning since the days of my youth—were ladies. Both had enormous capacities for friendship with women. And the good-humored candor of Constance would be a foil for mother's peppery wit. As it was—well, mother boasted that her set in Cohasset had never known divorce or scandal. If ever life opened again for me I must come to Constance across events beyond comprehension of mother's circle. And still I had faith that Constance would overcome all this—because she was Constance. At the end of these meditations I would pull myself up and realize that I had been dreaming, as a prisoner for life dreams of mountains and seas and green fields.

* * * * * * *

As the camp boomed, so did the Courier. We were publishing six pages on Wednesdays and Sundays now; and our job-printing department, in spite of the increase in power, ran two weeks behind its orders. Just before the big snow Marcus wrote a week's editorials in advance, packed his carpet bag, and took the stage to Denver, leaving me cocked up on the dizzy eminence of the editorial chair.

There followed a period of hard work and trying but interesting responsibility. Marcus intended to be gone only a week; but the big snow came, blocking the passes. It was ten days, in fact, before he appeared at the office without the grace of warning by telegraph, walked in upon me, the icicles hanging from his mustache. With scarcely a word of greeting or of news, he plunged into the business of supervising the night's work. When the printers had an hour's copy ahead he said:

"Get on your coat and come over to Huffaker's—the private room. I've got a heap of things to spill about that Denver business; and I don't want to tell 'em here." We plodded over to Huffaker's, silent perforce in the face of an artic wind. He took off his buffalo coat, warmed his hands at the red-hot stove, before he began abruptly:

"What I want to talk to you about isn't business. It's your girl."

"Is she—Is she well?" I asked.

"Well, and reasonably happy, I guess," replied Marcus "Now you sit down and keep your shirt on. I've got a lot to tell you." He came over from the stove, sat down at the table opposite me, turned on me a look more nearly tender than ever I had seen in his face. But his first words seemed remote from the subject.

"You remember Mike the detective?"

"Yes."

Marcus nodded.

"Well, he's no common detective. Fancy operative, and all that. When Mr. Taylor hired him, he had to sign a year's contract. Everything was rounded up long before anybody expected. And there was Mike, eating his head off. So Mr. Taylor lent me Mike. Little testimonial of esteem for my work in stabilizing finance in this camp.

"I set him to looking up this Martin Deane For satisfaction of my own curiosity. And your peace of mind, boy.

"How Mike went at it, I haven't asked. But he has a special wire running down to every circle of crooks in the West. Since Deane, alias Maxwell, left here, he's been hanging round various camps in range of Denver. He's been telling Mrs. Deane, just as I told you, that he shouldn't go East with her for the present, because it isn't safe for them to be seen together. Hasn't occurred to you, has it, that they might travel separately and just meet somewhere? It has occurred to Mrs. Deane—I guess—but I suspect she's been fooling herself. Anyhow, I was stringing you because I wanted him right there in the West. And he was stringing her because he wasn't alone in his wanderings. He had company. This man's West makes the good better and the bad worse, in my opinion. And does it sudden. Crooks always have queer spots of virtue in them, too. The marrying crook's common. Like any other specimen of that species, he wants what he wants so hard that he doesn't care how he gets it. But he has a whim for sanctifying his intentions on womenfolks with holy matrimony. And, like most men, he's capable of fancying two women at one and the same time. This Martin Deane, for example Mike found 'em last month. He's been working since to identify the signatures. And they're authentic" He spread out two documents on the table.

An order of divorce. Martin Deane of Wyoming from Constance Deane of Rhode Island. Cause, desertion. Dated last February. A marriage certificate. Martin Deane of Wyoming to Lucy Baldwyn of Wyoming. Dated two days later—

"Don't let your emotions get away with you until I have told you the rest," said Marcus. I gripped myself and listened.

"The divorce is right and it isn't right. There's other camps in this West that need a clean-up. That"—he pointed at the date line on the papers—"is one of them No lawyer is needed to see that this divorce won't hold water if the other party wants to fight. He hadn't lived long enough in Wyoming to establish a legal residence. The court—on the Judge Cowan pattern, only worse, I guess—has delicately refrained from inquiring into that. Other party wasn't notified either. If I was a young man with any intention of marrying a lady in that fix, I'd wait until she got divorced proper and legal on her own account. Mrs. Deane says—"

"You've seen her?"

"Yes. Found an afternoon off to call. Me and Mike, and afterward me alone. She's plumb sick and tired of this Martin Deane at last. Wouldn't have the spirit of a squashed tar baby if she wasn't."

I rose.

"I'm going to Denver!" I said.

"All right, give you a vacation if you want it," responded Marcus with a beaming smile. "Only if I were you, on the way to Denver I'd glance for a moment into the ladies' parlor of this hotel. It's fixed with Jim Huffaker that you aren't to be disturbed if you want to loaf and linger there a little while."

I flew down the corridor. Constance rose from the sofa; faced me. But as I sprang toward her, my arms outstretched, she stopped me with an uplifted hand.

"Robert," she said—and her syllables dropped like honey—"I haven't waited for you. I wanted to come to you—because you've been brave and because it happened here—and because you've suffered so much for me—and because I couldn't wait—and now, Robert, my lover—if you want me—come the rest of the way—"

[THE END.]

Proper Ventilation Vital for Kitchen

Ventilating the home is receiving an increasing amount of consideration in connection with renewing the vitiated air in the kitchen, and in some instances, the entire house.

The time has long passed since the popular conception existed that fresh air, particularly night air, was injurious to the human system and that the windows should by all means be hermetically sealed against the infiltration of fresh air. Electricity, available in every wired home, offers a very economical means for operating mechanical ventilators and can be utilized at a surprisingly low cost.

The kitchen, of course, is the room where proper ventilation of air is most essential in order to remove the heavy cooking odors which otherwise permeate the entire home. Not only this, but the grease-laden air flying freely through the house attaches itself to hangings, upholstered furniture, walls, ceilings, etc., and necessitates a very heavy annual cleaning expenditure in order to remove it. Anyone who has entered a home where cauliflower, cabbage and other similar foods are being prepared knows that it is extremely unpleasant to smell the aroma of mingled cooking for a long time after the repast.

Paper Storage

The Technical Association of the Pulp and Paper Industry says that it is its opinion that paper in bulk can be stored any length of time without danger of spontaneous combustion. This would be borne out in the experience of fire insurance companies as well as paper dealers. If, however, the paper is of a kind that has been treated with oil and the storage warehouse were heated, there might be some danger of spontaneous combustion.

A Society Wedding

John, the negro sexton of a smart church in a small town, had a great passion for the Christian Endeavor society and after much study learned the pledge. He was also a preacher, and many dusky lovers were united in happy wedlock by John. Recently he was compelled to appear before the divorce court with a negro couple whom he had some months previously married.

"John," said the judge, "did you marry this couple?"

"Mister Jedge, I did; en' den I didn't. I tole dat nigger dare, efen he wanted me to marry him fer him to bring me $2.50, en' when he cum dare to get married, he didn't hab but six bits, en' you know, jedge, I can't marry no two niggers fer six bits, so I jes' tuk and sed dat Christian Endeavor pludge over 'um en' dat's all de marr'in de's had."

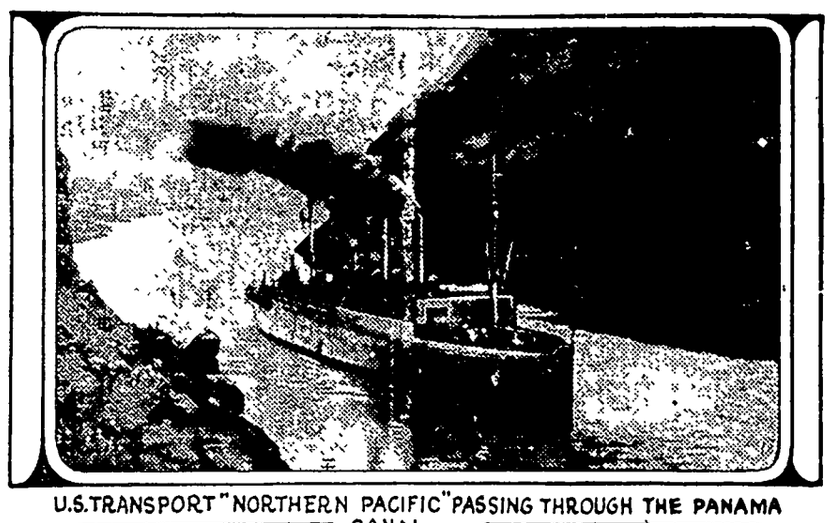
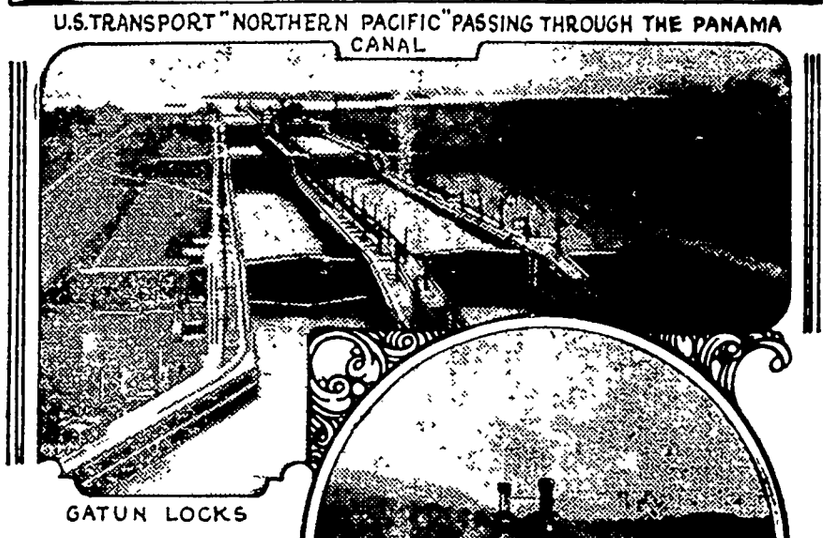
OUR PANAMA CANAL LEADING BRITISH DITCH AT SUEZ IN TRAFFIC TONNAGE



U.S.TRANSPORT "NORTHERN PACIFIC" PASSING THROUGH THE PANAMA CANAL



GATUN LOCKS

U.S.S. PENNSYLVANIA AT CHAGRES RIVER CROSSING

Increase of Freight via Panama Route, Largely Due to Oil Shipments, Indicates Rise of United States to Leadership of World's Commerce.

By JUDSON C. WELLIVER

One of the striking evidences of America's rapid rise toward commercial and industrial leadership of the world, is the Panama Canal, will almost certainly handle more freight in 1926 than will Suez. For several years the two canals have been in a neck and neck competition whose implications are the more interesting because the Panama ditch is owned by the American Government, and that at Suez by the British Government.

Of course both Canals are open to the ships of all nations; and the competition between them is not only between the United States and Britain, but in a larger and even more significant view it is competition between old world and new world.

When the Panama Canal was opened in 1915, Suez was already transiting about 25,000,000 tons of freight annually. Almost nobody believed Panama could ever attract anything approaching such a volume. But during the war fear of German submarines in the Mediterannean caused many vessels to take the Panama route between the far east and European or American ports. This gave Panama its introduction and it has not only held but greatly increased its business since the war. In 1923 Panama transited 5037 vessels, against 4621 for Suez; Panama handled 25,160,000 cargo tons against 22,770,000 for Suez. This was the first year of Panama's lead.

A Close Race

The following year Suez barely exceeded Panama's tonnage; and in 1925 comfortably held its lead. But reports for 1926 to date indicate that Suez is losing, owing to Britain's industrial depression, while Panama is doing better and is pretty certain to resume the lead.

The present Suez Canal has been in operation nearly sixty years, Panama only eleven. Although few people except antiquarians know it, the first canal at Suez was built more than 3,000 years ago. It was in operation as early as B. C. 1380; how long before, is mere conjecture. Before the Christian era began the ditch had been built, destroyed, rebuilt, silted up and built up again, time after time. When Alexander the Great conquered Egypt the Canal was one of the oldest of engineering works.

Between 1904 and 1915 the present Panama Canal was constructed. It cost about $400,000,000, Suez about one-fourth that sum. But Suez is a simple, sea-level ditch across a sandy plain; while Panama is a lock canal, the greater part of its length lying 85 feet above sea level, so that most of the distance from ocean to ocean is through an artificial freshwater lake.

Early Profits Unexpected

When Roosevelt started building at Panama, neither he nor any other prophet of optimism would have dared suggest that within its first decade the Canal would earn a profit. Its chief justification concerned the national defense, and the establishment of competition with the transcontinental railroads.

Although both Canals are open to shipping of all nations, British vessels constitute the majority of those using Suez (55.8 per cent), while American vessels are 54.5 per cent of those using Panama.

For 1924, ships of 21 nations used the Suez route, while 24 nations were represented in the maritime caravan at Panama.

The World War was not the only unexpected factor in bringing Panama so quickly to equality with Suez, nor the most important. The enormous increase in Panama traffic in 1923 was represented almost entirely by petroleum and its products, moving from California to the east coast and Europe. In the year ended June 30, 1924, tolls aggregating $24,290,000 were collected, of which $9,071,000 was from tankers carrying petroleum. An even more striking statement of the matter is that for the same year exactly 50 per cent of all tonnage through the Canal was between the two ocean fronts of the United States; that is, 13,500,000 tons; and of this, considerably over 9,000,000 tons, or more than two-thirds was petroleum. It was of course chiefly from California, en route to eastern refineries. In the succeeding year this petroleum movement fell off heavily; but for 1926 it is again increasing and the increase is likely to continue for many years. But for the petroleum traffic, the Canal would have shown a deficit in every year of its operation.

The enormous petroleum business has been in other ways advantageous to Panama A constantly increasing proportion of maritime shipping nowadays uses oil fuel. Oil-burning ships seek routes on which they can most cheaply buy oil; and because California oil can be put so cheaply into the bunkers of vessels passing through the Panama ditch, there is a substantial inducement to prefer this route. This will increasingly favor Panama and militate against Suez, as the number of oil burners increases. Moreover, Panama's advantage will still further increase as the enormous oil resources of Venezuela, Colombia, and other South American countries are developed

Great Service of Panama

If cheap petroleum has thus served Panama so well, Panama in turn has equally served the American motorist, who consumes most of the world's petroleum products. For Panama has brought the Pacific Coast petroleum to the eastern market at costs which, but for the Canal, would be vastly greater. Thus the Canal has given the United States the cheapest petroleum products in the world, and helped build the automobile industry and our modern highway system.

This mutually helpful relationship between the Canal and the petroleum users is the more impressive when one realizes that it was not even remotely anticipated at the time President Roosevelt started building the Canal. So late, indeed, as 1910, when Admiral Evans wrote his articles about the Canal and decided that it could not be profitable for several decades at least, he based all his calculations on the probable cost of coal for bunkering ships. He did not dream that merchant marines were on the verge of the revolutionary change from coal to oil. So he figured that, as there is practically no bunker coal in the countries bordering on the Pacific, that ocean could not compete, by way of Panama, for a greatly increased share of shipping. The oil development overturned the prophecies of Admiral Evans, and of all others who had foreseen that fuel problems would make Panama unprofitable.

ALONG THE MAIN DRAG

It is reported that the bootleggers are now trying to get ahead of the florists. One bootlegger's sign says "Say it with Hootch—the flowers will come later!"

Dr. Misman recommends the following treatment: "When troubled with headaches try pushing your head through the window—the pane will disappear.

We also have a sure cure for toothache. The formula is not patented and is guarantteed to be better than Indian Snake Oil: "Fill your mouth with vinegar, and sit on the stove until it boils."

Any other favorite "grandma" remedies wil be welcomed to this corner.

One of the boys on the Main Drag ventures to remark that perhaps one reason why glass bottles are becoming so popular as a container is because, like women's clothes, it protects the property without obstructing the view.

A certain Klemme bachelor had been saving his money for years to buy a car and recently stepped out to make his selection. He stopped in at the Garner Auto Co. here and asked Mat Edmundson for prices. Mat asked him what he wanted to put into one and the bachelor replied: Well, she's about five feet tall, blue eyes and bobbed hair."

Our friend, Ed. Jacobs, is a real optimist; he lights a match before asking us for a cigarette.

A stranger came to town the other day and stopped at Kluck's store. He told the boys he represented a society for the suppression of profanity and informed them he wanted to take the profanity out of their lives. "Hey, Buck!" yelled Ballp, "here's a fellow who wants to buy your Ford."

It has been reported to the Main Drag that the preacher at one of the Garner churches said in his sermon last Sunday, "There is a certain man among us today who has been going with another man's wife. Unless he puts $5.00 in the collection box his name will be read from the pulpit." When the box came in there were twenty-nine five dollar bills and a two-dollar bill with a note pinned to it saying, "This is all the cash I have but will send the other three dollars Wednesday"

Owing to the clerks at John's Cash and Carry having such good luck catching flies (but no men) with sticky fly paper, another clerk came into the store the other day and in the excitement over the catch discovered herself going down the street with one of J. N.'s brooms, instead of her umbrella.

Can't help but brag about our fine Creamery and everytime we go down there we fill up on buttermilk and other facts. The other day we were nosing around and discovered that the local anti-ole factory ships as much butter the year 'round as the Crystal Lake and Titonka creameries combined—and the boys at the other two places aren t asleep on the job either!

At this time of the year many people go to the woods to hunt nuts. This is a dangerous ocupation—the squirrels are apt to get some of them—we mean the two-legged nuts.

You don't have to go to the timber to find nuts—there are plenty at home, two or three on the street every day. They are better known as speed nuts.

Harold Leitzinger and family moved into the house vacated by G. P. McCullough, Oct. 1st. Herb Bailey and family have moved into the house vacated by Leitzingers and Mr. and Mrs.——— wil move into the Bailey house. We think we can give the name next week, as they aren't married yet!

Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Missman drove to Belmond Saturday and Byrnes rode his bicycle down. Mrs. Missman and Byrnes visited over the week end. Byrnes just about beat his dad's Buick Six down, just about but not quite, but at any rate the young man steps on a mean pedal, we mean.

True Enough

Drum: "Well, I'm always getting a beating!"

And They'll Sleep Easy

"This rain's a great comfort to the gardeners."

"But it's coming down in sheets."

"No matter, it will certainlp improve the appearance of their beds."

That there is hereby granted to the Koerner Telephone Company, its successors and assigns, the right to erect, construct, maintain, reconstruct, operate and use poles, wires, cables, and whatsoever other materials and fixtures necessary or convenient, upon, over and under the streets, alleys, highways and public places of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the construction, operation, maintainance and use of a Telephone system, both local and long distance, for a term of Twenty Five (25) Years under the provisions hereof.

Section 2. The lines of poles, wires, cables and other materials and appliances as heretofore installed and now used in connection with, and appurtenant to, said telephone system is hereby recognized and appoved, and additions thereto and betterments thereof shall be so placed and maintained as not to unreasonably interfere with public travel; it being understood that the street and alley committee of said Town shall supervise the placing of additional poles, wires and cables upon and under the streets and alleys of said Town, and all thereof shall be subject to statutory regulations now existing or hereafter legally enacted with reference thereto Whenever an adequate deposit of money for the use and benefit of said Koerner Telephone Company shall have been made with the Mayor of said Town of Klemme, and upon twenty-four (24) hours' written notice by the Mayor thereof, the said Koerner Tele phone Company shall remove such of its poles, wires, cables or other appliances as may be necessary for the passage of buildings beingmoved within the said town or for excavations being made under the surface of the streets of said town, at the expense of the party requesting the same, but said telephone company shall not be required to remove poles or wires nor cables unless the route selected by the applicant shall be the most practical and expedient in the judgment of the Mayor of said Town, all interests and rights being duly considered.

Section 3. All ordinances or parts of ordinances of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, in conflict herewith, are, upon the final adoption hereof, repealed.

Section 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Klemme Times and its adoption by the Council of the Town of Klemme and by the qualified electors of the Town of Klemme at a special election of said Town to be held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1926, and after the cost and expense of such submission and special election shall have been paid by the said Koerner Telephone Company.

Passed and adopted by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme and approved this 6th day of September, A. D., 1926.

F GRUETZMACHER,
Mayor.

FAMOUS "INDIAN DOCTOR" MAY HAVE BEAT IT TO PARTS UNKNOWN

Klemme Office Has Been Closed And M. R. Miller Has Gone To Des Moines

M. R. Miller and family left Wednesday for Des Moines where Mr. Miller stated he would find work.

Mr. Miller has been in the employ of L. D McMichael, "Indian Doctor" and has lived in Klemme since last spring. He stated business had not been good here since he came to town and gave this as one of the reasons for moving to Des Moines.

Mrs. Miller stated to a Times Reporter that neither she nor Mr. Miller knew of the whereabouts of L D. McMichael, and she ventured to say that perhaps he had beat it for parts unknown and the last they heard or saw of him he was on his way to Omaha.

Whether of not McMichael will ever show up in Klemme is a matter of speculation.

SHORTAGE OF HOG CHOLERA SERUM

Des Moines, Oct. 7—Reports that have come to the Iowa Department of Agriculture show that there is not only more hog cholera in the state this fall than for several years, but there is also a shortage of serum.

In ordert to meet this situation, the department recommended that the federal authorities take such steps as were available to release hog cholera serum. A reply from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, states that serum will be released one week earlier than usual, while the present emergency exists.

SLASHING A GENEROUS SLICE OFF THREE COVETED TRANSCONTINENTAL MOTOR RECORDS IN ONE SWEEPING DRIVE CANNON BALL BAKER OF INDIANAPOLIS HAS ARRIVED IN LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA DRIVING HIS OWN PRIVATELY OWNED FORD ROADSTER SEALED IN HIGH GEAR JUST FIVE DAYS TWO HOURS THIRTEEN MINUTES AFTER LEAVING NEW YORK CITY. HE WAS OFFICIALLY TIMED AT START AND FINISH BY WESTERN UNION OFFICIALS. THIS CUTS ELEVEN DAYS 5 3-4 HOURS OFF THE OLD HIGH GEAR TRANSCONTINENTAL RECORD, WHICH HAD BEEN MADE BY A SIX CYLINDER CAR SELLING FOR THREE TIMES AS MUCH AS THE FORD. IT IS ALSO TWO DAYS 13 3-4 HOURS FASTER THAN THE FASTEST TIME EVER MADE BEFORE BY ANY KIND OF CAR WITH ONE MAN DRIVING THE ENTIRE DISTANCE FROM COAST TO COAST WITHOUT RLAY OF DRIVERS. THE PREVIOUS ONE MAN SPEED RECORD OVER THIS COURSE HAD BEEN MADE BY BAKER IN 1920 DRIVING A TWO THOUSAND DOLLAR CAR, AND HAD NEVER BEEN EQUALLED UNTIL HE MADE THIS FLIGHT AT THE WHEEL OF A LOWLY FLIVVER. BAKER'S NEW RECORD WITH THE FORD IS ALSO SIXTEEN HOURS FASTER THAN THE BEST TIME EVER MADE ACROSS THE CONTINENT ON A MOTORCYCLE. IN OTHER WORDS THIS WAS THE FASTEST TRIP FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN THAT HAS EVER BEEN MADE BY ANY SORT OF A ROAD VEHICLE, WITH ONE MAN DOING ALL THE DRIVING WITHOUT RELIEF. THE CAR USED WAS A STANDARD TYPE OF FORD ROADSTER THAT WAS NOT EQUIPPED WITH OVER HEAD VALVES NOR SPECIAL CAMS NOR COUNTERBALANCED CRANK SHAFT. IT WAS BAKER'S SEVENTY-FOURTH MOTOR TRIP ACROS THE AMERICAN CONTINENT.

New York's Interesting Campaign On—Sinclair Loses Teapot Dome.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ONE of the most interesting of this fall's election campaigns—perhaps the most interesting—formally opened last week with the meetings of the New York Republican and Democratic conventions. The outcome of the spectacular contest is of great importance not only to the state but also to the nation, and it may decide the political fate of two men of outstanding prominence. And at the time of the election, November 2, the New Yorkers will hold their referendum on modification of the Volstead act.

Heading the Republican state ticket are James W. Wadsworth, Jr., for reelection to the United States senate, and Representative Ogden L. Mills for governor. Both of them are millionaires, and Senator Wadsworth is an out-and-out opponent of prohibition. Should Wadsworth win, his strength in the party councils would be vastly increased and he might become a potential candidate for the Presidential nomination.

Gov. Al Smith had only to signify his willingness to accept a fifth nomination for governor to be given that honor by the Democratic convention, and the rest of the state ticket was picked by him. Justice Robert F. Wagner was named to oppose Wadsworth for the senate. It is admitted that victory by Smith would aid tremendously his aspiration to be his party's nominee for the Presidency in 1928. Despite his wetness and his religious affiliations, the national convention of that year would find it difficult to turn him down as it did in 1924. Should he be defeated in November, however, his opponents in the party could invoke the unwritten rule forbidding the nomination of a candidate who could not carry his own state. Justice Wagner, it may be said, is as wet as Al Smith.

Naturally, the Democratic platform is strong for modification of the prohibition act. At the insistence of Governor Smith, it also indorses the world court conditionally. The Republicans were in something of a dilemma when it came to drafting a platform, but the wets won out to the extent of inserting a plank which, after calling for enforcement of prohibition so long as it is in the Constitution, added:

"The people of the state are rightly alarmed by the lack of observance and enforcement of the federal law relative to the sale of intoxicating liquors. From this has resulted the pending referendum to obtain the opinion of the people upon the question of the modification of the law. The referendum gives all opportunity to express themselves. We urge a full expression at the polls on this matter."

This was too much for the extreme drys, and they are now rallying to the support of Franklin W. Christman for senator and F. W. Seward for governor, the candidates selected by the Anti-Saloon league and other dry organizations. The regular Republican leaders say they do not fear this bolt, but the Democrats believe it will accomplish the political destruction of Wadsworth and the election of Wagner.

ILLINOIS also is to have a three-cornered contest for the senatorship. With the support of a number of civic reform leaders, Hugh S. Magill of Chicago has come out as an independent Republican candidate. He is a former state senator, a well known educator and at present general secretary of the National Council of Religious Education. Though he is notably dry, the Anti-Saloon league of Illinois is strongly supporting Frank L. Smith, the regular Republican nominee, thinking him the best bet to defeat Brennan, the wringing wet Democrat.

Democrats of Massachusetts, in nominating Walsh for the senate and Gaston for governor, pronounced strongly against prohibition. The New Hampshire Democrats, however, adopted a dry platform and blamed the Republican administration for failure to enforce prohibition.

Complete harmony in the Michigan Republican convention was obtained by the process of excluding the two contesting delegations from Wayne county, which includes Detroit, one of which was in favor of re-nominating Governor Groesbeck. The remainder of the delegates, almost without exception, were anti-Groesbeck and the nomination of the ticket headed by Mayor Fred Green of Ionia was put through with ease. The Groesbeck machine is wrecked and the Green faction is in complete control in Michigan.

HARRY F. SINCLAIR and his associates met with signal defeat in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis when that tribunal reversed and remanded the decision of the district court at Cheyenne, Wyo., upholding the Teapot Dome leases secured by the Sinclair group. The Appellate court's decision is sweeping in effect and instructs the lower court immediately to cancel the Mammoth Oil company's lease and to enjoin it from further trespassing on government lands. It declares the lease to have been fraudulent and orders that the Mammoth Oil company be asked for an accounting of all oil and petroleum products taken from the government's naval oil reserve during its tenure. Discussing the lease, the decision says: "The entire transaction is tainted with favoritism, collusion and corruption," but it also says there is no corruption in the case as to any officers of the government except Albert B. Fall.

IN THE conspiracy trial of Harry M. Daugherty and T. W. Miller, former attorney and alien property custodian respectively, the government closed its case after presenting a mass of testimony to show that many of the Liberty bonds paid to John T. King by Richard Merton, German copper magnate, for expediting his claim to stock in the American Metals company, found their way into the hands of Miller and the bank in Washington Court House, Ohio, where Daugherty had an account. Motions for dismissal of the case were denied by Judge Mack.

WHAT might have been a terrible mine disaster, at Ironwood, Mich., was averted by the persistent and skillful work of rescue crews. There was a cave-in in the shaft of the Pabst iron mine which killed three men and imprisoned 43 others hundreds of feet below the surface. Work at all mines in the vicinity ceased and all the men united in efforts to save the entombed miners. They were directed by experts of the federal bureau of mines and for five days labored unceasingly. At the end of that time the 43 were reached and brought to the surface, somewhat exhausted but otherwise unhurt. Air and water for them had been plentiful, and birchbark pulled from the shoring of the drift and boiled had furnished food.

SOUTHERN Florida is pulling itself together and removing the debris of the terrible hurricane, and meanwhile the people of the country are continuing to contribute to the relief fund, which necessarily must be very large. Another tropical storm last week struck Vera Cruz, Mexico, and did great damage there and in the vicinity, though few lives were lost. Banana and sugar cane plantations were severely damaged over an area extending a hundred miles inland.

WILLIAM T. DEWART, formerly employed as a bookkeeper by the late Frank Munsey, announces that he has purchased the New York Sun, the New York Evening Telegram and the Mohican chain of New England grocery stores from the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the residuary legatee of the Munsey estate, which is estimated as high as $40,000,000. The properties in question are valued at $13,000,000 and will be mutualized under a plan of employee control sponsored by Mr. Munsey.

THE Department of Agriculture announced its issuance of a citation against the Armour Grain company of Chicago, charging an attempt to manipulate the market price of grain on the Chicago Board of Trade. The citation calls on the company to show cause why an order should not be issued, under the grain futures act, directing all contract markets to refuse trading privileges to the company. The hearing will be in Chicago October 11.

The charge of mixing rye screenings into the regular grain, on which the citation is based, was investigated by the Chicago Board of Trade directors and the company was exonerated by an almost unanimous vote.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI of Italy and Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, held a conference Thursday at Livorno and various matters of great moment were discussed by them, though at this writing the topics considered are not known. Reports from London and Rome were that the statesmen were to take up chiefly Mediterranean problems, including the disposition of the international zone of Tangier; and there were other reports that they would discuss the Balkans and also Abyssinia.

ALFONSO'S seat on the Spanish throne is getting shaky and his crown is wobbling a bit. Recently the dictator, Primo de Rivera, announced that he would summon a hand-picked constitutional assembly and the leaders of the old parties at once rose in opposition, burying their differences and agreeing that the proposition was utterly illegal. Some of them are said to have called on the king and warned him that if he persisted in backing the dictator in this plan they would drive him from the throne and either give it to his third son, Juan under the regency of his mother, or aid in the establishment of a republican form of government. It is reported that Alfonso, who has been amusing himself at San Sebastian, told the disgruntled ones to "go to it."

Poland's parliament, resenting Pilsudski's methods, refused to vote as much for the budget as the dictator demanded, whereupon the reappointed Bartel cabinet resigned. The marshal had threatened to dissolve the parliament of this happened, but changed his mind and let the cabinet go.

SHERWOOD EDDY'S group of investigators into conditions in Russia has sent to President Coolidge a letter urging conferences with the soviet government looking toward recognition of that government by the United States. These gentlemen were in Russia a month and were shown all that the soviet rulers wished them to see. But one of their number, William Rosenwald of Chicago, remained behind when the mission left and did some investigating on his own account. In an interview in Berlin he says the mission was filled full of bunk. He says that although there are many signs of economic and financial revival and the soviet government seems to be permanently established, "bolshevik terrorism still is implanted in the souls of the Russian people, there is no individual freedom, and fear and intimidation still are the weapons by which the soviets rule."

QUEEN MARIE of Rumania has left Bucharest for her projected tour of the United States, and officials of the Leviathan announced that she would occupy the presidential suite on that vessel with a deck exclusively for her party. Landing at New York, she will go at once to Washington to visit President Coolidge. The Pennsylvania railroad has put at her disposal a special train for her trip across the continent.

The queen has decided on the following itinerary: New York, Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, and St. Louis. She will be accompanied by her youngest daughter, Princess Ileana, Prince Nicholas, the Infanta Beatrice of Spain, the court aids, the secretary of the Rumanian delegation at London, and a Bucharest professor.

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES

LESSON TEXT—Numbers 13:17-14:45.
GOLDEN TEXT—We are well able to overcome it.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Brave Spies.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Two Against Ten.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Brave and the Cowardly Scouts.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Courage of Faith.

I. The Spies Sent Out (13:17-20).

Less than two years have passed since the Israelites were delivered from Egyptian bondage. They are now at Kadesh-Barnea within sight of the promised land. Moses urged them to go in and take immediate possession (Deut. 1:21).

The record in Deuteronomy 1:19-25 shows that God did not take the initiative in sending out the spies, but that the people because of lack of faith made the request. There was a threefold purpose in sending out the spies.

1. To see whether the land was as God had told them (v.18).

2. To see whether the people who dwelt there were strong or weak, few or many (v.18).

3. And to see whether the cities were made up of strongholds or of tents (v.19).

II. The Commission Executed (13:21-25).

They entered the land from the south and traversed it to its northern limits. On their return from the north they gathered some specimens of the fruit of the land.

III. The Spies Rendered a Report (13:26-33).

1. The majority report (vv. 26-29).

(1) The land floweth with milk and honey (v. 27).

As a proof of it they displayed the fruit.

(2) The people who live there are strong (v. 28).

(3) The people lived in walled cities (v. 28).

(4) The land is inhabited by giants (v. 28, cf. 33).

In comparison with the inhabitants of the land they saw themselves as grasshoppers. Furthermore, they saw the people so distributed—the Amalekites in the south country, the Hittites, Jebusites and Amorites in the mountains, and the Canaanites along the seacost—that it was impossible to conquer them.

2. The minority report (vv. 30-33).

In part this report agreed with the first. It did not ignore the difficulties, nor dispute the facts, but it did deny the conclusion of the majority. They did not minimize the task before them, but asserted with God's help that they were well able to get possession of the land, and urged immediate action.

IV. The Rebellion of the People (14:1-45).

This rebellion began by crying (vv. 1-3). They lifted up their voices and cried, and the people wept that night. They even wished that they had died in the wilderness or in Egypt. God took them back to wander in the wilderness for thirty-eight years.

2. Proposition to return to Egypt. (vv. 4-10).

Their crying was followed by a proposal to organize for the return to Egypt. They purposed to select a captain as their leader. Joshua and Caleb protested against this, which so exasperated the people that they were about to stone them. At this point God interposed in their behalf.

3. God's wrath upon the people (vv. 11-12).

Because of their unbelief He proposed to smite them with pestilence and to disinherit them, supplanting them with a nation mightier than they.

4. Moses' intercession in behalf of the people (vv. 13-19).

Moses plead with God against this judgment because the Egyptians would hear of it and blaspheme and this they would pass on to the other nations, saying that God was not able to bring them into the land.

5. The Lord's response to Moses' plea (v. 20-39).

He assured Moses that He had granted pardon according to his intercession, but told him that although He would bring them into the land according to His promise, yet with the exception of Joshua and Caleb the men of that generation should be debarred.

6. The presumption of the people (vv. 40-45).

Having in unbelief refused to go up at the command of Moses, now in presumption they go. Moses advised them against such presumption, saying, "the Lord will not be with you."

The Woolworth Building in New York City, which towers 792 feet above the street, is the highest building in the United States.

If all the bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound sold in 1925 could be placed end to end, they would make a column as high as the Woolworth Building with enough left over to extend from Lynn, Massachusetts to Cleveland, Ohio.

In many little villages as in many thriving cities along the route, who are glad to tell others about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compo

In a recent letter, Mrs. Daughe says, "I was ill for four mon before I took your medicine. found one of your books at my fr door and read it. It seemed to my case, so I began taking Lydi Pinkham's Vegetable Compou and after I took the third bottle found relief. I am on my eleve bottle and I don't have that trou any more, and feel like a differ woman. I recommend the Vegeta Compound to every one I see w has trouble like mine. German Women Athletes

Mass participation of women in track and field meets of Germany has produced astonishing records. Even in the mile runs there are scores of competitors. Fraulein Wally Lingner, nineteen-year-old Berlin typist, has run 1,000 meters in 3:15, beating the world's record by three seconds. Frieda Knies, who came in second, was timed at 3:17. Elnore Wittman won the woman's 100-meter dash championship of Berlin, but was forced to run :12 to do it. Charlie Paddock's world's record time for the distance is :10.4.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sic ens, or upsets the system. Besides, is absolutely harmless, and so pleas that even a cross, feverish, billo sick child gladly takes it.

The Magna Charta

A MAN lay writhing among the rushes and straw that covered the floor of his palace on the night of June 15, 1215. He was foaming at the mouth, biting the rushes to fragments and filling the spacious apartment with blasphemy and lamentations.

The man was John, king of England. He had that day been forced to sign a document that cut down his own tyrannical powers and granted certain just rights to his people. How unwillingly he had affixed his signature was proven by the babyish rage he gave way to as soon as he reached his own abode.

Nearly a century and a half had passed since the Norman conquest. Norman and Saxon were becoming blended into one consolidated English race. It needed but a mutual grievance to make that blend complete. And the grievance was at hand.

Richard, the "Lion Heart," descendant of the Conqueror and John's predecessor as king of England, had passed most of his life in France. His courage and rough integrity had made him a popular monarch, although he knew no word of English. He had done brilliant, if ineffective, work in the Crusades, and, on his way home, had been captured and thrown into an Austrian prison. John, his brother, had taken advantage of his absence to make an effort to seize the English crown. Richard was the typical knight errant, the highest type of chivalry. John, on the contrary, was a coward and an all-around scoundrel. The nation raised money for Richard's ransom and he returned home, only to be killed in battle soon after.

Richard died without leaving any children. The natural heir to the throne was thus Prince Arthur, son of Richard's next younger brother, Geoffrey. But John threw Arthur into prison, had his eyes put out with hot irons and at last murdered him, thus securing the crown for himself. Having done so, he launched out on a career of tyranny, oppression and misrule worthy of Nero. But the people of England were not so submissive as had been those of Rome. They grumbled at John's exactions and recalled with longing the fair and semi-socialistic laws that had governed England in the good old Saxon days of Edward the Confessor. For by this time the many grave faults of the Saxon rule were forgotten and only its virtues remembered.

Yet in their discontent Norman baron and Saxon farmer were at one, the king and his tyranny being their common foe. The barons, representing alike the nobility and the people, drew up a modified sort of Declaration of Independence. This document they called the Magna Charta (grand charter), and they presented it to King John for signature.

This charter was the keystone of Anglo-Saxon liberty, and was in a way the basis of many of our most important laws. Among other things it put an end to unjust punishment and provided that every prisoner receive a fair trial by a jury of his peers. It also authorized resistance to arbitrary royal power and put law and the will of the people ahead of the mere dictates of the king.

Naturally John refused point-blank to sign a document that would cut his power in half and give justice to the plain people, whom he despised. But the barons were prepared for such a refusal. They rose in arms and intimidated the cowardly sovereign into granting the people their rights, and demanded that he sign the document.

On June 15, 1215, John and the barons met at Runnymede, a little island in the middle of a river. There the Magna Charta was read aloud to the king, while a circle of stern men, armed to the teeth and in no mood to listen to refusal, stood threateningly about him. The scared monarch signed the charter under this force and then rushed home in a paroxysm of impotent fury.

Recovering his senses, he cast about, like a cornered rat, for some way to undo what he had done. A brilliant idea came to him. Some time before, being frightened by a papal threat, he had become formally a liege servant to the pope. He now sent to the Vatican, explaining his ill-luck and begging for aid. In reply the Pope at once issued a decree declaring the Magna Charta null and void, and excommunicating all who should seek to uphold it.

But the barons and people of England were too thoroughly aroused to be affected by even this command. They stood by the Magna Charta and prepared to defend their rights to the death. With a vast army of foreign mercenaries, John ravaged his own kingdom in a mad effort to secure submission to his tyranny. In retaliation the barons declared he was no longer their king, and invited Louis, king of France, to come and reign over them.

The deadlock was broken by John's death. His infant son, Henry III, succeeded to the throne, and a new era of honest law slowly dawned, based on the charter's principles.

To the courage and manhood of her barons and plain people England owes her rise to greatness. But for them she might for centuries longer have wallowed in the slough of despotism and oppression.

COATS WITH HATS TO MATCH; TIERED AND PLAITED SKIRTS

Pretty Outfit for a Schoolgirl.

FOR the children there is a treat in store, namely, chinchilla coats with hats to match. Of course the mothers are going to voice their approval of this fashion, for of all cloakings none is more dependable and good looking, than is chinchilla.

The new chinchilla coats are amusingly mannish in cut and detail, until it comes to the lining, which is as joyously gay as youth could possibly wish it.

What prettier or more practical for the schoolgirl than a matching chinchilla coat and hat like the one in the picture? This particular model happens to be lined with the new suede-finished woolen fabric, but bright flannel is just as suitable. One is making a fashionable selection in either navy, or French blue lined with vivid red, or cinnamon, jungle green, chanel red or garnet with a chosen contrasting lining.

There isn't much trimming needed on the hat, possibly a suede strap-band and buckle or a wee cocarde of grosgrain ribbon. It, too, boasts a cheerful lining self-colored to that of the coat, but preferably of satin.

Some of the handsome chinchilla coats are enriched with nutria collars. The same is true of the plaid woolen coats for girls—they are mostly fur-collared. Likewise they have hats of same material, for the ensemble of coat and hat is being greatly emphasized in junior apparel.

Another charming outfit for the young girl for "dress up" occasions is the plaid plaited skirt either taffeta or woolen, with which is worn a velvet coatee topped with a soft beret hat to match. Some of these short coats are double breasted, others are styled with novelty belts of gold or silver kid or gay suede which is artfully detailed with metal decorations.

Children's suede-cloth coats acquire skirt fullness with godets or plaits, also below-the-elbow fullness is gathered into tiny fur wristbands, matching the collar.

Tiers are popular in Paris, at least in fashion's realm where they spell it with an "ie" and not an "ea." Looks as if French stylists are tiering skirts more enthusiastically than ever, and with an ingenuity which baffles description. In fact everything that will possibly admit of the tiering process in the fashioning of the new autumn and winter costumes is being tiered, even to sleeves, as this picture so interestingly portrays.

For swagger style the much betiered frock as shown to the left has no compeer. It presents the ultra-smart idea for the coming season. Mark the clever circular treatment of the tiers which elaborate the skirt and take note of the fact that the sleeves are also tiered below the elbow. Both velvet and satin dresses are being interpreted in this tierful manner.

In fact, the velvet-tiered frock is a favorite theme among dress designers. Sometimes the tiers are placed row and row, overlapping in conventional line which simulates an appearance of wide tucks. Again, and this is a very popular idea, each tier is scalloped. Very modish is the velvet skirt formed of scalloped tiers, the same worn with a gorgeously gay plaid blouse, or perhaps one of exotic print or metal splendor. The texture and weight of the new velvets admit gracefully of the tiered manipulation, being exceedingly supple, and one might almost say sheer, so exquisitely delicate are they to the touch—and velvet is the rage!

Two Modes From Paris.

As to plaits, they never grow weary in well doing, and if some of us expected them to be relegated to the past, present-day fashions prove conclusively the fallacy of such a thought. While all-around plaited skirts are worn, the really smart note is to mass the plaitings to the front. However the woman of fashion is given her choice and so mademoiselle who poses to the right in this picture shows her preference for an entirely box-plaited skirt with which she wears a blouse which shows a bit of shirring at the front.

WORLD-WIDE sales of quality cars and trucks

General Motors cars and trucks are sold and serviced in 104 countries. The export shipments in 1925 amounted to 119,632 motor vehicles; and the overseas assembly plants and warehouses of General Motors now number 19. This vigorous development of the world-wide market for a complete line of quality cars is important to the car buyer. It is not only a contribution to international prosperity and progress, but it also helps to maintain the continuous production program at the factories, on which low prices depend.

ORT CARDS GIVEN OUT ON WEDNESDAY FOR FIRST PERIOD OF SCHOOL

ts Should Study Cards And Know What The Children Are Doing

last week terminated the first eeks period of our school year, rt cards will go to the parents week revealing as best we can e the quality of work done by children We hope due attenwill be given the grades awardnd if anything can de done to ove the work of some children ther parents or teachers, perlly or together it may be done re it is too late. Sometimes an hour or two on a subject a l is floundering in will achieve needed results. Perhaps a comble room can be provided for children to study in these long er evenings which will soon be and children saved from reing a grade or a years work.

e invite consultation at any parents are disposed to ask for e are very anxious to have evchild make his grades and stand y to give all of the spare time can afford to bring success out possible failure. But where re threatens as it does when rs D, E, or F appear on the ts there should be a demand on part of parents that some studyat home be done, in fact all that be provided for. We have little bt that students who go home h A's and B's have been making paration at home. If these do, much more necessary is it that ils receiving the threatening letalluded to above put in extra e on lessons at home. This is esially true of high school students upper grade

e have at times commented on d work done by our boys in athts. We believe it is also due dents who achieve honor in clarship that we give them honble mention After all it is the k that a student does in his daily ses that more largely determines future success in life, all other ngs being equal.

Gladys Wilson Honor Student

We find in consulting the grades arded by our high school teachers pas six weeks that Gladys Wilis our honor student. Of the four jor subjects she had made an A each Gladys is a Junior and has e consistently good work ever ce she has been enrolled in the emme High School. She is a memof our Girls Glee Club and is usly found cheering our team at games.

rnon Turgasen Stars In Athletics And Studies Both

Vernon Turgasen has not only oven his ability in athletics but is good student as well. He has made s year 3 B's which means he is re than an average student in ee of the four subjects he is purng. Vernon is a member of our gh School Orchestra and base ball m, one of our most valuable memrs of the team since he occupies ter position on the diamond. Vern is a Senior and will be missed xt year

rtle Irving High Ranking Senior

Myrtle Irving, one of our tuition udents, is our high-ranking Senior, th 1 A and 3 B's to her credit.

Harvey Nelson Comes Next

Harvey Nelson, also from the rm, out-ranks all others, but Gla-s Wilson, in the Junior Class. He s 2 A's and 2 B's to his credit. arvey is also interested in music d athletics and has a bright future efore him.

Kenneth Gast Leads Sophies

Kenneth Gast has won the distinon of leading the Sophomore class e last six weeks. He did good work ll last year and has just made 3 A's d 1 B We know Kenneth will nev disappoint He is always "right the job."

Mabel Schuldt and Laurence Greiann have also done well in the ophomore class, earning each 1 A d 2 B's.

Two Freshies Tied For Honors

In the Freshman class honors are ivided between Clarice Wellemeyer d William Gauger. Both have reived 2 A's and 2 B's. Both are well ked by both pupils and teachers and can be expected to go through high school making just such grades. Lela Bachman who last year was compelled to quit her school work is back renewing her Freshman work and doing it well She has earned 1 A and 2 B's.

List Of Names To Be Published Next Week

Next week we shall publish names of all high school students who have done better than average work in one or more subjects the first period of this year There are several in each class We hope, however, there may be more following our second six-weeks period

Oral Gibson must feel very grateful to Dr Anderson for providing him with the princely looking steed we see him mounted on to and from school But Oral is deserving He enrolled late and has been detained from Goodell on Tuesday evening of this he has been doing excellent work in his subjects

Florence Gates, whose parents have recently moved to Klemme has enrolled in the Junior class. We believe she will make good in spite of her late enrollment for she seems unafraid of hard work.

Our boys were walloped again by Corwith last week but came home from Goodell on Tuesday evening of this week with a wide victory smile

Our Grammar room is longing for a fair day on Thursday as a picnic has been planned They expect to drive to Goodell Woods for a few hours with Nature They will play games and lunch together afterwards.

PREPARE CRIBS FOR WET CORN THIS YEAR

Use Of Simple, Home-Made Ventilators May Help Dry Out Crop So It Will Keep

Soft corn or much with a high moisture content at husking time is the present prospect for Iowa farmers The continued cloudy, damp weather since the frosts indicates that much of the corn will not dry out sufficiently to crib safely, in the belief of weather officials and crop specialists at Iowa State College

To meet the situation, the crops men are suggesting strongly that farmers install ventilators in their cribs The type of ventilators that they recommend is simple and can be made at small cost on the farm if desired.

An "A" shaped type of ventilator, built of 2 by 4 and 1 by 4 material, placed in the center of the crib and running the full length, is recommended These ventilators are usually made 18 to 30 inches wide at the bottom and about 4 to 6 feet high, depending on the width and height of the crib The 2 by 4's are used for the frame and the 1 by 4's for sides The ends are left open and this permits circulation directly thru the center of the crib

One man in Tama County has altered the usual "A" type of ventilator by leaving off about the last half of the 1 by 4 boards on thesides This permits the corn to run under the ventilator, but leaves a hole thru the center of the crib He finds that with this arrangement the ventilator does not take up so much room and works even better in drying out the corn than where the sides are made solid.

The ventilators are made in sections about 4 feet long so that they may be removed as the corn is shelled or fed out of the crib. Those who are interested in installing "A' type ventilators in their cribs and wish complete details may secure a blue print of the plan by sending 10 cents to the Extension Service, Iowa State College, Ames, and asking for blue print No D-447

Ventilators in the corn crib will pay in a good many years by speeding up the drying of the corn, thus improving the grade, the crop specialists say This one thing is certain, they point out, the use of ventilators never will hurt the crop, and will always tend to improve its quality If the ventilators are properly built, they will last for a good many years

More dairy products and meats and less poultry and eggs were in cold storage in the U. S. on Sept. 1 than on Sept. 1 a year ago.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY GRIEWE MARRIED FIFTY-TWO YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wellemeyer Entertain In Their Honor

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Griewe, of this city had rounded out fifty-two years of married life Tuesday, October 12th Two years ago they had a big Golden Wedding celebration at their home and a great number of people were present to help them celebrate the great event.

But every year after such a great occasion is also most worthy of special honors, so this year Mr and Mrs. Arthur Wellemeyer gave a six oclock dinner in honor of Mr and Mrs Henry Griewe.

Besides Mr and Mrs Griewe and the Wellemeyer family there were present Mrs G W Kluckhohn, and Mr and Mrs Harry Smith These ladies are sisters of Mrs Griewe and Mrs Wellemeyer is a daughter of Mr and Mrs Griewe

All enjoyed a good time at this anniversary dinner.

NELLIE SHOWS UP BOARDER AT CATTLE CONGRESS

Pays Owner $13 For Care Each And Every Month; Boarder Pays $1

Nellie and Star Boarder stood side by side at Waterloo and "told visitors" at the Dairy Cattle Congress last week a vivid story of how testing and record keeping pays in the dairy business

Nellie, a grade Jersey, produced 1 508 pounds of butterfat during the last three years, which sold for $736 10 and returned a profit above feed cost of $468 84 In other words, she paid her owner $13 each month for her care These figures were taken from the books of the cow testing association, they were put in the book by a disinterested party, the cow tester

Star Boarder, also in a cow testing association produced 132 pound of butterfat in a year, which brought $63 It cost her owner $51 to feed her, so he had left only about $1 a month to compensate him for her care

Along with Nellie and Star Boarder, similar stories were told in the exhibit by profitable and unprofitable sows and hens The good sow produced pigs at a cost of $2 50 each at weaning time The pigs from an unprofitable sow had cost their owner $6 66 each when weaned.

The "lying" hens shown laid 58 eggs each in a year and left a profit of 39 cents each The "laying" hens averaged 161 eggs each and paid profits of $2 94 each per year to their owner.

KLEMME CREAMERY SHOWS AN INCREASE IN BUSINESS

After Thirteen Years In Business It Forges Steadily Ahead

The Klemme Co-Operative Creamery shows a substantial gain in business the past month over the same period, Spetember, 1926. To put the business right down to a plain statement the Creamery shipped out 71 tubs more of butter this September than they did last year during the same month Not only that but each year the Creamery forges further ahead than in the previous year

The Klemme Co-Operative Creamery has now been in operation for 13 years and the officers are well pleased with the loyal co-operation they have received to attain this success for the Creamery The Creamery has gained a strong foot-hold in this community and it is up to the farmers to remain loyal and keep it there

The officials at the plant are always striving to give service and courteous treatment and it is a real pleasure for patrons to do business with our creamery.

Klemme points with pride to the local creamery and the success it has attained during these thirteen years in the community.

BARZ FAMILIES MAKE ANOTHER JOURNEY TO AMES

Sunday the Barz families planned another big trip to Ames for a visit with Miss Adella Schroeder and enjoy a big picnic dinner. In this huge structure Pennsylvania is displaying her progress from the arrival of Penn to the present day. The building is one of the handsomest on the big exposition grounds and has proved a rendezvous for hundreds of thousands of people who have come from near and far to see the magnificent exhibits established by forty-three of the leading nations of the world. The Exposition continues until December 1.

ENROLLMENT AT AMES MUCH LARGER THIS YEAR

Ten Percent More Freshmen Enter Iowa State College Than Did In Fall A Year Ago

A ten percent larger class of fresh men this fall at Iowa State College, Ames, than entered this institution a year ago largely accounts for the increased attendance at this institution. Authorities expect that late registrations, together with those of new students who will enter at the beginning of the winter and spring terms, will give the college the largest enrollment in its history.

The enrollment last year in regular courses thruout the year the year mounted to 5,255 The figure for this year is expected to exceed 5500 The largest increase in the freshman at Iowa State this year is in the Division of Home Economics, where a gain of 22 8 percent was made. Agriculture comes next with a gain of 10 7 percent. Entrants in the non-collegiate courses increased 10.4 per cent, engineering 4.6 percent and industrial science, 4 0 percent.

The freshman class numbers 1,624 this year as compared with 1,473 last fall. This year's class is divided among the various divisions as follows: Home Economics, 442; Agriculture 332; Non-Collegiate, 117; Engineering, 521; and Industrial Science, 184.

METHODIST CHURCH

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

We were glad to welcome several in our services last Sunday who had been kept away for some time because of sickness or for other reasons We also noticed a number of visitors who are alway welcome. We shall be equally glad to welcome some of the absentees who usually are regular, in our services on the coming Sabbath day.

Let us begin the new conference year by being a Regular at every service.

All services next Sunday will carry with them a note of inspiration and helpfullness. Preaching service at ten o'clock and seven thirty.

Sunday school at eleven o'clock.

In our service last Sunday evening our lay delegate T. C. Nelson, gave a splendid account of himself. He showed that his horizon in the church matters had been widened and consequently he helped to widen the horizon of others.

We introduce in absentia our new District Superintendent, the Rev. W. H Lease. He is a man well qualified to take up the work of the Algona District and will prove himself a leader in every way.

The Klemme W. F. M. S. meets with Mrs. E. J. Arnold on Wednesday of this week.

NEW HIGHWAY MARKERS NOW IN USE ON IOWA ROADS

New markers were placed on the highways of Iowa Tuesday of this week. The new State Highway markers are made of a steel disc about eighteen inches in diameter and are painted white. The highway numbers are in black and are large enough to see from quite a distance. The Turn Signs are diamond shaped and about two feet square, painted yellow background with black turn arrows. The signs are mounted on creosoted 4 by 4 inch posts and the new system marks the highways very plainly. Later the new national markers will be put in place beneath the state markers on the same post The national markers will be in the form of a shield and will show the national number of the highway. The signs showing the distance between towns will also be installed later

WANT TO PRESERVE FISH IN EAST TWIN LAKE

Fish In Danger Of Winter Killing Unless Pump Is Installed

Jay T. Griggs, of near Goodell, is among the sportsmen of this vicinity who is anxious to have the fish in East Twin Lake protected against freezing out in the winter. Mr. Griggs has done much to encourage the state to erect a dam and stock the lake with game fish, that sportsmen in this vicinity might some day enjoy some real good fishing in that little lake.

Since the erection of a concrete dam a few years ago, the state has stocked the lake with game fish that are fast nearing the size when they may be fished The lake is at the present time well filled with small game fish that will be large enough to take by next spring.

East Twin Lake is like many other small lakes in Iowa, it needs a little assistance along with nature to preserve the fish throughout the cold winter months when the water freezes over solid and shuts off the air supply, so essential to the welfare of the finny tribe.

Mr. Griggs is giving his personal time circulating a subscription paper among sportsmen of this vicinity in an effort to raise $500.00 which to purchase a centrifugal pumping outfit to be installed at East Lake and which will supply air to the water during the winter when the lake is frozen over. Local sportsmen, and all interested in having good fishing so near at home are contribute to the cause.

Heretofore the lake was kept open in winter by men cutting holes in the ice. This method is not satisfactory as it requires constant watching and men cannot always be found who are willing to give their time to the work.

Air pumps have been successfully used in other small lakes and seems to be the ideal way to supply the fish with air in the winter.

COMING ATTRACTIONS AT THE IDLE HOUR THEATRE

Good Pictures Booked For The Coming Week In Klemme

Friday and Saturday, of this week Oct. 15 and 16 we show a picture that is a paragon of daring, feared, hated, loved, as no other man ever was—that's Fred Thompson in "That Devil Quemado!" with his wonderful horse, Silver King. Something of the Neanderthal Man, something of the Abysmal Brute, something of the Crusader, something of the high, fine intellect of the savant "That Devil Quemado" swept over the boarder like the Black Plague. He took what he wanted!

We always show a good comedy in connection with our feature picture

Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 19 and 20 we have a picture that's Peppy as Paprica! Richard Talmadge in "The Prince of Pep." Don't drug yourself with medicines and dope Don't rely on the old sawbones remedies to cure you of the blues Let Dick Talmadge do your prescribing in his latest comedy-melodrama sensation.

Show nights every Tuesday and Wednesday, Friday and Saturday.

Shows begin each evening at 7:30 o'clock.

MR. MOUSE READY TO MOVE IN

Keep Basement Doors, Windows All Closed To Shut Him Out

Unless you wish to share your home with members of the mouse family, it would be wise to keep the doors and windows to the basement closed during these fall days.

Most of the infestations of rats and mice in dwellings occur in the fall At this time of year these little creatures search for warm winter quarters and are likely to take up their abode in the basement if they have an opportunity.

There is also a right and wrong way to set the mouse trap. Place the trap at right angles to the wall, with the trigger next to the wall. Mice always run along a wall and if the trap is set in the foregoing manner, the catch is more likely to be a certainty.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Alleged Corrupt Political Ring in Indiana Is Facing Exposure.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHILE the rest of the country looks on with intense interest, Indiana is listening aghast to revelations exposing a great alleged political conspiracy spreading over the entire state and threatening to involve some of its most prominent citizens. Thomas H. Adams, publisher of Vincennes and chairman of an investigation committee named by the Republican Editorial association of Indiana, is responsible for the exposure, and the charges are based on the stories told by D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon of the Ku Klux Klan and now serving a life sentence for murder. Stephenson, who says he was "framed," seeks vindication and revenge; and the editorial association's committee has made repeated demands on Gov. Ed Jackson for a complete investigation. Mr. Adams, asserting that the governor has dodged the issue, has been trying to persuade the Indianapolis city council to hear the charges before a mass meeting. He also has made repeated attempts to reach Stephenson in his prison, but the warden, backed by the prison board and the governor, will let no one in to interview the convict. The latter, however, managed to smuggle out a letter in which he said in part:

"I have in a place of security the following described documents:

"1. A written contract by the terms of which a certain prominent official of the state of Indiana agrees to pay me the sum of eight hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars ($825,000), or three times the amount I expended in his behalf for election.

"2. I have notes representing the above amount, signed by the official.

"3. I have a written memorandum signed by the same official acknowledging the amounts expended by me in his behalf to be two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars ($275,000, or one-third of the sum above mentioned. This memo recites an agreement where I lose all if he was beaten in the election, but receive three-for-one if he won.

"4. A written agreement with the mayors of three large cities in Indiana binding them to repay me on a ratio of three-for-one for all money I advanced in their behalf, and further agreements are in my possession where these same men agree to allow certain individuals to name all appointments.

"5. I hold two photographic copies (and the plate) of an agreement by and between the mayor of a large city and an organization politician in which the mayor agrees to allow that politician to name all of the city appointees of a certain class. I also have eight affidavits of reputable men who saw the photograph made from the original. I later delivered the original to the politician to whom it was addressed by the mayor.

"6. I have perhaps thirty or forty contracts with less important public officials who have agreed to repay me for funds advanced to them for campaign purposes."

Publication of this by Mr. Adams being of no apparent avail, he next made public a photostatic copy of the following amazing contract bearing the alleged signature of J. L. Duvall, mayor of Indianapolis and president of the Marion County State bank:

"In return for the political support of D. C. Stephenson, in the event I am elected mayor of Indianapolis, Ind., I promise not to appoint any person as member of the board of public works without they first have the indorsement of D. C. Stephenson," the contract reads.

"I also agree and promise to appoint Claude Worley as chief of police and Earl Klenck as captain.

"Signed by me, this 12th day of February, 1925."

With this he gave out a letter purporting to have been written and signed by Duvall. It is written on the letterhead of his bank, addresses Stephenson as "Dear Steve" and continues: "I was talking with your friend just now and in regard to Ramsey getting (off) the ticket, if this is done I will—if the candidate for treasurer—go down the line with you and the boys and do all I can for the success of our ticket this fall.

"With best regards, I am as ever yours truly, J. L. Duvall."

Mayor Duvall admitted that he wrote this letter but declared the alleged contract was a "fake." Mr. Adams said he could prove the signature on the contract was the mayor's, and he also asserted he had plenty of documents and evidence to prove the existence of the corrupt political ring which he seeks to get before the whole people of the state.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has let it be known that he will not take an active part in this fall's congressional election campaign in the way of speeches or letters in behalf of Republican candidates. He refuses to yield to the urgent requests of the campaign leaders, who have represented to him that participation in the campaign is his duty as the titular head of his party. To this the semi-official reply is that, while he is the leader of the party, it is not customary for the Chief Executive to assume such leadership in an "off year" election, the only precedent for such action being Woodrow Wilson's ill-fated appeal for the return of a Democratic congress in 1918.

Political wiseacres say the President's decision is dictated largely by caution, and call attention to the fact that it spares him and the Republican candidates embarrassment, since he and many of them cannot well stand on the same platform. For instance, of the 28 Republican candidates for the senate, 18 are basing their bid for election, chiefly or partly, on opposition to Mr. Coolidge's policies relating to the world court and to agricultural relief.

FLOODS in Illinois, Kansas and Oklahoma during the last week have done immense damage to the crops, and many towns and villages have been inundated. Broken levees of the Illinois river let the waters into Beardstown, Ill., rendering hundreds of people homeless and almost completely isolating the city. In Peoria large industrial plants were forced to close because of flooded fire pits and basements.

TRAPPED about three miles underground by an explosion in the Roane Iron company mine at Rockwood, Tenn., 28 miners met death. Rescue crews worked hard but in vain, being hampered by excessive heat and smoke and the danger from gas.

CHAOS reigns in central China and while the armies of the various factions are fighting desperately along the Yangtse river, it is the non-combatants that are suffering most. As an instance, the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune tells of witnessing the attempt of the Chinese Red Cross to get the civilians out of besieged Wuchang on launches and lighters. There was room for fewer than 6,000 on the boats, but 50,000 broke through the military cordon and surged out on the piers, from which they fell into the river by hundreds, about 300 of them being drowned. The refugees were emaciated with starvation and told pitiful stories of their sufferings.

Warfare between the Japanese and the Manchurians was imminent last week along the Corean border. Throughout Manchuria, adjoining Corea, are about 1,500,000 Coreans, mostly farmers, who are Japanese subjects. Recently the Manchurian government repudiated the agreement permitting Japanese subjects to lease agricultural lands, and sent troops to confiscate the crops. The Japanese rushed troops, machine guns and Red Cross detachments to the border and ordered all garrison troops in that region to be held in readiness for action.

BECAUSE he permitted one of the Hohenzollerns, the oldest son of the former crown prince, to march with the Prussian guards in the recent maneuvers, Gen. Hans von Seeckt, commander in chief in the German reichswehr, has lost his job. He was considered the complete militarist, and for six years the allies have been protesting against his rejuvenation of the German army. General von Seeckt created the present army, 100,000 strong, every man a perfect soldier, chosen from 5,000,000 available. Under his plan, it is figured that when the next war comes Germany will have 1,000,000 trained officers and sergeant-majors.

The Prussian state government and the Hohenzollerns have reached an agreement on how much Prussia shall pay the former royal family to relinquish its claims on everything it left behind. The former kaiser will get 20,000,000 gold marks ($5,000,000) in cash, 280,000 acres of land from his former estates, and three castles, at Schwes, Fuerrath, and Wildenbruch, and the former crown prince gets Oels castle in addition.

DICTATOR PILSUDSKI ended his dispute with the Polish parliament by accepting the resignation of the Bartel cabinet and himself taking the post of premier. His cabinet is declared to be the strongest and best that Poland has yet had Besides the premiership, Pilsudski holds the war portfolio. August Zaloski is again minister of foreign affairs.

THE American Federation of Labor opened its annual convention in Detroit, and incidentally got into a wrangle with the churches of that city. President William Green had been invited to speak at a Y. M. C. A. meeting and other labor leaders had been asked to occupy ten Detroit pulpits, but these invitations were withdrawn at the instance of the board of commerce and the building trades association, which charged that the aims of the federation were not in harmony with ideals of American patriotism. This was vigorously protested by the federation. The federation voted to organize the automobile industry.

SO SERIOUS have become the depradations of the European corn borer in Ohio, Michigan and Indiana that the national corn borer committee was called to meet in Chicago for the purpose of devising some plan to check the advance of the pest toward Illinois and Iowa. The insects are advancing westward at the rate of twenty to twenty-five miles yearly. Dean Curtis of the Iowa State Agricultural college, who called the committee, says the borer is the most formidable pest that ever has threatened the Midwest and that its invasion of the great hog-raising states would be a dire calamity, since they cannot substitute other crops for corn, as Michigan and Ohio are doing.

WHILE Queen Marie of Rumania was buying beautiful gowns in Paris, our government was laying plans for her reception. The State department announced that she would be met at quarantine in New York on October 18 by Assistant Secretary of State J. Butler Wright and taken to Washington on a special train. The next day President and Mrs. Coolidge will give a dinner in her honor. The story that the queen had accepted any contract to appear in the movies in America was formally denied by a member of her party.

PERSONS who followed with avidity the tortuous course of the Stillman divorce litigation—and their name is legion—were interested to read that James "Bud" Stillman, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Stillman, is engaged to wed Miss Lena Wilson, an eighteen-year-old Scotch-Canadian girl who was a servant in the Stillman house in Canada, as were her two sisters and a brother. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson said they were highly pleased with their daughter's choice. The lad is a student in Princeton university, so the wedding will not take place until next June, after his graduation.

FOR the purpose of promoting commercial aviation the airplane in which Commander Byrd flew over the North pole is making a tour of the country in the course of which it will visit about 40 cities. On the first leg of the journey, from Washington to New York, Byrd was at the controls, but for the rest of the trip the pilot will be Floyd Bennett, who made the polar flight with Byrd. The expenses of the expedition are being defrayed by the Daniel Guggenheim fund, which is acting in co-operation with the Department of Commerce.

MOSES HONORED IN HIS DEATH

LESSON TEXT—Deut. 34 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Moses Sees the Promised Land.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Death of Moses.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons from the Life of Moses.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What the World Owes Moses.

I. Moses Views the Promised Land From Mount Pisgah (vv. 1-4).

At the Lord's bidding Moses ascended the mountain from which he got a view of the promised land. He obeyed, though he knew that he was to die there (Deut. 32 50) He greatly desired to go into the land (Deut. 3:25), but graciously submitted to the will of the Lord. Though he was not permitted to enter the land, God gave him a view in its fullest dimensions of the land which was to be the inheritance of the people which he had delivered and led for forty years. The reason given by the Lord for refusing an entrance into the land was Moses' failure to sanctify the Lord at Meribah (Deut. 32:51, cf. Num. 20: 1-13). This was too glaring a sin for the Lord to pass over, though Moses had served Him faithfully for many years.

II. The Death and Burial of Moses (vv 5-9).

1. His death (v. 5).

Though he died in the vigor of manhood, his work was done. He did not die before his time. God put him into the world for a purpose, and as soon as that work was done He called him home. Though Moses was a great man he was not exempt from death.

2. The burial of Moses (v. 6).

God buried him. Most likely this service was performed by the angels. Likely this is the time and circumstance when the devil contended with Michael, the archangel, over the body of Moses (Jude 9).

3. The time of mourning for Moses (v. 8).

They mourned for thirty days. It is not wrong to lay away earthly friends even with tears, but as Christians we should not mourn as those who have no hope. Indeed, it is much better to express our appreciation and love for our friends by showing the proper courtesy and respect while they are alive, than to mourn over them when they are dead.

III. The Successor of Moses (v. 9).

Joshua, who had been the minister of Moses during all the years of the wilderness journey, now became the military leader of the Israelites. That Joshua was a fit man as a leader of the Israelites is seen.

1. By the fact that he was full of the spirit of wisdom.

While the Lord is not dependent upon human wisdom, He does select as His representatives men whom He has endowed with the proper wisdom.

2. He was divinely ordained for the work at the hand of Moses, "for Moses had laid his hands upon him."

This he had done at the command of God (Num. 27:18-21).

3. The people owned him as their leader. "The children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses."

In order for successful leadership a ruler must have the individual affection and allegiance of the people.

IV. Encomium Upon Moses (vv. 10-12).

In this eulogy Moses is given a place at the head of the Old Testament prophets. With the exception of the Greater Prophet (Deut. 18:15-18), of whom Moses was a type, he stands as the greatest prophet of Israel.

1. He was great because of his intimacy with God (v. 10), "whom the Lord knew face to face."

2. He was great in that he gave to the world a code of laws unequaled in the world's history.

3. He was great as a general in that he liberated the Israelitish nation from the oppression of the greatest nation of the earth.

4. He was great because he led two or three million Israelites through the desert for forty years.

5. He was great because he gave to us in the book of Deuteronomy three orations which, according to the judgment of competent critics, stand at the head of the world's literature.

Unearth Village of Bronze Period

Probably the richest archeological discovery thus far made in Germany was the recent unearthing of a small village that existed about 1000 B. C. The marshes of the Federsee in Upper Swabia have preserved with remarkable freshness the remains of this island town, built at the time when the dry period of the Bronze age gave way to a rainier period in which nomads found it possible to settle and begin in an agricultural stage of existence. This entrenched village of oval shape about 175 yards in maximum diameter, was on an island bank and had a palisade around it. A second palisade was planted out in the water. There are more than 50,000 pine-tree trunks in the palisade. Many logs, hewn and shaped with the bronze axes and hatchets of that early day, also were found.—New York Tribune.

SCOTTDALE . . PENNA.

Paul Bunyan, Super-Lumberjack

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WON'T be long now until the crews of lumberjacks will be going into the woods for their winter work for, despite all the substitutes that modern science has designed to take the place of wood, the world must still have its millions of feet of lumber every year and it's the lumberjack's to harvest that annual crop. The lumberjack today is a very different person from the mberjack of yore who takes his place with the wboy and the prospector as pioneer types ose like probably will never be seen again. r, say those connected with the lumber indus- of today, the picturesque, hard-drinking, rd-working, rough-and-tumble fighting shanty- n, immortalized by such writers as Stewart ward White and Holman F. Day, is rapidly ssing away and soon there will be no more him.

The lumberjack as a type originated in the st and made history in Maine and New York fore the rapid advance of our so-called civiliza- n crowded him west with the retreating fringe the native forests. He flourished in the lake tes during the white pine days of the seventies d eighties and reached the height of his career the lumber camps of Michigan, Wisconsin and innesota in that era. When the white pine of ese states began to disappear, some of the old mberjacks drifted to the southern pineries, but e climate and environment were not to their ing. Then the opening of the great forests of e Pacific Northwest lured him and there, but nder changed conditions, he made his last stand. The old-time lumberjack was French-Canadian, cotch, Irish or any of the other racial strains hich we commonly think of as making up the tive stock of Americans. Today he is, in the ords of one authority, "a conglomerate, more or less alien, mass—from the cities and the farms, from factories and villages, from the plains and the West Indies. Physically he is smaller, swarthier, weaker; temperamentally, he lacks the fearlessness and dogged determination of his hearty forerunners; mentally, he is less alert, and industrially more conscious and better organized." Then, too, here is another type of the lumberjack, new style. From the lumber camps of Canada comes the word hat the swashbuckler of the past has been succeeded by a race of "collegiate lumberjacks," earnest and ambitious youths who are hewing trees to ain funds for a college education. He is no longer two-fisted fighting type. From a visitor to some f the Maine lumber camps comes this word: "Shades of the old days! He has springs on his ed and music is served to him. He's so pampered he hardly fights any more, but listens to ermons. He finds literature, motion pictures and ll comforts awaiting him in the woods, the food erved him is excellent, he washes three times day, takes a diurnal shave and bathes at least very Saturday night."

Paul Bunyan Marking His Logs.

But for all these changes, brought about by ndustrial conditions which have revolutionized he lumber industry, it's a safe bet that this winter, when the day's work is over and the lumberjack, modern though he is in every respect, retires to his clean bunk house with its individual beds, he will still swap yarns with his fellow workers, and some of these yarns will tell of the mighty deeds of Paul Bunyan. Ever hear of Paul? If you haven't, you've missed a real treat.

For if the lumberjack had contributed nothing else to history before he passed on into oblivion, his contribution of Paul Bunyan should be enough to give him immortal fame. Paul Bunyan is the only native American myth hero, the superlumberjack. He originated in the imagination of the lumberjack and the old-timers used to tell their "whoppers" about him to overawe the greenhorns in camp, just as the cowboys loved to "stuff" the tenderfoot with all sorts of impossible information. Paul's exploits were never recounted in narrative form. The old-timers made their statements more impressive for the greenhorn by dropping their remarks about Paul in an off-hand, casual manner as though referring to matters of common knowledge, and when two of them remembered meeting each other in one of Paul Bunyan's camps they usually established the exact time and place, such as "on the Big Onion the winter of the blue snow" or "at Shot Gunderson's camp on the Tadpole the year of the sourdough drive."

The stories about Paul Bunyan increased as the years went on until the tales of his exploits are innumerable. Students of mythology saw in these yarns epic material, or as some one has expressed it, "the professors got interested in Paul," and scientific studies have been made of him. In fact so great has become the interest in this superlumberjack that within the last year or two two books have been written about him, one by Mrs. Esther Shepherd of Reed college, Oregon, and the other by James Stevens, whose version of Paul's exploits started him on the road to literary fame. The Red River Lumber company also has published "for the amusement of our friends" a little booklet called "Paul Bunyon and His Big Blue Ox," and to this the writer of this article is indebted for some of the illustrations and many "facts."

Just where Paul Bunyan originated is not known. As to where he has been and worked—everywhere! You can hear a Paul Bunyan yarn in Maine and the same one with slight variations in Michigan, North Dakota, Oregon or California. "As long as he stayed around the camps his previous history was treated with the customary consideration and he was asked no questions, but when he broke into college and the professors got after him, it was all off. Then he had to have ancestors, a birthday and all sorts of vital statistics." According to Mrs. Shepherd, he was born in Maine. When three weeks o'd he rolled around so much in his sleep that he destroyed four square miles of standing timber. Then they built a floating cradle for him and anchored it off Eastport. When Paul rocked in his cradle it caused a 75-foot tide in the Bay of Fundy and several villages were washed away. He couldn't be wakened, however, until the British navy was called out and fired broadsides for seven hours. When Paul stepped out of his cradle he sank seven warships, and the British government seized his cradle and used the timber to build seven more. That saved Nova Scotia from becoming an island, but the tides in the Bay of Fundy haven't subsided yet.

Nothing more is heard about Paul's early history until he appeared in the Maine woods, full-grown and ready to work. By this time he had acquired his most valuable ally, Babe, the Big Blue Ox, who, according to one authority, was seven axhandles wide between the eyes (others say forty-two axhandles and one plug of tobacco) and who could pull anything that had two ends to it. Paul used Babe to pull the kinks out of crooked logging roads and once Babe pulled a chain of three links out into a straight bar. But Babe's most valuable feat was this: Paul hitched him to a whole section (640 acres) of forest and he hauled it to the landing where Paul sheared off the trees at his leisure and dropped them into the river.

Of course Babe had a tremendous appetite and in one day he could eat all the feed a crew could tote to the camp in a year. Between meals he was accustomed to eat a snack of 50 bales of hay and it took a crew of six men with pickaxes to pick the wire out of his teeth. Babe's tracks were so deep that once a settler, his wife and baby fell into one of them and the son finally got out when he was fifty-seven years old and reported the accident. All of the thousands of lakes in Minnesota today are nothing more than Babe's tracks that filled up with water.

No less interesting an animal than Babe was Benny, the calf, who was very much undernourished when Paul got him from a farmer in Bangor, Maine, and weighed only two tons. Paul drove from Bangor to his headquarters at Devil's Lake, N. D., and led Benny behind the sleigh. In the stimulating western air Benny began to grow and every time Paul looked back the calf was two feet taller. That night Benny was put in the barn and the next morning the barn was gone. Later it was discovered on the calf's back as he scampered about the camp. Benny finally died of indigestion. He was very fond of pancakes and once made the fatal mistake of swallowing a red hot stove as he ate the pancakes from its top. He lies buried in South Dakota—the Black Hills form the mound.

One other animal was included in Paul's barnyard galaxy, Lucy, the cow, who Paul declared was part Jersey and part wolf. She, too, had a tremendous appetite and Paul had to turn her out and let her shift for herself. The Winter of the Deep Snow, when even the tallest pines were buried under the snowdrifts, Paul outfitted her with two pairs of snowshoes, a pair of green goggles and turned her out to graze on the snowdrifts. At first she had some trouble with the snowshoes, but as soon as she learned to shift gears without wrecking herself she began to run all over North America. Finally Paul had to hang a church bell on her neck so that he would know where she was. When the Deep snow melted Lucy began to feed on the evergreen trees and her milk got so strong of white pine and balsam that Paul's lumberjacks began using it for cought medicine and linament.

Paul's chief helpers in his lumbering operations were the Seven Axmen. They sharpened their axes by rolling stones downhill, running alongside of them and holding their axes on the revolving stones. They hung their axes on long ropes and as each of the axmen marched through the forest he whirled his ax around him until the hum sounded like one of Paul's fore-and-aft mosquitoes (he had produced them by crossing them with bumblebees), and at every step a quarter section of timber was cut. Finally the Seven Axmen left Paul's employ so he had Big Ole (the blacksmith, whose principal job was to punch holes in doughnuts) make him a Down Cutter. This was like a mowing machine and with it Paul could drive around eight townships and cut a swath 500 feet wide.

At different times Paul had different numbers of men in his employ and feeding them was a big problem. The winter he logged off North Dakota he had 300 cooks, making pancakes for the Seven Axmen and the Little Chore-Boy. On the Big Onion he had a crew so big that he never knew within several hundred either way just how many he had. It was a big job hauling the prune pits and coffee grounds from camp, so finally Paul decided that it would be cheaper to move his camp away from them than to move them away from the camp. Lucky they did, too! The chipmunks that ate the prune pits got so big that they killed all the wolves and might have attacked the lumberjacks next.

Benny the Little Blue Ox.

At one of his camps Paul had a griddle for making the cakes, of which the Seven Axmen were so fond, that was so large that you couldn't see across it when the steam was thick. The griddle was greased by colored boys who skated around on it with hams tied to their feet. They had to have colored boys to stand the heat. The batter was stirred in big drums like concrete mixers and was poured on with a crane and spout. When soup was served the cook put a stern-wheel steamer, which Paul had shipped up the Red River for that purpose, in the kettle to stir it.

Paul had some trouble keeping a cook. One cook got lost between the flour bin and root cellar and starved to death. Another one used so much grease that he had to wear calked shoes to keep from sliding out of the cook shanty, and rub sand on his hands when he picked up anything. One cook, Sourdough Sam, made everything except coffee out of sourdough. He had only one leg and one arm. The others had been blown off when his sourdough barrel blew up at the Tadpole River camp the year Shot Gunderson took charge for Paul. Finally Paul sent for his cousin, Big Joe, who came from three weeks below Quebec. Big Joe had Big Ole make him a dinner horn with which to call the crews to their meals. This horn was so big that the first time Joe used it he blew down ten acres of pine. The next time he blew straight up in the air, but this caused such storms at sea. So Paul had to junk the dinner horn and ship it east where it was made into a tin roof for a big Union Depot.

Paul was a great inventor. He invented the round turn on logging roads and the grindstone to save the Seven Axmen from running down hill. This grindstone was so big that, working at full speed, every time it turned around once it was payday. All of his inventions were successful except when he decided to run three ten-hour shifts a day and installed the Aurora Borealis. After a number of trials he had to abandon the plan because the lights were not dependable.

At riding logs in the drive Paul was a master. He could spin a log so fast that the bark came off and then he would run ashore on the bubbles. He once threw a peavy into the river at St. Louis and, standing on it, poled all the way up to Brainerd, Minn. No matter how rough the water was, Paul could ride a log through it. He could ride in water so rough that it would tear an ordinary man in two just to drink out of the river. He was a mighty hunter and fisherman. In the morning he would row out into the Atlantic in his boat and return in the evening, wading ashore with his ship, filled with fish, on his shoulder. He invented a gun that was so big that it took four dishpans full of powder and a keg of spikes to load each barrel. With this he could shoot wild geese so high in the air that they spoiled before they reached the ground.

Man 77 Years Old Restored to Good Health

Recovers From Stomach Trouble, Dizziness, and Other Ailments. Feels 30 Years Younger. Thanks Tanlac

If good health seems slipping from you; if indigestion, nervousness, and ailments caused by a run-down condition torture you, benefit from the remarkable experience of J. A. Groff, retired restaurant owner of East Dubuque, Ill., who suffered for many years only to regam health and strength.

Sitting in his comfortable home Mr. Groff recently said: "My condition was unbearable. Nervousness caused splitting headaches and made sleep impossible. I was always tired and worn-out. My hands shook like a leaf. I had no appetite for food. And when I ate I suffered from indigestion.

"I sought relief, trying this and that without success. Then Tanlac came to the rescue. It has made me feel 30 years younger.

"I am feeling stronger and healthier. I eat everything without a thought of pain. Tanlac drove away dizziness caused by constipation, calmed my nerves. This great tonic saved me from long years of suffering, banished pain and built up my strength. Everyone should take it."

Mr. Groff is only one of many Illinois men and women now enjoying the benefits of good health and vital strength, thanks to Tanlac, the safe, effective remedy made from roots, barks and herbs, according to the famous Tanlac formula.

Learn from their experience. Good health and strength can be yours, too. The first bottle of Tanlac shows amazing results. Ask your druggist for Tanlac—today!

Gasoline Whaleboats

Use of a 45-mile-an-hour speedboat with a 700-pound aluminum gasoline engine to chase whales has been reported to the United States Commerce department from New Zealand. Competition forced the South sea whalers to abandon their picturesque wooden vessels, the report from Consul General Lowrie of Wellington said.

Cave's Evil Repute Saved Soldier's Life

About three miles below Niagara falls on the American side is an immense cavern in the side of the gorge It is reached from the bank by winding steps, cut in the solid rock, and a narrow path. The Indians believed that an evil spirit dwelt in this cavern, and that any one venturing in would meet with a swift death.

The entrance is low and forbidding, but the interior is large and lofty; a rill of clear, cold water trickles from the rocks at the further end. At the mouth of the cavern is a rock so shaped as to conceal the entrance from either direction until one is abreast of it—this is Ambush rock.

Not far off on a ledge jutting over the water and about a hundred feet above it is a rock fifteen feet long, the Council rock, around which the Indians met to transact tribal business, plan raids and smoke the peace pipe with friendly nations.

Bloody run, a small, turbulent stream, flows over the precipice above the ledge. It received its name when a detachment of ninety soldiers sent from Fort Niagara to Fort Schlosser to guard a wagon train of provisions was attacked by Senecas while encamped on the run, and massacred. Only three men escaped.

One leaped to his horse and galloped away, and one, a drummer boy, lodged in a tree halfway down the precipice when the Indians drove some of the soldiers over the brink. The third man fled to the cavern, and though pursued by the savages to the very entrance, so strong was the Indian belief in the evil power of the spirit of the cavern, and so sure were they that the white man would meet a more terrible death than they could devise, they went away without posting the usual couple of braves to wait for him to come out.

Women Poor Air Pilots

Women are not fit to pilot passenger-carrying airplanes and they never will be So declares Maj. Oliver Stewart, English airman. What is his reason? "They are too fearless!"

"The fearless pilot is almost invariably a bad pilot," says the major. "Fear is the best of flying instructors, for it teaches the pupils what not to do, and it warns them in a memorable manner what will happen if they disobey Women are without this instructor; they do not know physical fear The typical Englishwoman, who is sufficiently courageous to play furious football, and hic, hac, hockey, to fight for busses, to wear 'sensible' clothes in Paris, this woman, I say, should not be allowed with a blunt penknife in her hand, much less with the control stick of an airplane."

Hopeful Husband

Senator Edge said at an Atlantic City dinner party:

"There's hope for a husband if he's modest. A man in a bathing suit on the beach introduced me to his wife one day. Then, after she had gone into the water, he praised her warmly and said:

"'Our romance began in a most poetical way. Clara saved me from drowning She's a magnificent swimmer, you know.'

"He went into the water himself and splashed about a bit.

"'You don't go out very far,' I said, when he came back and joined me again.

"'No,' said he. 'She mightn't save me now'"

Police Signal Bombs

Bomb hurlers, "pill boxes" and radio signal system have now become the commonplace of the police force in Memphis, Tenn An inner and outer protective belt have been formed in the city, and six miniature brick stations resembling the "pill boxes" of the war are established in each belt. Each station is equipped with a radio receiving set, searchlight, bomb hurling signal device and two telephones. If notice reaches the station during daylight hours that a burglar is operating in the neighborhood the policeman in the pill box sets off the bomb-hurling device, and a series of aerial explosions warns the men motoring over their territory.

Banana Oil

Robert Henri, the portrait painter, said at a luncheon at Dark Harbor:

"Every woman is beautiful now. What hair, what eyes, what complexions! We men live in a paradise.

"A lady went to the studio of a friend of mine to have her portrait painted My friend said to her:

"'Do you know, I'm in despair. I have no colors on my palette that are brilliant enough and delicate enough to match your exquisite complexion.'

The lady laughed.

"'In that case,' she said, 'just make the outline sketch today and when I come tomorrow I'll bring some of my own colors for you.'"

To Build Big Dam

A new dam 32 feet higher than the famous one bearing the name of the late President Roosevelt is about to rise in the Colorado river and close a narrow gorge to back up water for the double purpose of irrigation and power generation. It is the Horse Mesa power dam, 17 miles below Roosevelt, Ariz. The structure will be 312 feet high. Bed rock, 34 feet below the water level, has been cleaned for the dam foundation. A series of holes was bored 50 feet deeper and cement injected under high pressure so as to fill any possible fissures and thus prevent leaks in the future. The dam proper will begin to rise at once.

There Are Limits Even to Executive Ability

Crichton, until his health deserted him, was a salesmanager. Then he went to the country and became an apiarist. You know, he kept bees—or rather, the bees kept him. His "Blossomdale" honey was sold at many of the better places. But some people bought the adjoining farm and started another apiary. Crichton's bees no longer enjoyed a monopoly of the flowers and blossoms. Business began to fall off.

So Crichton did the usual thing. He held a round-table conference. He told the bees they must hustle up more business; they must get on their toes. The bees seemed grieved, but they buzzed off, filled with serious purpose and augmented resolve.

Still Crichton was not satisfied. He organized an interhive contest and spurred them on. He posted graphs and tabulated returns. He told them of business cycles. The bees, of course, found all this confusing, but they tried to make good. Their wings became frayed; they no longer hummed at their work.

One day Crichton posted this circular letter: "It has come to my notice that outlying territory in North Forty is being neglected. We need that business. Go out and get it."

That night while Crichton slept, unusual agitation might have been seen among the hives. Some of the bolder bees hurried from door to door, and the rest streamed to the rendezvous

Scouts came back from Crichton's room and reported the window open Across the garden, up the wall, over the sill and under the bedclothes thousands of bees crawled steadily. At a given signal they bared their poisoned stilettos and plunged them to the hilt in the flesh of the ex-salesmanager He died at dawn.

Delightfully intelligent creatures, bees!—Kansas City Star.

Be Slow in Judgment

We are not always aware of the scars and we don't see the wounds of many a life we are tempted to condemn. If we knew all we might forgive all. We think we know, and discover that much has been hidden from us. Had we the trials of some it is quite possible that our achievements would be fewer than theirs.

There may be a score of unpleasant things about a man, but so long as there is one good feature it is worth our while to find it. Try for one week to put the one good fact of another's life by the side of the many things which you dislike and you will be surprised how happy you'll be.

There is still far more good in the world than badness. As we look round we can find many a gem in rough places and many a flower among the weeds.—London Tit-Bits.

Excess Optimism

Edsel Ford tells this story apropos of optimism:

"A bald-headed man went into a barber shop and asked the barber if he had any good preparations for growing hair

"'Here, sir,' said the barber, who was bald-headed himself, 'is an excellent thing.' He took a bottle of pink liquid from a shelf. 'My own invention, sir. Warranted to grow hair on the baldest head. The large-size bottle is worth five simoleons. The complete cure of six bottles would cost you twenty-five.'

"'All right; I'll take the complete cure,' said the man.

"And he chuckled happily, looked round the shelves and added:

"'By the way, you might wrap me up one of those patent electric hair-curlers, too.'"

Cheese in the Plural

Dr. Frank Vizetelly, editor of Funk & Wagnalls, says that "The plural of cheese is cheeses. It dates from 1300, and may be found in Langland's 'Vision of Piers Plowman'—'Twey grene cheses.' The plural is used in instances where various varieties are considered, or numbers are specified: 'The cheesemonger stocks cheeses of all types—American, Brie, Camembert, Cheddar, Dutch, Edam and many others.' 'The farmer had 50 cheeses in his cheeseroom.' In speaking of the article in its attributive sense or referring to it in bulk, the singular form of the word is correct, thus: 'Cheese sandwiches'; 'great quantities of cheese'; 'the cheese market.'"

A James Toast

Henry James was once dining with Theodore Cook, author of "The Sunlit Hours," on the latter's birthday. Lifting his glass of port, he rose with ponderous kindliness.

"My dear Theodore," he began, "I hold in my hand a glass, perhaps I should say goblet, filled to the brim with a fluid which has a poisonous and practically fatal effect on every nerve of my body; but I am asked to propose your health and if you imagine—if your friends here imagine—that by one scintilla it may be ameliorated, I will drink it to the dregs."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Sorts Cigars Quickly

Sixty times a minute a new cigar-sorting machine picks up a cigar, looks at it and selects the compartment where it belongs, according to the shade of its brown coloring. Mechanism then deposits it in the proper place. The new device, which is being utilized by several cigar manufacturers, is actuated by a photoelectric cell similar to those used in television Light from the cigar falls on the sensitive alkali metal coating inside the cell, resulting in a shower of electrons which, properly controlled in an electric circuit, act on a relay circuit.

TOOLS HAVE STOOD TEST OF CENTURIES

Workers of Long Ago Not So Unscientific.

Modern civilization is very proud of itself for its achievements in technology. Everything, from the modern steam shovel to the tool that fashions mainsprings for watches, is hailed as proving how far advanced we are over the benighted, unscientific workers centuries ago. But an English scientist recently summed up the things wherein we use the same old methods employed hundreds and even thousands of year ago, and the list is a revelation.

Bricks furnish perhaps the most striking example. About 3,000 years ago a certain method was found for making bricks—the best method available then. We use practically the same composition today. An Egyptian brickmaker's mold of the Nineteenth dynasty is precisely the same in shape and construction as those which are used today in fields where bricks are still made by hand.

The modern square and plummet are also exactly like ancient Egyptian specimens, and the stone mason's mallet still retains the shape it had in 2350 B. C. Even the composition of the mortar has not changed for at least 2,000 years—lime and sand, with the addition of hair as a binding material, were used by Roman builders.

Consider the hide tanner. The chemist has made many changes, but oak bark is still the best—as it was almost the earliest tanning substance.

Even linen has the first stage in its manufacture the same as it was in primitive times—the "retting" of the flax, either by steeping it in water or by simply exposing it to the dew, in order to remove the softer tissues and leave the fine fibers.

A humble thistle is still the best tool with which to raise the nap on woolen cloth, the nap being the external covering of fine short fibers that lie smoothly all in one direction. It is so expensive, however, that the machine process is usually preferred.

The origin of the potter's wheel is lost in antiquity, but those used today, although driven by electricity, differ practically not at all in pattern from those of ancient times.

From wall paintings found in Europe, it seems almost certain that the pipe of the modern glass blower has a direct descent of at least 4,500 years without essential change.

Machinery is all right for producing second-quality gold leaf, but the finest English gold leaf is still beaten by hand. The small pellet of gold is placed between layers of goldbeaters' skin (the prepared outside membrane of the large intestine of the ox) and hammered and rehammered with a wooden mallet, just as the best method has always been.

There are many more examples to this unending list of things where the tools of a past era are still supreme today—the snowshoe, the pestle and mortar of the chemist, the carpenter's nail, the navvy's pick and—add your own observations.

Swinging Baskets Puzzle

For several months scientists have been puzzled by swinging baskets brought from Borneo and set up in the Peabody museum, Cambridge, Mass. As soon as they were in place, reports Popular Science Monthly, they began their peculiar swinging, which suggested perpetual motion. Many explanations for this phenomenon were offered, but none seemed to cover it satisfactorily. Some thought there was something supernatural about the baskets, since they were originally "grave offerings" Finally two young scientists succeeded in stopping them by putting a kink in the wire from which they hung.

Useful Organization

The organization known as P. E. O. was founded January 21, 1869, at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, by seven girls. At first it was simply a secret society of a local school, but spread until at the present time it is reported to have 30,000 members scattered through the different states. Its present object is the acquisition and disposition of an educational loan fund whereby young girls past high school, who have not the means to secure higher education, may make a loan for one or two years to carry them through the preparatory college classes.

One Possible Place Left

In one household in the city a favorite expression used by one member is 'under the circumstances.' But the user didn't know she was overworking it until recently. She was looking the house over for a portfolio, with everybody in the family assisting, including a three-year-old niece. Finally she sank down on a chair in desperation.

"We've looked everywhere," she groaned. "Can anyone think of any place we haven't looked?"

"Oh, auntie," said Janie, suddenly struck with a thought, "have you looked under the 'circumstances'?"

Inherit Color Blindness

Color blindness, recent studies seem to indicate, is hereditary and is the result of a defect in the central nervous system says the Popular Science Monthly. It occurs oftener among boys and men than among girls and women, but in boys it is frequently only color ignorance, rather than an inherent defect.

As a corrective, special attention now is being given in the public schools to developing color sense among all the pupils.

SIMPLE MIXTURE STOPS GAS BLOATING

Simple buckthorn bark, glycerine, etc., as mixed in Adlerika, often helps stomach trouble in TEN minutes by removing GAS. Ordinance No. 41

An ORDINANCE GRANTING THE KOERNER TELEPHONE COMPANY, ITS SUCCESSORS AND ASSIGNS, THE RIGHT TO THE USE OF THE STREETS, ALLEYS, HIGHWAYS AND PUBLIC PLACES OF THE TOWN OF KLEMME, IOWA, FOR THE CONSTRUCTION RECONSTRUCTION, MAINTAINANCE AND OPERATION OF A LOCAL AND LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE SYSTEM, FOR A PERIOD OF TWENTY FIVE YEARS

BE IT ORDAINED, by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa;

Section 1. That there is hereby granted to the Koerner Telephone Company, its successors and assigns, the right to erect, construct, maintain, reconstruct, operate and use poles, wires, cables, and whatsoever other materials and fixtures necessary or convenient, upon, over and under the streets, alleys, highways and public places of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the construction, operation, maintainance and use of a Telephone system, both local and long distance, for a term of Twenty Five (25) Years under the provisions hereof

Section 2. The lines of poles, wires, cables and other materials and appliances as heretofore installed and now used in connection with and appurtenant to, said telephone system is hereby recognized and appoved, and additions thereto and betterments thereof shall be so placed and maintained as not to unreasonably interfere with public travel; it being understood that the street and alley committee of said Town shall supervise the placing of additional poles, wires and cables upon and under the streets and alleys of said Town, and all thereof shall be subject to statutory regulations now existing or hereafter legally enacted with reference thereto Whenever an adequate deposit of money for the use and benefit of said Koerner Telephone Company shall have been made with the Mayor of said Town of Klemme, and upon twenty-four (24) hours' written notice by the Mayor thereof, the said Koerner Telephone Company shall remove such of its poles, wires, cables or other appliances as may be necessary for the passage of buildings beingmoved within the said town or for excavations being made under the surface of the streets of said town, at the expense of the party requesting the same, but said telephone company shall not be required to remove poles or wires nor cables unless the route selected by the applicant shall be the most practical and expedient in the judgment of the Mayor of said Town, all interests and rights being duly considered

Section 3. All ordinances or parts of ordinances of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, in conflict herewith, are, upon the final adoption hereof, repealed.

Section 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Klemme Times and its adoption by the Council of the Town of Klemme and by the qualified electors of the Town of Klemme at a special election of said Town to be held on the 4th day of November, A D. 1926, and after the cost and expense of such submission and special election shall have been paid by the said Koerner Telephone Company.

Passed and adopted by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme and approved this 6th day of September, A D, 1926.

WATER SOFTENER IS NOW IN OPERATION AT LOHRVILL MUNICIPAL PLANT

Lohrville's new city water filtration system is now in operation and the 40,000 gallon reservoir is full of treated water. According to experiments, it will take about seven hours to treat and purify the reservoir of water Due to an extra heavy dose of the purifying chemicals in the water at the beginning, the Lohrville water had a peculiar taste the first few days after installation of the new filtration system. However, after the system is in working order it is believed that there will not be a noticeable difference in the taste.

Apples may be canned as sauce, in pie pieces, or whole in sirup. They may also be baked and canned.

TESTS SHOW SEED CORN TO BE INJURED BY FROST

All Except That Dry Enough To Crib Is Hurt By Frosts

With temperatures reported as low as 18 degrees in parts of Iowa during the recent frosts, it is certain that a considerable amount of corn in the field was injured for seed. Carefully conducted experiments in former years have shown about what percent of injury occurs with various temperatures and with varying moisture content in the corn.

Medium soft, dented corn will contain about 40 to 50 percent moisture and with temperatures of 32 to 28 degrees, only around 69 percent can be expected to germinate. With temperatures between 24 and 20 degrees, not more than about 12 percent of such corn will germinate.

Corn which is classed as mature will contain about 30 to 35 percent moisture. When subjected to temperatures of 32 to 28 degrees, about 75 percent of it will germinate and about 67 percent following temperatures of 20 to 24 degrees Corn ready to crib, or that with moisture content between 20 and 25 percent will germinate 100 percent following 28 to 32 degree temperatures and about 96 percent following 20 to 24 degree temperatures

Corn in the late dough stage (having around 50 to 55 percent moisture) may be expected to germinate only about 33 percent following 28 to 32 degree temperatures and only 6 percent after encountering temperatures of 24 to 20 degrees

With the foregoing guides, farmers should be able to tell fairly well about what percent of their field corn may be depended on to furnish seed.

The Girl in the Mirror

By ELIZABETH JORDAN

(© by The Century Company.) WNU Service

This latest Elizabeth Jordan story is one of the most fascinating mystery novels of the last fifteen years, and that is saying a great deal when you realize that within this period such tremendous successes as "The Bat," "The Thirteenth Chair" and 'Seven Keys to Baldpate" were made known. "The Girl in the Mirror" is not only an interest-compelling story, but also possesses that quality of romance and adventure which sweeps the reader onward with increasing speed and delight to the astounding climax. Elizabeth Jordan has written many a good story, and in producing this she only adds another chapter in her own success story. And to say any more about a mystery story would be unfair. Elizabeth Jordan began her writing career with the New York World. After thirteen years of this kind of schooling she resigned to take the editorship of Harper's Bazar, which she held for another period of thirteen years. Later she became a literary adviser to this publication. Among her successes are "Wings of Youth," "The Lady of the Pentlands" and "The Blue Circle."

CHAPTER I

Barbara's Wedding

The little city of Devondale, Ohio, had shaken off for one night at least the air of aristocratic calm that normally distinguished it from the busy mill towns on its right and left. Elm avenue, its leading residence street, usually presented at this hour only an effect of watchful trees, dark shrubbery, shaded lamps, and remote domestic peace. Now, however, it had blossomed into a brilliant thoroughfare, full of light, color and movement, on all of which the December stars winked down as if in intimate understanding.

Automobiles poured through the wide gates of its various homes and joined a ceaseless procession of vehicles. Pedestrians, representing every class of the city's social life, jostled one another on the sidewalks as they hurried onward, following this vanguard. For the time, indeed, there seemed to be but one destination which a self-respecting citizen of Devondale might properly have in mind; and already many of the elect had reached this objective and had comfortably passed through its wide doors, down its aisles, and into its cushioned pews.

It was an interested, good-humored and highly observant crowd, pressing forward as each automobile approached, to watch with unashamed curiosity the guests who alighted and made their way along the strip of carpet stretching from curbstone to church. Devondale's leading citizens were here, and the spectators knew them all, from those high personages who were presidents of local banks down to little Jimmy Harrigan, who was Barbara Devon's favorite caddie at the Country club.

Unlike most of his fellow guests, Jimmy arrived on foot; but the crowd saw his unostentatious advent and greeted him with envious badinage.

"Hi, dere, Chimmie, where's yer evenin' soot?" one acquaintance desired to know. And a second remarked solicitously, "De c'rect ting, Chimmie, is t' hold yer hat to yer heart as y' goes in!"

Jimmy made no reply to these pleasantries. The occasion was too big and too novel for that. He merely grinned, presented his card of admission in a paw washed clean only in spots, and accepted with equal equanimity the piercing gaze of the usher and the rear seat to which that outraged youth austerely conducted him.

"There, round-eyed Jimmy stared about him. He had never been inside of St. Giles' before. It was quite possible that he would never find himself inside of it again. He took in the beauty of the great church; its blaze of lights; its masses of flowers; its whispering, waiting throng; the broad white ribbon that set apart certain front pews for the bride's special friends, including a party from New York. Jimmy knew all about those friends and all about this wedding. His grimy little ears were ceaselessly open to the talk of the town, and for weeks past the town had talked of nothing but the Devons and Barbara Devon's approaching wedding.

In the pew just in front of Jimmy, Mrs. Arthur Lytton, a lady he recognized as a ubiquitous member of the Country club, was giving a few intimate details of Miss Devon's life to her companion, who evidently was a newcomer to the city.

"You see," Mrs. Lytton was murmuring, "this is really the most important wedding we've ever had here. Barbara Devon owns most of Devondale, and her home, Devon house, is one of the show places of the state. She hasn't a living relative except her brother, Laurie, and I fancy she has been lonely, notwithstanding her hosts of friends. We all love her, so we're glad to know she has found the right man to marry, especially as we are not to lose her ourselves. She intends to live in Devon house every summer."

The newcomer—a Mrs. Renway who had social aspirations—was politely attentive.

"I met Laurence Devon at the Country club yesterday," she said. "He's the handsomest creature I've seen, I think. He's really too good-looking; and they say there's some romantic story about him. Do you know what it is?"

Her friend nodded.

"Mercy, yes! Every one does."

Observing the other's growing attention, she went on expansively:

"You see, Laurie was the black sheep of the family; so the Devons left all their great fortune to Barbara and put Laurie in her care. That infuriated him, of course, for he is a high-spirited youngster. He promptly took on an extra shade of blackness. He was expelled from college, and sowed whole crops of wild oats. He gambled, was always in debt, and Barbara had to pay. For a long time she wasn't able to handle the situation. They're both young, you know. She's about twenty-four, and Laurie is a year younger. But last year she suddenly put her mind on it and pulled him up in a rather spectacular way."

Mrs. Renway's eyes glistened with interest.

"Tell me how!" she begged.

The raconteur settled back into her pew, with the complacent expression of one who is sure of her hearer's complete absorption in her words.

"Why," she said, "she made Laurie a sporting proposition, and he accepted it. He and she were to go to New York and earn their living for one year, under assumed names and without revealing their identity to anybody. They were to start with fifty dollars each, and to be wholly dependent upon themselves after that was gone. Laurie was to give up all his bad habits and buckle down to the job of self-support. For every dollar he earned more than Barbara earned, she promised him five dollars at the end of the year. And if he kept his pledges he was to have ten thousand dollars when the experiment was over, whether he succeeded or failed. He and Barbara were to live in different parts of the city, to be ignorant of each other's addresses, and to see each other only twice."

She stopped for breath. Her friend drove an urgent elbow into her side.

"Go on!" she pleaded. "What happened?"

"Something very unexpected," chuckled Mrs. Lytton. (For some reason, Barbara's friends always chuckled at this point in the story.) "Barbara, who is so clever," she went on, "almost starved to death. And Laurie, the black sheep, after various struggles and failures fell in with some theatrical people and finally collaborated with a successful playwright in writing a play. Perhaps it was partly luck. But the play made a tremendous hit, Laurie kept his pledges, and Barbara has had to pay him a small fortune to meet her bargain."

The hearer smiled sympathetically.

"That's splendid," she said, "for Laurie! But is the cure permanent, do you think? The boy's so young, and so awfully good-looking—"

"I know," Mrs. Lytton looked ominous. "He is straight as a string so far, and absorbed in his new work. But of course his future is on the knees of the gods, for Barbara is going to Japan on her honeymoon, and Laurie will be alone in New York the rest of the winter. Barbara found her husband in New York," she added. "He's a broker there, Robert Warren. That's what she got out of the experiment! She met him while she was working in the mailing department of some business house, for seven dollars a week—" Mrs. Lytton stopped speaking and craned her head backward. "They're coming!" she whispered excitedly. "Oh, dear, I hope I sha'n't cry! I always do cry at weddings, and I never know why."

From the crowd outside there rose a cheer, evidently at the bride's appearance. The echoes of it accompanied her progress into the church.

"The mill people adore Barbara," whispered Mrs. Lytton. "She built a big clubhouse for them two years ago, and she's the president of most of their clubs."

In his seat behind her, Jimmy Harrigan, who had given his attention to the conversation, sniffed contemptuously. If the dame in front was goin' to talk about Miss Devon, why didn't she tell somethin' worth while? Why didn't she tell, fer ins'ance, that Miss Devon played the best golf of any woman in the club, and had beaten Mrs. Lytton to a frazzle in a match last month? An' why didn't she say somethin' about how generous Miss Devon was to caddies in the matter of skates and boxing gloves and clothes? And why didn't she say what a prince Laurie Devon was, instead of all dat stale stuff what everybody knew?

The excitement in the street had communicated itself to the dignified assemblage in the church. The occupants of the pews were turning in their seats. The first notes of the great pipe-organ rolled forth. Friends who had known and loved Barbara

The Third, Stalking Behind Her With Her Train Grasped in His Tiny Fists, Was the Infant Samuel Mrs. Lytton Had Mentioned.

Devon since she was a little girl, and many who had known her father and mother before her, looked now at the radiant figure she presented as she walked slowly up the aisle on her brother's arm, and saw that figure through an unexpected mist.

"What a pair!" whispered Mrs. Renway, who had a pagan love of beauty. "They ought to be put in one of their own parks and kept there as a permanent exhibit for the delight of the public. It's almost criminal negligence to leave that young man at large," she darkly predicted. "Something will happen if they do!"

Mrs. Lytton absently agreed.

"The bridegroom is very handsome, too," she murmured. "That stunning, insolent creature who is acting as matron of honor, and looking bored to death by it, is his sister, Mrs. Ordway of New York. The first bridesmaid is another New York friend, a Russian girl named Sonya Orleneff, that Barbara met in some lodging house. And will you look at the Infant Samuel!"

An expression of acute strain settled over the features of Mrs. Renway. She hurriedly adjusted her eyeglasses.

"The what?" she whispered, excitedly. "Where? I don't see any infant!"

Mrs. Lytton laughed.

"Of course you don't! It's too small and too near the floor. It's a thirty-months-old youngster Barbara picked up in a New York tenement. She calls him the Infant Samuel, and she has brought him here with his mother, to live on her estate. They say she intends to educate him. He's carrying her train and he's dressed as a page, in tiny white satin breeches and lace ruffles. Oh, don't miss him!"

A little ripple stirred the assemblage. Three figures in the long advancing line of the bridal party held the attention of observers. Two were the bride and her brother. The third, stalking behind her, with her train grasped in his tiny fists, his round brown eyes staring straight ahead, and his fluffy brown hair flying out as if swept backward by an eternal breeze, was obviously the Infant Samuel Mrs. Lytton had mentioned.

From a rear pew the Infant's mother watched her offspring with pride and shuddering apprehension. It was quite on the cards that he might suddenly decide to leave the procession and undertake a brief side excursion into the pews. But Samuel had been assured that he was "taking a walk," and as taking a walk happened to be his favorite pastime he kept manfully to his new form of diversion, even though it had features that did not strongly appeal to him. His short legs wabbled, and his tiny arms ached under the light weight of the bridal train, but Something would happen if he let that train drop. He did not know quite what this Something would be, but he abysmally inferred that it would be extremely unpleasant. He held grimly to his burden.

Suddenly he forgot it. The air was full of wonderful sounds such as he had never heard before. His eyes grew larger. His mouth formed the "O" that expressed his deepest wonder. He longed to stop and find out where the sounds came from, but the train drew him on and on. With an unconscious sigh he accompanied the train; bad as things were, they might have been worse, for he knew that somewhere in advance of him, lost in a mass of white stuff, was the "Babs" he adored

When the train stopped, he stopped. In response to an urgent suggestion from some one behind him, he dropped it. In obedience to an equally urgent inner prompting, he sat down on it and gazed around. The walk had been rather a long one. Now the big house he was in was very still, save for one voice, saying something to Babs. It was all strange and unfamiliar, and Babs seemed far away. Nothing and nobody looked natural. Samuel became increasingly doubtful about the pleasure of this walk. The corners of his mouth went down.

A flower fell into his lap, and looking up he saw Sonya Orleneff smiling at him. Even Sonya was a new Sonya, emerging from what Samuel dimly felt to be pink clouds. But the eyes were hers, and the smile was hers, and it was plain that she expected him to play with the pink flower. He pulled it to pieces, slowly and absorbedly. The task took some time. From it he passed to a close contemplation of a pink-slippered foot which also proved to be Sonya's, and then to a careful study of a black pump and black silk sock that proved to be Lawwie's. Lawwie was smiling down at Samuel, too, and Wobert was standing beside Babs, saying something in a voice that wobbled.

Samuel sighed again. Perhaps by and by Lawwie would take him out for a real walk in the snow. All this pink-and-white display around him might be pretty, but there was nothing in it for a small boy. He gazed appealingly at Sonya, who promptly hoisted him to his fat legs. The man at the railing had stopped talking to Babs and the walk was resumed, this time toward the door. Again that especially precious part of the white stuff was in Samuel's keeping.

The sounds that now filled the air were more wonderful than ever. They excited Samuel. His fat arms waved, and the light train waved with them. A compelling hand, Sonya's, quieted them and it. There was absolutely nothing a little boy could do in this queer walk. Gloomily but sedately the Infant Samuel continued his promenade.

"Here he is," murmured Mrs. Lytton to her friend. "You can see him now, can't you?"

"Rodney Bangs, the playwright who collaborated with Laurie, is sitting in the front pew," continued her informant, "and the fat little bald man next to him is Jacob Epstein, the New York manager who put on their play."

At the same moment Epstein was whispering to his companion, as the two watched Barbara and her husband start down the aisle in the first little journey of their married life.

"Say, Bangs, if ve could put this vedding into a play, just like they done it here, ve could vake up Broadvay a little—ain't it?"

You'll learn more about Laurie in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Odd Masks Worn at Festivals for Dead

One of the queer and interesting customs of the Melanesians, dark-skinned inhabitants of the South Sea islands, is the festival in honor of their dead. At their festivals masks of grotesque appearance play an important part, says the Detroit News.

A collection of such masks has been made for the American Museum of Natural History. One of them resembles a crested helmet. Masks of this type, it is said, must be carved in secret and presented to the public view only during the funeral ceremonies. The crest of the mask represents an earlier custom of hairdress of the natives when they were in mourning. In the early days they shaved their heads on such occasions, leaving only a single ridge of hair.

One particular type has long, wing-like processes. The face is carved from wood and the fibrous parts of plants are used in working out the other parts of the head. With such masks bark is used as a covering for the neck. Masks from the Gazelle peninsula, New Britain, are made from the facial bones of skulls. The flesh is removed and replaced by sticky lumps of earth.

Etruria in History

In ancient geography Etruria was a division of Italy, north and west of the Tiber and west of the Apennine mountains, and including the valley of the Arno. Modern Tuscany and the northern half of the province of Rome cover about the same territory today. Etruria proper contained a confederation of twelve cities, each of which was independent. The people of Etruria, called Etruscans, were the most advanced of any in Italy before the rise of Rome. They had a highly developed political organization. They were at the height of their power about 500 B. C., and were the allies of Carthage. With the rise of Rome came a struggle in which the Etruscans were worsted, becoming virtually tributary in 309 B. C., to the more powerful Roman state.—Exchange.

Tells a Good Story About Headache

Glendale, N. Y. Mrs. J. Schwing writes:—"My head was dizzy at frequent intervals. My stomach was upset and I was horribly constipated. I took Carter's Little Liver Pills and I soon noticed a decided improvement. It is months now since I have had a headache or sick stomach. Your pills have merit."

Carter's Little Liver Pills, a purely vegetable laxative, relieve the constipated condition. They cleanse the intestines of their poisonous matter. They are sugar coated, small, and easy to take. Druggists, 25 & 75c red package.

Barbarossa

A GERMAN lad—nearly eight hundred years ago—made Charlemagne his model in life, and resolved to duplicate the French king's feats and win the same power and glory. Like many another historical celebrity, the German youth was red-haired. From this fact his Italian enemies later nicknamed him "Barbarossa" (Red-Beard). His Christian name was Frederick and he was nephew of Conrad, emperor of Germany

Charlemagne had one early advantage over Barbarossa for he was direct heir to the throne while Conrad had a son of his own Yet so cleverly did the young Barbarossa arrange matters that he, and not this rightful heir, was chosen by Conrad as his successor. The people ratified the choice, and on Conrad's death in 1152 Barbarossa, then twenty-nine years old, came to the throne.

He found Germany in no enviable condition. Disputes had arisen among the petty principalities of the country, and, under Conrad's easy rule, the ties of allegiance had weakened Moreover, Germany's claims to suzerainty in Italy and other lands had been allowed to lapse. Altogether, Barbarossa had a very poor start in his plan of rivaling Charlemagne's greatness.

In no way discouraged at the gloomy prospect, the young king set to work at once reconciling the differences among the home principalities and making decidedly advantageous alliances and treaties for himself at home and abroad. Unlike most medieval heroes, he was more than a mere warrior. He was also a shrewd politician and an adept in the art of cajoling when coercion failed. In this way he proceeded to strengthen and consolidate Germany into a compact, contented nation. He then made municipal and civic reforms, promoted the cause of education and culture and started Germany once more upon the path of progress.

Having accomplished these tremendous tasks, Barbarossa turned his attention to the Italians who had shaken off Germany's yoke. The Milanese, who ruled much of the northern part of Italy, had maltreated German subjects. Barbarossa, at the head of an army, marched against these rebels, conquered them and laid waste northern Italy. Having thus avenged his subjects' real or fancied wrongs, he marched over the Apennines upon Rome, and there, on June 18, 1155, he was crowned "Holy Roman Emperor." The resemblance to Charlemagne being thus far carried out, he hurried back to Germany, whence tidings had come of robber knights and barons who, taking advantage of their emperor's absence, had set out on a high-handed course of misrule.

Barbarossa wasted little time in crushing these oppressors. He then resumed his plans of conquest. By diplomacy more than by force he won the allegiance of Poland, of Hungary, of Bohemia and the powerful French province of Burgundy. He then went back to Italy and besieged and captured Milan.

The pope, noting this rapid acquisition of power, demanded that Barbarossa become a papal vassal. Barbarossa calmly refused and showed himself able and ready to enforce his refusal. The pope for the time withdrew his demands. But it was soon after this that Barbarossa scandalized Christendom by practically declaring war on the Vatican.

The dispute was purely political and cast no reflection on the emperor's religious faith. Alexander III was pope. Barbarossa favored an anti-pope's claims. Alexander promptly excommunicated him. Barbarossa, in retaliation, stormed Rome and took possession of the Vatican. Italy held its breath at such sacrilege. But even while the world looked on, spellbound, a pestilence swept the German army at Rome (sent, as Alexander declared, in punishment for Barbarossa's blasphemous conduct), and of all that vast host only a scattered remnant returned alive to Germany.

At sight of this weakening of their dreaded master's forces the cities of Lombardy, Italy, formed a confederation against Barbarossa, utterly routing him in battle at Lignano. The emperor was crushed under his falling horse and left on the field for dead. But within three days he reappeared —miraculously, it was thought—at the head of his surviving troops at Pavia.

His plans were defeated, his great power apparently gone. Another man would have despaired. But Barbarossa merely exchanged war once more for diplomacy. He acknowledged Alexander as the true pope and by various crafty maneuvers of wire-pulling and statesmanship regained political control of Italy. Not content with this, he set forth to capture the Holy Land from the Turks. He won two decisive victories in Asia Minor, but before he could reach Palestine itself he was drowned, in 1190, while trying to cross a river—an inglorious death for the hero who had conquered and ruled the greater part of the continent of Europe!

Barbarossa's achievements in behalf of his native land marked a distinct epoch in history. He helped on the cause of the people by granting rights and franchises to cities, and set a world example of model and progressive government. Civilization and the arts throve under his wise reign.

FELT HAT STAGES COMEBACK; PARIS THINKS WELL OF PLAID

LIKE certain favorite players who perennially announce a "positively last appearance" the felt hat is successfully staging another "farewell performance." But is it "farewell"? Not from present indications. Rather is the felt hat endearing itself to its audience even to a greater degree than heretofore, in that it is presenting an entirely new and varied program in which artful creased crowns and cunning rippling brims are playing leading roles.

Of course when it comes to dressy millinery for dressy occasions, the mode is very explicit in that regard, insisting on a more ornate and elaborate styling than we have been accustomed to for many seasons past.

If in Paris do as Parisians do, that is, choose any sort of material just so it is gay plaid. This vogue for plaid is sweeping through the entire of fashion's realm.

The picture portrays two unlike yet equally handsome versions of the plaid mode. Plaid worsted is given flattering treatment in the Paris-made two-piece frock to the right. In this instance the darker side of the plaid cloth is used for the skirt, the reverse giving a varied trimming for the blouse, which itself is made of beige kasha matched to the predominating tone in the plaid.

None other than a French stylist could contrive so intricate a fabric handling as is evidenced in the wine-colored plaid silk frock shown here to the left. Manipulation of material is an outstanding bright light in the newer apparel creations. Elaborately styled yet simple in appearance to the eye, is a sentiment which prevails throughout all dress design.

Variety in Felt Hats.

The latest smart combination registers leather and plaided woolen, using the latter for the skirt, lining the gay leather coatee with the plaid where it also gives an enlivening contrast in collar and cuffs to match.

Very popular is the fashion for skirt of plaid, either silk or wool, topped with a velvet jacket. Also one sees the black or navy velvet skirt designed in scalloped tiers, with which is worn a tunic or blouse of plaid taffeta.

Perfectly stunning velvet plaid two-piece frocks are appearing on avenue and boulevard with which are worn velvet hats in solid coloring, shirred, corded or stitched, the ensemble enhanced by a handsome fur neckpiece.

Costume ensembles are of the latest which use plaid for the one-piece dress and for the lining of the top-coat which itself is developed of either solid-colored velvet or cloth.

Black and white plaid woolens are especially featured in smart coatings. These are offset with trimmings of furs blended to the color effect of the cloth. Often the plaid presents a salt-and-pepper effect over its surface.

Ombre plaid is the very newest fabric sensation. It is especially effective in the heavy worsted materials. For instance a brown, green and beige plaid will be very dark at one edge of the cloth, grading into pale coloring at the other. The climax of elegance in these ombre plaids is reached with the interweaving of gold and silver thread.

Two Handsome Versions of Plaid Mode.

For practical wear, youthful, novel and becoming types, such as the picture shows, are quite the proper thing.

There are points of outstanding interest in each of these models so carefully selected as representative of the mode. An evolution of the old-time cloche, but in softer effect, describes in a measure the first little hat. There is the inevitable crease in the soft crown and there is also the stylish trim of grosgrain ribbon.

Perforated felt gives us something new to think about. An effective patterning is worked out on the tall modish crown of the fine velours shape shown to the left of this group.

Some crowns show the crease from right to left as instanced in the little hat shown to the right. Note that it is a very fine velours, and it is this quality-kind which is in demand this season.

Exploiting the latest slant-back draped crown is the girlish felt hat shown in the center. It is in Lanvin green with a grosgrain banding in the now-so-much-talked-of jungle green.

Again the soft brim is apparent in the model to the left below, and it is ribbon bound, this being a feature of so many of the fashionable felts.

One of the whims of fashion is for the hatband carried out in two or three tones. Felt hats often match shoes and handbags in their coloring.

LECT NEW OFFICERS OR FARM BUREAU

NUAL MEETING OF HANCOCK COUNTY FARM BUREAU HELD AT BRITT OCT. 14

. Schlawin Of Klemme Elected New Vice President

The annual meeting of the Han- k County Farm Bureau was held the Coliseum at Britt, Thursday, tober 14th

The reports of the various officers owed that the Farm Bureau had e a good piece of work in the t pear.

The meeting was in charge of sident Lawhorn of Garner and his opening remarks he brought the fact that the Farm Bureau mbership had made a good in- ase this year and that the organ- tion was stronger than ever. It been more successful in putting r a good program than ever be- e. Mr. Lawhorn had been presi- t of the Farm Bureau for three rs and has been very active in work. He is also a member of Executive Committee of the Iowa rm Bureau Federation.

Mrs. A. R. Lewison, of Kanawha, airman of Women's Work, gave report of that project. She brought t the fact that women were or- nized in all townships and that Home Furnishing Work had en taken this year. Every township the county had worked on this oject. Instruction has been in arge of Miss Ramer.

Mrs. E. J. Schneider, of Goodell, orted on the Girls Club Work. It s been encouraging to note that ery township in the county but o are organized with approximate- two hundred members. These girls ve directed their efforts this sea- n along the Home Furnishing line, d many of them have refinished eir rooms and furniture and made her articles useful for their room. rls Club exhibits were made at e Winnebago and Hancock county irs and at the State Fair. A num- r of demonstration teams were ined and the champion county monstration team was from Ell wnship, Mildred and Dorothy ampel, who represented the county the North Iowa Fair and at the ate Fair, winning scond place at e former and sixth at the State ir. This is certainly a very good owing considering the keen com- tition that they had. Thirty-five ams were in the contest at the ate Fair.

The report of Ren Smith, the easurer, showed that the finances the organization were in excell- t condition and that the expend- ures of money was carefully ac- unted for.

The report of the County Agent, T. Nutty, showed that four ma- r projects had been put over the st year as well as many miscell- neous and minor activities. The ajor farm bureau projects were e Home Furnishing Work among e women, Cooperative Marketing ork, Boys and Girls Club Work d the Swine Management project. oys and Girls Club Work has made ore progress this year than ever efore. A girls Home Furnishing ub, Dairy Heifer Club, Baby Beef ub and Market Pig Clubs were or- nized. Demonstration and judg- g teams have developed and ex- bits have been put on at County d State Fairs.

The Farm Bureau has cooperated ith the cooperative marketing gencies of the county, giving their sistance wherever possible.

The Swine Management project s been put on to encourage the ore economical production of pork. he idea being to raise the hogs in lean pastures away from disease d worms, and to make larger ains in a shorter time and to raise larger percentage of pigs farrow- d. Demonstrations have been held er the county for proving that this ractice is practical and profitable.

Other activities of the Farm Bur- reau was work along the Corn mprovement line and assistance in ecuring seed corn; organization of hree Cow Testing Associations, of wenty-six members each; conduct- g ten Poultry Record Farms; con- ecting five Farm accounting groups ith seventy-five members.

The Farm Bureau conducted a tour to the Iowa State College in which five hundred people took part and they put on a radio program which was considered one of the best programs put on by Farm Bureaus in the state.

There were many other Farm Bureau activities which have not been mentioned.

The election of officers for 1927 was as follows:

President, H. V. Caldwell, Kanawha.
Vice-Pres. W. J. Schlawin, Klemme.
Secretary, Fred Missal, Britt.
Treasurer, B. F. Higdon, Britt.
Chairman of Womens Work:
Mrs. Ernest Schubert, Britt.
Chairman of Womens Club Work
Mrs. Axel Trulson, Britt.

After the business meeting, an address was given by Mrs. Jacob Solberg, of Fernald. She gave a very fine address bringing out the value of the Farm Bureau to the farm families and their homes A solo by Fred Missal was enjoyed by everyone. The address of Mr. W. F. Schilling, of Northfield, Minn., was certainly enjoyed by all present. Mr. Schilling is a wonderfu speaker and a man who has had worlds of experience in farm organization activities. He is president of the Twin City Milk Producers Association and was really responsible for the organization of that association. Mr. Schilling emphasizes the value of cooperative marketing and loyalty to the organization.

Unfortunately, the crowd was small to hear Mr. Schilling, but he is booked to return here for the annual county picnic in June, at which time it is hoped that every farmer in the county will hear his message.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES THE PAST WEEK

BASKET BALL PRACTICE BEGAN THIS WEEK

Literary Societies Organized In The Klemme High School

Among the school activities which have taken place since last week, none are perhaps more interesting to the majority of the boys than Basket Ball practice, which started this week. We are very glad that practically every boy from the seventh grade up has shown a great interest and is anxious to get into real practice. We hope the fine spirit will continue throughout the year and they will develop into some winning teams.

Many Students Win "A's" For First Six Weeks Period Of School

Many of the pupils are doing a fine grade of work this year. Those who got one or more A's to their credit are: Lela Bachman, Clarice Wellemeyer, Lucile Kraus, Gladys Wilson, William Gauger, Kenneth Gast, Lawrence Greiman, Mabel Schuldt, Raymond Barz, Myrtle Irving, Harvey Nelson, Ethel Wellemeyer, Ethel Johnson and Florence Stokesbary.

The number who got B's is still larger. They are as follows: Jane Dutheridge, Lela Bachman, William Gauger, Orville Stokesbary, Carrie Swalve, Helen Lemke, Kenneth Gast Clarice Wellemeyer, Golda Moberly, Irene Johnson, Lawrence Greiman, Ray Lange, Ethel Johnson, Harvey Nelson, Oral Gibson, Mabel Schuldt, Fern Stille, Ethel Wellemeyer, Kermit Koerner, Vernon Turgasen, Myrtle Irving, Luther Tanner, Gertrude Johnson and Agatha Steeman.

Two Societies Have Been Organized

Two societies have been organized in High School, principally for practice in the various forms of literary work. One society of which Vernon Turgasen is president, is called the Vogad and the other, having Luther Tanner for president is named the Ko Ho Society. Officers have been elected and the date for the first program has been set for Mondap evening, November 8, by the Ko Ho's. We hope the parents will find time to come to these programs and get a good laugh from some of the stunts or music. The program will be published later.

Most of the pupils have shown much improvement in their ability to take hold of their work since the beginning of the year and are progressing rapidly.

Mr. Hockey reports a most enjoyable week end last week during Homecoming at State Teachers College. There seems to be no mystery about this trip.

Speaking of mysteries, Mr. Penrod seems to have gotten the fever. He went on a mysterious trip Wednesday afternoon, and we are wondering if it was to see one—or more—more dear!

Hallie Greiman and Kermit Koerner, seniors, have both been quite ill but began school again Monday. Clair West has resumed his school work again. It is pleasant to have them with us again.

FIRST ANNUAL 4-H CLUB BANQUET BIG SUCCESS

One Hundred Thirty Members And Friends Attend Meeting

One hundred and thirty club members and friends attended the First Annual 4-H Club Banquet which was held at the Opera House at Garner on Friday evening, October 15th, and which was attended by club members from all over the county. "It was certainly a wonderful gathering," said County Agent L. T. Nutty, "and was far more successful than the committee had ever hoped it would be." 4-H Club work has made an excellent showing in Hancock County this year

Miss Josephine Arnquist, State Leader of Girls' Work was present and gave a very fine talk. Mr. John Quist, Boys' Club Worker of the Extension Service was also present.

Miss Mildred Hampel Presides At Banquet

Miss Mildred Hampel, of Ell township, presided at the meeting and acted as toastmisstres at the banquet. Miss Hampel has taken a very active part in Club Work in Han County and has gained a lot of recognition by her good work. She is also State Secretary of the 4-H Clubs in Iowa.

The address of welcome was delivered by Miss Elsea Trulson, of Britt, who is County President of the 4-H Clubs. Talks were given by W L. Lawhorn, County President of the Farm Bureau; Miss Merle Ramer, Home Demonstration Agent who has done much work in Hancock County; Glenn L. Walter, County Club Agent; County Agent L T. Nutty and Mayor Barz, of Garner Representatives from various clubs in the county gave reports of what their clubs were doing.

Altogether, it was a fine meeting and it was decided to make the affair an annual event.

Club work is progressing rapidly in Hancock County and is a movement that is a great help to the boys and girls of the county.

KLEMME HUNTERS HAVE GOOD LUCK PHEASANT SHOOTING

Open Season On Festive Birds Great Sport For North Iowans

Sportsmen in Klemme and vicinity report good luck during the open season on pheasants and many bagged the limit each day.

Nearly everyone who went out were able to shoot enough birds for a meal at least

Farmers in the vicinity of Klemme were quite liberal this year in allowing hunters on thei lands. On but a few farms here were posted "No Hunting" signs. In most cases these farmers, however, would give permission to hunt to men they were acquainted with.

Few farmers objected to hunters if the hunters would ask permission to invade the lands of farmers, and this was but fair.

It was good sport and the three days open season was enjoyed by all who went hunting.

OLD GRAND JURY DISMISSED BY JUDGE

NEW GRAND JURY LIST DRAWN FOR BALANCE OF YEAR

Old Grand Jury Discharged On Objection Presented By Senneff

A new Grand Jury has been drawn to replace the Grand Jury which has served thus far this year. The following item from the Garner Leader explains the situation in detail:

"A late development in the September term of court which at first had appeared as if it would be rather listless affair, developed when Attorney Frank Senneff of Britt, appearing for W. J. Rasmussen who resides near Eagle lake state park and who is held to the grand jury upon alleged shooting at a couple of young boys, filed a challenge to the grand jury panel as drawn January 1, last.

"In his motion, Senneff sets forth several specific objections to the manner in which the jury was drawn Among these are that the election boards of Ellington and Boone townships failed to properly certify their lists of eligibles to grand jury service. The motion also states that in Bingham townhip, the election board certified the name of one of their number as a grand jury eligible and this is contrary to the statutes. It is the duty of election boards at the general election to make up a list of grand jury eligibles and in several instances election boards within this county failed to do so.

"Judge Kepler upheld Attorney Senneff's objection and all the old grand jury was discharged. Forthwith, he named the county auditor, recorder and clerk as an ex-officio board to draw a new grand jury panel."

The names drawn as grand jurors who will serve the balance of the year are:

O. E. Carlson .... Garner
Fred Haupt .... Klemme

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

The morning services on the coming Sunday will be given over to the interest of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society. Mrs. Gauger will fill the pulpit in both churches and give a report on the Branch Meeting of the Des Moines Branch which was held in Fort Dodge recently. No special offering will be taken at these services. We will have special singing in both services.

Let many have the evening services in their plans for the coming Sunday.

The Loyal Worker's Class (The Adult Bible Class) had their annual meeting and supper at the Parish House on Tuesday evening. After a bounteous supper and a fine social hour the class transacted the usual business coming before it. Officers and teacher were elected for the ensuing year. This class has been going strong and should command the interest of many others that are eligible.

WADE INDICTED FOR WIFE DESERTION

GRAND JURY FINISHED WORK MONDAY THIS WEEK

Wade Case Will Come Up In November Term Of Court

(Garner Leader, Tuesday)

The Hancock County grand jury, impanelled to serve at the September term of court, finished its deliberations Monday and was discharged for the term. The total indictments returned are five.

J. A. Wade of Klemme, was indicted for wife desertion. Since May 1, Mr. and Mrs. Wade have been estranged. Mrs. Wade was formerly Miss Jeanette Ulrich, daughter of Mr and Mrs. Geo. Ulrich. Mr. Wade intends to contest the case and has employed Attorney J. E. Williams of Mason City, as his counsel. On account of pressing court work in Mitchell county, Mr. Williams will be unable to attend Hancock County court for severa days and it is probable that the case will go over to the next term of court which will be in November. Should the evidence be sufficient to convict the defendant, the law provides a penalty of 1 year in the penitentiary or six months in the county jail, depending upon the degree of the crime.

CORN OUTLOOK IS IMPROVING, SAYS CROP BUREAU

Des Moines, Oct. 21.—Sunny days with considerable wind during the second week in October helped greatly to dry the corn and arrest the molding and rotting brought on by the month of wet weather preceding, says the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture. Lowland fields where the need for special methods of saving frosted corn was greatest are still too wet to hog down without great waste.

State and Government crop estimates based on reports of township correspondents October 1st indicate an average yield of 36 bushels of corn per acre as compared to 43 bushels last year. The wet, warm September added slightly to the yield, but lowered the quality.

With a moderate crop of corn and a good balance between corn and livestock the general outlook in Iowa is favorable. However, there have been some heavy and regrettable losses to individual farmers and communities by drouth, flood, and frost, and the losses from hog cholera are the heaviest in several years.

KLEMME FARMER WINS SILVER CUP

FRED KOTHENBEUTAL'S HERD OF GUERNSEYS WIN SILVER CUP; BEST IN IOWA

Believes In Getting Good Cows And Then Have Them Tested All The Time To Check Up

Fred Kothenbeutal, a Klemme farmer, can feel justly proud of the record he has made in the dairy business, for today he holds the first place and is the owner of a beautiful silver cup which shows his herd of eleven grade Guernseys are the champion butterfat producers in the state of Iowa, having made an average production of 8,164 pounds of milk and 398.5 pounds of butterfat for the year.

Fred takes the honor in a sort of matter of fact way and says there are no special secrets connected with his herd winning the silver cup.

Mr. Kothenbeutel began his upward climb in the dairy business in a rather peculiar and costly manner. About four years ago he got to wondering whether or not his cows might have T. B. If they did have it he wanted to get rid of them as quick as possible. That was before T. B. testing was a common practice. Fred owned a good herd of red cows and he had them tested and out of the eleven cows tested there were seven reactors. That didn't look so good, but he was glad he found out about it He sold the balance of them. This piece of hard luck in a way, helped him to really get into better dairying.

Mr Kothenbeutel then made a trip to eastern Wisconsin and bought he best cows he could find. He paid a good price for what he bought but now he is well satisfied.

Then the next step in the business was when he joined the old Belmond and Hancock Cow Testing Association. The tests proved his cows were making a handsome profit for him. Later the Hancock No. 3 Association was started and Fred was a member of that, and which testing association he is still a member of. Mr. Kothenbeutel emphasizes the fact very strongly, that in order to make money in dairying one must test his cows in order to know if they are making a good profit for their owner, or whether they are mere "boarders' making a slight profit or pehaps losing money every day.

Mr. Kothenbeutel has a complete record of each cow and can tell at a glance just how many dollars and cents she is earning above cost of keep.

He has one especially good cow with a wonderful record. Two years ago she produced 604 pounds of butterfat. Last year she made 580 pounds. This year Fred thinks she will break all former records as so far she has produced 420 pounds and has four months yet to go. Her best month she produced 83 pounds of butter fat.

Approximately half of his herd will average 500 pounds of butter fat a year. His herd is well mixed as to age and ranges from heifers to old cows.

He has a two year old that has a record of better than 400 pounds of butter fat for the year. She has a good future ahead of her as a high producer.

Mr. Kothenbeutel studies feeding so that he can get the most out of his cows. He feeds silage, mixed alfalfa, timothy and clover hay and oil meal.

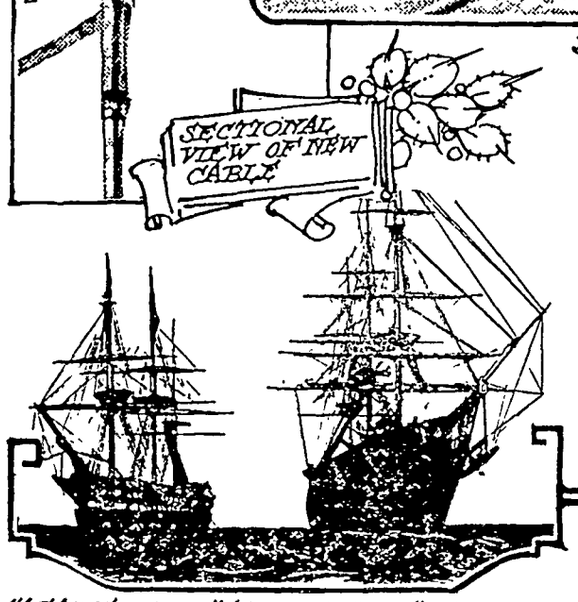
Considering the short time he has really been in the dairying business, Mr. Kothenbeutel has made a fine showing. He says, "Buy good cows and then join a testing association." You will note that his herd is made up of Grade Guernseys, but they are good ones and have a silver cup to show for their record.

The awards were made at the Waterloo Dairy Cattle Congress. Another nearby winner was Otto Brandon of Rudd, who was awarded the second place in the Jersey class. His herd averaged 6,664 pounds of milk and 367.9 pounds of butterfat.

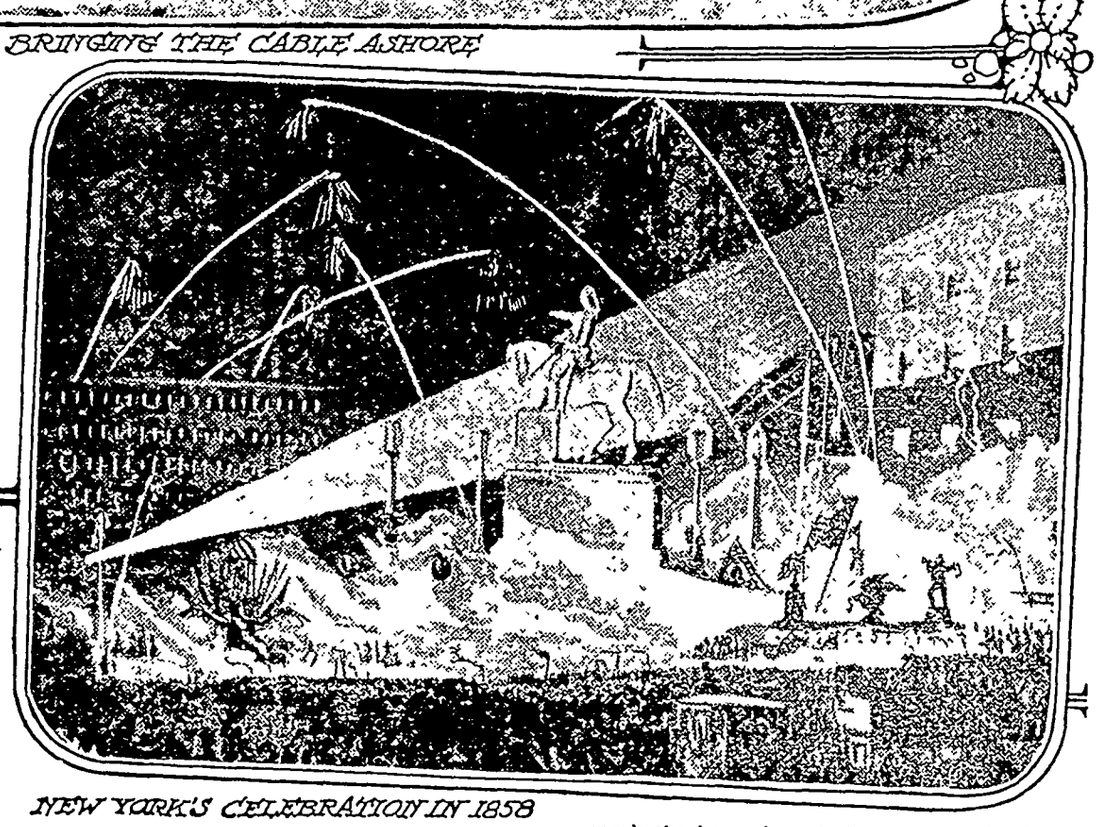
Mr. Kothenbeutel is one of the regular patrons of the Klemme Creamery and believes it pays to sell your products to home industries and build up the community.

The World's Fastest Cable

BRINGING THE CABLE ASHORE



"AGAMEMNON" AND "NIAGARA" WHICH LAID THE 1858 CABLE



NEW YORK'S CELEBRATION IN 1858

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE recent announcement that the Western Union Telegraph company had completed laying a new cable across the Atlantic which will have the distinction of being "the world's fastest cable," in the sense that it can transmit legible signals at least five times as rapidly as any heretofore laid, recalls the whole romantic history of man's attempt to bridge great distances and speed up communication between the distant parts of the earth. It recalls particularly the name of Cyrus Field, the American paper merchant who, undaunted by several failures, persisted until success crowned his efforts and made his name immortal.

When the new cable was landed in New York last month, it was an event of great importance, but so accustomed have we become to events of world importance that there were none of the scenes of wild enthusiasm which swept the country upon Cyrus Field's successful completion of his task. In those days they were more given to public celebrations of great events by torchlight processions and appropriate oratory.

Up until that time rapid communication had been impossible. When the treaty which ended the Revolution was signed in 1783, the citizens of the new Republic did not know it until 80 days later. Conditions were much the same by the time of the War of 1812 and, as every schoolboy knows, the battle of New Orleans was fought after the treaty of peace had been signed.

Although faster steamships had speeded up communication between the Old world and the New in the next four decades, there was still no instantaneous communication and men had laughed at Field as a dreamer and something of a crank when he first proposed to link England and America with an undersea cable over which telegraphic messages could be sent.

But when the Agamemnon and the Niagara completed their job of laying the first cable in August, 1858, and Field's faith in his project was justified, those who had derided him were among the first to hail him.

With the coming of the first transatlantic cable came the prospect of business quickening its pace. This prospect was at first viewed with considerable incredulity, but as the messages of Queen Victoria and President Buchanan flashed over the wires doubts gave way to tumultuous rejoicing. The new line was in actual operation, but it had come only after a series of disappointments. It had cost its projector twelve years of constant toil and had necessitated more than thirty trips across the Atlantic.

But with the first doubts gone the new cable was welcomed with open arms. The simple announcement that it was to be landed produced the greatest excitement everywhere. In some places business was suspended and men rushed into the streets and flocked to the offices where the news was received. At Andover, Mass., the news was received while the alumni of the Theological seminary were celebrating their semi-centennial dinner. One thousand persons were present, all of whom rose to their feet and gave vent to their feelings by continued and enthusiastic cheers. In Boston a hundred guns were fired on the common and the bells of the city were rung for an hour.

In New York the news was at first received with some misgivings. As it was confirmed, however, by subsequent dispatches the city broke forth into wild rejoicing. The arrival of the queen's message was the signal for a fresh outbreak of popular enthusiasm. The city was awakened by the thunder of artillery. A hundred guns were fired in the park at daybreak, and the salute was repeated at noon. At this hour flags were flying from all the public buildings and the bells of the principal churches began to ring. That night the city was illuminated. Never had it seen such a brilliant celebration. The very sky seemed to be alight with the spectacle. Such was the blaze of light around city hall that the cupola caught fire and the hall itself narrowly escaped destruction. Similar demonstrations took place in other parts of the United States. From the Atlantic to the Valley of the Mississippi and to the Gulf of Mexico the firing of guns and the ringing of bells were heard in every city.

The new cable broke down after two months of operation and the courageous American paper merchant who had been the force behind the enterprise could raise no more funds in America. Most of the original capital lost in his first venture had, indeed, come from England, the majority of the 345 men who had subscribed one thousand pounds each to the enterprise being Englishmen. And with a Civil war impending and soon actually under way Field could look for no further financial aid on this side of the ocean.

He went again to England and succeeded, after long negotiations, in obtaining capital with which to build and lay a new cable. The Gutta-Percha company, which had then a practical monopoly of the necessary insulating material, was given the order to build the new cable, which was completed in 1865. The steamship Great Eastern, the largest craft ever built up to that time—larger, in fact, than any ship constructed for another forty years—which had proved a commercial failure in spite of her size, or perhaps because of it, was chartered to lay the new cable. Twelve hundred miles had been paid out when the cable parted, on August 2, and all efforts to recover it proved fruitless.

Once more ruin stared Field's project in the face. It seemed as if fate had decreed that there should never be telegraphic communication between the continents. But at this critical juncture in cable history John Pender, the head of the Gutta-Percha company, came forward with the proposal to risk a quarter of a million pounds of his own money in the effort to carry out the project. Under his leadership the Atlantic Telegraph company was reconstituted as the Anglo-American Telegraph company with a capital of 600,000 pounds of which he subscribed for nearly half. The Gutta-Percha company became the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance company. A new cable was made and enough additional to complete the cable of 1865. The Great Eastern was purchased and on July 13, 1866, steamed into Trinity bay, Newfoundland, trailing behind her a continuous line of cable stretching back to the Irish coast. The shore end was landed safely, the Great Eastern steamed eastward again, grappled for the lost end of the 1865 cable, recovered it, spliced on a new section and on September 8 landed this also in Newfoundland.

It is interesting to note that in the new cable which spans the Atlantic from Bay Roberts, Newfoundland, to Penzance, England, history is repeating itself, for in 1912 the Western Union Telegraph company became the operating successor of the Anglo-American Telegraph company, leasing the five cables then owned by the original company, between Great Britain and the United States, and so great is the advance over all previous cable systems which the new cable inaugurates, its completion seems destined to mark the beginning of almost as much of a new era in international communications, as the laying of the 1866 cable did.

Though the deep sea section of the cable is only an inch in diameter, an examination of a cross-section of it, as illustrated above, shows it to be composed of a number of distinct parts consisting of different materials.

The innermost section of this slender line of communication which will link two continents is the copper conductor. It is a round wire not quite one-fifth of an inch in diameter. This carries the electric current through the cable.

Around this wire are wrapped six flexible copper tapes which, in case the cable breaks, carry the current around the gap. The purpose of these copper tapes is to give flexibility to the conductor. An accident to the cable lying on the floor of the Atlantic which might break a solid conductor consisting of a single strand and put the line of communication out of business could hardly break all the strands of a taped conductor.

Wrapped around the 3,800 nautical miles of this copper conductor to span the Atlantic from New York to London will be a continuous strip of permalloy, the new magic metal which will give the cable its capacity of 2,500 letters per minute. Permalloy is an alloy of iron and nickel which under certain conditions has a magnetic permeability many times that of any other known substance. This wrapping prevents the leakage of current common to the older types of cables and will give the new copper strand its great speed and make it the world's fastest cable.

Next to the permalloy is the insulation consisting of three layers of gutta percha. This is the only substance yet discovered which combines the necessary insulating qualities with elasticity, simplicity of manipulation, and durability. It is obtained from a tree which grows in the Malay peninsula and Malaysia. The process of gathering it consists in tapping the gutta tree much as a sugar maple is tapped in North America and collecting the sap which exudes. The most familiar use of gutta percha is in the manufacture of the outer shells of golf balls.

Over the gutta percha insulation is placed a layer of jute yarn to act as a cushion for the armor which protects the cable from being broken by any accident which might occur on the bed of the ocean.

This armor consists of eighteen galvanized steel wires, each having a diameter of nine-hundredths of an inch. Before being applied to the cable each is wrapped over its entire length with a fabric to prevent its oxidation under water. Finally, the cable is wrapped with two servings of jute yarn saturated in coal tar, wound on spirally, which form the outer covering.

This copper strand connecting the Old world with the new will be the twentieth transatlantic cable and the ninth to be operated by the Western Union.

Although it would seem that radio development had made deep-sea cables obsolete, the fact remains that cable companies continue to spend millions of dollars on new cable costs, for all that they have a full knowledge of radio's capacity and the lines of its probable future development. The importance of cables in world relations was demonstrated at the close of the World war when an international complication threatened over the island of Yap. Yap ordinarily would be as unimportant as its name suggests were it not for the fact that the question of a cable base was involved. So it is likely that the future will see the network of cable lines connecting all parts of the earth increase instead of decrease and whenever a new one, and especially one such as the "world's fastest cable" in which important new developments are concerned, is laid it will be news and big news.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Bangs nodded, vaguely. His brown eyes were alternately on the bride and on his chum and partner, her brother. He was conscious of an odd depression, of an emotion, new and poignant, that made him understand the tears of Barbara's women friends. Under the influence of this, he spoke oracularly:

"Weddings are beastly depressing things. What the public wants to see is something cheerful!"

Epstein nodded in his turn. His thoughts, too, were busy. Like many of those around him, he was mentally reducing the spectacle he was watching to terms that he could understand. A wedding conducted on this scale, he estimated, probably represented a total cost of about ten thousand dollars. But what was that to a bride of thirty or forty millions? It was strange her family had left them all to her and none to the boy, even if the boy had been a little wild. But the boy was all right now. He'd make his own fortune if life and woman and the devil would let him alone. He had made a good start already. A few more successes like "The Man Above" would make Epstein forget several failures he had already and unwisely produced this season. If he could get Bangs and Devon to start work at once, on another good play—

A little later, in the automobile that whirled him and Epstein out to the wedding-reception at Devon house, Rodney Bangs briefly developed the wedding theme.

"I suppose the reason why women cry at weddings and men feel glum is that they know what the bride's in for," he remarked gloomily.

Epstein grunted. "You an' me is bachelors," he reminded the momentarily cynical youth. "Ve should vorry!"

"What I'm worrying about is Laurie," Bangs admitted.

Epstein turned to him with awakened interest.

"Vell," he demanded, "what about Laurie? He's all right, ain't he?"

"His sister has always kept a collar and leash on Laurie," Bangs reminded him, "and Laurie has needed them both. Now she's off for Japan on a four-months' honeymoon. The leash and collar are off, too. It's going to be mighty interesting and rather anxious business for us to see what a chap like Laurie does with his new freedom. His nature hasn't changed in a year, you see, though his circumstances have," he added, slowly. "And all his promises to Barbara are off. His year of probation is over."

Epstein grunted again. He was fond of saying that he loved Bangs and Laurie as if they were the sons he had never had; but he was not given to analysis of himself or others, and he had little patience with it. His reply showed a tolerance unusual in him.

"Vell, ve keep an eye on him, don't ve?" he predicted.

Bangs frowned.

"We'll have to do it mighty carefully," he muttered. "If Devon catches us at it, he won't leave us an eye to keep on anything!"

Epstein grunted again.

"Ve keep him busy," he suggested, eagerly. "Start him right avay on another play. Eh? That's the idea!"

Bangs shook his head.

"That's it," he conceded. "But Laurie has decided that he won't work again, just yet. He says he's tired and wants a few months' rest. Besides, he thinks America will declare war before the winter's over. He's going to volunteer as soon as it does, and he doesn't want any loose ends dragging here, any half-finished plays, for example."

Epstein looked worried. This was serious news. Without allowing him time to recover from it, Bangs administered a second jolt.

"And of course, in that case," he added simply, "I'd volunteer, too."

Under the double blow Epstein's head and shoulders went down. He knew in that moment what even he himself had sometimes doubted, that his boasted love for the boys was deep and sincere.

"Oh, vell," he said vaguely, "I guess ve meet all that if it comes, eh? Ve needn't go to it today."

At Devon house they found the congestion characteristic of wedding-receptions. A certain line had been drawn at the church. Seemingly no line at all had been drawn in the matter of guests at the reception. All Barbara Devon's proteges were there, and they were many; all the young folks in her clubs; all the old and new friends of her crowded life. Each of the great and beautiful rooms on the main floor of Devon house held a human frieze as a background for the throng of new-comers that grew rather than lessened as the hours passed.

As Bangs and Epstein entered the main hall Laurie Devon saw them over the heads of the crowd and hurried to meet them, throwing an arm across the shoulder of each. He was in a mood both men loved and feared, a mood of high and reckless exhilara-her extraordinary beauty, she made a picture that unaccountably deepened the new depression in Rodney's soul. On her train by the side of the chair, the Infant Samuel slumbered in peace, like an exhausted puppy.

Warren, hovering near his wife, shook hands with the newcomers and responded to their congratulations. Then, slipping his arm through Laurie's, he drew him across the room to where his sister, Mrs. Ordway, was languidly talking to several of the bride's old friends. He knew that Barbara wanted a final and serious word with her brother's partners. Laurie knew it, too, and winked at the pair like an impish child as he permitted himself to be led away.

Young Mrs. Warren, whose title was still so new that she looked startled when they addressed her by it, greeted them warmly and indicated the sleeping Samuel with an apologetic smile.

"His mother is lost somewhere in the crowd," she explained. "He has had two glasses of milk, four fat cakes and three plates of ice cream; and he's either asleep or unconscious, I'm not sure which." Her manner sobered. "I'm so glad to have a moment with you two," she said gently. "You know what I want to talk about."

"We can guess it." Bangs smiled at her with the odd wistfulness his smile always took on when he spoke to Barbara. To Bangs, Barbara had become a temple at whose portal he removed his earth-stained shoes. "You want us to look after Laurie," he added quietly. "Well, you bet we're going to do it."

She smiled again, this time the rare smile that warmed her face like a light from within.

"Then I shall go away happy," she told them. "And there's nothing more to be said; for of course you both understand that I don't distrust Laurie. How could I, after he has been so wonderful all this year. It's only—" she hesitated—"I suppose it's life I'm afraid of," she confessed. "I never used to be. But—well, I learned in New York how helpless we are, sometimes."

Rodney's nod was understanding.

"I know," he robustly agreed. "But it's going to be absolutely all right. Be sure of that."

Epstein added his well-meaning but none too happily chosen bit.

"Laurie can't get into no scrape ve

The young man pondered, as if considering the question for the first time.

"Well," he said at last, "between you and me, I'm going in for adventure. I intend to devote the next four months to discovering how much excitement a worthy youth can crowd into his life if he makes a business of going after the gay bird of adventure, and finding it, and putting salt on its tail!"

The puzzled countenance of Mrs. Renway cleared.

"Oh, I see," she said brightly, "you're joking."

Laurie smiled and turned to greet a late guest who had come up behind him. In the little group that had overheard him three pairs of eyes met in startled glances.

"Humph!" said Warren. "Hear that?"

"Nice prospect for us!" muttered Rodney Bangs.

Jacob Epstein looked harassed. A little later he joined the throng in the main hall, and watched the showers of rice fall harmlessly from the polished sides of Barbara's limousine as the bride and groom were whirled away from the brilliant entrance of Devon house.

"She's gone," he said to Bangs as the two men turned and re-entered the still crowded yet suddenly empty house. And he added solemnly, "Believe me, Bangs, on that job she's left us you an' me ve got our hands full!"

CHAPTER II

Rodney Loses a Battle

Rodney Bangs, author of "The Black Pearl" and co-author of "The Man Above," was annoyed. When Mr. Bangs was annoyed he usually betrayed the fact, for his was an open nature.

He was betraying it now. His clear, red-brown eyes were clouded. The healthy pink of his youthful cheeks had deepened to an unbecoming flush. His wide, engaging grin, the grin of a friendly bulldog, was lacking, and his lips were set tight.

Sitting on a low chair in the dressing room of the bachelor apartment he and Lawrence Devon occupied together, Rodney drew on a shoe and stamped his foot down into it with an emphasis that shook the floor. Devon, fastening his tie before the full-length mirror set in the door leading to their common bathroom, started at the sound, like a high-strung prima donna. This was one of Laurie's temperamental mornings.

"What the devil's the matter with you, Bangs?" he demanded, but without ill humor. "Can't you get on a shoe without imitating the recoil of a seventy-five centimeter gun?"

Bangs grunted, drew on the other shoe, and drove his foot into it with increased energy. Laurie looked at him, and this time there was a spark in his black eyes. Very quietly he turned, crossed the small room, and, planting himself in front of his chum, resentfully stared down at the dynamic youth.

"What's the idea?" he demanded. "Are you deliberately trying to be annoying?"

Rodney did not raise his head. His fingers were busy with a complicated knot.

"Oh, shut up!" he muttered.

Laurie, his hands in his pockets, remained where he was. Under his continued inspection the fingers of Bangs grew clumsy. He fumbled with the knot, and, having unfastened it, prolonged to the utmost the process of lacing his shoes. He knew what must come as soon as he settled back in his chair. It had been coming for days. He was in for an unpleasant ten minutes. But the situation was one he had deliberately created as the only possible way of bringing about a serious talk with his friend. Now that it was here he was anxious to make the most of it. With head bent and thoughts busy he played for time.

At last, the shoes laced and his campaign mapped out, he sat up and met Laurie's eyes. Their expression of antagonism, temporary though he knew it to be, hurt him. Devon, when he had his own way, and he usually had it, was a singularly sweet-tempered chap. Never before, throughout their year of close association, had he looked at Bangs like that. Rodney knew that he deserved the look. For days past he had deliberately subjected his companion to a series of annoyances, small but intensely irritating.

"Well?" demanded Laurie. "What's the answer?"

"What answer?" Rodney was in the position of a small boy challenged to combat in cold blood. He was experiencing some difficulty in working himself up to the necessary heat for an engagement. But Laurie's next words helped him out.

"You've been making a d—d nuisance of yourself for the last week," he said deliberately. "I want to know why."

Bangs squared his stocky shoulders and rose to his feet. His brown eyes were below the level of his chum's black ones, but the two glances met sharply and a flash passed between them. Under the force of his rising excitement the voice of Rodney shook.

"The reason I've been a d—d nuisance," he said curtly, "is because you've been acting like an infernal fool, and I'm sick of it."

Laurie's lips tightened, but the other rushed on without giving him a chance to reply. The moment was his. He must crowd into it all he had not dared to say before and might not be given a chance to say again.

"Oh, I know what you'll say!" he cried. "It's none of my business, and you're your own master, and all that sort of rot. And I know you're not drinking, and God knows I'm not ass enough to take on any high moral tone and try to preach to you, whatever you do. What gets my goat, Devon, and the only thing I'm worrying about, is this infernal waste of your time and mine."

The girl in the mirror makes her first appearance. Watch for her.

Only Weak Can Find "Refuge" in Suicide

Accounts of suicide in the news are almost always depressing. They lessen one's confidence in the strength of the human spirit. They may arouse pity, it is true, but except in unusual circumstances this is pity based upon a recognition of weakness.

For suicide, speaking generally, is an abject confession of defeat, of complete failure of courage. And it signifies so narrow a vision, so limited an interest, for any man to say that in all the wide world nothing is left for him.

Consider the words Jasper Petulengro, the Norfolk gypsy, spoke to George Borrow:

"Life is sweet, brother."

"Do you think so?"

"Think so! There's night and day, brother, both sweet things; sun, moon and stars, brother, all sweet things; there's likewise the wind on the heath. Life is very sweet, brother; who would wish to die?"

"I would wish to die—"

"You talk like a giorgio—which is the same as talking like a fool—were you a gypsy chal you would talk wiser. Wish to die, indeed! A Romany chal would wish to live forever!"

"In sickness, Jasper?"

"There's the sun and stars, brother."

"In blindness, Jasper?"

"There's the wind on the heath, brother; if I could only feel that, I would gladly live forever."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Portrait Won Fame

When Moroni, a Sixteenth century painter, did his now celebrated picture, "Portrait of a Tailor," he achieved a work that was destined to bring him distinction if it did not at first place him in the circle of the world's greatest. Strangely enough, many of his other works were credited to other painters. Recently he has been brought into the National gallery in London, the Metropolitan and Boston museums in America, and in some other European galleries, including those at Milan, Florence, Vienna and Berlin.

The falls of Niagara were illuminated one night as early as 1884 by Albert Bierstadt, for the benefit of English railway men, by flashing powder on the ledge of rocks beneath the American falls. Since May, 1925, Niagara has been illuminated in colors for four hours every night.

MAYOR'S PROCLAMATION

Public Notice is hereby given that a special election will be held in the Town of Klemme, Iowa, on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1926, at the City Hall in said Town of Klemme, at which election there shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the said Town the question of the Granting of a Franchise for a period of twenty-five years to the Koerner Telephone Company to use the streets, alleys, highways and public places in said Town, for the construction, maintainance, reconstruction, operation and use of a Telephone system as provided by Ordinance No. 41.

The Polls at said election shall be open from 8 o'clock A. M. until 7 o'clock P. M. on said day and the ballots at said election shall be in substantially the following form:

"NOTICE TO VOTERS"

For an affirmative vote upon any question submitted on this ballot make a cross (X) mark in the square following the word "Yes." For a negative vote, make a cross (X) mark in the square following the word "No."

Shall the following Public Measure be adopted?
YES
NO

Ordinance No. 41

AN ORDINANCE GRANTING THE KOERNER TELEPHONE COMPANY, ITS SUCCESSORS AND ASSIGNS, THE RIGHT TO THE USE OF THE STREETS, ALLEYS, HIGHWAYS AND PUBLIC PLACES OF THE TOWN OF KLEMME, IOWA, FOR THE CONSTRUCTION, RECONSTRUCTION, MAINTAINANCE AND OPERATION OF A LOCAL AND LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE SYSTEM, FOR A PERIOD OF TWENTY FIVE YEARS.

BE IT ORDAINED, by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa;

Section 1. That there is hereby granted to the Koerner Telephone Company, its successors and assigns, the right to erect, construct, maintain, reconstruct, operate and use poles, wires, cables, and whatsoever other materials and fixtures necessary or convenient, upon, over and under the streets, alleys, highways and public places of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the construction, operation, maintainance and use of a Telephone system, both local and long distance, for a term of Twenty Five (25) Years under the provisions hereof.

Section 2. The lines of poles, wires, cables and other materials and appliances as heretofore installed and now used in connection with, and appurtenant to, said telephone system is hereby recognized and appoved, and additions thereto and betterments thereof shall be so placed and maintained as not to unreasonably interfere with public travel; it being understood that the street and alley committee of said Town shall supervise the placing of additional poles, wires and cables upon and under the streets and alleys of said Town, and all thereof shall be subject to statutory regulations now existing or hereafter legally enacted with reference thereto. Whenever an adequate deposit of money for the use and benefit of said Koerner Telephone Company shall have been made with the Mayor of said Town of Klemme, and upon twenty-four (24) hours' written notice by the Mayor thereof, the said Koerner Telephone Company shall remove such of its poles, wires, cables or other appliances as may be necessary for the passage of buildings beingmoved within the said town or for excavations being made under the surface of the streets of said town, at the expense of the party requesting the same, but said telephone company shall not be required to remove poles or wires nor cables unless the route selected by the applicant shall be the most practical and expedient in the judgment of the Mayor of said Town, all interests and rights being duly considered.

Section 3. All ordinances or parts of ordinances of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, in conflict herewith, are, upon the final adoption hereof, repealed.

Section 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Klemme Times and its adoption by the Council of the Town of Klemme and by the qualified electors of the Town of Klemme at a special election of said Town to be held on the 4th day of November, A D 1926, and after the cost and expense of such submission and special election shall have been paid by the said Koerner Telephone Company.

Passed and adopted by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme and approved this 6th day of September A. D., 1926.

F. GRUETZMACHER,
Mayor.

The Young Ladies Class of the Methodist Church held a class meeting at the home of Miss Leona Poort Wednesday evening and elected the following officers: President, Golda Moberly; Vice-President, Madeline Griffen; Sec'y.-Treasurer and Class Editor, Leona Poort. Mrs. Leonard Thompson was chosen as their teacher again

C A. Larsen now has a regular little packing plant in Klemme. Recently he remodeled the building at the rear of the meat market and had it all fitted up according to satte plans and regulations. An inspector called the other day and placed his O. K. stamp of approval on the new improvement and found everything in a good sanitary condition in all departments of the market and the slaughter house.

Some low down thief stole all the chickens, except five, from the Herman Priebe farm the other night. There should be a stop put to this business some way or other and the culprits given a term in prison. Over in nCerro Gordo County Sheriff Cress is endeavoring to organize a method of bringing chicken thieves to justice. Such a method can perhaps be accomplished in this county. A state wide drive would be the best way to get rid of this form of thievery

Mesdames Sumner Trumbel, Ed Jacobs, C. G. Waterman and R. Jorgenson were hostesses to the Eastern Star Lodge at Garner on Friday evening. After the business session of lodge work was over the Klemme ladies served a delightful lunch. The Misses Pauline Slo and Eunice Braund were guests of the Star that evening.

Hasty Husking Sometimes Wasty

Last year some of those who got in a hurry to husk their corn before it had dried out thoroly lost heavily because of mold. The best quality corn a year ago was that husked in February, say crop extension specialists at Ames. It is folly to put corn in the crib that is too moist to keep.

HELPED WIN THE WAR

LONDON —It has just been learned that trained sea lions, commandeered from vaudeville acts, helped the British navy during the war to keep German submarines away. The sea lions, tied by long ropes to floating buoys at sea, were trained to dive and report any subsurface vibrations by rising to the surface and barking.

THORNBURG WARNS AGAINST SPREAD OF HOG CHOLERA

Des Moines, Oct. 21.—"The big problem that faces Iowa stockmen at the present time is the prevention of further spread of hog cholera," states M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture. 'Farmers can help greatly in this work by careful disposal of dead hogs and using precautions to prevent spreading disease from one herd to another."

"Our inspectors are carefully checking plants to see that they are thorough in handling dead hogs and disinfecting their equipment," Mr. Thornburg states "Dead hogs may be destroyed by burying, burning, or selling to licensed rendering plants Extreme care should be taken in all methods of disposal to see that the work is thoroughly done and the premises disinfected."

"Practically all serum manufacturers are now releasing serum after an 11 day test as provided by Secretary W. M. Jardine. All bottles of serum must be labeled that they are released under the 11 day test. The use of this additional supply of serum should check the worst outbreaks of hog cholera. Until the present shortage of serum has passed farmers and veterinarians are urged to conserve the supply of serum by using it only on herds that are exposed or affected with the disease"

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

WHAT satisfaction there is to the hostess who knows that everybody is having a good time at her party. And what fun to listen to the ohs and ahs of the guests as they make merry over the cunning party favors, for favors have so much to do with the success of one's party.

Now that the fall and winter party season is just beginning, it is high time for those who plan to entertain to get busy at making up a collection of pretty favors. Here's a new idea—harmonica favors for the men and rose pincushions for the ladies. Try it and see how beautifully it will work out. For the harmonica, cover little boxes with white crepe paper, painting on it a face with water colors. Make wire arms, black feet cut out of mat stock, dress in emerald-green tissue. Study the little figure shown last in this group as to just how it should look. When each male guest starts to play on the little harmonica, he found in the box, no question as to the fun and din which will follow.

Some Pretty Favors.

The rose pincushion takes form of a dainty little basket filled with flowers, just as you can see at the top to the right in the picture. Make seven little tissue paper rosebuds with soft cushionlike centers. Shape these into a bouquet and set them in a paper nut cup, attaching a paper-wound wire handle. Into the hearts of the roses stick a few pins just as a suggestion to the recipient as to the use of this little flower basket.

It is always more difficult to think of favors for men than for women. The fantastic beetle which is pictured second at the top is exceedingly clever, especially if laid flat with its wire legs sprawling out in every direction. Its body is really a cigar held in place by coils of wire or rings of pasteboard if preferred.

In this group is also a cigarette favor. A coquettish face is painted on an oval piece of cardboard. The ruffle of tissue pasted around it is one and a half inches wide. A green feather trims the hat.

The Japanese lady carries some chosen article back of her parasol. There is also a halloween figure shown here dressed in pumpkin-yellow paper.

For our hats, our wraps, our frocks, our gowns we choose any material just so it's velvet seems to be the sentiment of the mode. It is evident that velvet will reign, is reigning as the fabric supreme. Not that velvet in itself is a novelty, but its uses for all occasions gives to it a unique interpretation.

The new velvets are both printed and plain, in both chiffon and heavyweight and are the called-for fabric for street, dinner and evening costume.

For daytime wear the ensemble of extreme style is of velvet, black or deep beautiful colors such as claret, jungle green, also beige. With this is interworked for blouse and linings gorgeous silks and metal cloths.

As a trimming for crepe and satin dresses self-colored velvet is a most popular theme. The velvet appears in tiers and borderings.

Quite the latest and most charming Paris style note is the chiffon velvet evening frock in lovely colorings. A very beautiful Agnes model is shown in the picture. Melon pink chiffon velvet is the medium for this exquisite creation. The V-neck and the profuse shirring are outstanding features. The panels are embroidered in pearls.

Very effective is the sleeveless low round-neck black velvet frock. Such a dress will prove at once a luxury and an economy, in that with change of accessories it can be transformed in appearance and thus do duty for many a social occasion. A deep lace or flesh-colored georgette cape-collar is suggested. It would be well also to have made to order a pair of detachable pink crepe sleeves. Removable and gayly embroidered peasant sleeves would prove effective also—or without any accessories, except costume jewelry and a shoulder bouquet, the sleeveless black velvet gown is a happy possession.

The last word in fashion is the pastel-colored chiffon velvet two-piece frock for sports wear. It is styled similar to the crepe jumper-and-skirt models so popular during the summer.

Plaid velvet tunics are registered for smart daytime wear. Brocade chiffon velvet is also fashionable for the dressier afternoon frock.

Chiffon Velvet Evening Gown.

Robert Bruce

ROBERT BRUCE, of Scotland—a man without a home, a king without a throne, a ruler without subjects—lay hidden in a tumble-down hut one day early in the Fourteenth century, while the soldiers of King Edward I of England scoured the surrounding country under orders to capture the fugitive monarch dead or alive. As the luckless Bruce gazed idly about him he noticed a spider swinging from a strand of web that it was trying to affix to the opposite wall. Six times the spider swung and failed. The king grew interested. He had been half minded to give up his own useless struggle against England's mighty power. But, noting the insect's perseverance, he took heart. He resolved that if the spider should win in its task of fixing the web to the opposite wall, he himself would once more attempt to resist England's invasion. On the seventh trial the spider succeeded; and Bruce, true to his pledge, set forth to renew his own hopeless warfare.

North Britain, the country later known as Scotland, had never wholly been conquered in the Roman invasion. Its inhabitants, savages known as Picts and Scots, had for centuries resisted all attempts to crush them as other savage tribes had been crushed. But at last Scotland had fallen under English influence and had become a mere Anglo-Norman feudal monarchy.

A question arose in 1292 as to succession to the throne. Edward I, king of England, was asked to decide the matter; and, through his influence, a puppet of his own, John Baliol, was chosen. This strengthened England's power in Scotland, and the unhappy northern kingdom was almost passive under the English yoke. Baliol, urged on by malcontents, sought alliance with France and took up arms against England, but Edward speedily captured him, routed his armies and took Edinburgh and other Scotch strongholds.

Then, in the hour of Scotland's sorest need, when all her nobles were cringing at Edward's feet, a hero arose—a man of the people, William Wallace. Wallace raised a rabble of peasants and townsfolk, molded them into a well-trained, organized band, and in 1297 captured town after town from the English. The nobles held aloof from him, but the common people followed him devotedly. Edward sent a strong army to put Wallace down, deeming the revolt too petty for his own personal attention. Wallace, with a force many thousands inferior to the invaders, met this English army near Stirling.

Wallace's men were light-armed and ill-equipped and had less than 200 horses in all. The well-mounted English, in their heavy armor, looked for an easy victory. But, after a fierce battle, Wallace's peasants put them to flight. It was the first time in history that a disciplined feudal army was routed by a force recruited from the plain people. It was the beginning of the end.

Having repulsed the English, Wallace set to work reorganizing Scotland and reviving her shattered commerce.

Pressing his conquests he even invaded the north of England, thus carrying the war into the enemy's country. But, alarmed at the extent of the revolution, Edward sent a new army of 90,000 men against him. The nobles refused to help Wallace and his resources were only such as he himself could muster. Yet he won two battles against the stronger invader before the superior force overwhelmed and crushed his little army. Wallace was captured, sent to London and there, after a mock trial, the gallant patriot was hanged as a traitor.

Edward, as an example to future revolutionists, devastated Scotland, inflicting terrible penalty for England's former defeats. But the result was exactly opposite to what he had planned. A nobleman, Lord Robert de Bruce (or Robert Bruce) revolted, drawing about him the Scottish nobility. He was crowned King of Scotland in 1306. Edward at once attacked him, driving him from the throne, and again ravaging the stricken country. It was during this period that Bruce took his life lesson from the spider in the hut whither he had fled for refuge.

Almost at once, upon Bruce's resolve to try once more to save Scotland, the turn of fortune came. Edward I died and was succeeded by his weak, dissolute son, Edward II. Taking advantage of the latter's indolence, Bruce raised a strong army, and by 1313 had won back nearly all of Scotland. The next year the last and most decisive battle of the war was fought at Bannockburn (Bannock Creek). Bruce, by better knowledge of the marshy, uneven ground and by superior generalship, won the day. His Scottish spearmen fought on foot in a circular formation somewhat like the modern military "square," and through this circle of steel the English knights could not break. Again it was proven that the flower of chivalry could make no headway against well-generaled private soldiers. The English were utterly routed.

Never again, though many other conflicts arose, did England wholly subdue Scotland.

At last, in 1603, the two nations became one, under James I of England, who chanced to be natural heir to both thrones.

Lesson for October 24

JOSHUA, ISRAEL'S NEW LEADER

LESSEN TEXT—Num. 27:18-20; Joshua 1:1-9.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord, thy God is with thee withersoever thou goest.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Joshua the New Leader.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Task of Joshua.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Secret of a Strong and Useful Life.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Preparation for True Service.

The book of Joshua, from which our lesson is taken, is a history of the conquest of the promised land and its division among the tribes of Israel. It takes its name from its principal character, Joshua.

I. Joshua, the New Leader of Israel (Num. 27.18-20).

The people were not to be left in doubt as to a leader when Moses was gone. The leader was to be appointed and given recognition before all the congregation.

During the wilderness journey Joshua was Moses' minister and the captain of his army. When Moses was denied the privilege of going over the Jordan, Joshua was appointed to the leadership of Israel. Moses, the representative of the law, brought Israel to the borders of Canaan. Joshua was the man chosen to lead the people into the place of rest. The name "Joshua" has the same derivation as the name "Jesus."

II. Joshua Commanded to Take Charge (Josh. 1:2).

Moses was dead, but God's work must go on, therefore God issued the command for the new leader to assume his duty.

III. God Renews His Promise to Israel Concerning the Land (Josh. 1:3, 4).

This promise had been given to Abraham and renewed to Isaac, Jacob and Moses. It is now renewed to Israel as they were about to enter upon its possession. The borders of the land were "from the wilderness and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the River Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great sea toward the going down of the sun." The nearest this territory was ever possessed was during the reign of David and Solomon, though not then fully realized. This land still belongs to the Jews, and in God's own time they shall possess it. Their possession of this land was due entirely to themselves. God promised them that wherever their feet stood upon the land it was theirs.

IV. God's Presence Promised (Josh. 1:5).

Joshua was entering upon a perilous and difficult enterprise, but the Lord said as He was with Moses, so He would be with him. The difficulties before him were:

1. The Jordan river (v. 2).

This river was now at its flood (Josh. 3:15), making it impossible for armies to cross.

2. The people were living in walled cities (Num. 13:28).

Notwithstanding this, God was ready to insure success.

(1) "I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee" (v. 5).

(2) "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee."

(3) "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee." Joshua had been with Moses throughout their forty years' experience from the Egyptian deliverance to the time of his death. Because he believed that God was with his master, he was willing and ready to cross the Jordan at its floodtide and courageously meet the enemies on the other side.

V. Conditions of Blessing in the Land (Josh. 1:6-9).

1. "Be strong and of good courage" (v. 6).

His mission was to go in and divide the land among the tribes for an inheritance. It required strength and courage to do this.

2. "Unwavering obedience to the Word of God (v. 7).

In a land of idolatry it required much courage to be true to God. Prosperity and success were conditioned upon unswerving obedience to God's commands. In all his work he must conform his life to the law of God. To pass from the path outlined therein would bring disaster and ruin. In order to accomplish this the law of the Lord must be in his mouth continually. He was to meditate therein day and night.

Joshua rendered prompt obedience, he did not stop to cavil, but at once gave order for the march. God made the plan and gave the directions.

Culture

We hear so much nowadays about "culture." Culture is all right when you have something to cultivate. First make sure that you have the divine nature, then cultivate it!—D. L. Moody.

TWO FAMOUS WOMEN BORN IN SAME YEA

Queen Victoria and Lydia E. Pinkha

MRS. ANNA McHENRY
1005 E. PLUM STREET, MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

In the year 1819, two babies were born whose lives were destined to have a far-reaching influence. One was born in a stern castle of Old England, the other in a humble farmhouse in New England.

Queen Victoria through her wisdom and kindliness during a long and prosperous reign has become enthroned in the hearts of the British people. Lydia E. Pinkham through the merit of her Vegetable Compound has made her name a household word in thousands of American homes.

Marshall, Illinois.—"After my s[econd] child was born, I never saw a well day for five years. My fath[er] was telling his druggist about m[y] condition, and the druggist insist[ed] that father take a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a[nd] have me try it, as it had helped h[is] wife. I had given up, but to plea[se] father and mother, I commenc[ed] taking your medicine and in a we[ek] I had begun to feel better. Wh[en] I passed through the Change o[f] Life, I was taking the Vegeta[ble] Compound and I had no trouble o[f] any kind."—Mrs. ANNA McHENR[Y], 1005 E. Plum St., Marshall, Illino[is]

Another Woman Helped

Philadelphia, Penna.—Mrs. Ca[ro]line Nagy, of 2717 Sears St., in a recent letter to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., says that after her child was born she was in a very weak condition. She could not seem to regain her health and went to her mother for advice. She told her to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it had helped her when in like condition, and it has helped her mother also. So Mrs. Nagy started taking it. She felt better after taking the first bottle, after taking six bottles her weakness and other troubles disappeared and she is never done praising the Compound.

In some families the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Had Poor Opinion of His Gifted Son

Sir Walter Scott spent much time in his youth rambling about the countryside listening to the tales of farmerfolk. At times his rambles grew into long excursions and often he was accompanied by friends. On one occasion his party was stranded 30 miles from Edinburgh, relates Amy Cruse, in "Famous English Books and Their Stories." The travelers stopped often at farm houses to ask for a drink of water and in some instances the women, noting the youths' worn looks, gave them milk. Reaching home, Sir Walter's father asked how he managed to get food on such a long excursion on his scanty store of money.

"Pretty much like the young ravens," he replied. "I only wish I had been as good a player on the flute as poor George Primrose in 'The Vicar of Wakefield.' If I had his art I should like nothing better than [to] tramp like him from cottage to cottage all over the world."

"I doubt," said his father, "you [were] born for nae better than a gaberlunzie scrapegut," which is to say a wandering fiddler.

Austria's Bachelors

Vienna's socialist government favors the bachelor. By decree, [hereafter], all single men will be entitled to special quarters in each of the 25,000 municipal apartments. These quarters shall include one living room and one kitchen, at a rental of 65 cents a month. The said socialist government is likely to hear from every Viennese spinster.

And the early hunter may get the early bird for his breakfast.

The records show that but few vegetarians marry grass widows.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Queer Developments in the Indiana Political Scandal Affair.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

IF TOM ADAMS, Vincennes publisher, is going to make good on his charges of political corruption and klan rule in Indiana, it appears likely he will have to do it without the voluntary aid of Convict Stephenson, the original source of most of the accusations. After demanding a chance to make public his alleged proofs, contained in a mysterious black bag, the former klan dragon was given the opportunity when he was taken to Indianapolis on a writ of habeas corpus to testify in a civil case. He took refuge in his "constitutional right" not to testify, and since he is serving a life sentence the judge could not well punish him for contempt of court. Stephenson also was called before the grand jury which had been instructed to inquire into the corruption charges, and though the proceedings of that body are secret, there were plain indications that he had not revealed anything of importance.

Seemingly Stephenson had used his charges as a club to force his lawyers to expedite his appeal from the sentence he is serving, and there were signs that his tactics were succeeding. Several attorneys who were formerly associated with his defense and who are powerful in politics in Indiana reappeared with him.

Clyde A. Walb, chairman of the Indiana Republican committee, declares that "international bankers" are financing a campaign for the defeat of Senators Watson and Robinson and certain Indiana representatives because of their stand on the World court and the war debts, and that the Stephenson charges are a part of the plot. Calling attention to these allegations, the Indianapolis Times sent a telegram to Senator James A. Reed urging him to bring his senate campaign inquiry committee to Indiana. In St. Louis it was asserted Senator Reed had decided to comply with this request and had summoned the committee to meet in Indianapolis. Senator Borah, in Washington, said he had received from Adams papers tending to support the Stephenson charges, and hinted he might insist on an investigation by the Reed committee. Attorney General Gilliom in a sharp telegram to Borah asserted that "Indiana is thoroughly capable and desirous of setting its own house in order, if it is shown that it is out of order," and demanded that Borah return to Indiana any evidence he might have received. The Idaho senator answered that the material sent him was not in the nature of legal proof.

VICE PRESIDENT DAWES, addressing the national convention of the American Legion in Philadelphia, was heartily applauded when he attacked the primary system in elections and declared it should be "largely abolished." He continued: "If we follow the theory and plan of representative government laid down in our Constitution by providing for nomination by conventions, a better and more impartial class of candidates will result."

This drew swift retorts from Senators Borah and Hiram W. Johnson. While neither mentioned the vice president by name, neither took any pains to except him from charges that the clamor for the convention system is inspired by politicians who have failed in attempts to purchase elections and that the purpose of the clamor is to "make corruption safer and cheaper."

A nation-wide propaganda campaign to break down the primary system is under way, according to Senator Johnson. It has met with success in some states, notably New York and Idaho, where the primary election laws have been repealed, he declared, but will fail in California.

REAFFIRMING the action taken at the Omaha convention last year, the American Legion voted overwhelmingly to hold the 1927 convention in Paris from September 10 to September 23, inclusive, and to reconvene in New York on October 18 for a business session. The pilgrimage to France will be known as the "Second A. E. F.," and it is estimated that 28 ships will be needed. The Leviathan will be the flagship and the Legionnaires will sail from Montreal, Boston, New York, Hampton Roads, Charleston, Jacksonville and Galveston or Houston.

Paris correspondents assert that high officials of the Legion have authorized the formation of a "moral secret service" within the ranks of the delegates who are expected to go to France, the purpose being to control the behavior of the boys, prevent regrettable incidents and arrange trips and entertainments in which the cabarets and too lively cafes will not be included. The co-operation of the Paris police has been obtained. Propaganda is being started to impress upon the delegates the necessity of good behavior to foster cordiality and friendship with the French people.

ORGANIZED labor of America, as represented by the American Federation of Labor, is equally opposed to Italy's Fascist form of government, which it declares is autocratic, and to Russia's Soviet form of government, which it denounces as the most unscrupulous, anti-social and menacing institution in the world today. By its declaration on Russia the convention in Detroit really put a ban on participation by members of the federation in a proposed mission for the investigation of the economic conditions of Europe, including Russia. This mission is to be under the direction of L. E. Shepherd, head of the Order of Railway Conductors.

President Green and John J. Lewis, president of the mine workers, vigorously denounced the subversive campaign of Russian sympathizers within the ranks of organized labor in America.

The federation indorsed citizens' military training camps and labor's entry into the banking and insurance fields; condemned injunctions as applied to industrial disputes, and shop representation plans, otherwise known as company unions, and reiterated its advocacy of the direct primary law. A New York delegate introduced a resolution for the indorsement of Gov. Al Smith for President of the United States, but the resolution committee dodged this by reporting that Smith is a candidate not for the Presidency but for re-election as governor and as such "has the support of the New York Federation of Labor and of an overwhelming number of unorganized wage earners and citizens."

REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD W. POU (Dem.) of Smithfield, N. C., has written to President Coolidge urging that he call a special session of congress to meet the situation in the South caused by the large cotton crop and the drop in prices of that staple. It was stated at the White House that the letter had been received, and that the President had replied to it pointing out the measures which already had been taken and expressing the hope that these would prove effective.

THE Department of Agriculture has made public the crop reporting board's crop summary for the United States as of October 1. It indicated preliminary production of all wheat at 839,813,000 bushels, or a yield per acre of 14.0 bushels, including 213,336,000 bushels of spring wheat, averaging 10.2 bushels yield per acre. It also indicated, for corn, a condition of 72.4 per cent of normal, with 2,679,088,000 bushels of production, yielding 20.5 bushels per acre. For oats, the preliminary indicated production is 1,282,414,000 bushels, a 27.9 bushels yield per acre.

JOHN H. WALSH, one of the three Democratic members of the United States shipping board, has sent his resignation to President Coolidge. His successor has not yet been named, but under the provisions of the merchant marine act he will be a Democrat and representative of the Gulf states.

LAWRENCE DENNIS, American charge d'affaires at Managua, was busy last week arranging for the peace conference between the Liberal and Conservative forces in Nicaragua which it was hoped would end the civil strife in that republic. American naval forces already had landed at Corinto and were preserving the peace. The leaders of the Liberals intimated they would continue, with Mexican help, their fight against Chamarro's de facto government unless the peace conference should offer them considerable concessions. They want the former vice president impeached and deported and Senor Sacasa made president. Mr. Dennis insists that all factions must agree to a free and impartial election.

TWO representatives of the Polish government arrived in Washington and presented to President Coolidge 100 volumes containing the signatures of 5,000,000 Poles expressing their gratitude to the United States for its post-war help. One million of the names are those of school children and the remainder are those of persons in all walks of life. The President also was presented with a commemorative gold medal and silver medals from the same dies were given to Secretary of Commerce Hoover and the United States Military academy.

TWO notable men met death by accident last week. H. H. Topakayan, wealthy importer and for years Persian consul general in New York, was killed by a fall from the seventeenth story of the Yale club in that city. D. P. Davis, one of the best known of Florida's real estate men and the builder of Davis islands at Tampa, fell overboard from the liner Majestic while en route to Europe and was drowned.

AFTER a 40-day siege, the city of Wuchang, China, was stormed and captured by the Cantonese troops. The commander of the garrison was caught and promptly executed, but it was presumed his forces would be incorporated in the Canton army. The besiegers gained their first entry into the city through treachery of some of the defenders, and the ensuing battle was fierce and bloody. The civilians who remained passive were not molested.

A cablegram from Peking says three American missionaries who were captured by bandits in western Hunan province have been released without payment of ransom after being held 18 days. They are Miss Minerva Weil and Karl H. Beck of the Reformed mission and Miss Lydia Koebbe of the Evangelical mission.

BOTH France and Poland have perfectly balanced budgets for 1927, according to official announcements. The French budget provides for the collection of approximately $1,237,951,000 in direct and indirect taxes. It makes no provision for exterior political debts, but does contain credits which cover payments for A. E. F. war stocks and take care of the Morgan loan. Almost one-third of Poland's income for next year will be spent on the army, and the next greatest amount will be set aside for the ministry of education.

Finance Minister Volpi of Italy says his government is determined to stabilize the native currency and wipe out speculation. The program is to stabilize the lira at 120 to the English pound, a figure which will enable industry to import raw materials at reasonable prices and dispose of its products at a fair profit.

STALIN and his colleagues in the Soviet government of Russia have lost patience with Trotzky, Zinoviev and Pyatakotiv, who have been carrying on a campaign against them throughout the country, and have ordered them placed on trial before the central control committee of the Communist party.

DELIBERATION for nearly sixty-six hours failed to bring agreement in the jury that heard the conspiracy case against Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, and T. W. Miller, former alien property custodian, so the jurors were dismissed. Their final vote was 7 to 5 for conviction of Daugherty and 10 to 2 for conviction of Miller. The indictment still stands, but the government's attorneys would not say whether or not there would be a new trial.

LEE'S OIL WORMER FOR SWINE

Many worm expellers are caustic and make the pig sick. It is sometimes a week or ten days after worming before he begins to show any gain. Pigs wormed with Lee's Oil Wormer recover quickly, have thrifty appetites and gain faster than with any other wormer we have seen. This is because their digestive system has not been irritated with caustic drugs. It is administered with a dose syringe—no trouble, no wate, and no danger to the pig. Come in and let us tell you all about it.

SPECIAL ELECTION NEXT WEEK THURSDAY, NOV. 4th

The Question Of Granting Franchise To Koerner Co. Will Be Voted

Next week Thursday, November 4th, the question of granting a franchise to the Koerner Telephone Co will be submitted to the voters of Klemme.

The notice of this special election and a copy of the Town Ordinance in regard to the same has been properly published in The Times for the past four weeks and the voters should be well acquainted by this time with the proposition to be submitted

The franchise which the Koerner Telephone Company has been operating under has expired and therefore they are asking for a new franchise to operate in Klemme. We might say that granting this franchise does not in any way add any expense to the town, as all expenses in connection with this election are to be paid by the Koerner Company.

There is no reason that we know of why the franchise should not be granted The Koerner Co. has always given good service, operates with good equipment, and Mr. A. G. Koerner, the manager, says he intends to keep up the service and add new and better equipment whenever or wherever needed.

THANKS FOR THE NEWS

Last week The Times received a large number of news items by mail and phone of local happenings of interst for which we thanked the people who were kind enough to send them in.

Again this week quite a number of items have been sent in, all of which we appreciate very much. We want to publish ALL the news, but we need the assistance of our readers. Keep on sending in news folks from your community.

Thanks.

One Reason Why They Steal Fords

W. W. Clement isn't paying any attention to the ads for alcohol for use in radiators this winter. He has some already on hand. One day last week his sons John and Clark were hauling fodder from the field, and in a shock they found a new five-gallon jug which contained about two and a half gallons of hooch. The fodder had been cut about two weeks, and the shock where the jug was, was back quite a distance from the road. W. W. says he has no use for the hooch internally, and is going to try it in his Ford one of these cold mornings.—Garner Signal.

GENERAL ELECTION NEXT TUESDAY

ONLY FIGHT WILL CENTER ON BROOKHART AND PORTER

No Opposition On County Ticket For Any Office

Tuesday, November 2nd, is the date of the next General Election.

About the only fight which looms in the state this year is the Brookhart-Porter fight for United States Senator. However, the Brookhart supporters have little to fear from the Democratic opponent for the office.

The circle heads the ballot this year over each ticket. This should not, however, confuse any voter if they will but study the ballot

As an example, you place a cross (X) mark in the circle heading the Republican ticket you automatically vote for every candidate on that ticket without during any further marking, and is the most simple way to vote.

However, suppose you have placed a cross in the Republican circle and then you decide you want to vote for a candidate in the Democratic column. this can be easily done. All that is necessary is to cross the candidate you choose in the democratic list and it automatically cancells the candidate in any of the opposite columns, and at the same time the balance of your Republican ticket is voted "straight" without any further marking.

The name of Smith W. Brookhart heads the Republican ticket and along with it is the name of David W. Stewart, both of which should be voted if you are voting that way, as Mr. Stewart is filling an unexpired term for the office. Claude R. Porter appears opposite Brookhart, as the Democratic candidate for United States Senator

Both the Republican and Democratic state tickets are complete. The Commonwealth Land and Independent Tickets have but an insignificant sprinkling of candidates.

The County Ticket is all Republican, with no opposition.

The Times Office has a Sample Ballot which any of our readers may find at the office.

GARNER DEPOT AGENT HELD UP MONDAY NIGHT

Homer Young, night agent at the Milwaukee depot at Garner, was held up Monday night at nine o'clock or shortly after the 8:49 train pulled out, by a lone bandit who commanded Young, at the point of a gun to throw up his hnads and unlock the safe. Young complied and the bandit secured about $60 in cash The masked man then backed Young into the freight house where he was locked in. Young made his escape in a few minutes and notified the authorities, but the robber left no tangible clew to his indentity.

All good moral philosophy is but a hand-maid to religion.

GRIGGS HOOKS BIG MUSKY AT LAKE

BIG FISH BATTLED TWENTY BEFORE BEING LANDED

Largest Fish Caught At Clear Lake This Year

Jay Griggs grabbed off all honors for the year Wednesday morning when he hooked and landed a sixteen pound muskalounge at Clear Lake.

Jay had a hunch that the fish might bite so he started out alone yesterday morning to try his luck. He made a few casts west of the bar at Clear Lake and brought in a black bass and couple of fir sized pickerel. Not such bad luck at that, but the fish quit biting and Jay started his Elto motor for points further east of the sand bar.

This was along about ten o'clock and there was not much doing. Jay hooked a Bassorino, red and white, plug on his casting rod and wham! out went the line singing that glorious song all fishermen love to hear. Jay knew he had a good one this time as he had t sit down in the boat to keep from being pulled overboard, as by this time Mr. Fish was trying to tear things up in general. Jay says he battled the big boy fully twenty minutes before he showed a sign of quitting, and then he had to gaff him to pull him into the boat.

Jay broughtt he fish to town and fishermen were all of the opinion it was a genuine musky. The fish is a beauty and weighed exactly sixteen pounds and one ounce, and he measured 44 inches from tip to tip. His mouth is big enough to throw in a good sized cat and easily opens ten inches. The fish's head measurers twelve inches from base of gill to tip of mouth. Some of the teeth were fully a half inch long.

The fish has the characteristic markings of a musky, and lacks the blotch markings found on pickerel. Jay has a prize he can well feel proud of and is without a question the best fish pulled out of any lake in this part of the country this season.

The big fish was displayed at the Times Office this morning and attracted more attention than a three ring circus.

Well, Jay can lay off now for the balance of the season and give the rest of us a chance to show our skill with a rod and reel.

SEND THE TIMES TO YOUR BOY OR GIRL AWAY FROM HOME

It's As Good As A Twenty Page Letter From Home

Why not send The Klemme Times to your son or daughter attending school away from home? Can you think of any better way of telling them what's going on in the Old Home Town?

We are making a special "school year offer" and will send the Times every week until your boy or girl comes back from school next June for only $1.00.

"COUNTRY STORE" TO BE NEW FEATURE AT IDLE HOUR

Manager Thompson Has New Idea For Wednesday Nights

Beginning next Wednesday night, Manager Thompson of the Idle Hour Theatre will put on a "stunt" that is something new along with his regular feature show. He calls it "The Country Store." The idea is that he will buy various articles of groceries and merchandise from the stores in Klemme and they will then be given away at his show. There are no "strings" to this whatever and is simply a "stunt" that should go big. Take our advice and see the show next Wednesday night and see what the Country Store is.

Lefty Flynn in "The Traffic Cop" is the big feature picture for next Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Tom Tyler, his horse, and his little pal and the dog appear here Friday and Saturday night in 'The Wyoming Wildcat." Don't miss this one!

BEN KATTER'S BIRTHDAY WELL CELEBRATED HE SAYS

Two Surprise Parties And Plenty Of Good Eats Nearly Too Much For Klemme Farmer

"It never rains but what it pours" said Ben Katter to a Times reporter the other day. Ben was referring to the birthday surprise parties on him.

Sunday was Mr. Katter's birthday but he did not give the matter very much thought and his good wife had him do the noon chores early enough so she could provide a big dinner, all unbeknown to Ben. The surprise came when he found a lot of people had congregated at his home to help him eat birthday dinner. When Ben "counted noses" he found that Fred Katter, of Minneapolis; Elmer Katter and family; Paul Elling and family; A. E. Katter and family; Mrs. Fern Peck and family, all of Garner and vicinity, and P. D. Lease and family, of Mason City were all present to help him celebrate.

Ben enjoyed it very much as well as all who celebrated with him.

Monday evening Ben got another big jot when another gang invaded the peacefullness of his home and he was again the subject of a surprise and another big feed. Those who came this time were Clarence Larsen and family, Ralph Elder and family and Alvin Stokesbary and family—the famous oyster eaters of Klemme. They indulged in their famous indoor sport of eating oyster stew.

Ben said if he had more than one birthday a year he would bust!

KLEMME POST TREAT BUSINESS MEN TO OYSTER SUPPER

Legion And Business Men Have Big Time At Parish House

Last Friday evening the Adam-Schaefer Post of the American Legion, the Klemme Legionaires, entertained the business men and Civil War Vets of Klemme to an oyster supper and general all around good time at the Parish House.

About thirty five men, or more, were present and enjoyed a good time visiting with each other for a short time when the Legion boys spread the big "eats" serving oyster stew, coffee, sandwiches, pickles and olives and all the regular trimmings for an oyster supper. After every body had filed up on the fine feed the balance of the evening was turned over to general talks, telling jokes and having a good time.

The Legion boys are good sports and the business men certainly enjoyed the evening. Many expressed their wish that more such meetings should be held during the fall and winter

GOOD POTATOES SCARCE

Des Moines, Iowa, Oct. 28.—Unusual care to conserve the potato supply is advised by the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture

The September freeze damaged exposed potatoes and potatoes near the surface of the ground in North Dakota and Minnesota and the water soaked fields in Iowa have prevented proper ripening of the potatoes and interfered with digging. The tubers are more watery than usual and the skin is tender almost like new potatoes. Unusual care must be taken in digging, drying and storing. High prices are probable before another crop can be raised.

Huskers Ask Good Price

BLUE EARTH, Minn., Oct. 28.—The farmers will pay around seven cents a bushel for corn huskers this fall where the huskers will have to shovel the load by hand and six cents where an elevator is used to unload.

REMODELS BLACKSMITH SHOP

The Hancock 4-H Club was the first in the state to broadcast a program of a series from WOI, Ames when people from Hancock county were "on the air" Saturday afternoon. Miss Mildred Hampel, of near Klemme talked on "How it feels to be State Secretary." Miss Elsa Trulson, of Britt, another 4-H club worker, talked on "How it feels to be a county President." Mrs. E. J. Schneider, of Goodell, and county chairman of club work gave a splendid talk on the value of club work.

Over three thousand farms changed ownership in Iowa last year; the majority of these were not forced sales; neighbor bought from neighbor because the purchaser wanted to farm and was willing to pay the price.

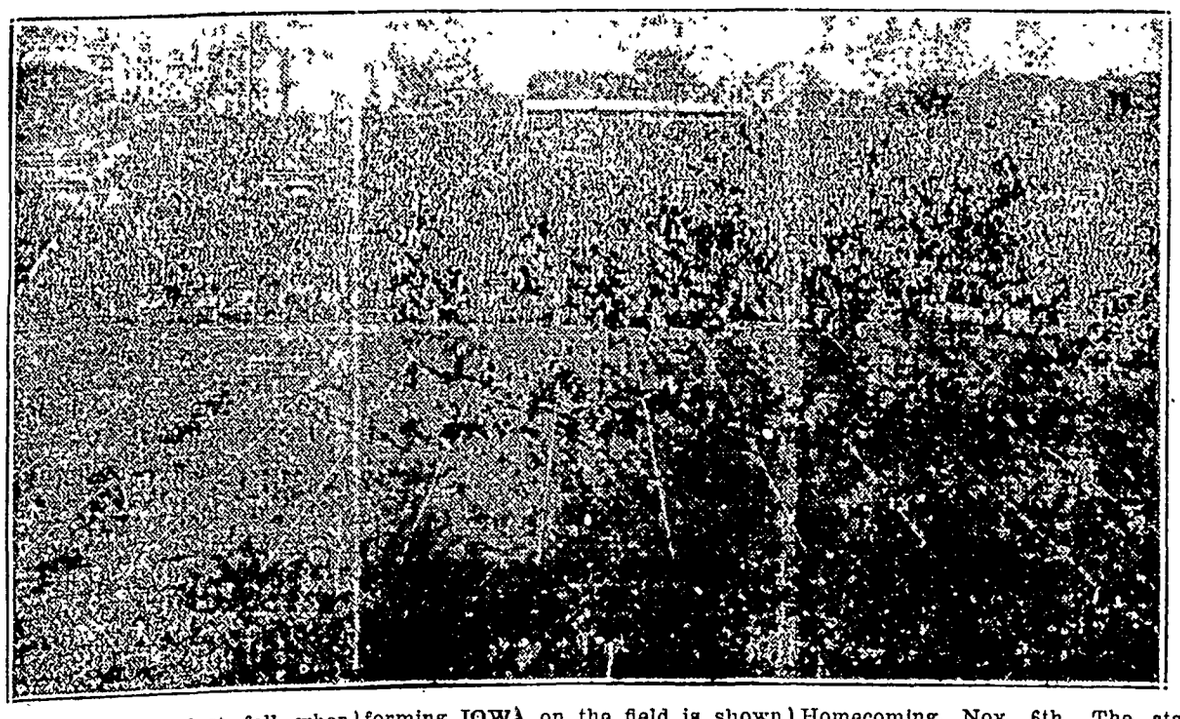
THE STATE UNIVERSITY'S HOMECOMING



A record was set last fall when 25,721 people saw the University of Iowa football team beat Illinois in the annual Homecoming game. A portion of the crowd in the east stands and the famous Hawkeye band forming IOWA on the field is shown above.

Authorities believe that the attendance record for the Iowa stadium will be shattered again this fall when Minnesota plays the Hawkeyes at Homecoming, Nov. 6th. The stands will seat 30,000. In spite of the demand, many good seats may yet be had," says K. E. Griffin, manager of ticket sales at the department of athletics.

A MOB OF CIVILIANS CAPTURE AN ARMY TRUCK

WHEN the European war blew up on Monday morning, November 11, 1918, the detonation jarred America's war-weary people into the most wholehearted, spontaneous, unrestrained and reckless celebration ever recorded.

And what a celebration it was! Cities went wild and villages rejoiced. Everyone rushed to the streets to join with the mad throng in its unorganized parades and revelries. Doctors, lawyers and bankers deserted their offices and forgot their dignity to add their voices and cheers to the general pandemonium.

In the cities throughout the country, particularly the larger ones, the phenomena of that first Armistice day were strikingly of one order. What was happening in New York was happening in Chicago. And in Philadelphia, Milwaukee, San Francisco, Detroit, St. Louis, Atlanta, Cleveland and Boston it was the same.

America really had two Armistice celebrations, the one of Thursday, November 7, four days earlier, precipitated by a cabled rumor, serving as a rehearsal for the great exhibition of the following Monday.

From newspaper accounts of the following day we read that in the cities, particularly New York and Chicago, "delirium and license disputed the rule of the streets. The mad revel of the day approached an orgy by night."

The wild celebration began in the darkness of the early morning hours of Monday, raged during the day, gathering speed and recklessness the while, and ended in hysteria in the early morning hours of Tuesday. Before midnight the good natured rowdyism had become general. Thousands of men and women had their hats knocked from their heads and trampled underneath the feet of the hilarious multitude. Those who had lost their hats seized those of others and wore them away. Disheveled girls snatched caps from sailors and hats from men and were openly kissed and hugged in joyous revenge. The girls were no more backward or diffident than the men. Who cared? The kaiser had been whipped and the war was over.

Starting in the darkness of early Monday morning, when men answered the shriek of whistles by leaping from bed to seize revolvers and shotguns and rend the as yet unbroken silence of the neighborhood with the bark of firearms, the thing grew in proportion as the minutes and hours passed on.

Women, young and old, waited only long enough to throw overcoats over their night dresses before they rushed to the streets beating on kettles, tooting horns, and crying to neighbors that peace had come. From open windows came the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner," "America," "Over There," and any other airs the sleepy-eyed revelers could think of.

Then here and there along residential streets the flames of quickly kindled bonfires appeared, and in the dim light of the dawning half-clothed men and women performed weird dances in honor of the kaiser's downfall.

Trains leaving the awakening cities roared through the countryside with whistles shrieking the news to suburban towns and outlying villages which soon blazed with light as the villagers arose to celebrate. Farmers, miles from the railroads, heard the screaming whistles and rose to telephone their neighbors or to apprise them of the news by firing shotguns.

With the coming of the light, the exodus from the residential districts into the business sections downtown began. Hurriedly throwing on their clothes, men and women rushed in search of any means of transportation which would take them to the scene where as actors they were to stage the most spectacular performance of its kind in history.

Trolley cars, elevated trains and suburban lines dumped their shouting freight and went back empty for more. Motor cars, trucks and busses carried twice as many passengers as there was room for as they picked their way through the crowding streets with exhaust wide open and sirens and horns blowing.

Eleven o'clock in the morning found downtown streets jammed as on a pre-Volstead New Year's eve. Mulling around and weaving in and out was a cheering, shouting, laughing crowd, which had brought with it and was continuing to procure every imaginable accessory which would add to the supercarnival spirit. All the noisemaking devices known in the history of man were impressed into service. Horns sounded everywhere. Men and boys appeared rolling huge garbage cans, beating them with clubs. Cowbells, cymbals, dishpans added to the uproar.

Crowds thronged the five-and-ten-cent stores, depleting the stock of horns, clackers, drums, confetti, dishpans, skillets and rolls of paper. Youths emerged with arms full of huge boxes of cheap talcum powder which soon began to dust the faces and clothing of the mob. Thrown aloft, it descended in great clouds, whitening everything it touched.

Old men marched down the streets beating children's drums. Gray-haired women hammered on shiny dishpans which were destined never to float a dish. All the while the noise was growing in volume, but the crowd appeared to be hearing it the less.

The canyons of the business district re-echoed the senseless din, while the skyscrapers belched tons and tons of paper from their countless windows. Flying bits of paper filled the air everywhere, until it looked as though a mighty snowstorm were sweeping the city. The streets became carpeted with it. Long streamers of ticker tape and adding machine rolls hung from trolley poles and wires and from windows and fire escapes.

Confetti filled the air. From offices high in the air came hundreds of pages of torn telephone directories, fluttering to the street. They littered the pavement. New stationery, file cards, records, letters, wall paper—everything was hurled in that mad scramble of released emotion.

Office girls hurled the contents of wastebaskets on the heads of the rioters below and then rushed to join in the merrymaking on the streets. Pandemonium was a churchyard compared to this. It was All Fools' day, Fourth of July, Hallowe'en and carnival rolled into one mighty billow of merriment.

Whenever a man appeared with a large flag he immediately became the leader of an impromptu, unorganized parade, soon swelling into thousands, where staid matrons marched with chorus girls, where bartenders, still wearing their white aprons, linked arm and arm with men clad in ministerial garb, where white mingled with black, the rich with the poor, where good church women were not too good to march arm in arm with the outcast of the streets.

Drunk with excitement, women and girls set the pace in the maddest revel the cities had ever known. Motor trucks and ice wagons became triumphal chariots where girls, still undaunted from a hundred maulings, rode astride the radiators disregarding the reckless display of silken hosiery, or clung in clusters to the necks of drivers and passengers to keep from falling while they sounded their wild pean of victory. No, it was not a peace celebration, it was a victory riot.

Reserve and propriety were thrown to the winds. Girls hugged and kissed men they never had seen before. Men hugged and kissed girls they never had seen before. Men and women who had touched no liquor before in their lives imbibed in saloons and from bottles passed freely among the crowds in the streets. A woman of sixty appeared riding through crowded thoroughfares on a stolid mule.

That was Armistice day in America. But America was not alone in her celebration. In Paris and in London the same wild scene was being enacted. News of the signing of the armistice by Germany came to London as a distinct surprise. Up until eleven o'clock of that morning the streets were normal. People were going about their business under the stress of wartime pressure which had borne down for more than four years.

Then suddenly there was an explosion. A terrific silence. Then all London swept en masse into the streets and went wild. The same shouts, the same noise. The streets filled with seething humanity and traffic halted. Flags swirled everywhere. Old women sold them on the streets, the demand being almost as great for the Stars and Stripes as for the Union Jack.

Hotels, clubs, cafes and restaurants overflowed with joyous men and women released from their war burden of more than four years. "The war is over! The war is over!"

On through the day and on through the night the wild celebration plunged until sheer exhaustion put an end to the fierce merrymaking. On the following morning the large dining room of the Savoy hotel was strewn with the tired bodies of sleeping men and women who, worn out with the day's great strain, dropped in their tracks.

Dead Barberries Spread No Rust

By Use of Salt or Kerosene It Has Been Found Possible to Kill Bushes.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Results at the end of the eighth year of the campaign against the common barberry as summed up by Dr. F. E. Kempton, in charge of the project for the United States Department of Agriculture, show that practically all of the 12,139,021 bushes, sprouting bushes, and seedlings found in the 13 states have been destroyed. By the use of salt or kerosene it has been possible to destroy the bushes beyond any possibility of future sprouting.

Completing Surveys.

Under the direction of state leaders in the 13 states, 266 field men and squad leaders started on the present season's work July 1. The men in Michigan, Ohio, Illinois and Montana are attempting to complete the preliminary survey in those states. A thorough second survey is being carried on in Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming and Indiana, where many escaped bushes are being found in natural and planted wooded areas. Many local areas of rusted grain have been found during the season and, in practically every case, nearby barberry bushes were found to be the source of infection.

Bushes and Seedlings Left.

No doubt many common barberry bushes and seedlings still exist in the barberry eradication area, says Doctor Kempton, and these must be found and destroyed. It is evident, he says, that barberry eradication is a material aid in the solution of the stem-rust problem. Stem rust has been controlled in the eastern group of the barberry states by removal of the bushes, and epidemics seem to be less severe generally in the last few years. In many localities the elimination of barberries has already so reduced stem-rust losses that it is again possible to grow grain where formerly it had been abandoned because of rust.

Young Chickens Spread Tuberculosis to Swine

It is a general belief that chickens under one year of age seldom develop tuberculosis to the extent of becoming spreaders of the disease. Hence, it is thought that culling all birds above that age from the flock would soon eliminate the disease.

To determine whether or not this belief is well founded, Dr. T. S. Rich of the Department of Agriculture, in charge of tuberculosis-eradication work in the state of Michigan, conducted a general culling campaign covering all poultry flocks in one township in the state. Every chicken on 151 farms was individually examined, or a total of 15,377. From this number 1,494 were removed as culls, and 86 were found upon post-mortem examination to be infected with tuberculosis. The disease was demonstrated to exist in about 38 per cent of the flocks examined. Three generalized cases were birds under one year of age. This was conclusive proof to Doctor Rich that young chickens as well as old are a source of danger in spreading tuberculosis to hogs and should be removed along with the rest of the flock when infection is discovered.

Control Stomach Worms by Change of Pasture

Sheep heavily infested with stomach worms cannot be thrifty and profitable. At the Ohio experiment station it is recommended that control be obtained by frequent change of pasture and by dosing.

Dosing may consist of either copper sulphate or nicotine sulphate (Black Leaf 40). Never use both treatments at the same time. The copper sulphate solution is made by dissolving two ounces of dark blue copper sulphate crystals in one gallon of water. The nicotine sulphate is prepared by adding two teaspoonfuls to one quart of water.

Keep the sheep off feed for 18 hours before and six hours after treatment. If possible, turn them on pasture not grazed by sheep for two months previous. Give sheep weighing 50 to 60 pounds one ounce of either solution, but never both. Sheep weighing 60 to 80 pounds need one and one-half ounces, and all sheep over 100 pounds, three ounces. Dose with an oil can or syringe.

Burning Weeds in Fall Will Kill Their Seeds

Fall is the best time to burn weeds.

The burning of weeds is a practice that should be universally followed in places where they cannot be used for green manure. The use of fire destroys the seed as well as the unsightly dead plants.

Where weeds are burned in the fall there is less chance for the seeds to be scattered than later, when the plants have died from frost. It is a good plan to mow the weeds close to the ground while they are still green and immediately rake them into piles. In this way the seed will not be rattled out. The piles should be rather small—half the size of a hay cock—so that they will dry out quickly and burn up completely. Set fire to the piles, and see that the loose ends are raked into the coals when the center has burned.

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, successful playwright, but somewhat inclined to wildness, attends the wedding of his sister, Barbara, to whom has been left the great Devon fortune. Laurie had been a gay young chap, but for the last year he has been toeing the mark, through the efforts of Barbara. Laurie, who is wealthy, refuses to settle down to work, announcing his intention of resting and seeking adventure.

Laurie grinned, and the grin infuriated Bangs. He whirled away from it. A footstool impeded his progress, and he kicked it out of the way with large abandon. It was his habit to rush about a room when he was talking excitedly. He rushed about now; and Laurie lit a cigarette and watched him, at first angrily, then with a growing tolerance born of memories of scenes in their plays which Bangs had thrashed out in much this same manner. The world could never be wholly uninteresting while Rodney pranced about in it, cutting the air with gestures like that.

"Here I am," snapped Rodney, "ready with my play, the best plot I've had yet. You won't let me even mention it to you. Here's the new season. Here's Epstein, sitting on our doormat with a check-book in each hand, waiting to put on anything we give him. You know he's lost a small fortune this fall. You know it's up to us to give him a play that will pull him out of the hole he's in. Here's Haxon, the best director in town, marking time and holding off other managers in the hope that you and I will get down to business. And here you are, the fellow we're all counting on—" He stopped for breath and adjectives.

"Yes," Laurie politely prompted him. "Here I am. What about it? What am I doing?"

"You know d—d well what you're doing. You're loafing!" Bangs fired the word at him as if it were a shell from a Big Bertha. "You're loafing till it makes us all sick to look at you. We thought a week or two of it would be enough, when you realized the conditions; but it's gone on for a month; and, instead of getting tired, you're getting more and more into the loafing habit. You abuse time till it shrieks in agony."

"Good sentence," applauded Laurie. "But don't waste it on me. Put it into a play."

Bangs seemed not to hear him. He was standing by the room's one window, now, staring unseeingly out of it,

"Here I Am," Snapped Rodney.

his hands deep in his pockets, taking in the knowledge of the failure of his appeal. Under the realization of this, he tossed a final taunt over his shoulder.

"I can forgive the big blunders a man makes in his life," he muttered; "but I haven't much patience with a chap that lies around and shirks at a time like this!"

Laurie removed the half-smoked cigarette from his mouth, and not finding an ash tray within reach, carefully crushed out its burning end against the polished top of the dressing case. He had grown rather pale.

"That will be about all, Bangs," he said quietly. "What you and Epstein and Haxon don't seem to remember is just one thing. If you don't like matters as they are, it's mighty easy to change them. It doesn't take half a minute to agree to dissolve a partnership."

"I know." Bangs returned to his chair, and, dropping limply into it, his hands still in his pockets, stared despondently at his outstretched legs. "That's all it means to you," he went on, morosely. "Our partnership is one in a thousand. It's based on friendship as well as on financial interest. If I do say it, it represents a combination of brains, ability, backing and prospects that comes only once in a lifetime, if it comes at all. Yet in one year you're sick of it, and tired of work. You're ready to throw it all over, and to throw over at the same time the men whose interests are bound up with yours. You're dawdling in cabarets and roadhouses and restaurants, when you might be doing Work—" Bangs' voice capitalized the word—"real work," he added fiercely, "work other fellows would give their souls to be able to do."

He ended on a flat note, oddly unlike his usual buoyant tones, and sat still as if everything had been said.

Laurie lit a fresh cigarette, drew in a mouthful of smoke, and exhaled it in a series of pretty rings. In his brief college experience he had devoted some time to acquiring this art. Admiringly watching the little rings pass through the big rings, he spoke with studied carelessness.

"It was a pretty good scene, Bangs," he said, "and it showed careful rehearsing. But it would be a lot more effective if you had a real situation to base it on. As it is, you're making a devil of a row about nothing. I worked like a horse all last year, and you know it. Now I'm resting, or loafing, if you prefer to call it that, and"—he bit off the words and fairly threw them at his friend—"it will save you and Epstein and Haxon a lot of mental wear and tear if you will mind your own business and let me alone."

Bangs raised his eyes and dropped them again.

"You are our business," he somberly reminded his partner. "I've got so I can't work without you," he added, with a humility new to him. "You know that. And you know I've got the plot. It's ready—great Scott, it's boiling in me! I'm crazy to get it out. And here I've got to sit around watching you kill time, while you know and I know that you'd be a d—n sight happier if you were on the job. Good Lord, Laurie, work's the biggest thing there is in life! Doesn't it mean anything at all to you?"

"Not just now." Laurie spoke with maddening nonchalance.

"Then there's something rotten in you."

Laurie winced, but made no answer. He hoped Bangs would go on talking and thus destroy the echo of his last words, with which the silent room seemed filled. But nothing came. Rodney's opportunity had passed, and he was lost in depressed realization of his failure. Laurie strolled back to the mirror, his forgotten tie dangling in his hand.

"We'll let it go at that," he said then. "Think things over, and make up your mind what you want to do about the contract."

"All right."

Bangs replied in the same flat notes he had used a moment before, and without changing his position; but the two words gave Laurie a shock. He did not believe that either Rodney or Epstein would contemplate a dissolution of their existing partnership; but an hour ago he would not have believed that Rodney Bangs could say to him the things he had said just now.

He was beginning to realize that he had tried his partners sorely in the month that had passed since his return to town, and all for what? He himself had brought out of the foolish experience nothing save a tired nervous system, a sense of boredom such as he had not known for a year, and, especially when he looked at Bangs, an acute mental discomfort which introspective persons would probably have diagnosed as the pangs of conscience. Laurie did not take the trouble to diagnose it. He merely resented it as a grievance added to the supreme grievance based on the fact that he had not yet even started on the high adventure he had promised himself.

He was gloomily considering both grievances, and tying his tie with his usual care, when something in the mirror caught and held his attention. He looked at it, at first casually, then with growing interest. In the glass, directly facing him, was a wide studio window. It was open, notwithstanding the cold January weather, and a comfortable, middle-aged, plump woman, evidently a superior type of caretaker, was sitting on the sill, polishing an inner pane. The scene was as vivid as a mirage, and it was like the mirage in that it was projected from some point which itself remained unseen.

Laurie turned to the one window the dressing-room afforded—a double French window, at his right, but a little behind him, and reaching to the floor. Through this he could see across a court the opposite side of his own building, but no such window or commonplace vision as had just come to him. In his absorption in the phenomenon he called to Bangs, who rose slowly, and, coming to his side, regarded the scene without much interest.

"It's a cross projection from a house diagonally opposite us," he said, after studying the picture a moment. "It must be that old red studio building on the southwest corner of the square. If we had a room back of this and looking toward the west, we could see the real window."

"As it is," said Laurie, "we've got a reserved seat for an intimate study of any one who lives there. I wonder who has that studio?"

Bangs had no idea. He was grateful to the little episode, however, for spreading over the yielding ground beneath his feet the solid strip on which he had crossed back to his chum. He threw an arm across Laurie's shoulders and looked into his face, with something in his expression that reminded young Devon of a favorite collie he had loved and lost in boyhood.

"All right now?" the look asked, just as the dog's look had asked it of the little chap of ten, when something had gone wrong. Rodney's creed of life was held together by a few primitive laws, the first of which was loyalty. Already he was reproaching himself for what he had said and done. Laurie carefully completed the tying of his tie, and turned to him with his gayest smile.

"Hurry up and finish dressing," he cheerfully suggested, "and we'll go out to breakfast. Since you insist on waiting 'round for me like Mary's little lamb, I suppose I've got to feed you."

Rodney's wide grin responded, for the first time in many days. He bustled about, completing his toilet, and ten minutes later the two young men started out together with a lightness of spirit which each enjoyed and neither wholly understood. Both had a healthy horror of "sentimental stuff" and a gay, normal disregard of each other's feelings in ordinary intercourse. But in the past half-hour, for the first time in their association, they had come close to a serious break, and the soul of each had been chilled by a premonitory loneliness as definite as the touch of an icy finger. In the quick reaction they experienced now their spirits soared exultantly. They breakfasted in a fellowship such as they had not known since Barbara's marriage, the month before.

If Bangs had indulged in any dream of a change of life in Laurie, however, following this reconciliation, the next few days destroyed the tender shoots of that hope. Laurie's manner retained its pleasant camaraderie, but work and he met as strangers and passed each other by. The routine of his days remained what they had been during the past five weeks. He gadded about, apparently harmlessly, came home at shocking hours, and spent most of the bracing January days wrapped in a healthful slumber that infuriated Bangs, who wandered in and out of their apartment like an unhappy ghost. On the rare occasions when he and Rodney lunched or dined together, Laurie was entirely good-humored and when Epstein was with them seemed wholly impervious to any hints thrown out, none too subtly, by his producing partner.

"Listen, Laurie," said that disgusted individual, almost a month after the new year had been ushered in, "the new year's here. That's a good time for a young fella to get busy again on somethin' vorth while. Ain't I right?"

Laurie suppressed a yawn and carefully struck off with his little finger the firm ash of an excellent cigarette. He was consuming thirty or forty cigarettes a day, and his nerves were beginning to show the effect of this indulgence.

"I believe it is," he courteously agreed. "It has been earnestly recommended to the young as a good time to start something."

"Veil," Epstein's voice took on the guttural notes of his temperamental

Her Elbows Were on the Sill. Her Chin Rested in the Hollow of Her Cupped Hands.

moments, "don't that mean nothin' to you?"

Laurie grinned. He had caught the quick look of warning Bangs shot at the producer and it amused him.

"Not yet," he said. "Not till I've had my adventure."

Epstein sniffed.

"The greatest adventure in life," he stated dogmatically, "is to make a lot of money. I tell you vy. Because then you got all the other adventures you can handle, trying to hold on to it!"

Bangs, who was developing a new and hitherto unsuspected vein of tact, encouraged Epstein to enlarge on this congenial theme. He now fully realized that Devon would go his own gait until he wearied of it, and that no argument or persuasion could enter his armor-clad mind. The position of Bangs was a difficult one, for while he was accepting and assimilating this unpleasant fact, Epstein and Haxon—impatient men by temperament and without much training in self-control—were getting wholly out of patience and therefore out of hand. Haxon, indeed, was for the time entirely out of hand, for he had finally started the rehearsals of a new play which, he grimly informed Bangs, would make "The Man Above" look like a canceled postage-stamp.

Bangs repeated the comment to his chum the next morning, during the late dressing-hour which now gave them almost their only opportunity for a few words together. He had hoped it would make an impression, and he listened with pleasure to a sharp exclamation from Laurie, who chanced to be standing before the door mirror in the dressing-room, brushing his hair. The next instant Bangs realized that it was not his news which had evoked the tribute of that exclamation.

"Come here!" called Laurie, urgently. "Here's something new; and, by Jove, isn't she a beauty!"

Bangs interrupted his toilet to lounge across the room. Looking over Laurie's shoulder, his eyes found the cynosure that held the gaze of his friend. The wide-open studio window was again reflected in the mirror, but with another occupant.

This was a girl, young and lovely. She appeared in the window like a half-length photograph in a frame. Her body showed only from above the waist. Her elbows were on the sill. Her chin rested in the hollows of her cupped hands. Her wavy hair, parted on one side and drawn softly over the ears in the fashion of the season, was reddish-gold. Her eyes were brown, and very thoughtful. Down-dropped, they seemed to stare at something on the street below, but the girl's expression was not that of one who was looking at an object with interest. Instead, she seemed lost in a deep and melancholy abstraction.

"Isn't she charming!" he cried again.

Bangs' reply revealed a severely practical side of his nature.

"She'll have a beastly cold in the head if she doesn't shut that window," he grumpily suggested. But his interest, too, was aroused. He stared at the girl in the mirror with an attention almost equal to Laurie's.

Who is this girl in the mirror?

Mercy Cut No Figure in Old-Time Justice

The torturing of criminals on "the wheel" is a very ancient form of punishment. In an "improved" form it was revived in Germany in the Fourteenth century. The unfortunate victim was laid upon a very large cart wheel, his legs and arms extended and fastened to the spokes, and in that position, as the wheel was turned around, his limbs were broken by successive blows with an iron bar. In France, where the wheel was used only to punish criminals of the most atrocious sort, the victim was first bound to a frame of wood in the form of a St. Andrew's cross—that is, two bars of equal length laid crosswise like an X. Grooves were cut transversely in these bars, above and below the knees and elbows, and the executioner struck the limbs of the victim these places. Sometimes he finished his work by striking the criminal two or three blows on the chest or stomach, which usually put an end to the sufferer's life, and therefore were called blows of mercy. The punishment of the wheel was abolished in France at the revolution. In Germany it was occasionally inflicted early in the last century for the crimes of treason and parricide.

Failures Become Critics

Reviewers are usually people who would have been poets, historians, biographers, etc., if they could; they have tried their talents at one or the other, and have failed; therefore they turn critics.—Coleridge

Famous Old English "Beau"

The sobriquet "Beau Nash" was bestowed upon Richard Nash, a fashionable personage of the Eighteenth century. He was born in Wales in 1674, and studied law, but later became a gambler, for which he seemed to have a greater liking and aptitude and from which he derived an ample revenue. In 1704 he transformed Bath from a vulgar and neglected watering place into a gay and fashionable resort. The city of Bath, in gratitude for his services, placed his statue between those of Newton and Pope. He lived to be eighty-seven, but his last years were spent in poverty, owing to the act of parliament that suppressed gambling. —Kansas City Star.

DIGGING UP RELICS OF ANCIENT LONDON

Finds of Exceptional Interest Recently Made.

A tableload of fossils and relics of human activity in bygone ages, taken from clay excavated on the site of the new Daily Mail building in London is being examined at the Guildhall museum, London, by archeological investigators who are composing from its contents a coherent story of this part of ancient London, says the London Mail.

The fact that the excavations have revealed no traces of the Roman occupation tends to confirm the belief that the area was just outside the district developed in that period.

The first recognizable finds were associated with the monastery of the White Friars. The new Daily Mail offices are being built on what was the garden of these Carmelite monks, the license to use this ground having been granted to them in 1397 by Richard II.

At that time the Thames flowed over the site of the present Daily Mail building (Carmelite house), and the south end of the monastery garden was the river bank Earlier excavation work in the vicinity established the conviction that the friars disposed of their broken utensils by throwing them into the water at the foot of the garden and the discovery now of various vessels is regarded as important evidence of their domestic habits.

Particularly interesting is a part of a curious earthenware brazier which, from its shape and funnel devices, was apparently carried from cell to cell for cooking and heating purposes. Traces of the charcoal burned in it seven centuries ago still remain. Of the same date are several earthenware candlesticks, while a number of jugs of the Tudor period, used in the monastery before its dissolution in the reign of Henry VIII, have been found.

A tavern wine glass, kitchen utensils, and three-legged cooking pot glazed inside, are the most interesting specimens of the kind ever obtained in the Carmelite neighborhood. Notable among the discoveries, also, are several stoneware drinking bottles or jugs, cut to portray the features of an old man with a long beard, supposed to be a caricature of the Cardinal Bellarmino.

Until 1697 the maze of hovels remained the refuge of criminals, but the community disappeared in that year, when an act of parliament was passed revoking immunity from justice. Subsequently, on the site of the new premises, the Whitefriars glass works were erected.

No explanation has yet been found for a set of heavy glass cylinders found in the soil, but a heap of shapeless fragments of glass tells of an exciting episode in the history of naval recruiting. Resisting the press gang when it attacked the factory to seize the glass workers for navy service, the operatives poured melted glass on the heads of the attackers, who fled so precipitately that the officer in command was almost trampled to death.

Warmth by Wireless

That it is no more improbable to broadcast heat waves than it is to broadcast sound waves is the view of Prof. S. E. Dibble of the Carnegie Institute of Technology. But, he states, much research work must be done to discover instruments capable of controlling heat waves, and a detector that will anticipate the waves, hold them, and amplify them.

It is known that heat travels through space and through solids, says Professor Dibble, and when once we learn how to pick up these waves and control them, heating throughout the world will be revolutionized.

Heat broadcasting will mean better health to the public, because it may remove from the air the impurities of modern heat-making systems.

Recalling Ear / Days of American Currency

An innocent dog played his part in the creation of our oldest American bank, says Girard in the Philadelphia Inquirer. When Continental money was not worth a "Continental d—n," Philadelphia staged a financial frolic A big dog was covered with tar and then plastered over with Continental dollar bills. With drum and fife and flying flags that dog was marched down Chestnut street and around the center of the city by a shouting gang of men and boys. Five days later came Robert Morris' plan for a permanent bank to replace the old Pennsylvania bank, which had done its work and was soon to quit.

Less honor is given to that temporary bank than its record merits. One thing it did was to buy 3,000,000 rations for Washington's soldiers. Another, possibly less worthy object, was the purchase for them of 300 barrels of rum.

Muffler Changes Gas

One of the most serious perils of the automobile, carbon-monoxide gas, is reported to have been eliminated in a special muffler devised by a Paris engineer, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. It not only does away with all traces of smoke but destroys the poisonous gas by transforming it into harmless carbon dioxide. This is done by a heating element in the muffler which completes the combustion of the vapor.

"Esthetic Value" Appraised

B LIST

Daphne Houghton, Eunice Wesenberg, Viola Quigley, Gertrude Cashman, Verle McNutt, Lela Griggs, Floyd Scott, Fannie Dorenkamp, Ira Langlitz, Archie Conklin, Doris Schneider, Wayne Wesenberg, Iris Sherwood, Wayne Bachman Verla Berhow, Lucille Boller, Margaret Fuller.

Margaret Halfpop was absent from school Thursday and Friday of last week.

The High School pupils had Wednesday afternoon off to solicit the town and country for Lyceum Course Tickets. A good many tickets were sold.

There has been no decision made as to whether we will have corn picking vacation or not.

Encouraging

Herbert was confiding his troubles to a friend.

"Yes, she refused me," he said, with a curious smile, "but she did it in a most encouraging way."

"How was that?" asked the friend "It doesn't seem to worry you."

"As I went away she pointed to my footprints on the linoleum in the hall and said, "Next time you come to propose to me I hope you'll remember to wipe your shoes on the mat."

LARCHER DUO HERE MONDAY EVENING

SECOND NUMBER OF LYCEUM COURSE MONDAY NIGHT

Musicians And Entertainers Come Well Recommended

The Larcher Duo, two gifted musicians and entertainers, will appear on our Senior Lyceum Course on Monday evening of next week at the High School Gymnasium. They will feature several kinds of musical instruments, sing and impersonate. It will be a varied program with numbers to please all kinds of tastes. No body will get drowsy when the Larcher Duo are on the stage. Dull care will disappear and joy will reign for those who like wholesome entertainment and first class music. This should be the best of the three programs and no one can afford to miss it Our Seniors did their hustling previous to the last number have sold enough season tickets to pay for the course, and will not need this time to solicit anyone to attend. However, they would like others to enjoy this and the next number. Single admissions can be obtained for 35 and 50 cents. Should there be any who wish to purchase tickets for both the last two numbers they can be obtained for $0 80 and $0.60. A few good seats are still available and can be secured at Wilson's Pharmacy on both Saturday and Monday previous to the program on Monday evening.

P. T. A. WILL MEET ON TUESDAY EVENING NEXT WEEK

Anyone Interested In School Are Invited To Attend Meetings

On Tuesday evening of next week, November 2nd, our local P. T. A will give their regular program The program prepared is as folows:

Music H. S. Girls Chorus
"The Problem of Pupil Health," Dr. W. F. Missman
"What I Would Like My Children to Learn At School Outside of Books," Mrs. Gauger
"Why I Must Have A High School Education," Gladys Wilson
Music H. S. Girls

The price of membership has been reduced from fifty to twenty five cents this year and we wish every parent would plan to become a member. Only by knowing each other well and taking over school problems together can the most be done by the teachers and parents for the chidren. Misunderstandings are much more prevalent when we are unacquainted We believe the next program will be one very much worth while. Dr. Missman and Mrs Gauger and Gladys, one of our most capable Junior girls, will have something worth listening to. Our High school Girls, under Miss Kinder's leadership, are doing their parts well in a girls' chorus. This will be their first appearance.

The committee appointed to get information concerning suitable curtains for our High School stage will be ready to make a report and recommendations for a purchase. There should be a good attendance for this important decision.

Should the P. T. A. provide physical examination for our school children again this year may be discussed if time permits. Come prepared to give us your convictions on the question.

Faculty Enjoys Dinner With Editor And Family

The Faculty were invited to a 6 o'clock dinner on Monday evening of this week at the Editor's home. Not one of them showed any interest in lopping off avoirdupoise on this occasion. It was a poor place to be for anyone with such notions. Some of the conundrums proved too much for the intellectuals after they had indulged their appetites without restraint for an hour or more. We did not know so many good things to eat could be assembled in one home. But the supply was considerably reduced, we'll venture.

Pupils Should Not Come To School Too Early

It has seemed advisable to place restrictions on too early arrival of pupils at the school building both morning and nooon. We expect the teachers to be at their rooms at 8:30 in the morning and at 12:45 P. M Bels are rung by the janitor at these hours and pupils should avoid a departure from home that brings them here before these bells. Our janitor will, however, admit country pupils whose parents want to make the trip early to town and home again for their regular work.

Such restrictions prevail in every well regulated school and parents can readily discern why they are necessary. We feel certain we can count on their co-operation.

Superintendent Got In On It, Too!

The superintendent blew in on the Business and Legion men last Friday night while they were consuming oysters that were prepared by French Chefs, judging from the way they were devoured. Oh! but they were good! So were the stories that followed. We retired that evening feeling pretty well disposed toward the male population of our town.

Professor Gives Jolt to Colonial History

The bunk in Colonial history as taught to young Americans and remembered by older Americans is isolated by Harold U. Faulkner, associate professor of history at Smith college. Professor Faulkner, says the Pittsburgh Gazette Times, makes the following points, among many others

"One of the most important bits of action regarding the Old Dominion is that a goodly proportion of its wealthy families emanated from the nobility of England and came to Virginia in the years after the decapitation of Charles I.

"As a matter of fact, the Virginian aristocracy developed almost entirely within the colony, and the larger part of it was derived from the English merchant class.

"The Colonial Virginia stock was, in fact, primarily recruited from the lower middle and poorer classes in England—those groups whose economic position at home was hopeless.

"The matter of the origin and composition of the Virginian people brings up the whole question of Colonial population. From the pride with which the Colonial Dames and other descendants of the early settlers point to their ancestors, one would suppose that they were supermen, the ne plus ultra of European society.

"On the contrary, a majority belonged to the class at home who were economically beaten or who were persecuted for religious or political beliefs. Relatively few immigrants who were economically independent came to America of their own initiative during the Colonial period.

"Although Virginia was particularly unfortunate in its immigrants, it was not alone. North Carolina and Maryland received a considerable addition to their population from indentured servants who had served their time in Virginia and pushed on to the frontiers to take up land, or from runaway servants and criminals of that colony."

HOMECOMING GROWS TO TRADITION

IOWA CITY.—The annual Homecoming festivities at the University of Iowa have become traditional The fifteenth affair will be held this year November 6th with the main attraction announced as the Minnesota-Iowa football game. Alumni and friends of the University from widely scattered points will travel to Iowa City.

IOWA PLAYS "RUBBER" GAME

IOWA CITY.—The "rubber" contest of a three game series with Minnesota will be played on Iowa Field Nov. 6 by the University of Iowa football team. In 1924, Coach Ingwersen's initial Hawkeye team won 13 to 0 at Iowa City but last year the score was 33 to 0 in favor of Minnesota. Nearly 30,000 people are expected to see the great contest at Iowa's Homecoming this fall

MOST SEATS GOOD IN STADIUM

IOWA CITY.—Most of the reserved seats in the University of Iowa stadium are good ones, authorities point out as the ticket sale for the Minnesota game Nov. 6 progresses rapidly. A clear view of the field may be obtained from any angle and seats in the higher sections of the steel stands afford excellent sight of the stirring spectacle of a big intercollegiate game.

Iowans to Inspect University

IOWA CITY.—Tax-payers of the state will have a fine opportunity to inspect the University of Iowa November 20th when the third annual Iowa Day will be celebrated. Members of civic clubs have received invitations to come to Iowa City, taking advantage of the special one way fare for round trip over Iowa railroads.

The new medical laboratories building and the huge field house are points of interest which were not in existence last year. The University may be seen in full operation. As an athletic attraction there will be the Northwestern-Iowa football game.

University Expects Big Crowd

IOWA CITY.—The largest crowd that ever saw a football game in the state of Iowa is expected to fill the University of Iowa stadium for the Minnesota-Iowa battle on Homecoming, November 6th.

When Illinois was beaten at the Homecoming celebration last year, a new record for Iowa Field was set at 25,721. The stands will hold 30,000 people. Although the seat sale is heavy, many good tickets are still in the racks, says K. E Griffin, manager of sales at the department of athletics.

NINE NATIVE HAWKEYES ON THE IOWA ELEVEN

IOWA CITY.—Nine of the eleven players on the University of Iowa football team are native Iowans. The only exceptions are E. R. Jessen of Austin, Minn and M M Schmidt of Moline, Ill. Fans of the state will see their favorites in action against Minnesota, Nov. 6 and Northwestern Nov. 20—both contests being at Iowa City.

PARKING SPACE AT IOWA CITY

IOWA CITY.—Free parking space for automobiles will be provided by University of Iowa authorities for the Minnesota-Iowa Homecoming game, November 6th. The space will be located near Iowa Field and will be guarded by officers to prevent thefts. Many hundreds of cars will be accommodated.

TWO BIG GRID GAMES AT IOWA

IOWA CITY.—Football attractions at the University of Iowa this fall include games with Minnesota and Northwestern. The Gophers will help entertain the Homecomers at Iowa City, November 6th and Northwestern will do likewise for the state clubs on November 21, Dads Fathers of University students will also co that date fo

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Rumanian Queen Having a Lively Time in Her Tour of America.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MARIE, the beautiful queen of Rumania, grabbed the front page last week, and it is a fair guess that the men of America as well as the women followed her doings with great interest. For three days after her arrival in New York she, with her son and daughter, was the official guest of the nation. Hurrying directly to Washington, her majesty made a formal call on President and Mrs. Coolidge at the White House late Tuesday afternoon, which call was promptly returned, according to official etiquette, at the Rumanian legation, where the queen was lodged. A few hours later Marie was given a state dinner at the White House.

Before these official doings, Queen Marie motored to Arlington and paid graceful tribute at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and then was driven to Mount Vernon. On Wednesday she visited the Naval academy at Annapolis and reviewed the 17,500 middies there, and also went to Baltimore, where she was given a great reception and a lot of Maryland fried chicken and beaten biscuits. Thence back to New York, where, still enthusiastic and untired, she attended a great levee given for her at the Ritz-Carlton by William Nelson Cromwell, president of the Society of Friends of Rumania. Thursday she went to Philadelphia to see the Sesquicentennial exposition.

Beginning now her real tour of America, the queen was in the hands of Samuel Hill, son-in-law of the late James J Hill. The itinerary, as revised by him, takes the party, after a visit to Niagara, through Canada to Minneapolis and St. Paul; to Mary Hill, Wash., for the dedication of a fine arts museum; to Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, and eastward again to the Glacier National park; and through Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis and Springfield to Chicago, where there will be a stop of several days. On the way thence to the Atlantic seaboard Marie will see Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. California was eliminated from the list of states to be visited because the railroads there refused to carry the queen's train over their lines for a nominal charge, as had all other railroads.

Of course, the snobs, notoriety seekers and such like folk took advantage of Queen Marie's visit to the utmost, but she is not to be blamed for that. Her majesty seems to be a "regular feller," thoroughly interested in the people and things she sees and certainly no more pretentious than a queen should be.

INTERNATIONAL bankers and industrialists of fifteen nations, including the United States, issued a manifesto in New York and all the European capitals, urging the removal of tariff barriers and other restrictions upon European trade in order to place the continent upon an equal footing, both in living standards and commercial competition, with the United States. John J. Mitchell of Chicago, one of the signers, said: "It should be distinctly understood that the manifesto in no way refers to American tariffs, either by allusion or by inference." It involves only post-war European trade agreements and immigration and industrial restrictions.

The council of the International Chamber of Commerce, in Paris, adopted a report substantially following the recommendations of the bankers' manifesto. The American representatives in the council did not vote on the question. This report urges free movement of raw materials and the abolition of export duties and restrictions. It also proposes abolishment of compulsory visas, as hampering business as well as tourist trade, and condemns all laws discriminating against foreigners, demanding that citizens be given the same right as nationals everywhere, "with complete freedom of movement, right to domicile, liberty to establish any business or industry, and generally enjoy the same legal and social rights as nationals."

SENATOR REED of Missouri, sole representative of his senatorial investigation committee, resumed the inquiry into the Illinois primary and campaign funds, and also took up certain features of the Indiana political scandal. Sitting in Chicago, he called before him witnesses who told the support the Illinois Anti-Saloon league is giving Frank L. Smith, regular Republican candidate for the senate, and the reasons why that dry organization had refused to back Hugh S. Magill, independent Republican candidate. George B. Safford, league superintendent for Illinois, was heard first, and the caustic Missourian had a fine time with him, making him virtually admit that the league was ignoring the slush fund charges against Smith because he is a dry and had a better chance to defeat Brennan, the wet Democrat, than has Magill. Then Safford told a long story of his dealings with Rev. Robert O'Brien, one of the originators of the Magill candidacy, which story later reacted greatly to his disadvantage. The minister, he said, told him the Magill committee had raised between, three and four hundred thousand dollars and would spend it in the campaign, and he added a lot of detail of this conversation. Next day Mr. O'Brien went before Senator Reed and branded Safford's story as "an absolute falsehood," and Harold L. Ickes, Magill's campaign manager, testified that it was "not even a clever lie." The young minister substantiated his denial by a complete relation of his meetings and conversations with Safford aud Scott McBride, national superintendent of the league. A full list of contributors to the Magill campaign fund was given Mr. Reed, showing the contributions to be $17,375.

When Senator Reed took up the Indiana affair he was told by a former Klansman, Hugh Pat Emmons of South Bend, that $10,000 was offered Emmons if he would lead his fellow members of the klan to the support of Senator James E. Watson, Republican candidate for re-election. The offer, Emmons said, was made by W. Lee Smith of Evansville, then grand dragon of Indiana, who told him the klan proposed to make Watson President of the United States in 1928. Emmons also gave descriptions of the klan's organization and ritual which kept the audience in a gale of laughter. In Indianapolis Senator Watson issued a statement characterizing Emmons' testimony as "preposterous" and declaring he never had any understanding with the klan by which he was to receive its support in exchange for votes on pending legislation or other consideration. Being confined to a hospital, he asked that the committee go to Indianapolis to take his testimony, and Senator Reed at once complied.

SOUTHERN Florida was thrown into panic by prospects of being swept by another Caribbean hurricane, but escaped when the storm veered off to the northeast. Cuba was not so fortunate, for the hurricane passed over Matanzas, Pinar del Rio and Havana provinces, doing immense damage and taking a toll of several hundred lives. The city of Havana was the greatest sufferer and many of the deaths occurred there. The material losses in the capital were estimated at $30,000,000. In the harbor scores of vessels, including two steamers, were sunk. The lower parts of the city were inundated. The monument erected by Cuba to the Americans killed in the blowing up of the battleship Maine in 1898 was razed, only the base and two guns from the Maine remaining.

PRESIDENT CALLES and the Mexican government have decided that the never conquered Yaquis of Sonora must be destroyed as a tribe and people, and the grand council of war, headed by General Obregon, has laid plans to carry out the decision. An army of 18,000 is being prepared and it is to be equipped with machine guns, mountain artillery, gas, bombing and photographing planes of the latest types and every other modern device of warfare that can be needed.

PREMIERS and leading statesmen of the self-governing British dominions and delegates from India gathered in London last week for an imperial conference, the purpose of which was to adjust more smoothly the relations between the British central government and the component parts of the huge empire. Though several of the premiers, notably Hertzog of South Africa, were insistent, in their opening addresses, on "free nationhood," "equality" and international recognition of independence, it was believed there would be no exciting debates and few if any radical changes. One matter caused a lot of interest. Canada, Ireland and South Africa were determined to bring about the abolition of appeal to the privy council on matters of domestic concern.

THERE is small prospect for an early reduction in land armaments in Europe, for seven nations notified the preliminary disarmament conference in Geneva that they would not limit their trained reservists until a system of security is organized which will compensate for the present inequality of their war resources. These nations are Italy, Belgium, France, Poland, Rumania, Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia. Premier Pilsudski has increased Poland's armed strength by incorporating the nation's police force in the army.

LEON TROTZKY and his associates of the opposition in Russia have saved themselves from probable exile to Siberia by publicly repudiating their opposition in a statement in the press. They declare they still disagree with the majority of the central committee on a number of principal problems but have "definitely given up fractional methods of defense of our views because of the danger of such methods for the unity of the party."

NORWAY, in a national plebiscite, hit prohibition a heavy blow, the people deciding by a big majority that the existing law prohibiting the use of liquor exceeding 2½ per cent of alcohol was unsuitable to conditions in Norway, the general opinion being that there is more drunkenness and the people are poorer. It is believed the law will speedily be repealed.

Premier Ferguson of Ontario, in dissolving the provincial legislature, declared his government would go to the people on a policy of government control and sale of liquors and would stand or fall by the result. He holds the efforts of Ontario to enforce its dry law during ten years have been futile.

GOV. ROLAND H. HARTLEY of Washington is charged with malfeasance and misfeasance in office in petitions for his recall. The charges are divided into three counts: That he prevented, through the boards of regents of the University of Washington and Washington State college, and the state board of equalization, expenditure of funds appropriated by the last legislature for educational buildings and equipment; that he "maliciously and without cause" removed four regents, "falsely charging each of them with misconduct and malfeasance in office"; and that he appointed six members of the state legislature to lucrative state positions in order to obtain their support for his legislative policies.

A legislative committee investigating the Texas highway commission was told that James E. Ferguson, husband of the governor, had offered to obtain road maintenance contracts for L. D. Winder of Belleville if Winder would pay him $7,500, which was approximately 10 per cent of the contract price. Ferguson said the accusation was an infamous falsehood and that he did not even know Winder.

EUGENE V. DEBS, for many years the leader of Socialists in the United States and five times their candidate for President, died in a sanitarium near Chicago at the age of seventy-one years. During the war he was sent to the federal penitentiary at Atlanta for trying to obstruct the draft, and was pardoned by President Harding late in 1921. His health was broken and since then he had not been active in politics.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

PROPAGATE BUSH FRUITS IN FALL

Currants and some varieties of gooseberries are readily grown from cuttings if reasonable care is taken in their preparation. Black currants are most easily propagated in this way. English varieties of gooseberries are very difficult to start from cuttings. Most of our common bush fruit varieties, however, such as the Perfection, Wilder, London Market and White-grape currants and the Downing, Oregon Champion and Poorman gooseberries can be handled in this way. If properly cared for during the fall and winter months, it will be possible to secure vigorous, well-rooted plants, ready to start growth at the opening of the growing season next spring.

Currants and gooseberries start into growth extremely early in spring, usually earlier than the ground can be worked with safety. If the rooted cuttings are already in the ground instead of in storage waiting for the ground to be prepared, they will make an early start, developing in one season into large and vigorous plants.

In selecting cutting wood, only shoots of the present season's growth should be taken, removing several of the smooth, healthy, well-matured yearling growths from different parts of the bush. These should be taken as soon as the new growth is hard. Some nurserymen strip the leaves from the canes and make the cuttings earlier. With extreme care in handling, this hastening of maturity may not be a serious handicap to the cuttings striking root; but it is safer and easier to wait until the wood is ripe and hard before taking it.

Cuttings should be from 6 to 10 inches long, the longer the better if they are to be planted in the fall.

Too Much Attention Is Paid to Pruning Plums

As a result of observations over a considerable number of years at the New York state agricultural experiment station, authorities are of the opinion that most varieties of plums require relatively little pruning after the proper shape of the trees has been obtained in the years immediately following the planting of the trees in the orchard.

Inasmuch as a small amount of pruning gives just as good, if not better trees, it is considered that it is a waste of time and effort to pay too much attention to the pruning of plum trees. The chief operation recommended is a thinning out of thick growth where necessary, and the removal of broken or injured branches.

The experimental work on which these conclusions are based was carried on with ten varieties of plums, including the Abundance, Bradshaw, Burbank, DeSoto, Grand Duke, Wayland, Pottawattamie, Reine Claude, Shropshire, and Italian Prune. According to the statement of the specialists, the only difference between trees subject to the styles of pruning was that the little-pruned trees had larger and broader heads. The heads on the little-pruned trees were more symmetrical than those on the trees which had been given heavier pruning. The increased size, however, did not retard the maturity of the fruit in any way nor did it impede harvesting.

Handling Peach Pits

The usual custom in handling peach pits is to stratify them during the winter, and then plant them in the spring. The process of stratifying is as follows: In the fall or winter, when the pits are obtained, they are placed in shallow boxes—a layer of pits, then a layer of sand. This process, repeated several times, making several layers of each. The boxes are covered with wire to keep squirrels and other animals out, and placed in the open so that the action of the rains and freezing will cause the hard shells of the pits to crack. The pits are then usually planted in rows about eight to ten inches apart.

Farming is a business.

Better farm equipment makes better farmers.

* * *

Another way to increase farm income is to study market conditions.

* * *

Labor cost is the heaviest single item of expense against all crops except pasture.

* * *

A good many farmers over the country have been using cyanide for the eradication of groundhogs.

* * *

Well-rotted stable manure is the best garden fertilizer one can get. Use liberally.

* * *

Lack of standardization in farm products causes some of the greatest marketing costs that the present-day farmer has to meet.

* * *

So many advantages come from fall plowing that it seems more of it would be done. Fall-broken ground will be more friable in the spring, packs less and retains much more moisture.

Miss Ferrington Again Enjoying Best of Health

Suffering From Blinding Headaches, Stomach Troubl and Nervousness, Young Burlington Woman After Plucky Fight Wins Back Lost Health. Thanks Tanlac

Miss Hazel Ferrington, a charming young woman who lives at 1207 Agency Street, Burlington, Iowa, has had a harrowing experience.

When Miss Ferrington was in her twenties, after three serious operations she found herself on the verge of becoming a chronic invalid.

"I was weak, sickly and run-down," says Miss Ferrington. "Had no appetite and was in constant pain. Life certainly had a dismal outlook for me at that time.

"I tried everything for relief, without success, till a friend told me about Tanlac. From the first day I tried it my health improved.

"I began to sleep normally and to wake up refreshed and peppy. My appetite came back better than ever. Now I'm on regular trips to the ice box. I'm happy because I'm healthy and I sure believe in Tanlac. I always recommend it to sickly friends."

NEW COATS FEATURE CUFFS; COLORFUL CREPE FROCKS

TO THINK that cuffs, mere cuffs, could be so interesting! But they are. The newer-designed coats are proving it too. Surely nothing could be more attractive in the way of an ultra-smart coat than the one in this picture and the picturesque pirate cuffs which it boasts have much to do with the dash and go of its style. We are to have more and more of the pirate and the cavalier cuff, so fashion tells us.

Aside from the cuffs, which give this coat so much chic, there are other details which tell the world the dernier cri from Paris. There is, for instance, the handsome velvet applique arranged in strappings of military precision and as to the color of this coat, here, indeed, is the very latest described, for blonde and beige shades are the talk throughout all fashionland. The fact that the hand-appliqued velvet and the kasha cloth from which this coat is made, are perfectly matched light beige, stamps this model with authoritative style. Furthermore, the dainty shoes worn with this adorable coat carry out the same beige or blonde color scheme. It has come to be most important that one's shoes match or at least harmonize with the costume. To this end stylists are featuring navy kidskin shoes with suits and street frocks of that same shade while brown footwear in all its variations is considered quite the extreme of good style.

Returning to the subject of coats, the better models, as instanced in the picture, attain their distinction and difference through subtle detail. Perhaps it is the intricate seaming or an unusual cuff, a novelty pocket, or some other cunning manipulation of the cloth which disturbs the silhouette not at all yet arouses that consciousness of superior style.

Favor is again expressed for fine black broadcloth, perhaps trimmed in velvet or just as likely in smooth supple fur, shaved lamb being favored.

Banded and bordered in padded quilted design gives a handsome effect in which monotone coloring is maintained. Smooth beige or gray cloth thus worked provides an effective coat theme.

Velvet! It is a magic word sounded unto the uttermost limit of fashion's domain. Velvet used as a trimming has become nothing less than a fashion craze. At the rate the vogue is spreading, ere autumn far progresses, scarcely an up-to-date wardrobe will there be, which does not include a colorful or a black dress, as it may please, lavishly trimmed in self-toned velvet. An outstanding trimming treatment is the skirt tiered with straight or circular velvet ruffles. The effectiveness thereof is set forth in this picture of a claret red crepe frock boasting row upon row of velvet ruffles. The flaring ruffle of velvet on the sleeve makes the whole gown akin.

Very often the tiers are cut circular and sometimes just the reverse is expressed in that flat velvet bands are placed so as to simulate wide tucks.

Borderings of velvet which extend at each side of the front opening, from neck to hemline and then around the bottom of the dress are fashionable. Velvet pockets used in conjunction with other velvet details denote this season's mode. The new cavalier flaring cuffs cut of velvet, also velvet cape collars, adorn many a silken frock.

Tiered With Ruffles.

Two distinct trends are evidenced in the latest velvet-trimmed frocks. One is for the colorful frock, preferably one of the new wine shades or perhaps jungle green, or likely a rust tone, or some desirable shade of blue, or if one aspires to the extreme of the mode a biscuit-colored crepe embellished with matched velvet. The other call of fashion is for the black crepe or dull satin frock trimmed in black velvet.

Most unique is the crepe frock trimmed in bands of velvet ribbon, so arranged as to present an ombre effect. That is, the velvet is of deepest color, grading each row a tone lighter.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Tamerlane

A LAME man, sinister and swarthy of face, and magnificent of attire, stood in a chariot, drawn by five other men. Behind the chariot, trundling along in an iron cage, was a gorgeously attired prisoner.

The sinister charioteer had a strong, ugly Mongolian face. He lashed the five luckless men who drew his chariot, and at every lash his watching army applauded. For he was Timour the Lame, commonly known as Tamerlane, conqueror of the East. And the five men who drew his chariot were kings whom he had captured and whose countries he had subdued. The man in the cage was Bajazet, the once mighty sultan of Turkey.

Tamerlane was in the full glory of his career. He chose the foregoing way to celebrate his achievements.

In 1336 this unprepossessing, ugly son had been born to the petty chief of a Mongol tribe near Samerkand. The lad was brought up more as a student than as a warrior, but before he was twenty his wild fighting blood, inherited from his great ancestor, Genghis Khan, broke out and he threw aside his scrolls and inkhorn for sword and helmet.

Handicapped by lameness, in a country and age when physical perfection counted for far more than now, he nevertheless, by sheer force of character, won early laurels as general and tribal chief. On his father's death Tamerlane and his brother-in-law, Hussein, were chosen as joint rulers. Tamerlane, without hesitancy, murdered Hussein and made himself sole chieftain. But this by no means satisfied his boundless ambition. He had laid out a plan of action worthy of Charlemagne or Caesar, and with his scimitar proceeded to carve his name upon the map of the world.

He began at home, by changing the semi-savage lawlessness of his own people into an established, firm government, worthy of a much later day; then started on his carefully prepared campaign of world conquest. Persia was the first object of his attack. It is an odd fact that nearly every great conqueror of early times, from Alexander to the Tartar, chose that powerful but ill-disciplined land as a primary goal of his achievements. Tamerlane swept Persia, his fiery tribesmen carrying all before them. He captured the Persian king and laid the country waste.

Cheered by his easy victory over a country so much stronger than his own, the Mongolian invader next subdued all of Central Asia and carried his conquests from the Great Wall of China to Moscow. Had he been a European his first idea would doubtless have been to conquer Europe, and he would have left the East for a later expedition. But, to his Oriental mind, Asia seemed the most important part of the earth. It was, perhaps, due to this notion of Tamerlane's that Europe was not overrun by the Eastern hordes and Western civilization and character tinged forever with Orientalism. Europe was probably reserved for subsequent invasion—an invasion which fate averted.

Rumors of the wealth of India reached Tamerlane. In 1398 he marched his vast armies thither, plowing a bloody furrow to the Ganges, overcoming all opposition, and looting millions of dollars' worth of native treasure. Here his native barbarity cropped out more strongly than ever before, and he left behind him a name for mercilessness that lives to this day. In one Hindoo district alone he massacred 100,000 prisoners.

The Turks, under Sultan Bajazet, were menacing the Eastern empire. Learning of this and jealous that any other man should emulate himself as an invader, Tamerlane hurried back from India and marched against the Turkish dominions. Like an army of ants his countless hordes overran Turkey, seizing Syria from the brave Mamelukes, and, on June 20, 1402, meeting Bajazet's army on the plain of Angoria. After a fiercely contested battle Tamerlane routed the Turks and took Bajazet prisoner. Not content with subduing Turkey, he vented his hate against Bajazet in a unique fashion. He caused a great iron cage to be built. Into this he thrust the beaten sultan and carried him about as a sort of human menagerie exhibit until the broken-hearted prisoner died of shame.

The conqueror next planned a mammoth expedition against China. When he should thus have subdued the last Asian power he would be free to turn his attention to Europe. But, in 1405, on the eve of the Chinese campaign, he died, and the "yellow peril" was checked.

Had Tamerlane been wholly a barbarian his feats would have been less far-reaching in their effect on the history of the world. But he was also a patron of science and the arts, a promoter of culture at home and abroad, an author and a man who built up civilization even while he destroyed nations. By forwarding the cause of learning, as much as by wholesale slaughter, he left an indelible mark on all the Orient.

Regular habits

come from eating Yeast.
And now you'll actually like it!

A COATED tongue. Dull appetite. Indigestion. A tired, listless feeling. These are too often caused by the poisons of constipation.

Violent purgatives give only temporary relief. Worse, they too often "form a habit."

But yeast, modern science has discovered, corrects this insidious disease by going to the heart of the trouble. Yeast strengthens the intestinal muscles, helps the organs to function properly, restores energy and youth.

If before this you haven't been able to eat yeast, here is welcome news.

AT LAST—

a pleasant way to eat yeast

Now if you like chocolate, you will like yeast in its new form.

A famous scientist has succeeded in blending yeast with eating chocolate (not merely chocolate-coating it).

It's C-Y Chocolate Yeast—as delicious—as easily eaten—as fine chocolate. Yet, each wafer contains as much vigorously active yeast as the best grade compressed yeast cake.

Make this Five-Cent Test Today

Buy a five-cent C-Y Chocolate Yeast wafer from your grocer or druggist. Eat it on the spot. Prove it to yourself that all you taste is the chocolate. Slip a day's supply of three cakes in your purse or pocket. And never again forego the marvelous benefits of yeast made so enjoyable, so delicious, so cheap.

Eat C-Y Chocolate Yeast before meals, and on retiring. Cures constipation. Clears your skin and brings to you the glow and vigor of good health. Eat C-Y Chocolate Yeast regularly and see how much better you feel. Send coupon below for interesting FREE booklet—"New Health—Renewed Vigor."

—FOR THE CONVENIENCE OF THRIFTY PEOPLE—

LAZY PEOPLE do not repair their Shoes, neither do they mend their harness, but they tie things together with twine and wire, and complain of their hard luck.

Not so with the Thrifty Person. He sees to it that his equipment is in excellent condition, so that when he goes into the field or into the office to do a day's work, the world will know he has been there, and his reward will be great, for he will have accomplished much.

The services of Thrifty People soon get to be in such demand that they do not have time to repair their shoes or mend their harness with their own hands, so they hire this work done for them in a repair shop equipped for that purpose, where the work can be done better and cheaper than they could do it for themselves.

These are some of the little odd jobs that Thrifty People do not find time to do themselves:—

The Ko Ho's are to give a program next Monday night at the Gymna- m. A small admission charge will made to defray expenses, 10 and ents. The program will consist of sic, vocal and instrumental, read- s, stunts, etc. They say it will well worth the price of admis- on.

Lyceum Number Was Good

Our Senior Lyceum Course pro- am on Monday evening was very ell attended and those who came ere well entertained. Miss Larcher om Indianapolis and Mr. McKinnis Winnipeg, Canada, composed the o and were adepts at their art. heir's was no cheap vaudeville show tho there was plenty of action, but aried program of good music and personations and readings that leased and elevated.

School Went To Polls For Straw Vote Tuesday

At an eleotion at school on Nov. d, the High School elected Brook- art for U S. Senator, Ray Durant r Sheriff in Hancock County, Miss muelson for State Superintendent, enry Suckow for Justice of Peace, d Aaron Greiman and Mr. Busch for township constables.

Porter tied Brookhart in the Grammar room, and in that room Durant received all but one vote for County Sheriff. H. E. Blackmar, Superintendent of Schools at Ottumwa was elected State Supt over Miss Agnes Samuelson in these grades.

This is the week of our State Teachers Meeting at Des Moines but none of our faculty will make the trip this year. They hope to be able to go to one of the district meetings next spring instead.

Mr. Hockey, our coach, has been laboring under a handicap this week as he journeyed to Mason City last Friday evening with Dr Missman and had his tonsils removed.

The superintendent drove to Britt on Tuesday evening to attend a meeting of the School Masters of the county.

HAND MANGLED IN CORN PICKER

KLEMME FARMER LOST THREE FINGERS IN CORN PICKER

John Swalve Had Serious Accident Saturday Afternoon

John Swalve, living south of this place was the victim of a serious accident Saturday afternoon

Mr Swalve was in the corn field operating his corn picking machine and was making the last round in the field when the machine clogged He reached into the rollers to loosen the tangle when his mitten became caught and his hand was dragged into the machinery, with the result that three fingers on his right hand were badly crushed and injured

He was rushed to the doctor's office here and prompt attention was given the injury There was a slight hope that amputation would not be necessary, but this operation had to be performed yesterday and the first and second finger of the right hand was operated on, and the others injured given further attention.

There have been quite a number of similar accidents in various communities this year and a number of farmers have lost fingers and hands in the machines.

AVERY TWIN LAKE LADIES HOLD MEET

JOINT MEETING HELD AT U. B. CHURCH MONDAY

Farm Bureau Ladies Take Up Study Of Artists And Paintings

The Farm Bureau Ladies of Twin Lakes and Avery Township Members of the Training School held a joint meeting in the parlors of the U. B. Church Monday. The project taken up was the study of some important pictures and their artists, which was led by our efficient leader, Miss Merle Ramer, home economics demonstrator of Ames.

One of the important pictures we studied was the 'Sist'ne Madonna' by Raphael which was considered the greatest picture in the world; the biography of the artist was also discussed.

Miss Ramer had a collection of picture molding and demonstrated how to frame pictures and the kind of moulding to use in harmony with the picture to be framed. She also told how to hang pictures on the walls and the kinds of pictures to use to decorate the walls of the different rooms.

The ladies present from Twin Lakes township were Mesdames F. Cordes, J Rust, A. Etchen, Laudon, G O'Krueg, J. Eliason, Warnock, C. Bode and Maehow. Those from Avery township were Mesdames D A Marshall, Wm. Gealow, L. Sherwood, J. J Cook, J. Griggs, W. Thada, L. Wilson and G. Snearly. Visitors at the meeting were Mrs. Homer Ness, Miss Greiman and Mr. A. C. Carpenter.

This was the fourth lesson of this course and it was a very interesting one Miss Ramer's instructions during the course have been greatly appreciated and we hope to have her with us again next year.

At the noon hour luncheon was served in cafeteria style by Mesdames Sherwood, Marshall, Cordes, Gealow, Schneider and O'Krueg.

The meeting was adjourned at 4 o'clock, each one present having spent a day of good achievement and complimented Miss Ramer on her work.

AUXILIARY MASQUERADE BALL A BIG SUCCESS

Prizes Given To Four For Costumes At Dance

The dances every other week put on by the ladies of the Klemme Auxiliary are proving very popular and the dances are well attended.

Last week Thursday evening the ladies staged a masquerade dance and over sixty dance tickets were sold. The Auxiliary believes in a variety and will no doubt put on a number of attractive stunts for the winter. At the recent Legion Day celebration they put on a carnival dance which was a great success. Another carnival dance is on the schedule.

Prizes were awarded at the masquerade ball last week and Miss Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Thompson was awarded ladies first prize for best costume; and Mrs. S. A. Harvey carried away the honors for ladies comical attire. Mr Earl Finn was given first gents best costume prize, and F. W. Kluckhohn strolled away with the comic prize.

HALLOWE'EN TAME THIS YEAR

Hallowe'en passed in Klemme this year with but little excitement and but a few harmless pranks were pulled off A few oil barrels were piled up on the street and a couple of wagons adorned the scenery. The usual window soaping was also in evidence.

Phone or send your news items to the Klemme Times. We appreciate having items sent to us.

IOWA'S NEW FIELD HOUSE--LARGEST IN THE WORLD

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF COMPLETED BUILDING

Architects' plans are fast being translated into reality by a host of workmen, as the new University of Iowa Armory and Field House, the largest of its kind in the world rises on the west side of the river. The immense expanse of steel of the skeleton has been erected, and the brick work is going forward rapidly. Contractors promise occupancy by December 1, and dedicatory exercises are planned for January 13, 14, and 15.

Some of the reasons for the claim that the structure will be the largest of its class in the world may be seen by these facts. With a length of 464 feet north and south, a width of 430 feet east and west and with an average height of 60 feet, the Field House will contain five and one-half million cubic feet of space. All of the University buildings east of the river contain but fourteen million cubic feet. Sixteen hundred fifty tons of structural steel, 500,000 face brick, 2,000,000 common brick, or their equivalent in tile, 36 car loads of lumber and thousands of barrels of cement and lime are required to enclose the building. Three acres of ground will be covered.

The Field House is composed of four sections: the gymnasium on the north, the swimming pool on the south, the Field House proper between the gymnasium and swimming pool, and the exhibition hall and offices stretching across the front.

Basketball's rapid growth in popularity accounts for the fact that triple decks of seats for 12,000 people will be ready for the opening game of the 1927 Big Ten season. Excellently arranged exits make possible the emptying of the building in four minutes

A cinder track measuring six laps to the mile, the largest indoor circuit in the country, with one-hundred-yard straight-aways on either side, will be built for Coach Bresnahan's athletes Swimming, stunted in popularity because of the limited space of the old pool, will have facilities as good as any in the United States. The new pool will be 150 feet long by 60 feet wide, contain 500,000 gallons of water and 9000 square feet of water surface. It is estimated that 250 men may use the pool at the same time. Spectators will be accommodated in double decks of seats with a capacity of 3500 people. So impressed were authorities of the National Collegiate Athletic Association that they awarded the 1927 swimming championship meet to Iowa.

Space for eight regulation-sized tennis courts, a football field of standard dimensions, a real baseball diamond and a soccer field is contained in the field house.

But intercollegiate athletics do not claim all of the attention of Iowa authorities. A gymnasium 112 feet wide, 180 feet long, and 50 feet high is one of the best parts of the Field House. In the basement a room will provide locker and shower space for 5000 students taking required work in physical education Other features of this section are the varsity and freshman team rooms, faculty and coaches' quarters, and a suite of offices for the medical supervisors. Above the main gymnasium, sixteen hand-ball and squash courts together with eight classrooms are planned.

Iowa's athletic trophies and pictures of former heroes in sports will be on display in a hall 240 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 18 feet high across the front of the Field House. Two stories of offices and classrooms will lie above this trophy hall.

The story of the Field House since its inception is one of steady progress. The Iowa State Board of Education on October 16, 1925, authorized the Athletic Council to proceed with the erection of the structure, incorporating the present Armory. At once the Athletic Council issued $300,000 five per cent serial gold bonds, which soon were sold. Structural steel was purchased in December; excavations and footings were begun in February; and the steel was being erected in March. The general contract was let in April, and work has been proceeding at a rapid pace since that time. Sale of the bonds and net proceeds from intercollegiate athletic contests will finance the building without state appropriations.

DARK HORSE IN ELECTION TUESDAY

LAST MINUTE CANDIDATE FOR SHERIFF FALLS FLAT

Brookhart Leads By Large Vote In State Over Democrat

Tuesday's election was doped to be a rather tame affair in Hancock County and the only fight which loomed with any prominance seemed to be the Brookhart-Porter fight for U S Senator. However, the peacefullness of a quiet election took wings when it was "noised" about that a "dark horse" would enter the race for Sheriff.

Ray Durant, from the north part of the county was the "dark horse" selected to run independently for the office of Sheriff; his name to be written in on the ballot. By Tuesday morning Klemme was conspicuously posted urging the support of Mr. Durant. We understand every town in the county was placarded.

The "dark horse" caused quite a lot of excitement and put a little pep into the election.

This is perhaps the first time in the history of county politics where a candidate was run in this manner on such short notice without even having his name printed on the ballot.

Governor Hammill received the largest vote in the county of any candidate on the ballot. Governor Hammill received 2,647 votes.

Smith W. Brookhart was again the big favorite in Hancock County for U. S Senator and received 2,247 votes, while Porter got but 771. Mr. Brookhart is running strong over the state and will easily have over 100,000 votes ahead of the democrat.

The other county candidates who were running without opposition received all the way from 2100 votes to 2200 votes.

As the main interest in Tuesday's election was centered around Smith Brookhart and Porter, and Hanson and Durant, we are publishing the following report:

MR. AND MRS. A. G. KOERNER CELEBRATING 23rd WEDDING ANNIVERSARY TODAY

Al Puts On Special Election And A Barn Dance All At Once

Today is the twenty-third wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Koerner and the event is being celebrated in a large way at the Koerner home.

Al said he believes in making a day of it so he is having the special franchise election today, a big dinner, and to top off the activities he and Mrs. A. G. are inviting in a lot of friends this evening to a barn dance to dedicate the new, large barn that is just completed.

PUMPKIN PIE CROP SHORT

Homespun pumpkin pies like Mother used to make will have to depend largely on imported fillings this fall, according to the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture. The September freezes caught most of the pumpkins before they were ripe. Canned pumpkin from other states will be the main dependance of the culinary artists. Iowa canning factories usually run on pumpkins for a couple of weeks till about October 20 but this year they are silent while the pie eaters mourn.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Coolidge Links American High Wages and Prosperity.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, addressing the American Association of Advertising Agencies, and, through the radio, many millions of other citizens, declared that our system of high wages is one of the chief factors in the nation's prosperity. He said it has brought about the "greatest distribution of wealth that the world has ever seen and provides the enormous capacity for the consumption of all kinds of commodities which characterizes our country."

"If we proceed under our present system," he added, "there would appear to be little reason to doubt that we can continue to maintain all of these high standards in wages, in output and in consumption indefinitely and, with our home markets as a foundation, increase our foreign commerce by a greater exchange of those commodities in which we are peculiarly favored for the commodities of other nations in which they have a special advantage. But nothing would appear to be plainer than that this all depends upon the maintenance of our American scale of wages, which is the main support of our home market."

The Chief Executive made an appeal for exact truth in advertising, and complimented the advertising profession for its contribution to a happy and prosperous country, adding that without constant publicity modern business could not be conducted on its present gigantic scale.

SALE to the Chemical Foundation, Inc., of German patents seized during the war, is declared by the United States Supreme court to have been in accordance with the law, authorized by acts of congress and of President Wilson, and therefore valid. The government in its suit had alleged that the price paid for the patents—$271,000—was wholly inadequate and should have been at least $7,000,000. The court finds the Chemical Foundation was properly formed as in effect a public trust for those whom the patents would benefit and for the promotion of American industries and that in the sale of the patents no conspiracy, fraud or deception was established by the government.

IF THE federal trade commission does not object, one of the biggest industrial combinations of recent years probably will be consummated soon. This is the merger of Sears, Roebuck & Co., and Montgomery Ward & Co., the huge Chicago mail-order houses. It is understood an outline of the plan already has been laid before Secretary of Commerce Hoover and that he said his opinion was that the government would consent to the merger. The tentative plan is said to be the formation of a new corporation to absorb the present companies and an exchange of stock of the concern for that of the old ones. The proposed corporation would have assets of about $230,000,000, and an annual business volume approximating $450,000,000. It is estimated the merger would effect a saving of ten to fifteen millions a year in operating expenses. The largest interest in Sears, Roebuck & Co. is held by Julius Rosenwald of Chicago and in Montgomery Ward & Co. by the J. P. Morgan-First National bank group of New York.

AS FURTHER information comes concerning the recent earthquakes in Armenia the disaster stands out as one of the worst of recent times. The death list increases steadily and may run into the thousands. The city of Leninakan and numerous smaller towns were ruined and probably 100,000 persons were rendered homeless. The Near East relief forces in the Caucasus under the direction of Dr. Joseph Beach are caring for many of the destitute, and the government of Russia has sent a large sum of money for relief purposes. None of the Americans there were killed or injured, and the thousands of orphans for whom they care also escaped unhurt.

PROSPECTS for international reduction of armaments in the near future are mighty poor, and it may be the proposed plenary conference for that purpose will not be held. In the preparatory conference at Geneva last week the delegations of nine of the seventeen nations represented made an official declaration that commercial fleets, trained reserves of armies, navies and air services, and war materials in reserve belong to "war potentials" and therefore are incapable of limitation or disarmament. The nine nations are France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugo-Slavia, Rumania and Argentina. Opposed to them, but in a minority, are Great Britain, the United States, Spain, Germany, Chile, Finland, Sweden and Holland. Both views will be presented to the plenary preparatory committee which is expected to meet in February or March.

EFFORTS of Lawrence Dennis, American charge d'affaires in Nicaragua, to bring peace to that country seem of no avail. The conference of leaders which he called broke up when the Liberals walked out with the declaration that they would continue their revolutionary movement with the aid of Mexico. The United States naval men returned from Corinto to the warship Denver, having been assured that there would be no reprisals against the Liberals there. A permanent neutral zone was established at Bluefields and El Bluff to protect American business. Meanwhile there were several "battles" at as many places between the opposing factions. Mr. Dennis is said to have demanded that General Chamorro, de facto president, quit immediately and that congress be called to install a new president, probably Adolfo Diaz.

Revolutionists in Honduras released a lot of penitentiary convicts and with their aid seized the town of Seiba from government forces and burned the courthouse.

BELGIAN money went on a gold basis last week with the creation of a new monetary standard, the belga, which is equal to five paper francs. Supporting the Belgian stabilization program, the United States absorbed half of a $100,000,000 international loan, and, through the federal reserve banks, participated in a credit of $35,000,000.

SENATOR REED was not satisfied with the information concerning the klan and Indiana's senatorial campaign which he obtained in Chicago and Indianapolis, so in St. Louis he resumed the inquiry, seeking especially more facts concerning a conference of high klan officials in Washington last January which, it has been asserted, was attended by Senator Watson. It was at this meeting that Walter F. Bossert resigned as grand dragon of Indiana because, according to several witnesses, he would not support Watson.

D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon who is serving a life term for the murder of Madge Oberholtzer, has not yet made public the alleged proofs of political corruption and klan control in Indiana, but his appeal from his sentence has been filed and his attorney says there will shortly be developments in the case of a startling nature.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI is not having things all his own way in Italy, as has been generally supposed. The opposition to reform the senate which was a part of his plan for a "Fascist state" is so strong that it has been abandoned and the senate will be left unchanged. Instead labor and capital will have representation in the legislative branch through appointments to the chamber of deputies. Three hundred such deputies will be chosen, and the rest of the chamber will be elected by a plurality system. The voters will be given two lists of candidates, one from the Fascist party and one from the united opposition. Representatives of the Fascist corporations as they become experienced in government would become eligible to appointment to the senate.

QUEEN MARIE of Rumania, denying the repeated rumors that her royal husband had ordered her to return home, continued on her merry way through America. After reviewing the cadets at West Point and admiring Niagara Falls, she moved on into Canada and was enthusiastically received by Toronto, Montreal, Quebec and other cities. One discordant feature was the attitude of the Ukrainians who are numerous in the Dominion. In Toronto they presented a petition protesting against the treatment accorded Ukrainians in Rumania, and in Winnipeg they made formal objection to participation by the Manitoba government in the reception to the queen.

ONE long standing dispute between the executive and the legislative branches of the government was ended last week when the United States Supreme court in a majority opinion upheld the authority of the President to remove executive appointees without the consent of the senate. The court ruled that federal statutes cited to the contrary are void and denied to congress the constitutional right to restrict the President in the removal of officers from posts it created.

The opinion is the result of a suit brought by Frank S. Myers, former postmaster at Portland Ore., who was removed by President Wilson and who sought to recover back salary on the ground that his removal was illegal without the consent of the senate, which had ratified his appointment. Justices Holmes, Brandeis and McReynolds took radical exceptions to the opinion of their colleagues, and in a separate opinion Justice McReynolds declared that the majority views are "revolutionary."

GREAT BRITAIN announced new regulations restricting the export of rubber from Ceylon and Malaya for next year, to go into effect on November 1. By these regulations it appears probable that the coming quarter will see a reduction of the exportable allowance from the present 100 per cent to 80 per cent. The average price of rubber for the current quarter up to October 20 was 20.149 pence (about 40 cents) and the average must exceed 21 pence to justify continuance of the 100 per cent standard of exports.

It is recognized in the rubber market in London that the situation still is dominated largely by the United States and depends to some extent on the growth of the motor industry in America, and that, although in the current year production exceeded consumption by roughly, 40,000 tons, such surplus would be none too high if the American motor industry developed as expected.

Everett G. Holt, chief of the rubber division of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce in Washington, says in his annual report that defensive measures in the United States against British rubber control have resulted in large savings to the American people.

AROUSED by repeated robberies of the mails, accompanied often by the killing or wounding of postal employees, the government has again put the mails under guard of the marines, who have orders to shoot to kill whenever they see any bandits. Furthermore the "devil dogs" have been armed with the new Thompson machine gun that already has been adopted by the gunmen of Chicago in their gang warfare. It is a formidable weapon, easily handled and capable of firing 400 aimed shots a minute.

REPRESENTATIVES of the United Spanish War Veterans of the Middle West met in Chicago and made plans for a unified legislative program to be presented to the state governments of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin and Missouri. The legislatures are to be asked for payment of a bonus to every living veteran of the Spanish war and the expeditions to the Philippines and China on the same terms as the bonus to veterans of the World war; the appointment of state commissions of war veterans to administer state institutions caring for war veterans and the establishment of state military cemeteries. Tax exemption up to $2,500 for veterans will be asked.

Lesson for November 7

THE FALL OF JERICHO

LESSON TEXT—Josh. 6:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—This is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Joshua Leads His People to Victory.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Victory of Jericho.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How God Helped Joshua.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Overcoming by Faith.

Jericho was the key to the land of Canaan. A signal victory here would put the Israelites in control of the land. Failure here would mean irretrievable ruin.

I. Jericho Shut Up (vv. 1-5).

The Canaanites felt secure because Jericho was strongly fortified from the south. Approach to the city from the east was not thought of as the Jordan river was a barrier. The miraculous crossing of the Jordan by the Israelites and their surrounding the city of Jericho greatly alarmed the people—"Therefore none went out and none came in."

1. God's promise to Joshua (v. 2).

"I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour." Because of this promise from the Lord their faith had a firm basis.

2. God's instructions (vv. 3-5).

They were to encompass the city with seven priests bearing trumpets of rams' horns. The ark, a symbol of the Divine Presence, went before the people. They encompassed the city once a day for six days and on the seventh day they encompassed it seven times. When the last circuit was made the priests were to give a long blast of the trumpets and the people were to shout with a great shout and the walls of Jericho were to fall down.

II. The Obedience of the People (vv. 6-16).

They advanced according to the directions of their leader, for they were going forth according to the command of the Lord. To the natural eye the means employed were very inadequate, even foolish. If they had looked at the inadequacy of the means in themselves, they no doubt would have faltered, but they believed that He who had given the orders would fight for them. Joshua and his people set out at once to obey the divine directions. The people marched around the city every day for six days. This, no doubt, was very trying to their faith. There was absolutely no connection between the means and the end. Perhaps as the days wore wearily away the whole affair became monotonous. Even at the end of the sixth day there was no change. Doubtless the people on the walls of the city used this unseemly behavior as an occasion of great merriment and ridicule. Even at the end of the sixth round on the seventh day there was no change. Yea, the seventh round brought no change until the very last moment. At the mighty shout, accompanied with the blowing of trumpets, the walls came tumbling down. This is the way of all works accomplished by faith. At the time when everything seems against us, faith holds on and wins the victory.

III. The Fall of Jericho (vv. 17-20).

At the end of the seventh day the seventh round having been made of the city, the long silence was broken with a shout. As the walls crumbled down, the Israelites clambered over them, slaying men, women and children. They were not to spare anything save the gold, silver, brass and iron which were to be saved for the treasury of the Lord. However, Rahab and her household were saved according to the promise of the spies. This wonderful deliverance was calculated to inspire the people with courage and enthusiasm. They could now see how God could fight for them and deliver them from their enemies. Also, it would strike terror in the hearts of the Canaanites. The blowing of the trumpets and shouting of that day with its great victory is typical of the greater day when larger victories shall be won by the Almighty for His people, and even greater consternation will be struck into the hearts of the enemies of God's people (I Thess. 4:16, 17).

Let us learn of this whole lesson that spiritual victories are won upon principles and by means which are not sufficient in themselves. According to human wisdom it is utter foolishness (I Cor. 1:17-29).

The Living Trees

Living trees are always shedding something in order to produce more.

The Bible Leads

Judge the Bible by the influence that it has had upon the lives of men, and it wins first place with all other books trailing in the dust.

The Christian

A Christian, when he makes a good profession, should be sure to make his profession good.

On God's Side

Stand on God's side and He will stand by your side in times of need.

Cows Saved Owner From Mother Bear

Climbing up a 60-foot spruce tree with a black mother bear close behind him, slashing at his feet as he ascended, Dave Irons, a rancher of Sickle, in the Caribou district of British Columbia, was saved from serious injury and possible death by his own cows, who came running and bellowing to his rescue just as Irons had reached the uppermost limb, says the Vancouver Province.

The bear had by this time lightened the farmer of his gum boots and had made several nasty gashes in his leg. The cows hearing their master's voice—he came regularly to put salt on their "trails"—gathered around the foot of the tree, distracting the bear's attention, and she descended hurriedly to protect two tiny cubs which had taken refuge in the second tree, close to the one Irons had climbed.

The rancher had met many bears before, but they had always turned off the trail at his approach. He has now increased the cows' salt allowance.

Shave With Cuticura Soap

And double your razor efficiency as well as promote skin purity, skin comfort and skin health. No mug, no slimy soap, no germs, no waste, no irritation even when shaved twice daily. One soap for all uses—shaving, bathing and shampooing.—Advertisement.

Early Golf Reminiscence

The first golf club used on the first golf course built west of the Mississippi river is to be enshrined in a place of honor at the Wichita Country club. Prof. C. P. Clark, now of Hanover, N. H., who was responsible for the first course to be established at Wichita, has given the country club the stick. Professor Clark, who came from Massachusetts in 1887, says he never will forget the sensation created the first time he appeared on the streets of Wichita attired in knickers, a sweater and a cap.

When in doubt—don't disregard the fact that you are.

Regain health and vigor by eating Yeast—now made delicious

IF you feel dull and tired; if you have lost all zest and appetite; if the poisons of constipation are sapping your vitality.

Reliable medical advice prescribes: "Eat Yeast."

This remarkable natural health food tones up the system, helps the body to function properly, puts a keen edge on appetite, promotes regular and complete elimination of poisonous waste.

If you haven't liked yeast in its raw, "yeasty" tasting form, here's welcome news!

AT LAST—

a pleasant way to take yeast

Now if you like chocolate, you will like yeast in its new form.

A famous scientist has succeeded in blending yeast with eating chocolate (not merely chocolate-coating it).

It's C-Y Chocolate Yeast — as delicious — as easily eaten — as fine chocolate. Yet, each wafer contains as much vigorously active yeast as the best grade compressed yeast cake.

Try a C-Y Chocolate Yeast wafer today. See how easy it is to take—as pleasant as candy. The old, unpleasant "yeasty" taste is gone.

Form the health habit of eating C-Y wafer three times daily, either before or after meals. They are 5c each everywhere. Keep a package "at your elbow" at home or office. Carry them while traveling. C-Y wafers will stay fresh.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because uric acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then be fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

Daddy—"Well, what did the paragon say?"

Marjorie—"He said that if I would sleep more on my right side, I wouldn't have such dreams."

Bad dreams are a good sign of poor digestion; when hard-worked stomach begins to complain, the whole system suffers and we have constipation, dyspepsia, offensive breath and similar disorders.

The Girl in the Mirror

By ELIZABETH JORDAN

(© by The Century Company.)
WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, successful playwright, but somewhat inclined to wildness, attends the wedding of his sister, Barbara, to whom has been left the great Devon fortune. Laurie had been a gay young chap, but for the last year he has been toeing the mark, through the efforts of Barbara. Laurie, who is wealthy, refuses to settle down to work, announcing his intention of resting and seeking adventure. From his window in New York he observes the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the residence opposite.

As they looked, she suddenly stirred and moved backward, as if occultly warned of their survey. They saw her close the window, and, drawing a chair close to it, sit down and stare out through the pane, still with that intent, impersonal expression. Bangs strolled back to the dressing case and resumed his interrupted toilet. Laurie, fumbling vaguely with his brushes, kept his eyes on the girl in the mirror.

"She's a wonder. Prettiest girl I've ever seen, I think," he reflected aloud.

Bangs snorted.

"She's probably a peroxide," he said. "Even if she isn't, she can't hold a candle to your sister."

"Oh, Barbara—" Laurie considered the question of Barbara's beauty as if it were new to him. "Babs is good-looking," he handsomely conceded. "But there's something about this girl that's unusual. Perhaps it's her expression. She doesn't look happy."

Bangs sighed with ostentation.

"If you want to study some one that isn't happy, look at me," he invited warmly. "If that play of mine isn't out of me pretty soon, I'll have to have an operation!"

Laurie made no reply to this pathetic prediction, and Bangs sadly shook his head and concluded his toilet, meditating gloomily the while on the unpleasant idiosyncrasies of every one he knew. To see Devon turn suddenly into a loafer upset all his theories as well as his plans.

Laurie, for some reason, dawdled more than usual that morning. It was after eleven before he went to breakfast. An hour earlier Bangs departed alone for their pet restaurant.

The girl in the mirror remained at her window for a long time, and Laurie watched her in growing fascination. It was not until she rose and disappeared that he felt moved to consider so sordid a question as that of food.

He joined Bangs just as that youth was finishing his after-breakfast cigar. Even under its soothing influence, he was in the mood of combined exasperation and depression with which his friends were becoming familiar.

"If we had begun work as soon as we got back to town after your sister's wedding," he told Laurie, "we'd have had two acts ready by now, in the rough."

"No reason why you shouldn't have four acts ready, so far as I can see," murmured Laurie, cheerfully attacking his grape fruit. "All you've got to do is to write 'em."

Bangs' lips set.

"Not till I've talked 'em over with you and got your ideas," he declared, positively. "If you'd just let me give you an outline—"

Laurie set down his cup.

"Do I get my breakfast in peace, or don't I?" he demanded, coldly.

"You do, confound you!"

Bangs bit off the end of a fresh cigar and smoked it in stolid silence. He was a person of one idea. If he couldn't talk about the play, he couldn't talk at all. He meditated, considering his characters, his situations, his partner's and his own position, in a mental jumble that had lately become habitual and which was seriously affecting his nerves. Laurie, as he ate, chatted cheerfully and at random, apparently avoiding with care any subject that might interest his partner. Bangs rose abruptly.

"Well, I'm off," he said. "See you at dinner time, I suppose."

But Laurie, it appeared, had engagements. He was taking a party of friends out to Gedney Farms that evening, in his new car, and they might decide to stay there for a day or two. Also, though he did not confide this fact to Bangs, he had an engagement for the afternoon, at a place where the card rooms were quiet and elegant and the stakes high.

The attraction of these diversions filled his mind. He quite forgot the girl in the mirror, and it was no thought of her that drew him back to New York that night. The plans of his guests had changed, that was all. The change brought him home at eleven o'clock.

He fell asleep with surprising ease, and immediately, as it seemed, he saw the girl in the mirror. She was walking toward him, through what appeared to be a heavy fog. Her hands were outstretched to him, and he hurried to meet her; but even as he did so the fog closed down and he lost her, though he seemed to hear her voice, calling him from somewhere far away.

He awoke late in the morning with every detail of the dream vivid in his mind, so vivid, indeed, that when he approached the mirror after his morning plunge, it seemed almost a continuation of the dream to find the girl there.

The curtains of his French window were drawn apart, and in the mirror he saw the reflection of the girl as she stood in profile near her own uncurtained window and slowly dressed her hair.

It was wonderful hair, much more wonderful down than up. Laurie stared with pleasure at the red-gold mass that fell down over the girl's white garment. Then, with a little shock, he realized that the white garment was a night-dress. It was evident that the girl thought herself safe from observation and was quietly making her toilet for the morning.

Well, she should be safe. With a quick jerk, Laurie drew together the heavy curtains that hung at the sides of the long window. Then, smiling a little, he slowly dressed. His thoughts dwelt on the girl. It was odd that she should be literally projected into his life in that unusual fashion. He had never had any such experience before, nor had he heard of one just like it. It was unique and pleasant. It was especially pleasant to have her so young and so charming to look at. He wished he knew her name and something more about her. His thoughts were full of her.

Before he left the room he parted the curtains again to open the window wide, following his usual program. As he did so he glanced into his mirror. He saw her open window, but it was lifeless. Only his own disappointed face confronted him.

CHAPTER III

Laurie Meets Miss Mayo

Laurie thought much that day about the girl in the mirror, and he was again home at eleven that night, to the wonder of Mr. Pangs, who freely expressed his surprise.

"Something pleasant been coming your way?" he tactfully asked.

Laurie evaded the question, but he felt that something definitely pleasant had come his way. This something was a new interest, and he had needed a new interest very much. He hoped he would dream of the girl that night, but as he and Bangs unwisely consumed a Welsh rabbit before they went to bed, he dreamed instead of something highly unpleasant, and was glad to be awakened by the clear sunlight of a brilliant January day.

After breakfast he strolled across the square into the somber hall of the studio building on its southwest corner. The hall was empty, but he found and rang a bell at the entrance of a dingy elevator shaft. The elevator descended without haste. When it had reached the floor, the colored youth in charge of it inhospitably filled its doorway and regarded the visitor with indifference. This young man was easy to look at, but he was no one he knew.

Laurie handed him a dollar and the youth's expression changed, first to one of surprise, then to the tolerance of a man who is wise and is willing to share his wisdom. The visitor went at once to the point of his visit.

"A young lady lives here," he began. "She is very pretty, and she has reddish hair and brown eyes. She has a studio in one of the upper floors, at the front of the house. What's her name?"

The boy's face showed that he had instantly recognized the description, but he pondered dramatically.

"Dat young lady?" he then said. "Dat young lady mus' be Miss Mayo, in Twenty-nine, on de top flo'. She jes' moved in here las' Tuesday."

"Where does she come from, and what does she do?"

The boy hesitated. What did all this mean? And was he giving up too much for a dollar? Laurie grinned at him understandingly.

"I don't know her," he admitted, "and I don't expect to. I'd like to know something about her—that's all."

The youth nodded. He had the air of accepting an apology.

"I reckon she come fum some fur'n place. But I dunno what she do," he reluctantly admitted. "Mebbe she ain't doin' nothin' yit. She's home mos' de time. She don' go out hardly 'tall. Seems like she don' know many folks."

He seemed about to say more, but stopped. For a moment he obviously hesitated, then blurted out what he had in mind.

"One t'ing got me guessin'," he muttered doubtfully. "Dat young lady, she don't seem t' eat nothin'!"

"What do you mean?" Laurie stared at him.

The boy shuffled his feet. He was on uncertain ground.

"Why, jes' what I said," he muttered, defensively. "Folkses here either eats in or dey eats out. Ef dey eats in, dey has stuff sent in—rolls an' eggs an' milk an' stuff like dat. Ef dey eats out, dey goes out, reg'lar, to meals. But Miss Mayo she don' seem to eat in or out. Nothin' comes in, an' she don' go out 'nough to eat reg'lar. I bin studyin' 'bout it consider'ble," he ended; and he looked unmistakably relieved, as if he had passed on to another a burden that was too heavy to carry alone.

Laurie hesitated. The situation was presenting a new angle and a wholly unexpected one. It began to look as if he had come on a sentimental errand and had stumbled on a tragedy.

There was a chance that the boy might be all wrong in his inferences, although this chance, Laurie mentally admitted, was slight. He knew the shrewdness of this youth's type, the precocious knowledge of human nature that often accompanies such training and environment as he had had. Probably he suspected even more than he had revealed. Something must be done.

Laurie drew a bill from his pocket.

"How soon can you leave the elevator?" he asked.

"'Bout one o'clock."

"All right. Now, here's what I want you to do. Take this money, go over to the Clarence restaurant, and buy a good lunch for that lady. Get some hot chicken or chops, buttered rolls, vegetables, and a bottle of milk. Have it packed nicely in a box. Have them put in some fresh eggs and extra rolls and butter for her breakfast. Deliver the box at her door as if it came from some one outside. Do that and keep the change. Understand?"

"Yaah, sah!" The boy's eyes and teeth were shining.

"All right. Go to it. I'll drop in later this afternoon for your report."

Laurie turned and walked away. Even yet the experience did not seem real. It was probably all based on some foolish notion of the youth's; and yet he dared not assume that it was a foolish notion. He had the dramatist's distaste for drama anywhere except in its legitimate place, on the stage; but he admitted that sometimes it did occur in life. This might be one of those rare occasions.

Whatever it was, it haunted him. He lunched with Bangs that day, and was so silent that Bangs was moved to comment.

"If you were any one else," he remarked, "I'd almost think you were thinking!"

Laurie disclaimed the charge, but his abstraction did not lift. By this time his imagination was hard at work. He pictured the girl in the mirror as stretched on her virginal cot in the final exhaustion of starvation; and the successful effort to keep away from the studio building till four o'clock called for all his will power. Suppose the boy blundered, or wasn't in time. Suppose the girl really had not eaten anything since last Tuesday! These thoughts, and similar ones, obsessed him.

At four he strolled into the studio hall, wearing what he hoped was a detached and casual air. When the elevator appeared, he entered it with the others who were waiting. He looked aloofly past the elevator boy as he did so, and that young person showed himself equal to the situation by presenting to this newcomer a stolid ebony profile. But when the lift had reached the top floor and discharged its passengers, the two conspirators lent themselves to the drama of their roles.

"Well?" asked Laurie eagerly. "Did you get it?"

"Yaas, sah."

"What happened?"

The boy stopped his descending car midway between two floors. He had no intention of having his scene spoiled. He bulged visibly under the news he had to impart. "I got de stuff you said, and I lef' it at dat young lady's do'," he began impressively.

"Yes."

"When I looked de nex' time, it was gone."

"Good! She had taken it in." Laurie drew a breath of relief.

"No, sah. Dat ain't all." The boy's tone dripped evil tidings. "She brung it back!"

"What!" His passenger was staring at him in concern.

"Yaas, sah. De bell rung fum her flo,' and' when I got up de young lady was standin' dere wid dat basket in her hand."

He paused to give Laurie the effect of the tableau, and saw by his visitor's expression that he had got it fully.

"Yes? Go on!"

"She look at me mighty sharp. She got brown eyes dat look right thoo you," he interpolated briskly. "Den she say, 'Sam, who done lef' dat basket at my do'?' I say, 'I done it, miss. It was lef' in de hall, an' de ca'd got yo' name on it. Ain't you order it?' I say.

"'No,' she say, 'dis yere basket ain't fo' me. Take it, an' ef you cain't find out who belong to it, eat dis yere lunch yo'self.' He paused. "I et it," he ended, solemnly.

Laurie's lips twitched under conflicting emotions, but he closed the interview with a fair imitation of indifference.

"Oh, well," he said carelessly, "you must have been mistaken about the whole thing. Evidently Miss Mayo, if that's her name, wasn't as hungry as you were."

The boy nodded and started the car on its downward journey. As his passenger got off on the ground floor, he gave him a new thought to carry away with him.

"She'd bin cryin', dough," he muttered. "Her eyes was all red."

Laurie stopped and regarded him resentfully.

"Confound you!" he said, "what did you tell me that for? I can't do anything about it!"

The boy agreed, hurriedly. "No, sah," he assured him. "You cain't. I cain't, neither. None of us cain't," he added as an afterthought.

Laurie slowly walked away. His thoughts scampered around and around, like squirrels in a cage. The return of the basket, of course, might mean either of two conditions—that the girl was too proud to accept help, or that she was really in no need of it. Laurie had met a few art students. He knew that, hungry or not, almost any one of them would cheerfully have taken in that basket and consumed its contents. He had built on that knowledge in providing it. If the girl had taken it in, the fact would have proved nothing. Her refusal to touch it was suspicious. It swung the weight of evidence toward the elevator boy's starvation theory.

Laurie's thoughts returned to that imaginative youth. He saw him consuming the girl's luncheon, and a new suspicion crossed his mind. Perhaps the whole business was a bit of graft. But his intelligence rejected that suggestion. If this had been the explanation, the boy would not have concluded the episode so briskly. He had got the strange young man where he might have "kept him going" for days and made a good income in the process. As it was, there seemed nothing more to do. And yet—and yet—how the deuce could one let the thing drop like that? If the girl was really in straits—

Thus the subconscious argument went on and on. It worried Laurie. He was not used to such violent mental exercise. He dined alone that night and it was well he did so. His lack of appetite would certainly have attracted the attention of Bangs or any other fellow diner, and Bangs would as certainly have commented upon it. Also, he passed a restless night, troubled by vaguely depressing dreams. The girl was in them, but everything was as hopelessly confused as his daytime mental processes had been.

The next morning he deliberately kept away from the mirror until he was fully dressed, but he dressed with a feeling of tenseness and urgency he would have found it difficult to explain. He only knew that today he meant to do something definite, something that would settle once for all the question that filled his mind. But what could he do? That little point was still unsettled. Knock at the girl's door, pretend that it was a blunder, and trust to inspiration to discover in the brief encounter if anything was wrong? Or put money in an envelop and push it under her door? If he did that, she would probably give the money to Sam, as she had given him the food.

The girl in the mirror acts—and speaks.

Exposure a Factor for Window Plants

Results in window boxes are largely dependent upon the right flowers for the exposure. It is not possible to have window boxes at every window identical with those at every other window if the exposure is different, but they may harmonize.

For sunny locations use nasturtiums, verbena, sweet alyssum, petunia, pansy, cornflower, snapdragon and marguerite; for shady places, nonflowering plants—the ferns, palms, English ivy, begonia, trailing evonymus, asparagus sprengeri. Drooping effects may be had from lobelias, sweet alyssum and others. For half shady windows, hanging fuschia with bush fuschia, or bush fuschia with marguerites and vincas or hanging petunia with cobea scandens, or pink fuschia, white marguerites and vincas can be combined. Verbenas may be planted alone as they form a luxuriant mass of bloom and foliage. Pansies and sweet alyssum are a delightful combination.

Geraniums and English ivy are formal and go well in a formal house or along a dusty street which would thwart the growth of something more delicate. Very effective results may be had by trailing ivy upon a heavy cord to frame the window.—The Delineator.

Egyptian's Sleeping Jar

In some of the remote parts of Egypt, there are to be seen small communities where just outside of each house or hut is a huge earthen jar shaped somewhat like a teacup with large outstanding ribs at regular intervals on the outside. Notwithstanding the temperature, the entire family crawls into this urn at night to sleep. It is thought to be necessary to do this to protect themselves from the lizards, snakes and other pests of this kind which would make sleep impossible under the usual conditions. The ribs on the outside of the jar prevent the night crawlers from finding their way into the interior of the jar.

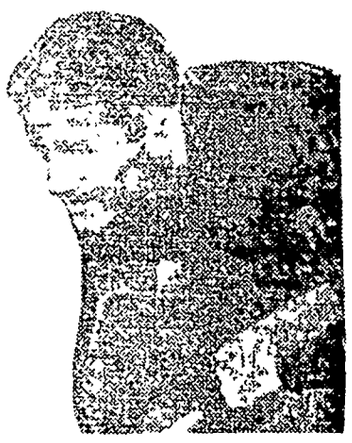
C E O'Neal, halfback on the University of Iowa football squad is a mighty efficient blocker. He won a minor letter last fall. Pierre, S. D., is his home.

C D Voltmer of Sigourney never played a game of football before he came to the University of Iowa. He learns fast however and now is a dependable reserve guard or tackle. He weighs 185 pounds.

The honor of possessing the most weight goes to R. B. Chatterton of Clinton, guard on the University of Iowa football squad. Scales register 230 when "Tubby" steps on. He is enough of a guard to play about half the time on the Hawkeye first team, even though he is only a sophomore.



Harry H. Rice of Washington is just about as good an end as a coach could desire and is playing his third year at the University of Iowa. He shows best as a receiver of passes but is a deadly tackler also. In the spring he hurls the javelin on the Iowa track team.

Pictured above is Coach Burton A. Ingwersen of the University of Iowa football team The former Illinois athlete and coach is now developing his third Hawkeye eleven. He is the most youthful mentor in the Western Conference but his first two teams lost only three Big Ten games. Ingwersen will lead his Iowans against Minnesota at the Homecoming celebration at Iowa City Nov. 6th. His teams have broken even with the Gophers in the last two seasons.

One of the famous precise bullet-like passes is just about to leave the hand of Nick A. Kutsch of Sioux City, the star University of Iowa halfback portrayed above. Kutsch is a junior and the only letter man in Iowa's backfield this fall. He scored the touchdown which won the Homecoming game with Illinois last year and is set for another great exhibition when Minnesota invades Iowa City for the 1926 Hawkeye Homecoming. On the run, Kutsch has a deceptive, pace-changing stride. He is the best place-kicker the Iowans possess and his forward passes are famous throughout the middle west.

M. C. Chapman of North English is showing good form as a passer and drop-kicker on the University of Iowa freshman team. He weighs 154 pounds but is a shifty runner.

R. A. Ades of Webster City came to the University of Iowa with a grea high school reputation and is makin good as a fullback on the Hawkeye yearling team. His weight, 180 pounds is a great asset for a line-plunger.

A good 180 pound halfback on the University of Iowa freshman football team is C. Pignatelle from Rock Falls, Ill. He is one of the yearling backs whom the varsity have trouble in stopping.

J. M Gilchrist of Keosauqua is tied for the heavyweight championship of the University of Iowa freshman football squad. He fits in his 240 pound bulk at a guard position. This freshman is heavier than any athlete on the varsity team.

F. E Roberts of Knoxville is a 190 pound guard on the University of Iowa freshman football team. He is also a star weight man and is the nolder of the state interscholastic shot put record.

J. B. Winkel of Algona plays a satisfactory game in the line on the University of Iowa freshman football squad. He is a 180 pounder.

MORE COUNTIES CLEAN UP BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS

Twenty Five Counties In Iowa Are Now On The List

DES MOINES, November 4.—Clay and Benton counties have reduced the percentage of bovine tuberculosis to less than one-half of one per cent by the aera plan of testing cattle and have been recommended to the federal government for modified accredited counties.

Undoubtedly these counties will be accredited by the U. S. Department of Agriculture this week.

Work may be completed in Palo Alto and Shelby counties so that they may also be modified at the same time. This will make 25 counties or one-fourth of the state that has practically eradicated bovine tuberculosis.

THOMPSON'S "COUNTRY STORE" IS GOING TO CAUSE FUN

Groceries Given Away At Show Last Night At Theatre

Wednesday night of this week was the opening night for the "Country Store" feature at the Idle Hour Theatre and is a stunt originated by manager Thompson to stir up a little excitement and fun each Wednesday night.

The stunt is going to be a big thing and should draw a good crowd every Wednesday night.

To those who were not at the show last night we might explain how it works. Each purchaser of a ticket receives a duplicate number of the movie ticket which he holds. After the first show all the numbers are put into a hat and two boys then draw out the tickets. The number is called and the person holding the duplicate number is given an article of merchandise purchased at one of the Klemme stores. Last night Mr. Thompson gave away 1 sack of Gold Medal Flour, 3 cans of Corn, 3 cans of Peas, 1 can of Salmon, 1 50 cent sack of Sugar, 2 1-lb. cans of Coffee, Campbell's Soup, P. & G Soap and a bottle of Maple Syrup.

Last night Miss Gracka Quandt received the 3 cans of Peas, a young man got the Soup, the Busch boy received the Soap, Oscar Wenig the Coffee, Mrs. F. Kluckhohn received the can of Salmon, the little Steiman girl got the Corn, Ruth Johnson the Sugar, Kenneth Kluckhohn walked away with the big sack of Flour and Mrs. Harry Gram received the Maple Syrup.

Mr. Thompson said there was about $6 worth of groceries in the lot. He will put on the stunt every Wednesday night as an added attraction.

Mr. Thompson is a live wire and is putting on some real good pictures and the show last night was far above the average.

IOWA CORN IS TEN TO FIFTY PER CENT SOFT THIS YEAR

That's Finding of F. G. Churchill in Harvesting County Test Plots

Iowa corn at this time is varying from 10 to 50 percent soft over the state, judging by that which has been harvested in 10 county corn test plots. This is the report of F. G. Churchill, extension crops specialist of Iowa State College, who has been assisting in harvesting the county corn test plots.

"The moisture content shows a wide variation and the corn in western Iowa appears to be drier than that in the eastern part," reports Mr. Churchill.

Corn ear worms have done a great deal of damage in some sections found, and he says that the ears tacked by the ear worms frequ are molding.

The medium types of corn showing up much better in the co ty yield tests this year than large types, which has also occu in past years. The medium cor yielding fairly well and the qu is considerably better than tha the larger varieties.

ADIES AID DISHES ARE FOR USE OF ANY CHURCH AFFAIR

There seems to be some misunderstanding as to the privilege of hurch Organizations to the use of e Aid dishes. Any church society Sunday School Class may use the id Cupboard Supply by paying the m of $1.00 to the Aid President, nd getting permission from her for se of same. Mrs. Chris Gram is in harge. The Aid purchased dishes, love, silver, etc. some time ago and placed in the Parish House. On re-checking our supply, and re-filling the same which was lacking, owing to reasons unknown, presumably due to breakage, the Aid replaced the supply at a cost of about $7.00. So it was decided to make a nominal charge for the use of Aid property which would cover the breakage, etc. The Aid is willing to rent the supplies to anyone who will stand the responsibility of using same.—Aid Committee.

STAGE GARDEN FIRE IN FALL INSTEAD OF SPRING

May Save Gardener Host of Trouble Next Year

Instead of staging that annual garden trash fire next spring, why not do it this fall? Much is to be gained by pulling and raking up all the dead vines and plants present in the garden and burning them. The striped cucumber beetle, the squash bug and other kindred pests which lead the gardener to cuss during the spring growing season will be dealt a severe blow if the garden rubbish is burned this fall for it materially decreases the number of places in which the insects can set up a winter home.

Spading or plowing the garden in the fall is a good practice too, for many pests are rooted out of their winter lairs to meet death at the hands of Jack Frost. Fall spading means a drier garden in the early spring and consequently earlier planted vegetables.

In spading the garden the salsify and parsnips can be left in the earth for freezing does not injure them in the least In fact, many contend that it improves the flavor. For the house wife who wishes to prepare salsify and parsnips for the winter table, Ora Smith, of the Iowa State College horticultural extension department, suggests that the vegetables be dug and piled out in the garden with a layer of two to four inches of dirt over them and some cornstalks over the dirt to prevent the earth from freezing too solidly.

The Klemme Orchestra furnished the music for a dance held at Kaster's Hall at Ventura last week Wednesdy evening.

AMES WARNS TO WATCH FOR SEED CORN MOLD

Fall Rains Made Crop Unusually Susceptible To Infection

This year of all years seed corn must be handled "with gloves on." The heavy rains of August and September have left the corn extremely susceptible to mold infection unless the excess moisture was drawn out quickly.

The dry rot molds of corn (diplodia, basisporium and fusarium) are present in Iowa corn fields and seed corn rooms in enormous numbers, according to M. H. Burns, assistant professor of plant pathology at Iowa State College. Thee molds work their way to the heart of the seed conr and use up the supply of food which would otherwise produce a strong, healthy plant.

On many seed ears, a small amount of mold at the base of the ear, altho invisible, may spread and seriously injure the germination of the entire ear. For this reason special precaution must be practiced in late selection of seed as few ears have escaped contamination. Ears selected for seed should be dried rapidly and stored in a cool dry place. Drying checks the further development of the dry rot molds and a cool dry storage prevents new infection.

Information concerning the treatment of seed corn to secure healthy, disease free seed for future planting may be secured from the local farm bureau or plant disease extension specialist at Ames, Iowa.

HOG CHOLERA OUTBREAKS IN IOWA ARE ABATING

Rendering Plants Report Decline In Business Past Week

DES MOINES, November4.—"Reports which we have just received from many rendering plants in Iowa indicate that the majority of hog cholera outbreaks are subsiding," is the statement of M. G Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture.

Accurate figures of the loss cannot be estimated until later in the season. However, the replies that have been received from rendering plants indicate that the loss has been greater than for several years.

Mr. Thornburg believes that the prompt action by the federal department in releasing hog cholera serum without test has been the one thing that has made it possible to check the ravages of this serious outbreak. Thornburg, in commenting on the situation, says "Most of the renedering plants indicate a rapid falling off of the disease during the past two weeks since serum was available for treating sick or infected herds."

The Poultry Average

An inspector, visiting a school in the country, was asking the children general knowledge questions.

"Now, children," said he, "I wonder if any of you can tell me what an 'average' is?"

There was silence for a while, then a little chap at the back jumped up and said: "Yes sir! it's a thing to lay eggs on."

"A thing to lay eggs on? But what makes you say that, Tommy?"

"Well, sir, mother says that our old hen lays six eggs a week on an average."

IOWA'S HOGS

Hogs are the uncrowned Kings of the Corn Belt.

They furnish the principal market for Iowa's corn crop.

Last year, Iowa's 10,972,788 hogs brought $237,012,221 into Iowa.

This is more wealth than is brot into the State from any other product.

If hogs were persons, or roosters, they would have something to crow about.

But we admire hogs, not for their conversation, but for their ability to make hogs of themselves.

That counts for more than anything that they could say.

Fast may they grow, to bring prosperity to Iowa.

Be Sure Hen House Is In Order

Before winter arrives, it is well to see that the chicken house is prepared by a thoro cleaning and disinfecting. If the window openings are insufficient, more openings should be made and frames prepared to fit. Cover the openings with glass substitutes or cheese cloth so as to admit the ultra-violet ray of the sun, which are essential for health, winter egg production and hatchability of the eggs.

Nov. 12 is "Whoo-o-o-ey" Day at Ames.

CORN STALKS MAY BE USED AS SUBSTITUTE FOR LUMBER

One of the most effective measures yet devised for reducing the depredations of the corn borer is the removal of all old corn stalks clear down to the surface of the ground. Such close cutting has not been heretofore considered good practice because the lower part of the stalk is too tough, unpalatable and indigestible for feeding to livestock.

Recently a practical process has been devised for making corn stalks into a satisfactory substitute for lumber. The lower part of the stalk is as good for this use as any other part. Reports which have reached the Iowa Department of Agriculture indicate that factories will probably be started in various portions of the State and new types of close cutting corn harvesting machines will be developed that will be all ready when the corn borer arrives A ready market for the corn stalks will at least help cut the cost of combating the borer.

THROUGH ADVICE OF NEIGHBOR

Woman Tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A neighbor advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which she said had helped her so much. So I bought a few bottles and tried it out. It sure helped me wonderfully. I felt much better. My work was no longer a dread to me. If I hear of any one who is troubled the way I was, I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to them and I will answer any letters in regard to the same."—Mrs. Bertha Meachan, 910 Center St., Lansing, Mich.

"I had been sickly ever since I was fifteen years old. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I got so I could do all my housework and I am in good health."—Mrs. Marie K. Williams, Ketchikan, Alaska.

From Michigan to Alaska, from Maine to Oregon and from Connecticut to California letters are continually being written by grateful women recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Compound is made from roots and herbs and for more than fifty years has been helping to restore run-down, over-worked women to health.

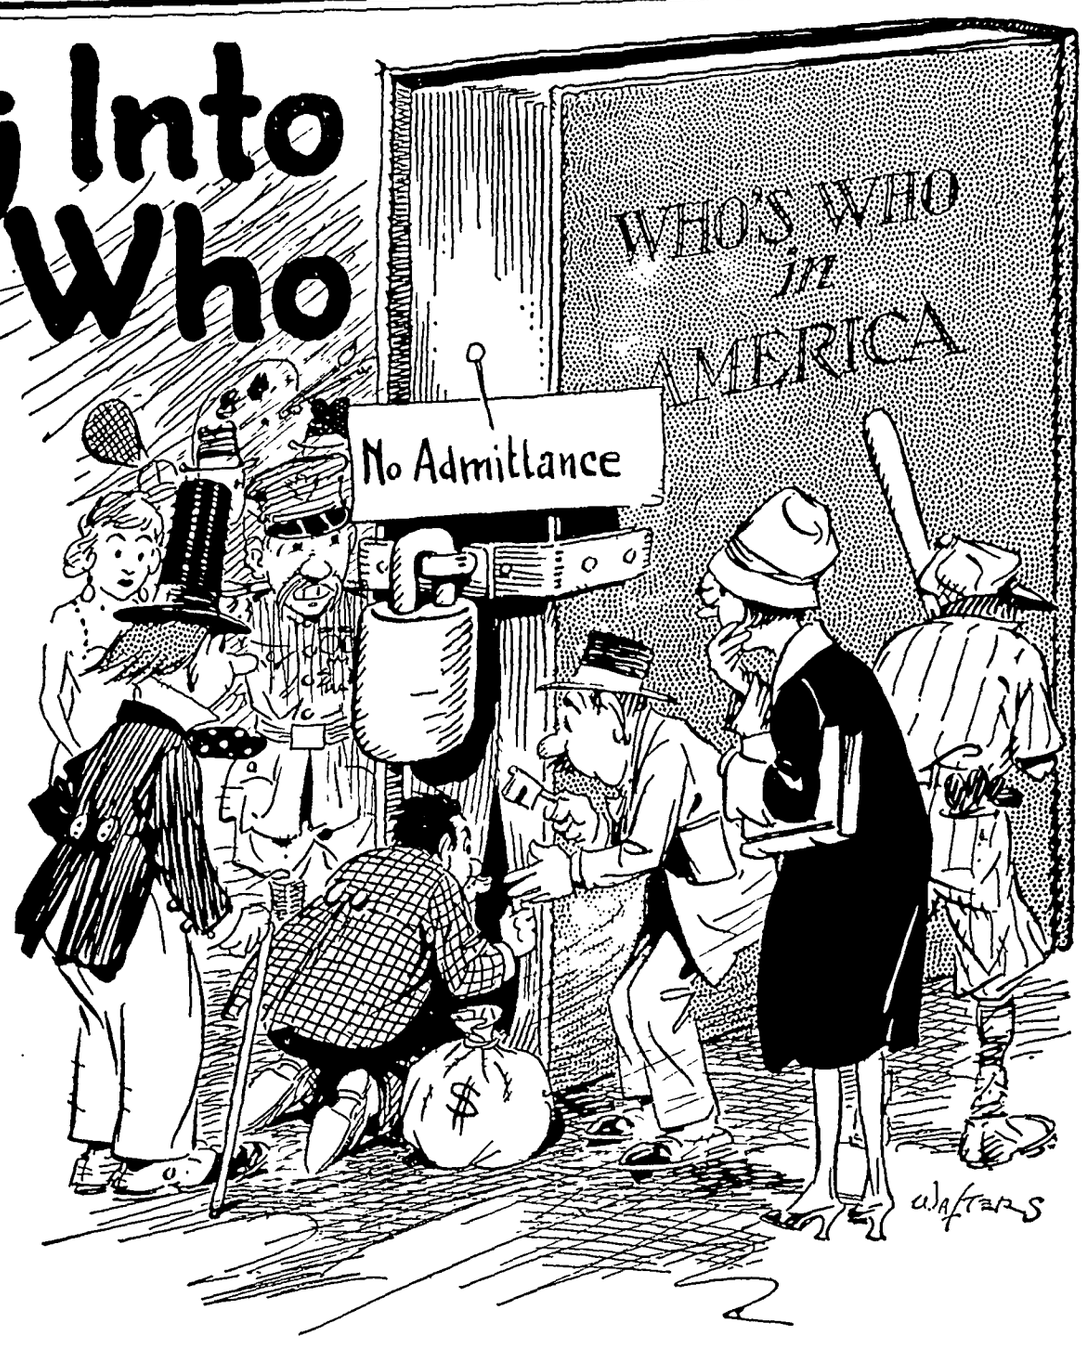
Getting Into Who's Who



WHO are the most notable men and women in America? What have they done to become "notable"? How many of these notables are there? From what environments did they spring, and where do they live now?

"Who's Who in America" answers these questions for you. Volume 14, 1926-1927, is just off the press and ready again to tell the world in 2,271 pages the important facts about 26,015 men, women and—yes, children, who, in the estimation of those who compile this monumental work, are "the best known in all lines of useful and reputable achievement."

"Who's Who" was established away back in 1899 by Albert Nelson Marquis, then in the publishing and advertising business. His first volume, containing 8,602 sketches, was evidently a successful venture, for every other year since 1899 there has appeared a new edition each containing more material than its predecessor.

According to the preface, Who's Who "aims to tell just the things every intelligent person wants to know about those who are most conspicuous in every reputable walk of life—birthplace, age, parentage, education, college or university degrees, occupation, position, achievements, politics, societies, clubs, marriages, etc.—in fact the chief feature of each career, without eulogy or criticism."

Suppose we look up somebody. Let's take Henry Ford. Here's what we find:

FORD, Henry, automobile mfr., b. Greenfield, Mich., July 30, 1863; s. William and Mary (Litogot) F.; ed. dist. sch.; Greenfield; m. Clara J. Bryant, of Greenfield, Apr. 11, 1888. Learned machinist's trade; in Detroit since 1887; was chief engr. Edison Illuminating Co.; organizer, 1903, and pres. Ford Motor Co. (largest mfr. of automobiles in the world, employing over 200,000 persons, turns out about 7,500 automobiles a day). Announced Jan. 1914, plan of profit-sharing involving distribution of ten to thirty millions of dollars annually to employees. Member Society Automotive Engineers, Detroit Board of Commerce. Clubs: Detroit, Bankers' Detroit Athletic, Fellowcraft, Country, Bloomfield Hills Country, Detroit Golf, Detroit Boat, Detroit Yacht, Wolverine Auto, Automobile of America. Chartered ship, and at own expense conducted party to Europe, leaving New York, Dec. 4, 1915, with object of organizing a conf. of peace advocates to influence belligerent govts. to end war; returned home after reaching Christiania, Norway, but members of the party proceeded to Stockholm, Sweden, and Copenhagen, Denmark, and through Germany to The Hague. Maintains corps of social workers to look after welfare of employees and families, also legal and medical depts. free of charge, school for teaching English lang., built Henry Ford Hosp. at cost of $7,500,000. Apptd. by Pres. Wilson mem. Wage Umpire Bd., July 13, 1918, Dem. candidate for U. S. Senate against Truman H. Newberry, 1918. Home: Dearborn, Mich.

How does one get into Who's Who? What are the qualifications for admittance? Do you ask to be included or do you wait to be asked?

By all means wait to be asked. The publishers work on the theory that if you are somebody your name will somehow drift into their attention. Then they look into your claim to fame, and if it appears that you merit some mention in the big red book, you receive a letter requesting you to hand over certain information about yourself. This you are told to fill in on a blank which accompanies the letter. You do this, and presto! you're a notable.

On the basis of an estimated population of 114,000,000 for the United States in 1926 it is calculated that only one person out of every 4,240 is able to break into Who's Who. And breaking in, the publisher emphasizes, is accomplished solely by doing something worthwhile. It is further emphasized that no one can pay money to get his name into Who's Who, and that the mere accumulation of wealth is not regarded as an achievement of sufficient importance to call for mention in this bulky volume. Says a sentence in bold face type on page 21: "Not a single sketch in Who's Who in America has been paid for—and none can be paid for."

Under the heading "Qualifications for Admission to Who's Who in America," we find the following: "The standards of admission . . . divide the eligibles into two classes: (1) those who are selected on account of special prominence in creditable lines of effort, making them the subjects of extensive interest, inquiry or discussion in this country; and (2) those who are arbitrarily included on account of official position—civil, military, naval, religious, or educational.

"The first of these two classes comprises persons who have accomplished some conspicuous achievement—something out of the ordinary, so to speak—something which distinguishes them from the vast majority of their contemporaries. This class is confined to Americans, or those who are so prominently identified with American affairs as to be the subjects of wide inquiry or discussion in the United States. Thus a few foreign actors, singers, lecturers and others are included, who, by frequent visits, or in some other way, have become the subjects of common American interest.

"The arbitrary class embraces without regard to notability or prominence in any other respect, the following: All members of congress; members of the cabinet; all United States judges; federal department heads; all governors of states, territories and island possessions of the United States; all judges of state and territorial courts of highest appellate jurisdiction; all American ambassadors, and all ambassadors and ministers accredited to this country; all American consuls at important places in foreign countries; all living American authors of books possessing more than ephemeral value; the attorneys general of the various states; all officers of the army above rank of colonel, and of the navy above the rank of captain; heads of all the larger universities and colleges; heads of the leading societies devoted to philanthropic, education and scientific aims; members of the National Academy of Sciences, the National Institute of Arts and Letters; bishops and chief ecclesiastics of all the larger religious denominations of the United States, and others who are in like manner chosen because of official relations and affiliations."

Leafing at random through the pages of Who's Who is an interesting and not at all unprofitable pastime. For here you can trace the life histories of men whose names have become household words—captains of industry, scientists, judges and lawyers, reformers, churchmen, educators, doctors, warriors, politicians, actors and even movie stars. In none of these classifications, however, are you likely to find all the names which may interest you.

One class of prominent Americans whose names are constantly in the headlines has almost no representation in Who's Who. This is the field of sport. If you're interested in the early life of Jack Dempsey, you'll look in vain for it in Who's Who. Pugilism evidently is regarded by the publisher as not in the line "of useful and reputable achievement."

Nor will you find anything about Babe Ruth, the king of swat, nor anything about such well-known national figures as Helen Wills, Willie Hoppe, billiard expert, and Bobby Jones. William T. Tilden, Jr., former amateur tennis champion, gets in, but he is listed as an author, not a tennis player. Edward Lasker, chess champion, also gets in.

If you care to take the time you'll find many interesting inclusions and exclusions. If you are a movie fan you'll probably wonder why certain stars have been included and certain others left out. Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are mentioned, but Pola Negri and Ernest Torrence failed to make the grade. Mary Miles Minter, who hasn't appeared on the screen for several years, is given a place, while Bebe Daniels is as yet nobody as far as Who's Who is concerned.

Jackie Coogan, twelve-year-old screen child, rates more than a hundred words of biography, and yet no room could be found for James Cruze, former movie actor who is now a successful director and responsible for that screen epic, "The Covered Wagon." Both the Talmadge sisters are given a place, but Marion Davies and Alice Joyce stay out. Charles Chaplin and Harold Lyold are honored but Mack Sennett, the man who contributed to their fame, goes unsung.

Singing in opera is considered a reputable and useful occupation, and you will find a great many persons listed who follow this pursuit. Included is Marion Talley, the twenty-year-old Kansas City girl, whose debut in New York last February created such a sensation.

Ballet dancing, however, is not so good. No mention is made of Pavlowa, Isadore Duncan or Ruth St. Denis, all of whom are well known to American audiences.

Fielding Yost, athletic director at the University of Michigan, and George Huff of the University or Illinois are mentioned, while Knute Rockne, whose Notre Dame football teams have won respect throughout America, finds himself omitted.

The usefulness and repute of ragtime is testified to in the appearance of such names as Paul Whiteman, George M. Cohan, Eddie Cantor and Irving Berlin. The more spectacular type of evangelism is represented by Billy Sunday and Aimee Semple McPherson.

Twenty-five per cent of those listed in Who's Who were born on farms, investigation reveals. Small towns of less than 8,000 population furnished another 24 per cent, while large cities contributed 20 per cent. Suburbs of large cities furnished but 4 per cent.

In proportion to population, however, the large cities furnished twice as many notables as the average for the nation, the small cities two and three-tenths times as many, villages three times as many, and suburbs four times as many. Expressed in another way: In proportion to the population, the cities contributed nearly six times as many notables as did the farms, whereas the villages contributed nearly nine times as many, and suburbs nearly eleven times as many as the farms.

This is not taken as proof that early life on a farm was not conducive to future eminence. Numerous bits of information indicate that a large number of the older American notables spent part of their youth on farms and considered that these experiences had been helpful in their development. "Many, indeed, have spoken of themselves as having been reared on a farm when in fact they were born in a village or city and merely spent part of their formative period working on a farm, usually their summer months," says Prof. Stephen Visher in reviewing these figures for Who's Who.

Occupations of the fathers of the notables in Who's Who were found to be as follows: 35.2 per cent were business men; 34 per cent were professional men; about 29 per cent were farmers; 6 per cent were skilled or semi-skilled laborers, and only one-half of one per cent unskilled laborers.

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

hile Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monello, Ill., a practicing physician for years, knew that constipation was curse of advancing age, he did not lieve that a "purge" or "physic" ery little while was necessary.

o him, it seemed cruel that so any constipated old people had to kept constantly "stirred up" and t sick by taking cathartic pills, tabs, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

n Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he covered a laxative which helps to gulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. dwell's Syrup Pepsin not only es a gentle, easy bowel movement each dose helps to strengthen the el muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

SMART ONE-PIECE CLOTH DRESS; NOVELTIES IN STYLISH HATS

AS TO "button, button, who's got the button," there are none missing this season within fashion's domain. The stylist is not losing sight of a button of any description, employing myriads of them either in a useful or an ornamental way. In consequence, button counters present a scene of unusual animation, for choosing buttons for one's new frock or coat has become a matter of outstanding importance.

The mode smiles approvingly on the practical yet smartly styled cloth frock which buttons up the front like the one shown in the picture. For the tailored twill, flannel or crepe wool frock, self-colored bone buttons are considered good form, or cloth-covered ones if so preferred.

Fashion, however, does not expect one to be unerringly practical when it comes to the buttons we sew on our frocks and our coats. At the sight of the adorable jeweled buttons which are making their appearance in such great numbers this season, one loses zest for things too utilitarian and prosaic. That is why so many of the pretty crepe and silken frocks fairly sparkle with buttons set in rhinestones. At throat and at girdle link jeweled buttons prove a beautifying touch to many a costume. The velvet frock, which leads all others this season, in black or in color, needs no other embellishment to lend to its enchantment if there be link rhinestone buttons positioned advantageously at neck and at waistline.

From buttons to buckles is not a far cry, and if the one does not perform the act of fastening the belt or girdle, the other does. Especially is this true in regard to the popular redingote dress models which are clasped together at the front waistline.

Millinery, ever capricious and always doing the unexpected thing, is giving some extra thrills this season. There is, for instance, the matter of draping which is truly extraordinary. Especially do close-fitting turban styles emphasize the curious and the eccentric. The picturesque African draped headdress happens to be the inspiration of one of the noted French modistes. Another leading designer adopts the Russian effects. All are charming and are proving popular with lovers of charming millinery this season.

In materials no less of novelty is expressed. Flat furs, notably shaved lamb and spotted calfskin as supple as any fabric, supply another sensation in the millinery story for this season.

Then, too, the prevalence of exquisite beige velours helps turn the attention of the world of fashion into a new trend of thought.

Often velours and flat fur are combined in the newest models in a manner illustrated in two of the hats in this group. Spotted beige and white unborn calf are so interworked as to appear not as a trimming but rather as an intrinsic part of the shape itself.

Each of the hats in this picture feature the fashionable beige color. The smartly styled turban in the upper right corner shows a clever manipulation of fine velours. Of course it boasts a rhinestone ornament as do the majority of hats this season.

Concluding this group of stylish hats is a turban most cunningly draped with a drop-side effect and two smart-looking spikes piercing the felt flap most effectively.

Among other imported models using flat fur is a striking African draped model made of alternating rows of black and gray shaved lamb.

If there are others in the community wishing to join the aid they will be cordially welcomed. The meeting begins at 2:30 P. M.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church served a Hallowe'en Supper at the Parish House last Friday evening. The dining room was nicely decorated and the menu was followed out with a reminder of the day by the serving ot delicious pumpkin pie, baked just right and richly covered with whipped cream. The meal was certainly good, but—the crowd should have been much larger for such an occassion. The Aid is working for a good cause and should be given support by the entire comunity, and especially by the members of the church. The ladies were quite disappointed that more church members do not patronize these affairs.

Editor Jorgenson and son, Buster, were invited along with Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson to help celebrate William Gauger's and Mrs. Jorgenson's birthday at the home of Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Gauger last Thursday evening. Thursday was William's birthday and Friday was Mrs. Jorgenson's anniversary. Mr. Gauger had prepared an excellent three course chicken dinner and had a nice cake for William that had fourteen candles, and one for Mrs. Jorgenson that was decorated with forty candles. Mrs. J. objected to the number and so a goodly number was removed from the scenery. After the dinner, the evening was cordially spent in a social way. (That accounts for Rev. Gauger being absent from prayer meeting—he was "chining" with the town "pencil pusher.")

STATE TEST GIVEN KLEMME STUDENTS

READING TEST GIVEN STUDENTS IN HIGH SCHOOL

Some Students Show Real Ability In State University Tests

Some interesting data has been secured on the reading ability of our high school students. Standard reading tests secured from our State University were procured and given to every pupil now enrolled in our local high school. We learner from this test the rate of each pupil's reading and the degree of comprehension of his reading. Altho some did not do as well as we expected them to do, yet most of the students who scored high were students of recognized ability. We should also add that some of recognized ability did not do well on this occasion. This was to be expected as many of recognized skill along other lines do not perform equally well on all occasions They have their bad days, times when their performance is below normal, as attested by base ball pitchers who on one day will have many strike-outs to their credit and on others be batted furiously.

Only one perfect score was made and that by Ethel Wellemeyer, one of our Senior girls. The second highest was made by Hallie Greiman, another Senior, accompanied by two Freshman students, Wayne Pavey and Clarice Wellemeyer. Lucile Krause a sophomore girl, followed next with Donald Gibbs a few points below her.

These all read at the rate of 145 words per minute but differed in their ability to comprehend in the order given above. Luther Tanner, another Senior boy, and Gertie Trampel, a Freshman girl, read also at the same rate but fell below the previously named pupils in comprehension, altho each scored well above the average.

What investigators have claimed was found to be true in our school, that is, that those who read at the most rapid rate are those who at the same time comprehend best All who read at 145 words per minute scored well in comprehension, at least better than most of the class, not better, however, than all who read more slowly but better than most of the pupils who read more slowly.

We are urging our high school students to acquire a habit of rapid reading, to speed up their reading at the same time giving their best effort to an understanding of what they are reading A student who reads very slowly may let his mind wander the while and fail to concentrate on the meaning as well s one who reads more rapidly.

SECOND PERIOD OF SCHOOL TO CLOSE NEXT WEEK FRIDAY

Ko-Ho Literary Society Entertains Friday Evening

Next week terminates another six weeks period and we hope most of our students may excell their first six weeks record. It will largely determine the kind of a record for the semester for it marks the close of two thirds of the semester. Our teachers report failing owrk on the part of some whom they know could do passing work Fortunately the percentage of such is low. As our basket ball season approaches we are anxious that all our plyers be eligible. Our season opens on Friday night of next week.

On this Friday night the Ko-Ho Literary Society will render the program that was announced for Monday night but which was postponed because of the storm.

Admission of 10 and 5 cents will be charged to meet some minor expenses. It will be worth the admission Hour, 8 o'clock.

SCHOOL BOARD INSTALLS NEW LOCKERS FOR GYM BOYS

Gives Boys A Safe Place To Store Clothing During Gym Work

Thanks to our School Board for the new lockers our high school boys are now using. They afford a safe place for their suits and valuables while playing basket ball, and they provide a convenient place to store gym suits until they are needed for physical training periods Each locker is assigned to one or more boys who provide themselves with a padlock and keys and no others have access but them The lockers are olive green and present a very attractive appearance in the dressing room.

LADIES SURPRISE GRANDMA SCHROEDER ON BIRTHDAY

Big Goose Dinner; Plenty Of Cakes, Celebrate All Day

Tuesday Grandma Schroeder was seventy five years of age, but as she has had quite a number of birthdays before she was not greatly excited over the even' She thought perhaps some ladies might drop in during the afternoon to "surprise" her and she was prepared for them However, she did not look for them for dinner and when they arrived she was greatly surprised indeed

About ten ladies came for dinner and helped Grandma eat one of the best goose dinners that has ever been served in Klemme The dinner had been prepared without her knowledge but never-the-less she enjoyed it greatly And then there were four large cakes—two of them nice birthday cakes all trimmed up real "fussy."

The ladies brought Grandma many fine gifts as a remembrance of the happy occasion.

Later in the afternoon the ladies all enjoyed lunch again and they did not depart until near evening They wished Grandma many happy returns of the day and hoped to help her celebrate many more birthdays

Mrs Mary Waterman of Iowa City was a guest at the dinner and party She is a former member of the "Big Ten" club of ladies who make a practice of surprising each other on birthday anniversaries.

Grandma Schroeder is a fine old lady and is very active for her advanced years She is industrious and assists with the housework each day She likes to do things to help others and is always happy

And—she didn't forget the Editor and family—we had some of her birthday cake, too!

KOERNER'S BARN SCENE OF PARTY

MR. AND MRS. KOERNER ENTERTAIN FRIENDS AT DANCE

New Barn Dedicated Last Thursday Evening At Koerner's

Mr and Mrs A G Koerner entertained thirty-three couples of married people at their home last Thursday evening The occasion was the dedication of the new barn Al recently built and which was just completed and a big barn dance was enjoyed by all.

Thursday was also the twenty-third wedding anniversary of Mr and Mrs Koerner and they thought it was a secret However, their friends at the dance had come prepared and at eleven o'clock the big barn dance was stopped long enough to present Mr. and Mrs. Koerner with a roll of one dollar bills as a gift. This was a rather pleasant surprise on Al and his wife.

About an hour later Mrs. Koerner served all with a nice lunch after which the merry-makers left for home, expressing their good wishes and congratulation to the newly-weds of twenty-three years ago.

All say they had a fine time at the Koerner home, that they enjoyed the dance, the good time and the fine lunch, and are wishing Mr. and Mrs. Koerner will celebrate every anniversary that comes along in a like manner.

"SPOOK" CAUSE OF EXCITEMENT HERE

EVIDENTLY HALLOWE'EN JOKE AT BOTTOM OF MYSTERY

Description Of "Spook" Are Rather Funny To Most

Has Klemme a wandering ghost? That was the main topic of conversation among many last week when some people claimed "it" came to their window, rapped and then scurried away in the darkness.

One lady claims the so called "lady in black" walked right into the parlor without even the formality f tapping on the door or window.

A young man who had been out rather late one night after a dance says "it" jumped out from behind a house. He didn't stop to gather an accurate description.

The "spook" is supposed to resemble a tall woman, dressed in a long, flowing black garment, with a back veil over her face. Some say she carries a flash light in one hand and a revolver in the other It's the first time we have heard of a ghost requiring a flash light to find its way about.

One fellow says it actually floats along Must be full of bootleg whiskey to perform thusly.

However, the story has frightened a number of women and children and the person who has been playing "Jack The Peeper," had better lay low No doubt the beginning of the mysterious personage performing at people's windows is the work of Hallowe'en jokesters, as the first appearance was noted at about that time.

A couple of nights men have kept watch at various houses in town where "it" had been seen, but the men found no one prowling about

Somebody is probably having a good laugh over the excitement they have caused.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY GRIEWE ENTERTAIN WITH TURKEY DINNER WED. EVE.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Griewe gave a sort of pre-Thanksgiving Dinner at their home Wednesday evening at which a nice, juicy turkey was the main course. Those who helped Mr and Mrs Griewe eat the delicious turkey dinner were: Arthur Wellemeyer and family; Rev. Fred Griewe and family of Center Point, Ia.; Rev. Fred Ortmeyer and family of Kanawha, Ia.; and Miss Anna Griewe Such gatherings are quite frequent at the Greiewe home and the children of Mr. and Mrs. Griewe try to get together at home as often as possible The occasion was one to be long remembered.

A TOUCH OF OLD SPAIN

These entertainers have been brought to the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia where 150 years of American Independence is being celebrated, by the Los Angeles County, California, Chamber of Commerce. The westerners have built a fine old Spanish mission in the Palace of Foreign, Civic, Fashion and Agriculture Display and there show the resources and advantages of their native heath. The musicians and dancers entertain all visitors who enter the patio to rest a bit after "doing the exposition." The Exposition continues until December 1.

SOPHS ENTERTAIN FRESHIES AT PARTY FRIDAY EVE

"Green But Growing" Class Given Final Initiation Rites

The Sophomore Class of the Klemme high school entertained the Freshman Class at the high school Friday evening.

During the latter part of last week the new-comers in high school had to appear clad in old clothes and pinned on their breast they carried a wreath of evergreen which was to signify that as yet they were still "green" in the eyes of the upper classmen. Each freshy also had a sign pinned to his clothing which told the world in blazened lettering the he was "Green But Growing."

The party given Friday evening by the Sophs was more or less another joke on the Freshman class. It turned out to be the night for initiation. The freshies were roped together and paraded about town, at the samo time emitting queer yells. Back at the high school they were subjected to further humiliation to the delight of the Sophs when they were blind-folded and forced to put their nose into a pan of flour and do other stunts.

The Freshies were good sports said they had as much fun out of it as anybody. Finally they were rewarded by being the guests of honor at a real "feed" given by the Sophs. All had a fine time they say.

KOERNER TELEPHONE CO. GRANTED FRANCHISE

At the special franchise election held in the town of Klemme last Thursday, the Koerner Telephone Co, of this city, was granted a franchise to continue operations for another twenty years in accordance with ordinance No. 41.

The Koerner Telephone Company has always given excellent service and the people are quite well satisfied as was evident by the favorable vote cast.

One thing we have noticed, the Company are always prompt in giving service following a storm, or other cause beyond their control, by getting lines in shape and communication established.

Mr. Koerner, the manager, states he intends to add to his equipment as the occasion demands and at all times ready to give the best of telephone service.

Mr. Ray Albertson, of Garner, was in town on business Monday. Mr. Albertson is the proprietor of the Modern Cleaners establishment at Garner.

PIG IS BLAMED FOR CAR SMASH UP

FOREST CITY COUPLE IN AUTO WRECK SOUTH OF KLEMME

Car Struck Pig And Turned Over; No One Injured

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Fox, who were on their way home to Forest City from Iowa City where Mrs. Fox had been for an operation were the figures in an accident on the highway a couple of miles south of this place Tuesday evening at about six o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Fox were driving north when their car struck a pig in the road with enough force to upset the car. Mr. and Mrs. Fox escaped without injury, but the windshield, top and fenders of the car were badly damaged.

Cheeper to Feed Chicks Than Pullets

A good many poultry keepers in Iowa who are members of the state record flock keepers association are beginning to realize that it is cheaper to feed a baby chick in March and April than a half grown pullet in November and December Those who made the mistake this year should avoid it next year.

BUENTENBACH HURT IN CORN PICKER

YOUNG KLEMME FARMER HURT IN CORN PICKER

Hand Caught In Rollers When Corn Stalk Used As Stick Broke..

Saturday everything went wrong for Ed. Buentenbach, young farmer living east of Klemme. Somehow, he was doomed for a bad day. First his team became excited and ran away. They were cught, quieted down and put to work again, but the morning was rolling along bad for Ed.

He had no more than gotten well started picking corn with his corn picking machine when it went wrong and clogged up. Mr. Buentenbach took a corn stalk to prod the clogged rollers free of corn when the stalk broke and his hand slipped into the rollers of the machine, jaming in so tight that the jar killed the Ford engine used o run the machinery. Mr. Buentenbach was operating the machine alone and had a team and wagon hitched along side of the picker and his hired man was in another part of the field Ed's frantic yells brought him running to back the fly-wheel of the machine around in order to free Buentenbach's arm.

Mr Buentenbach was first taken to Klemme and given first aid, but his injuries were so serious that he was rushed to the Mercy hospital at Mason City for surgical attention At last reports we have the surgeons are making an effort to save his hand, which was badly crushed and cut by the machine. We understand the fourth finger of the right hand had to be amputated immediately and crused bones in the hand removed.

Ed. is suffering a great deal of pain, but otherwise is getting along as well as expected, and h's many Klemme friends hope for his speedy recovery.

This is the second serious accident here of farmers being injured in corn pickers. Just a week before Mr. John Swalve got his hand caught in a similar manner and lost three tingers in the machine.

Corn pickers are dangerous, especially more so when run by an engine and precaution should be used in freeing the rollers when clogged. Some farmers carry a broomstick or a fork handle to poke out the corn. This is a safe method.

METHODIST CHURCH
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Next Sunday we will observe White Cross Sunday. While White Cross Sunday is one week later or the Sunday immediately before Thanksgiving as we have heretofore observed it, we are taking this earlier date for the reason that we will have a representative with us.

Rev. A. J. Quirin, of Sioux City Methodist Hospital has promised to be with us and will speak in Klemme as well as in Liberty at the morning services. On Sunday evening he will speak in Garner. You will enjoy to hear him. He has a message full of inspiration. Our annual enrollment will take place at this time The response during the past years has been most gratifying

From now on our midweek meetings will be in the several homes in and about Klemme. The one for this week will be in the home of Mr and Mrs. Patet on Thursday evening. Let's form the habit to attend.

The Ladies Aid are meeting in the Parish House this afternoon.

CALEB'S FAITHFULNESS REWARDED

LESSON TEXT—Josh. 14:6-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—I wholly followed the Lord my God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Brave Spy Rewarded.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Reward of Service.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Caleb, the Courageous.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Blessings That Follow Wholehearted Obedience.

I. Elements of Caleb's Character.

1. Independence of spirit (Num. 13:30).

Though the multitude clamored to follow the report of the ten, Caleb determined to stand alone. This is an element in human character which is highly important. One should stand for what he knows to be right, regardless of the sentiment of the crowd.

2. True to convictions (Josh. 14:6, cf. Num. 14:6-9).

What Caleb knew and felt he spoke out. He did not wait for the opinion of others and then modify his to suit the populace. A true man and one who can be trusted will be loyal to his convictions.

3. Unselfish (14:12).

He did not ask for some easy place. He did not wish to thrust someone else into the place of difficulty. He wanted to go into the place where it would require fighting in order to drive out the giants which were in the land.

4. Courageous (Josh. 14:12, cf. 13:30).

This courage he displayed when he insisted that they were able to go up from Kadesh-Barnea and take possession of the land. Forty-five years have elapsed since that time. He would be considered an old man now, but still he desired that place for an inheritance which would require some fighting. He said, "I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me, as my strength was then, even so is my strength now for war."

5. Loyalty to God (Josh. 14:8, cf. Numb. 14:24).

He served God with a whole-hearted devotion; indeed, this is the way to his character.

II. Caleb Laying Claim to His Inheritance (vv. 6-12).

Caleb did not come alone to make his claim. He came in the presence of the children of Judah, lest he be suspicioned of taking advantage. He did not wish to wait until after the lot was cast, for God had already given a certain portion to him. It were useless to ask God to decide a matter which He had already determined. The basis of his plea was:

1. The ground of his service (vv. 6-8).

He had endangered his life in spying out the land—had gone to Hebron when the giants were there. He brought back a true report when his brethren were all against him. He bore his testimony and insisted that they go up and take the land though to do so incurred the displeasure of his brethren and necessitated his standing practically alone.

2. On the ground of the oath of Moses to him (v. 9).

Joshua had respect for Moses, and was bound to follow the counsels of his faithful master whom he had succeeded. This plea was effective.

3. On the ground of God's providential dealing with him (vv. 10-12).

God had preserved him in bodily health. Though he was now eighty-five years old, his natural forces were not abated. He said, "I am as strong this day as I was in the day that Moses sent me, as my strength was then even so is my strength now for war."

III. Joshua Giving the Inheritance to Caleb (13:14, 15).

1. Joshua blessed Caleb (v. 13).

He not only acquiesced in Caleb's claim, but bestowed the blessing of God upon him in it.

2. The inheritance given (vv. 13, 14).

Hebron was the name of the inheritance. The name Hebron means fellowship. It was given because Caleb had fully followed the Lord. Only those who fully follow the Lord can enjoy fellowship with Him. Though Caleb now legally possessed Hebron, it was necessary for him to fight to drive out the giants who infested it. In Christ we have an inheritance which God has given us. We, too, must fight because the enemy is unwilling to relinquish his claim upon it.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Result of the National Elections—G. O. P. Nearly Loses Senate Control.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ELECTION day was far from satisfactory to the Republican party, for it almost if not quite lost control of the senate and its majority in the lower house will be considerably reduced. Seven Republican senators were defeated by Democrats, these being Wadsworth of New York, Butler of Massachusetts, Weller of Maryland, Ernst of Kentucky, Williams of Missouri, Harreld of Oklahoma and Cameron of Arizona. Their successful opponents were Wagner, Walsh, Tydings, Barkley, Hawes, Thomas and Hayden. In the new senate there will be 48 Republicans, 47 Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite. To control its organization the Republicans will need one more vote and the Democrats two. This figuring pre-supposes that Brookhart of Iowa and Frazier of North Dakota, who were read out of the party, stand by it in organizing the body. Smith was victorious in Illinois and Vare in Pennsylvania, despite the campaign scandals, and the senate will have to decide whether or not to exclude them. The question will not come up until the new senate meets in December, 1927, unless the Democrats, by holding up some important appropriation bill, compel the President to convene the new congress in the spring. The new house of representatives will have 238 Republicans, 194 Democrats, 2 Farmer-Laborites and 1 Socialist. The Democrats gained 11 seats.

Of the individual results of the election the most notable was the defeat of Senator Butler of Massachusetts, chairman of the Republican national committee, close personal friend of the President and the only candidate for whose support Mr. Coolidge made an open appeal. Butler was the victim of the defection of wet Republicans, who deserted his dry standard and flocked to the wine and beer platform of Walsh, and of the discontent in the textile mill and shoe factory towns in which there is widespread unemployment.

Frank Smith in Illinois had some 70,000 plurality, Brennan cutting down the normal Republican majority tremendously. This was due in part to the independent candidacy of Maglll but much more to the prohibition issue. In Indiana Watson and Robinson, Republicans, embarrassed by the klan control revelations, barely scraped through. The Democrats announced that recounts would be demanded in three counties. Brookhart of Iowa returns to the senate from which he was ousted with about 70,000 plurality over Claude R. Porter, this result being interpreted by the Iowa press as a reiteration of the Middle West's demand for farm relief legislation.

Al Smith, invincible in his race for re-election as governor of New York, carried Justice Wagner into the senate on his great wave of votes. Senator Wadsworth ran well outside of the metropolis, despite the bolt of the dry Republicans. Smith found Congressman Ogden Mills easier to defeat than was Theodore Roosevelt in 1924. His position as a potential Presidential nominee is greatly enhanced by this latest victory. Albert Ritchie, re-elected governor of Maryland, retains his chances for the same honor.

Incomplete returns from Wyoming indicate that Nellie Tayloe Ross, the last remaining woman governor in the country, was defeated by Frank C. Emerson. Of governors elected Tuesday 14 are Republicans and 12 are Democrats.

OF THE eight states in which prohibition referenda were held, six voted wet, one voted dry but elected a wet senator, and one voted dry entirely. The wet majorities in Illinois, New York and Wisconsin, where the Anti-Saloon league counseled drys not to participate, were overwhelming. Nevada, California and Montana also voted for modification of the prohibition laws. In Colorado and Missouri the drys were on top. Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon league, admitted the drys had had setbacks all over the country and declared these only "challenged the drys to get busier than ever."

One Washington correspondent says: "An examination of the returns all over the country will show that Republicans who ran wet in dry territory were either defeated or had hard contests. The tendency shown by this election will go far toward making more Republicans nervous if the prohibition issue is to be fought out on its merits in 1928. What the fanatical drys will do in that kind of a contest will have considerable bearing both in framing the issue and in the outcome."

IMMEDIATELY after it became known that Senator Butler was defeated the air was full of reports that he would at once resign as chairman of the Republican national committee. It is understood in Washington that he will not quit this post without the President's consent and that in any case his resignation will be postponed for some time. If he should step out now, it would be assumed that this meant Mr. Coolidge would not be a candidate for renomination, and on this question the President has been silent.

CONGRESSMAN MARTIN MADDEN of Chicago, the able chairman of the appropriations committee of the house, makes the welcome announcement that taxes on next year's incomes will be cut between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000.

"I am certain that another reduction can be made and I will recommend it, as I did the last one," the congressman said. "There will be a surplus in the treasury at the end of this year. It will amount to about $250,000,000. Next year we will undoubtedly be able to arrange a new tax cut, to become effective in 1928 on 1927 income."

"NOTHING can happen to me until I have finished my work," declared Premier Mussolini after the sixth attempt to assassinate him had failed, and it would seem that his fatalistic attitude is justified. This time it was in Bologna, where the duce was attending the congress for the advancement of science. An eighteen-year-old youth pushed through the crowds and fired a pistol point blank at the premier, the bullet ripping through his coat. Before he could shoot again the lad was pounded to death by the infuriated mob. As always before, the attack on their leader's life enraged the Fascists tremendously and there were anti-French demonstrations accompanied by bloodshed in various places. The police asserted they had uncovered a great plot, the assassin being a mere tool, and hundreds of arrests were made. The Italian government apologized for attacks on French consulates and France accepted the explanations, but the feeling between the two peoples is becoming extremely bitter. The Italians are convinced that the anti-Fascist plots are hatched in France, and the French believe Italy is scheming to get possession of Nice and the Riviera and part of France's north African colonies.

French police, after a year of watching, descended on a nest of Catalonian plotters against Spain in Perpignan and arrested 93 conspirators on the eve of their proposed uprising for the independence of Catalonia. The revolutionists had hoped their revolt would spread throughout Spain and result in the downfall of Dictator De Rivera if not of the monarchy.

PRELIMINARY hearing of the Aimee McPherson case in Los Angeles resulted in the holding for trial of the evangelist, her mother, Mrs. Kennedy, and Mrs. Lorraine Wiseman Sielaff, their chief accuser. They were bound over to the Superior court on augmented counts of criminal conspiracy. If convicted, they face possible penitentiary sentence of one to ten years on the first count of the indictments; that of obstructing justice; one to five years on the second count, that of preparing false evidence; and one to fourteen on the third, conspiring to suborn perjury.

Kenneth Ormiston, former radio operator at Angelus Temple, and the man with whom the state charges Mrs. McPherson occupied a cottage at Carmel by the Sea during the time she was supposed to have been the captive of kidnapers in Mexico, was bound over to Superior court on the assumption that he will be arrested in time for trial. If he is not arrested by that time, the charges will be kept alive against him.

ISHPEMING, MICH., was the scene of a distressing mine disaster when a great section of swamp land broke into the Barnes-Hecker iron mine and filled up the underground passages. Fifty-two men were trapped by the cave-in and all of them perished. Water rushed into the mine after the mud and filled it almost completely. Rescue crews were on hand promptly but could not do nothing to save the miners.

MEXICO'S campaign against the Yaquis of Sonora is proceeding, according to plans laid by General Obregon. First a number of airplanes flew over the mountains and totally destroyed the Indians' towns with explosive and incendiary bombs, and many of the inhabitants were killed. Hundreds of others were then taken prisoner and these are being scattered in other localities, the able-bodied men being enlisted in the army.

FIGHTING between the Liberals and the government forces in Nicaragua has been resumed, despite the resignation of General Chamorro, president de facto. Large quantities of arms and munitions are being received by the Liberals from Mexico and in one battle last week they carried a Mexican flag—but were badly defeated. Salvador and Costa Rica are reported to be supporting the Conservatives, while Mexico, Guatemala and perhaps Honduras are helping the rebellious faction. The entire east coast of the country is patroled by United States naval units and Washington insists the quarrel must cease and Adolfo Diaz be chosen president.

RULING on a case from Louisiana, the Supreme court of the United States decided that both the federal government and a state may lawfully prosecute a person in their respective courts for violations of their prohibition laws growing out of the same act. Discussing the contention of double jeopardy, the court, in an opinion by Justice Van Devanter, to which no dissent was announced, held that "the eighteenth amendment contemplated that the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes may be denounced as a criminal offense both by the federal law and by the state law; and that these laws may not only co-exist, but be given full operation each independently of the other. Only offenses against the laws of the United States are cognizable under its authority. Those against state laws are cognizable only under the authority of the state. And this is true where the same act is an offense against both a law of the United States and a law of a state."

MAJ. GEN. GEORGE BELL, JR., commander of the Thirty-third division in France and one of the outstanding generals of the World war, died in Chicago, and his funeral was the occasion of a great gathering of Illinois officers and doughboys who had served under him, loved him and admired his bravery and intelligence.

Another notable taken by death was Harry Houdini, magician extraordinary and exposer of spiritualism frauds. He passed away in Detroit, the cause of death being peritonitis resulting from a ruptured appendix.

IN HER progress through the Northwest Queen Marie of Rumania stopped at the town of Maryhill, Wash., and assisted in the formal dedication of the "Museum of Fine Arts" which Samuel Hill is erecting there. She took occasion to avow her sincere friendship for Mr. Hill and for Loie Fuller, the dancer, and certainly added to her popularity by her outspoken language.

CROWN PRINCE LEOPOLD of Belgium and Princess Astrid, niece of King Gustav of Sweden, were married in Stockholm with all due ceremony and display. The royal families of Belgium, Sweden, Norway and Denmark all were there in full force and the people of Stockholm made the event a real festival.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Richard III

RICHARD III—hero and scoundrel; genius and degenerate, great king and greater criminal—stands out through all time as the "heavy villain" of medieval England's history drama: And that same drama was one of the bloodiest and most turbulent ever enacted.

During the four centuries since the Norman Duke William had conquered England many changes had come to the island kingdom. Most important of these was the substitution of English for French as a court and national language. The Normans had tried to make England a French-speaking nation. The stubborn Saxons had refused to give up their cruder native tongue. Little by little, thanks to this resistance, the earlier English, modified by certain French words and lingual forms, became the accepted tongue of the country. This was practically the same as the English we speak today.

The Black prince's son, Richard II, was deposed by his cousin, Henry of Lancaster (son of the Black prince's younger brother), who took the throne as Henry IV. The usurper's son, Henry V, conquered nearly all of France and died while still a young man. His infant son, Henry VI, was called king of France as well as of England. But while he was still a youth Joan of Arc roused France to cast off the British yoke. Then, having no longer a foreign foe on whom to vent their aggressive, warlike tempers, the English turned against each other in a series of civil wars.

The cause of these conflicts was as follows: Henry VI was weak and semi-imbecile. The powerful duke of York claimed descent from a brother of the Black prince older than the brother from whom Henry was descended. He therefore declared himself rightful heir to the throne, and went to war to make good his title. His followers adopted the white rose as their badge, while the Lancastrians (Henry's adherents) wore red roses. The contest thus became known as "The Wars of the Roses." It began in 1455 and endured off and on for thirty years.

The duke of York was killed at the Battle of Wakefield, 1460, but his three sons, Edward, George and Richard, kept up the strife. Success fell first to one faction and then to the other; and intervals of peace recurred; but in the main the nation had little breathing space. At length, at the battles of Barnet and of Tewkesbury, 1465 (where on both occasions Richard led the Yorkist's vanguard to victory), Edward wholly routed the Lancastrians and was undisputed king of England, with the title of Edward IV. His brother George, who had once turned traitor but had come back to the Yorkist cause, was duke of Clarence, and Richard, the youngest brother, was duke of Gloucester. To make Edward's throne more secure, Henry VI and the latter's son, Edward, prince of Wales, were murdered. The crime is generally laid at Richard's door, as is the subsequent murder of George, duke of Clarence. Edward IV died in 1483, leaving his two little sons under Richard's guardianship and appointing Richard "Lord Protector of the Kingdom" during the elder son's minority.

Richard thus found himself with only two lives between him and the crown of England. He laid his plans with a demoniac ingenuity and set out at once to fulfill them. His first step was to execute on various pretexts such noblemen as were adherents of Edward's two boys. Then, by lobbying, threats and false claims, he caused an irregular election to be held and had parliament proclaim him king. The two little princes, Edward's sons, were put out of the way, presumably by Richard's hired assassins, and the "Lord Protector," having waded to the throne through his kinfolk's blood, began his reign as King Richard III. To the surprise of all, he governed the country justly and wisely.

But the beaten Lancastrians were growing restive. Their party's only remaining claimant to the crown was Henry Tudor, earl of Richmond. Oddly enough, he also had a strong trace of the ancient British blood, thus uniting in himself the Norman and early English strains. He had been banished, but in 1485 he returned to England and drew to him a powerful faction. Richard, at the head of a large army, marched in person against him. The two forces met at Bosworth on August 22, 1485. After a hotly contested battle, in which the king performed prodigies of valor, Richmond won a decisive victory. Richard was slain on the field. Richmond came to the throne as Henry VII, and strengthened his cause by marrying Princess Elizabeth of York, thus uniting the rival houses of York and Lancaster.

Richard III is described by Shakespeare and other Sixteenth century writers as a dwarf hunchback. This idea is absurd. No man so handicapped could have performed the personal feats of strength and valor that were ascribed to him. His character presents one of the strangest paradoxes of history. He was conscienceless, devoid of scruple or honor, ferocious, cruel and bloodthirsty even for those iron times. Yet he was a wise and just king, a general second to none, a hero in battle, and of marvelous mental attainments.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean that you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water.

The GIRL in the MIRROR

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan, leaving Laurie on his own. Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late, and he retorts that he seeks adventure. From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo.

What to do? Laurie proceeded with his toilet, using the dressing-case and carefully avoiding the long mirror. He experienced an odd unwillingness to look into that mirror this morning, based partly on delicacy—he remembered the nightdress—but more on the fear of disappointment. If he saw her, it would be an immense relief. If he didn't, he'd fancy all sorts of things, for now his imagination was running away with him

When he was fully dressed he crossed the room in three strides and stopped before the mirror with a suddenness that checked him halfway in the fourth.

Miss Mayo's window was open. He could see that. He could see more than that, and what he saw sent him rushing through the study and out into hall of the big apartment building, where he furiously rang the elevator bell. He had not stopped for his hat and coat, but he had caught a vision of Bangs' astonished face and half of his startled exclamation, "What the dev—"

The elevator came and Laurie leaped into it.

"Down," he said briefly.

The operator was on his way up to the twelfth floor, but something in the expression of his passenger made him change his plans. Also it accelerated his movements. The car descended briskly to the ground floor, from which point the operator was privileged to watch the progress of the temperamental Mr. Devon, who had plunged through the main entrance of the building and across the square without a word to the hall attendants, or a backward glance.

As he reached the studio building Laurie recalled himself to a memory of the conventions. He entered without undue haste, and sought the door of the waiting lift. It was noon, and an operator he had not seen before was on duty.

"Top floor," directed Laurie, and stepped into the car. The operator hesitated. He did not remember this tenant, but he must belong to the house, as he wore no hat or coat. Probably he was a newcomer, and had run downstairs to mail an important letter, as the old building held no mail chute. While these reflections passed slowly through his mind, his car rose as slowly. To the mentally fuming young man at his side its progress was intolerably deliberate. He held himself in, however, and even went through the pantomime of pausing in the top-floor hall to search a pocket as if for a latchkey.

Satisfied, the attendant started the elevator on its descent, and as it sank from sight Laurie looked around him for Number Twenty-nine. He discovered it in an eye-flash, on the door at the right. The next instant he had reached this door and was softly turning the knob.

The door did not yield. He had not expected it to give, and he knew exactly what he meant to do. He stepped back a few feet, then with a rush hurled his shoulder against the wood with the full force of his football training in the effort. The lock yielded, and under the force of his own momentum the visitor shot into the room. Then, recovering his equilibrium, he pushed the door into place and stood with his back against it, breathing heavily and feeling rather foolish.

He was staring at the girl before him, who had risen at his entrance. Her expression was so full of astonished resentment, and so lacking in any other emotion, that for a sickening moment he believed he had made an idiot of himself, that he had not really seen what he thought he had seen in the glass. A small table separated him from the girl. Still staring at her, in the long seconds that elapsed before either spoke, he saw that she had swept her right hand behind her back, in a swift, instinctive effort to hide what it held. His self-possession returned. He had not been mistaken. He smiled at her apologetically.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "I'm afraid I frightened you."

"You did." She spoke tensely, the effect of overstrained nerves revealing itself in her low voice. "What do you mean by it? What are you doing here?"

Laurie's brilliant eyes were on hers as she spoke, and held them steadily. Under his expression, one that few had seen on his face, her look of antagonism softened a little. He advanced slowly to the table between them.

"It will take a few minutes to explain," he said. Then, as she waited, he suddenly formed his plan, and followed the good old Devon principle of going straight to the point.

"I live diagonally across the square," he said quietly, "and I can see into your window from one of mine. So it happened that just now I—I saw what you were going to do."

For an instant she stood very still, looking at him, as if not quite taking in the meaning of his words. In the next her face and even her neck crimsoned darkly as if under the rush of a wave of angry humiliation. When she spoke her voice shook.

"You forget," she said, "that you have no right either to look into my room or to interfere with what you see there."

"I know," he told her, humbly, "and I beg your pardon again. The looking in was an accident, the merest chance, which I will explain to you later. The interference—well, I won't apologize for that. Surely you realize that it's—friendly."

For the first time her eyes left his. She looked around the room as if uncertain what to do or say.

"Perhaps you mean it so," she muttered at last. "But I consider it—impertinent."

A change was taking place in her. The fire that had flamed up at his entrance was dying out, leaving her with the look of one who is cowed and almost beaten. Even her last words lacked assurance. Watching her in puzzled sympathy, Laurie for the first time wished himself older and wiser than he was. How could he handle a situation like this? Neither then or later did he ask himself how he would have handled it on the stage.

For a moment the two young things gazed at each other, in helplessness and irresolution on his side, in resentful questioning on hers. Even in the high tension of the moment Laurie subconsciously took in the picture she made as she stood there, defying him, with her back to the wall of life.

She was very lovely, more lovely than in the mirror; for now he was getting the full effect of her splendid coloring, set off by the gown she wore, a thing of rich but somber shades, lit up by a semi-barbaric necklace of amber and gold, that hung almost to her knees.

Yes, the girl was a picture against the unforgetable background of that tragic situation. But what he admired most of all was the dignity that shone through her panic and her despair. She was up in arms against him. And yet, if he had not come, if that vision had not flashed into his mirror five minutes ago, she might now have been lying a huddled, lifeless thing on the very spot where she stood so proudly. At the thought his heart shook. The right words came to him at last.

"I've had—impulses—like yours," he said. "I've had them twice. Fortunately, both times there was some one around to talk me out of them." He had caught her attention. She showed that by the way she looked at him. "The argument that impressed me most," he went on, "was that it's quitting the game. You don't look as if you were a quitter," he ended, thoughtfully.

The girl's eyes blazed. He had aroused her once more, and he was glad of it. He didn't know at all what to do or say, but he dimly felt that almost any emotion in her would be better than the lethargy she had just revealed.

"I'm not a quitter!" she cried. "But I've got dignity enough to leave a place where I'm not wanted, even if that place happens to be the world. Go away!" she added fiercely. "Go away and leave me alone!"

Resting one hand on the table between them, he held out the other.

"Come, let me have that," he suggested, imperturbably. "Then we'll talk things over. I'll try to make you realize what I was made to realize myself—that we were both on the wrong track. I'll tell you what others think who are wiser than we are."

As she did not move, he added, more lightly: "You see, what we were going to do isn't done much nowadays. It's all out of date. Come," he repeated, gently, "let me have it."

With a movement of irritation the girl swept her hand forward and tossed on the table between them the small revolver she had been holding.

"Take it," she said, almost indifferently. And she added, "Another time will do as well."

He picked up the little weapon and put it into his pocket.

"There isn't going to be any other time," he predicted buoyantly. "Now, slip into a coat while I run across the street and get my hat and coat and order a taxicab. We're going out to luncheon, and to tell each other the stories of our lives, with all the grim and gory details."

"I don't know you," muttered the girl. She had dropped into a chair beside the table, and was sitting with her chin in her hand, in what seemed a characteristic attitude, watching him with an expression he could not analyze.

"Come, Let Me Have That," He Suggested, Imperturbably.

Laurie seemed surprised. "Why, so you don't!" he agreed. "But you're going to, now. We're going to know each other awfully well before we get through. In the meantime, you can see by the merest glance at me how young and harmless I am. Where's the coat?"

He turned and began a vague, masculine search for it. The girl wavered. His rising spirits were contagious, and it was clear that she dreaded being left alone.

"I warn you," she said at last, "that if you have anything to do with me you will be sorry for it."

Laurie stopped his search, and, turning, gave her one of his straight looks.

"Why?" he demanded.

"Because I'm in a net," she said. "And every one who tries to help me gets caught in it, too. Oh, don't smile! You won't smile afterward."

He picked up a coat he discovered in a corner, and held it for her to slip into.

"I like nets," he remarked lightly, "especially if they're bright-colored, large, roomy, comfortable nets. We'll have some great times in ours. Come along."

She shrugged her shoulders, and in the gesture slipped into the garment.

"I'll go," she said, in a low voice. "But don't forget that I warned you!"

CHAPTER IV

A Pair of Gray Eyes

On their way to the restaurant Laurie had selected he chatted to his companion in his buoyant, irresponsible fashion, but he had put through the details of the episode with tact and delicacy. He knew that in front of a club two doors away from the studio building a short line of taxicabs was always waiting, with the vast patience of their kind. A gesture brought one of these to the door, and when it had squawked its way around the corner, the girl remained in its shelter until Laurie had briefly re-entered his own building and emerged again, wearing his coat and hat.

They drove to a quiet place where the food and service were excellent, while the prices were an effective barrier against a crowd. When he and his companion were seated on opposite sides of a table in an isolated corner, Laurie confided his order to the waiter, urged that willing individual to special haste, and smiled apologetically at the lady.

"I'm hungry," he said briskly. "I haven't had any breakfast this morning. Don't be surprised if I seem to absorb most of the nourishment in the place."

He studied her as he spoke. It was easy to do so, for she seemed almost to have forgotten him and her surroundings. She sat drooping forward a little in her pet attitude, with her elbows on the table, and her chin in her hand, staring through the window with the look he had seen in the mirror. The lethargy he dreaded again enveloped her like a garment.

His heart sank. Here was something more than the victim of a mad but temporary impulse. Here was a victim of a sick soul, or of a burden greater than she could bear, or perhaps of both. He decided that whatever her trouble might be, it was no new or passing thing. Every curve in her despondent figure, every line in her worn, lovely face, suggested a vast weariness of flesh and spirit.

In this moment of realization he almost forgot the girl's beauty, though, indeed, it was not easy to forget. It seemed enhanced rather than dimmed by the haze of melancholy that hung over it, and certainly there was nothing dim in the superb red-gold coloring of her hair. Her eyes seemed red-gold, too, for they were reddish-brown with flecks of yellow light in them, quite wonderful eyes. He told himself that he had never seen any just like them. Certainly he had rarely seen anything to equal the somber misery of their expression. There was a remoteness in them which repelled sympathy, and which was intensified by the haughty curve of the girl's short upper lip. She was proud, proud as the devil, Laurie told himself. Again, and very humbly, he wondered how he was to handle a situation and a personality so outside his own experience. In truth, he was afraid.

When the food came, her expression changed. She shot a quick look at him, a glance at once furtive and suspicious, which he saw but ignored. He had dismissed the waiter and was serving her himself. In the simple boyish friendliness of his manner she evidently found reassurance, for she suddenly sat up and began her breakfast.

Laurie exhaled the breath he had been holding. Up till the last moment he had feared that she might see through his subterfuge in taking her there, and even now refuse the food he offered. But if in that fleeting instant she felt doubt, it had died as it was born. She drank her coffee slowly and ate her eggs and toast as deliberately, but her characteristic air of intense preoccupation had departed. She looked at her companion as if she really saw him. Also, she apparently felt the stirring of some sense of obligation and need of response to this friendly stranger. She was answering him now, and once at least she almost smiled.

Watching the little twitch of her proud and perfect upper lip, Laurie felt his heart-beats quicken. She was a wonder, this girl; and with his delight in her beauty and her pride came another feeling, almost as new as his humility—an overwhelming sympathy for and a desire to help another.

These sentiments served as needed balance to his spirits, which, as always, mounted dangerously when he was interested. He held himself down with difficulty.

This was no time for the nonsense that he loved to talk. One doesn't rescue a lady from suicide and then try to divert her mind with innocent prattle. One gives her a decent time to pull herself together, and then, with tact and sympathy, one gets to the roots of her trouble, if one can, and helps to destroy them. Despite his limited experience with drama off the stage, Laurie knew this. Because he was very young and very much in earnest, and was talking to a young thing like himself, though in that hour she seemed so much older, he instinctively found the right way to approach the roots.

They had finished breakfast, and he had asked and received permission to smoke. When he had lighted his cigarette and exhaled his first satisfying puff of smoke, not in rings this time, he took the cigarette from his mouth, and with his eyes on its blazing end expressed his thought with stark simplicity.

Laurie is getting in deeper and deeper. Who is this girl? Is Mayo her real name? What is her trouble?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Return to Normalcy After the Big Fight

Little Elspeth and a friend were playing about the house and having seen the fire apparatus go down the street, thought it would be a lot of fun to play fire. So they shouted "Fire! Fire!" until Elspeth's mother came rushing in from the back yard crying, "Where? Where?"

Upon learning that it was all a joke, she sent Elspeth to her room, with the admonition never to play that game again, and went to her own room to take a nap.

The quiet was soon broken by a monotonous thump, thump, thump on the stairs and there was Elspeth, attired in her best coat and gloves, dragging her doll's trunk down to the front door.

"I is going to find a lady that wants a little girl," she said determinedly, but finally was persuaded that no one wants a little girl half as much as her own mother.

Cuddled at last in her mother's arms, Elspeth sighed contentedly and then said:

"Now zat you are my own good muvver an' the big fight is over, s'pose we go an' unpack."

No Innovations for Him

The vicar of an English parish had decided to use the revised version of the Bible instead of the authorized version in reading the lessons. At the end of the evening service on the first Sunday he had made the innovation, the vicar was waylaid by a member of the congregation. "Didn't care much for them there lessons you read tonight, sir," he exclaimed. "Oh," said the vicar, "I suppose you prefer the authorized version. Now, why do you?" "Well, sir," was the reply. "It's like this; the authorized version was good enough for St. Paul, so it ought to be good enough for us."

WORLD MADE KIN BY ITS KITCHENS

High and low, rich and poor, we reach common ground when we eat, and with this as a text, the New York Times remarks:

"The heart of the archeologist beats fast when announcements come of ancient wealth and splendor excavated from the dust of 4,000 years, but the rest of us pay a dispassionate homage to all that magnificence. We know that our bones will not rest in such priceless trappings as wrapped the boy king, and gemmy robes and gold-encrusted thrones and sarcophagi interest us only as strange wonders. But with the discovery of a kitchen in the temple of the moon goddess at Ur we feel the stirring of a warm, homely affection for those conquered people interrupted at their dinner by the arrival of the destroying king of Babylon.

"Simplified housekeeping and the delicatessen habit have done away with the large old-fashioned kitchen that used to be the center of the house, but it still holds an affectionate place in memory. Hence we feel bound to those ancient Chaldeans more by the discovery of their cooking department than by all the alabaster vases and glittering jeweled statues that ever came out of the tombs of the pharaohs."

Really Was Not Much Conductor Could Do

A Kentucky clubwoman, who is a frequent visitor in Indianapolis, tells the following story with some pride. One time when she was in a very small Kentucky town and was wishing to make an engagement to speak before a club in Lexington, Ky., she arrived at the station just in time to see her train pull out—the last train of the day. Acting quickly, she handed half a dollar to a little colored boy nearby, and told him to run after the train which had stopped farther up the track for water, and to tell the conductor to hold the train for the president. The darky ran down the track quick as a flash. When the clubwoman reached the train, and it dawned on the conductor that she was the person for whom the train had been held, he was enraged and for a minute almost forgot that he was in the presence of a lady. Purple with rage he blurted out "——it all. I was told that the President had missed the train." Calmly she answered, "Well, sir, am I not the president of the situation?"—Indianapolis News.

"Smokeless" Soft Coal

An invention is being tried out to make soft coal burn without emitting any considerable quantity of smoke. By first thoroughly wetting the coal, even of the cheapest grade, and then burning it under a forced draught, it is said much of the smoke is eliminated. The coal thus burned is said to be more efficient as the smoke represents a waste of carbon. More air helps combustion.

ARTISTIC TREASURE COMES TO AMERICA

Emigration of the Gutenberg Mazarin Bible, the first printed book, to America has made the Austrians realize how poor they are. For centuries the famous treasure was exhibited in a special case in the Melk Benedict cloister in the Wachau hills. War impoverished the monks so that it became necessary to part with the Bible. News of the sale was kept quiet for a time in order to avoid protest. Nevertheless the state obtained its sales tax percentage. The Melk "Stift" still has a valuable library, containing more than 7,000 volumes and manuscripts. One manuscript was written by St. Beda in 758. In the library are handwritten prayer books that once belonged to Emperor Albrecht II and Queen Beatrice of Hungary. Two other Gutenberg Bibles are in Austria, one in the national library, the other in the St. Paul cloister. The Gutenberg Bible was printed between 1450 and 1455. The capitals, border letters and ornamentations were illuminated by hand. Two hundred originals were made. Of these forty-one are known to exist today, but most of them are incomplete. Thirty of the originals were printed on parchment. Six are now in the United States.

Humorous Turn Given to American Greeting

The following story was told in a statement prepared by the Associated Press to be broadcast from various radio stations throughout the country: "When the late President Roosevelt was coming out of Africa, after his famous hunting trip, he was given a reception by the American colony at Khartum, where the Associated Press was represented by a newly engaged English newspaperman. He was instructed to report the reception. It seems that when Mr. Roosevelt arrived the Americans greeted him with the then popular American cry: 'What's the matter with Teddy? He's all right.' This was music to the ears of the colonel, but it was all Greek to the English correspondent. However, he determined to report the incident, but in good king's English. Accordingly he cabled the Associated Press as follows: 'As Colonel Roosevelt approached, the members of the American colony, as with one accord lifted their hats and exclaimed: "Is there anything wrong with Colonel Roosevelt? No, he is in good health."'"—Pathfinder Magazine.

Dull Time

With his advancement to a directorship, Jimmy Wilkinson of F. O. B. suddenly developed a taste for antiques and began ransacking the Hollywood prop shops for the usual line of junk. One day he took one of the children with him and put in several hours in musty basements, revelling in the cobweb-covered furniture that grows more and more expensive as the years roll by.

Finally the little one, who got no kick at all out of this form of shopping, tugged at Jimmy's coat sleeve and whispered:

"Daddy, please let's not buy any more of that elderly furniture."

Earliest Street Lighting

Street lighting began in 1414 when a city ordinance in London required every house and store owner on certain streets to hang out at least one horn-sided lantern at sunset. Paris, in 1558, led the world in municipal street lighting when it installed tall vases at important street corners in which pitch was burned each night with flickering, sooty results. These various crude outdoor lighting methods strove ineffectually for more than 450 years to achieve what the electric carbon and filament lamps have done in the last 40 years.

75 HANCOCK COUNTY RATS DIE

Pound and a Half of Calcium Cyanide Dust Responsible

Harbored beneath the board floor of an old and recently emptied corn crib on a Hancock County farm, 75 rats passed to their last reward last week, victims of a pound and a half of calcium cyanide dust which had been shot beneath the floor by the owner crib and Fred D. Butcher, extension entomologist of Iowa State College.

"It required just about an hour to shoot the dust under the crib floor, lift the boards and dig out the 75 rats," Mr. Butcher said. Altho the price of calcium cyanide varies some what in different drug stores, the pound and a half used in exterminating the Hancock county rats probably cost about one dollar.

Calcium cyanide isn't hard to use, Mr. Butcher says, tho it is necessary to have a dusting machine to apply the material. The only precaution that needs to be observed on the part of the operator is to avoid breathing much of the dust. If the work is done out of doors, the danger to man is slight.

THOMPSON ANNOUNCES A BIG VAUDEVILLE PROGRAM

Several Added Attractions At Idle Hour Next Week

At the show Wednesday night of this week, Manager Thompson made the announcement that on next Wednesday night, in addition to the big program of pictures, the Country Store feature and the comedy, he has booked in a vaudeville for that night, "The Dear Old Dixie Entertainers," a troupe of colored artists in song, dances and comedy. The entire program next Wednesday evening will take about three hours, so all should plan to be on hand at 7:30 o'clock for the opening of the first shw.

A large crowd turned out to see "The White Desert," Tuesday and Wednesday and the Country Store last night proved to be a big card Thompson again gave away a lot of groceries last night, and this is proving a real attraction.

For Saturday night he has a good western featuring Bob Custer The same program will be given Friday

Next Tuesday and Wednesday an Evelyn Brent picture, "The Queen of Hearts." And on Wednesday the Country Store and Vaudeville.

He has a big ten reel picture coming for Thanksgiving Day, "The Merry Widow."

Rake the rubbish off the asparagus bed, cut off the tops about two inches under the surface, apply well rotted manure, harrow it in, and next spring asparagus tips will appear on your table one to two weeks earlier than ever before.

NOVEMBER TERM OF COURT TO BEGIN MONDAY, NOV. 22

Jurors Will Not Report For Duty Until Tuesday, November 30

The November term of the Hancock county District Court will convene on Monday, November 22rd Judge M F Edwards has charge of this term of court.

The petit jury which was drawn and summoned to appear November 22nd. has been notified not to appear for duty until Tuesday, November 30th The change was made because of Thanksgiving coming during the week and which would interfere with court too much by calling the jury and then discharging them for Thanksgiving, and again calling them for another session, so Judge Edwards decided to call them for the following week.

However, the Grand Jury will meet on schedule time, Tuesday, the 13th.

The new cases filed for this term of court will be published in The Times next week.

FALL PLOWING SPEEDS UP THE SPRING GARDENS

Turning Soil Now May Save Two Weeks Next Spring

Plow your garden this fall and you will beat your "spring plowing" neighbor into the garden next spring by at least two weeks, asserts C. V. Holsinger, horticultural extension worker of Iowa State College.

Mr Holsinger is an earnest disciple of fall garden plowing, for he says that he has seen too many farmers and farmers' wives fretting at the edge of the garden plot in the spring with seed packets wishing that Old Sol would draw the excess moisture out of the mushy soil about three times as fast as he is capable of doing.

Clean up the trash, cover with a layer of manure, plow, and then leave the plot absolutely alone until next spring. The soil will be workable about two weeks earlier in the spring.

The man who houses his plow, binder and mower under the trees is usually the same as he who complains most about hard times.

Ordinance No. 41

An ORDINANCE GRANTING THE KOERNER TELEPHONE COMPANY, ITS SUCCESSORS AND ASSIGNS, THE RIGHT TO THE USE OF THE STREETS, ALLEYS, HIGHWAYS AND PUBLIC PLACES OF THE TOWN OF KLEMME, IOWA, FOR THE CONSTRUCTION, RECONSTRUCTION, MAINTAINANCE AND OPERATION OF A LOCAL AND LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE SYSTEM, FOR A PERIOD OF TWENTY FIVE YEARS.

BE IT ORDAINED, by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa;

Section 1. That there is hereby granted to the Koerner Telephone Company, its successors and assigns, the right to erect, construct, maintain, reconstruct, operate and use poles, wires, cables, and whatsoever other materials and fixtures necessary or convenient, upon, over and under the streets, alleys, highways and public places of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the construction, operation, maintainance and use of a Telephone system, both local and long distance, for a term of Twenty Five (25) Years under the provisions hereof.

Section 2. The lines of poles, wires, cables and other materials and appliances as heretofore installed and now used in connection with, and appurtenant to, said telephone system is hereby recognized and appoved, and additions thereto and betterments thereof shall be so placed and maintained as not to unreasonably interfere with public travel; it being understood that the street and alley committee of said Town shall supervise the placing of additional poles, wires and cables upon and under the streets and alleys of said Town, and all thereof shall be subject to statutory regulations now existing or hereafter legally enacted with reference thereto. Whenever an adequate deposit of money for the use and benefit of said Koerner Telephone Company shall have been made with the Mayor of said Town of Klemme, and upon twenty-four (24) hours' written notice by the Mayor thereof, the said Koerner Telephone Company shall remove such of its poles, wires, cables or other appliances as may be necessary for the passage of buildings beingmoved within the said town or for excavations being made under the surface of the streets of said town, at the expense of the party requesting the same, but said telephone company shall not be required to remove poles or wires nor cables unless the route selected by the applicant shall be the most practical and expedient in the judgment of the Mayor of said Town, all interests and rights being duly considered.

Section 3. All ordinances or parts of ordinances of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, in conflict herewith, are, upon the final adoption hereof, repealed.

Section 4. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the Klemme Times and its adoption by the Council of the Town of Klemme and by the qualified electors of the Town of Klemme at a special election of said Town to be held on the 4th day of November, A. D. 1926, and after the cost and expense of such submission and special election shall have been paid by the said Koerner Telephone Company.

Passed and adopted by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme and approved this 6th day of September. A. D., 1926.

F. GRUETZMACHER,
Mayor.

LATE PLANTING BOOSTS YIELD OF IOWA CORN

The weather played strange tricks this year at corn planting time. One farmer who is cooperating in the state corn yield contest by furnishing land for one of the tests planted his own corn about a week later than the contest corn, because he was unable to get at the planting earlier

A rain came immediately after he had planted his own field, while the ground was very dry when the contest corn was planted Now at husking time he finds that his own field is yielding 20 bushels to the acre more than the average of the contest corn.

The rain made the difference by starting the late planted corn off evenly and by making it a better stand, according to Joe L Robinson. Ames, who is in charge of the state yield contest.

WHEN Christopher Columbus was a boy, he and his playmates regarded men and women who had attained to two score years and ten as very old people indeed. For that was in the Fifteenth century when the average span was but little more than thirty-six years.

In the United States today the average life span is about fifty-six years. In 1910 it was about fifty-one, and in 1901 about forty-nine. Examination of tables giving the expectation of life in various countries of the world show similar increases in the life span, with the exception of India, where the expectation during the years 1881-1891 was about twenty-five years and for the period 1901-1911 was about twenty-two years.

With this exception the world seems to becoming a healthier place to live in. The limit set by the psalmist is three score years and ten, but today it seems no little feat at all to have arrived at your seventieth birthday.

The census of 1920 gave Uncle Sam 1,561 sons and 2,706 daughters at least one hundred years old. Some of these undoubtedly were much beyond the century mark, but the census makes no distinction between centenarians and supercentenarians. As far as the census is concerned, you are no worthier of note at one hundred ten or more than you are at one hundred, unless, of course, you are almost a Methuselah and can prove it.

Comparatively few of us study the census, however, and when we hear of the existence of a centenarian it is usually that he or she has just become one, has celebrated a still later anniversary or has died. Sometimes, observes J. B. Gilder in the New York Times, he is a person of more or less note like the late ex-Senator Cole of California, who died at one hundred two, or the chairman of the board of the United States Trust company, who on August 26 celebrated his one hundred fourth birthday.

Many of the oldest folks in this country were born abroad; a goodly number of the native-born elders are Indians or negroes, which suggests that a dark skin constitutes a protective coloring. A point to be noted about all of them is that the number of their descendants is not, as a rule, exactly proportioned to their age. Here, for example, is a pioneer of Marquette, Mich., leaving behind him, at one hundred two, a son and two daughters, while a Tonawanda (Pa.) woman, dying the next day at only ninety, is survived by children unto the third generation, and to the number of 114.

Notwithstanding the incontrovertible evidence for cases of extreme longevity, two English writers of note in the last century saw fit to question the possibility of human life extending appreciably beyond five score years. They had no other but a woman's reason. They thought it so because they thought it so.

The very oldest people—like the wickedest—are seldom to be found in our immediate neighborhood, or even in our own country. Usually they live very far away. Take Zorah Agrah, for instance, a Kurdish porter resident in Constantinople, we are told, for more than one hundred twenty years, whose claim to date from November 15, 1774, is said to be supported by a birth certificate and the testimony of a dozen old men that he was an old man when they were lads. Too poor to buy much meat, he has relied chiefly on dried legumes, bread, raisins, figs, honey, sugar and tea. Water he sips occasionally, but liquor and tobacco he has always abjured.

Still further off, in the village of Mochin, Persia, lives an old woman who was discovered not long ago by the first census of that country, taken for the benefit of the American administrator of the national purse. The Teheran correspondent of the London Daily Express reported in January that this woman was then one hundred forty-six, and that her son was one hundred seventeen. We are left in the dark as to how they achieved their burden of years.

Even in America, however, one can live to be fairly old, as was shown by Mrs. Keziah Elizabeth Kuffa, Pennsylvania colored woman, whose parents built a log cabin at Gettysburg long before Pickett's charge set the high-water mark of the Confederacy in that neighborhood. At her death last July, nonagenarians said she had been an old woman when they were young, and relatives and friends said the family Bible indicated that she was born in 1804.

Joseph Davis, who died in Milwaukee at one hundred twenty, was reported to be "one of the oldest men in the United States." He may well have been. Born a slave, he cooked meals for Confederate soldiers until, and perhaps after, Lincoln emancipated him and a few million others of his race. His oldest surviving son—turned ninety-five, and fifty-two years older than his youngest brother—has the father's birth certificate.

A native of Mount Vernon, Va., whose father is said to have been one of Washington's attendants, Mrs. Catherine Minor of Boston, claimed to be one hundred eighteen when she herself died. Kentucky's prize centenarian was Mrs. Celia Carter, who died near Flemingsburg last June, her age, according to the best records, being one hundred seventeen. Her faculties were "preserved" to an unusual degree. Four generations of her descendants survived her. When death transported Maria Tomoike from Sagualda Grande, Santa Clara, Cuba, she was found—though only two years younger than Mrs. Carter—"in full possession of her faculties."

Thomas Shannon, an Irish Land Leaguer, who had once helped to plow Parnell's land when his famous leader was in jail, died at Ashford, Wicklow, "at the reputed age of one hundred fifteen." Five weeks after celebrating her one hundred fourteenth birthday, Peshe Malke Urdang passed away at the Harlem Home of the Daughters of Israel where she had spent her last six years. Dressed to receive some sixty well-wishers on her last birthday, and propped up in bed, she was asked what she would like best as a birthday present. "A husband," she jested. She had had one—presumably smooth shaved, as she disliked whiskers.

Born in Ireland in 1812 and arriving in this country in 1863, Mrs. Rose Garvey, who died this year at Albion, Neb., was survived by four sons. One had married and left home. The other three—the oldest now eighty-one, and the youngest seventy—remained bachelors for her sake. They denied themselves more than wives, to please her—among these "sacrifices" being the radio, the telephone and the automobile—new-fangled contraptions for which their mother had no liking.

Nearly a year ago Meyer Lebowitz was carried by his grandchildren to the Rumanian synagogue in Rivington street, New York, to worship on his one hundred eleventh birthday. He had been a moderate smoker till long after he crossed the century stile. That he had lived to cross it at all he ascribed to having observed moderation in all things.

For Passach Yeservsky, who died at the Hebrew home in Baltimore, in April, at the age of one hundred eleven, the moderate claim was made that he was "perhaps the oldest man of his race in that city." Passach came from Suwalki, Poland, three years ago, to see three sons and a daughter already settled here, but declined to be a burden upon any of them. His wife—a spry old lady of one hundred nine—walked home from the funeral, disdaining several offers of a ride.

Born at Mastic, L. I., January 25, 1815, Martha Bradley, a full-blooded Indian woman, lived at one time in New York, but some twenty-six years ago moved to Asbury Park, N. J., where, after fifteen years' employment in domestic service, she became, at the age of one hundred, an inmate of Woodlawn farm, the Monmouth county almshouse. At her death, after her first illness, she lacked only a fortnight of being one hundred eleven. A lover of candy, she also liked "a wee bit of gin" now and then, and held prohibition to be "all wrong."

Dating from the first day of the year 1816, John Morron, born in the Province of Quebec, but for the past forty years a resident of Vermont, was still capable of a fair day's work at one hundred ten. A year earlier he had celebrated his birthday by cutting a cord of wood.

Some of the most famous headline names of today are those of men well above the Biblical three score years and ten. Following is a list as compiled by the World Almanac. The age at the last birthday is given and the list is dated as of October 1, 1925:

One hundred seven—Mrs. Sarah Bosworth Bradford of Eastford, Conn., real daughter of the Revolution.

One hundred three—John A. Stewart, banker, New York.

Ninety-six—John R. Voorhis, president of the board of elections, New York city.

Ninety-five—Ezra Meeker, Oregon pioneer.

Ninety-two—Prof. William F. Warren, former president of Boston university.

Ninety-one—Chauncey M. Depew, former United States senator and chairman of the board of the New York Central railroad. James Brown Hereshoff, yacht builder, inventor.

Ninety—Mrs. William H. Felton of Georgia, first woman to be appointed United States senator. George Ehret, brewer.

Eighty-nine—Joseph G. Cannon, former congressman from Illinois. Lyman J. Gage, former secretary of the treasury.

Eighty-eight—Washington A. Roebling, engineer, built the Brooklyn bridge. Marvin Hughitt, railroad executive.

Eighty-seven—Emile Loubet, president of France, 1899-1906. Henry A. Dupont, former United States senator. Edward P. Weston, long-distance walker.

Eight-six—John Davison Rockefeller, founder of the Standard Oil Co. William P. Clyde, steamship owner. Henry Phipps, philanthropist.

Eighty-five—Simeon E. Baldwin, jurist, former governor of Connecticut. George F. Baker, banker, New York. Thomas Hardy, English novelist. Henry Holt, New York publisher. Carlotta, former empress of Mexico. Gen. George W. Wingate, founder Public Schools Athletic league. Claud Monet, artist.

Eighty-four—Oliver Wendell Holmes, United States Supreme court justice. Georges Clemenceau, former premier of France.

Suffering From Nervous Prostration, Stomach Troub... Palpitating Heart, Rochester Man Recovers Lost Health. Thanks Tanlac

The remarkable experience of Peter T. Cummens, 624 E. Center Street, Rochester, Minnesota, is the experience of thousands of men and women who after years of suffering have found grateful relief and new strength in this wonderful tonic.

"For about 10 years I have been troubled a good deal with my stomach," says Mr. Cummens. "And last summer I had to be treated for nervous prostration. But instead of improving this fearful affliction seemed to be getting worse.

"When I forced myself to eat a little to keep body and soul together, dreadful pains from indigestion would torture me. My heart became affected and would palpitate whenever I exerted myself. It caused shortness of breath. I scarcely slept. I would only doze for a few minutes then my muscles would twitch and jerk and I would awaken with a start.

"After hearing so much about Tanlac I decided to try it. A fortunate day! For this wonderful tonic made me feel like a new man. I now enjoy my meals without ill after-effect. I

Had Stomach Trouble and Intestinal Poison Ten Yea...

Relieved of constipation, liver trouble by eating a simple food

THE simple ills of everyday life ... constipation ... indigestion ... a "run down" system, only too often lead to serious complaints. Don't neglect them. Heed the wonderful experience of this woman.

Mrs. O. K. Nelson, writing to a friend, says:

"I suffered with stomach trouble, constipation and intestinal poison for ten years. Had liver trouble in the worst form and I have taken all the different patent medicines and was treated by the best doctors in St. Louis. Had to give up all hope of ever being well. Was so prostrated from all my ailments I could not take the slightest nourishment.

"The only relief I could find was when I heard of C-Y Chocolate Yeast and it is wonderful. I am now free from suffering and feel like a new person. My strength is restored and I feel I have a new lease on life. Do not fail to use C-Y. Success to all who give it a trial."

Almost everyone today knows that doctors are prescribing yeast to correct constipation, to tone the system, to clear up boils, pimples and skin disorders, to promote digestion and put a keen edge on appetite.

Yet up to now, thousands "simply could not take yeast." The sour, "yeasty" taste kept them from this simple, mo... road to glowing health.

And in the Evening of Life

When age comes creeping on, with bowels relaxed, muscles weak, digestion poor and blood thinned, then is when constipation does its evil work in a night. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is so palatable, sets so well in the stomach, works so easily, so gently, so kindly with old folks as to accomplish its purpose without gripe, pain or other distress. For biliousness, sour stomach, coated tongue, headache, fevers, colds and constipation from infancy to old age Syrup Pepsin is recommended everywhere and sold by all druggists.

VOGUE FOR VELVET REIGNS; RICHLY FURRED CLOTH COAT

IT IS a velvet-inspired world in which milady finds herself this season. Velvet for frocks, velvet for wraps, velvet for hats and velvet even for shoes—thus has the enchantment of velvet completely captured the mode. And now that the woman of fashion is to be velvet enrobed, she is asked to take her choice between regal dress of velvet all-black which shall scintillate with rhinestone embellishment, or frocks whose color-glory declares that "beauty unadorned is adorned the most."

Color, ever of irresistible appeal, reaches a climax of loveliness in the supple-as-chiffon velvets, which are just now proving such a delight to the stylist. Simplicity is the keynote of the charming velvet dress in the picture. Ample width and irregular hemline is achieved through shirring at the side which is caught at the waist, giving a touch of blouseness. Nearly every other evening frock has a suggestion of pink in its effect. This particular gown is in a refined dull rose.

Leading in lustrous chiffon velvets are the fuchsia and red tones; especially is the fashionist exploiting the new eggplant color. Pinkish beige is another favorite hue and many young girls are choosing pale blue for their evening frocks of velvet. However, select any color and you will make no mistake for the new velvets present a galaxy of rainbow shades. A pleasing theme is the frock of one shade of velvet worn under an evening wrap of velvet in darker shade.

Clever manipulation of fabrics is the stylist's joy and pride in creating new modes, and especially in velvet is adroit handling of the material featured. The dainty supple lightweight character of modern velvet yields gracefully to generous shirring and the smartest gowns and wraps make profuse use of this treatment.

For the black velvet frock, yokes and sleeves, especially the latter of real lace or black chantilly, also gold lace are the latest style touch.

Outstanding style prestige is bespoken for the lavishly furred cloth coat. Not only the luxuriousness of the fur itself, but the novelty in its placement on the coat adds enthusiasm to the vogue.

Up-and-down the front fur trimmings characterize this season's modes, rather than the hem borderings which were so universal last winter. The new trend is expressed in huge collars which develop into revers which extend down each side of the front to the very hemline. The ultra-smart woolen coat in the picture, which is luxuriously furred in wolf, carries out the front-opening trimming in a conspicuously unique way, by extending the collar into revers which form a triangular section at each corner. The sleeve also emphasizes the tendency toward very deep fur cuff effects, reaching half way up the arm. The importance of fantastic fur cuffs on cloth coats is one of the really new features of the mode. In accord with fashion's command the shoes which are worn with this sumptuous coat together with the purse which this smartly attired woman is carrying, all harmonize.

Simplicity the Keynote of This Gown.

Most every sort of fur is used to trim the worsted coat. It is this extensive variety of furs together with the beauty of the woolens they trim which is competing with the all-fur coat for honors. New arrivals among smooth furs embellishing the cloth coats stress beige and white spotted calfskin, pony and unshaved lamb. Long-haired furs emphasize red fox, also wolf dyed to blend with the cloaking it trims. Quite a few coats show a lining of spotted leopard either real or simulating the genuine.

Contrasting the flair for showy colorful furs, is the vogue recently predicted for all-black fur on all-black cloth or velvet coats. Mole and seal are also counted among fashionable fur trims.

Bespeaks Stylo Distinction.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

ED. BUENTENBACH OPERATED ON MONDAY AT MERCY

Infected Portions Of Hand Removed In Successful Operation

Ed C Buentenbach, Klemme farmer, who was seriously injured in a corn picker a week ago Saturday when the husking rollers caught his hand, was operated on again Monday at the Mercy Hospital at Mason City Doctors and surgeons had made every effort to save the injured hand but Monday they found it advisable to amputate the right hand, with the exception of the thumb and upper part of the hand.

Ed's many friends here hope for his speedy recovery and that he will soon be able to come home

It was calcium cyanide dust which a few months ago was used to kill in one evening some 3,800 sparrows which were roosting in the vines on some of the buildings at Iowa State College.

NUTTY OUTLINES BUREAU PROGRAM

FOUR MAJOR PROJECTS WORKED OUT FOR YEAR'S PROGRAM

A Number Of New Projects Will Be Scheduled For Year 1927

L. T Nutty, of Britt, County Agent for Hancock County, in a special article to the newspapers of Hancock County has outlined the Farm Bureau program for the coming year Farm Bureau work in Hancock has become one of general interest and has proven very helpful to all who have taken part

One good feature of the Hancock Farm Bureau this paper has noticed in particular ist he interest promoted among the boys and girls of the county in club work of various kinds and this one movement alone has grown to such an extent that it has become one of the major programs the farm bureau in tais county

Besides the major projects as outlined, some valuable projects will be put on for 1927, acording to Mr Nutty The major projects will be: Junior Club Work, Home Furnishing for the Women, Marketing, and Corn Production.

Junior Club Work will be for the boys and girls of the county and the following clubs will be organized. Baby Beef, Market Pig, Dairy Heifer; and also the Home Furnishing Clubs for the girls It is planned to organize girls clubs in every township In case there is a demand for other clubs, assistance will be given in the organizing, provided enough interest is shown Demonstration and judging contests will be arranged and exhibits will be put on at the county and state fair All the clubs will be on a standard basis and under the direction of a county committee.

In the Home Furnishing Work, Cerro Gordo, Worth and Hancock counties will continue to co-operate in the employment of a pecialist This work will be conducted on the Training School basis as it has been in the past Five different subjects will be studied, as follows Commercial Floor Covering and Basket Weaving, Home Dyeing; Lamp Shades, Chair Covers, etc.; China Silverware, and Linen The specialist will also be used in the organization and direction of the Girls Home Furnishing Clubs during the summer months.

In the Marketing Work, account and business practices will be continued with the shipping associations and creameries Assistance will be given elevators and all other co-operative marketing organizations wherever possible A special effort will be made to strengthen co-operative marketing in the county.

The Farm Bureau Exchange will be continued whereby service can be given to those having articles for exchange.

In the Corn Production project, it is hoped to demonstrate the best known methods in corn production It does not mean the growing of more corn, but the more economic production of the corn we do grw.

A series of five meetings will be held as follows: Soil Fertility; Corn Testing and Corn Diseases; Insect and Rodent Control; Selection of Seed Corn and Seed Corn Storage; and Results.

These meetings will be made available to all parts of the county and will be put on in January, February. May, September and October.

Aside from the four major projects, there will be many minor project activities A few of which will be Swine Management; Meat Demonstrations; Cow Test Associations; Cream Scoring; Poultry Record Farms, Farm Accounting and many other projects.

SPENT MOST OF HIS LIFE HERE

MORT PALMBY, FORMER KLEMME MAN, BURIED FRIDAY

Funeral Was Attended By Klemme Relatives

This community was sadly shocked last week when the death of Mr. Mort Palmby, of Vernon Center, Minnesota, was announced.

Mr. Palmby was a former resident of Hancock County, and particularly the vicinity of Klemme, and he and his wife spent the greater part of their lives here and are well known to many in the community.

Mortlock Henry Palmby was born in England on April 9, 1861, and came to this country when a young man, twenty years of age, and first settled at Iowa Falls A few years later he was married to Josephine Yahnke and they moved to Hancock County and settled on a farm near Goodell. A few years later they purchased a farm 2¼ miles east of Klemme where Mr. and Mrs. Palmby spent the greater part of their married life During these years they made many life-long friends in the community.

In 1914 the family moved to Eagle Bend, Minn where they resided for several years when they moved to Garden City, Minn. At this latter place they lived only eight months when they purchased a home at Vernon Center, Minn., where they resided at the time of Mr Palmby's death.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs Palmby, three sons, Ernest, Edward and Henry, and one daughter Ellen (Mrs. J. Hawes) who died while they lived at Eagle Bend, also her husband died shortly after leaving three small children who were then cared for by their grandparents.

Mr Palmby died very suddenly November 10th, 1926, at the home of his son, Ernest. His death was caused by heart trouble and he had not been in the best of health for the past year, but his condition did not seem to be alarming as he was always able to be about his daily tasks and busy at something all the time On the day of his death he was helping his sons by driving a team on the wagon along with the corn picker all forenoon and had not complained and apparently was as well as usual. As he stepped out of the wagon he fell back dead and never spoke a word. His sudden death was a severe shock to his family and friends.

Besides his devoted wife, Mr. Palmby leaves three sons and twelve grand children, all of Vernon Center, as well as a large number of relatives elsewhere.

Mr. Palmby was a highly respected, honest man, a devoted husband and a kind, loving father, and above all he was a faithful Christian, always working for the good of his Master, his church and all mankind, serving all faithfully.

Funeral services were held Friday afternoon at the Methodist Church at Vernon Center and burial was made in the Vernon Center cemetery. A large number of relatives and friends gathered to pay their last respects to this honorable man.

Those from Klemme who attended the services were Mr and Mrs. Ben H Katter; C A. Larsen and daughter, La Vohn; Frank Pringnitz; and Mr and Mrs. R. W. Elder.

The Klemme relatives returned Saturday evening, with the exception of Mrs. Elder, who remained for a short visit with Grandma Elder.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Rainy weather seriously broke in on our last Sunday's services. A fine spirit prevailed nevertheless. Rev Quiriu gave a fine talk on hospital work, which was greatly enjoyed.

Owing to the smaller attendance our White Cross enrollment was postponed until next Sunday. Let all come prepared on the coming Sabbath.

Midweek services will be held at the parsonage on Thursday evening.

We are sorry to have the many sick in our community and hope for their speedy recovery.

GEORGE ALBERS HAD SERIOUS ACCIDENT TUESDAY

Finger Severed When Hand Caught In Car Engine Fan

Klemme farmers seem to be having more than their share of hard luck the past few weeks getting their fingers taken off in machinery.

Tuesday forenoon George Albers, Klemme farmer, was the victim of a painful accident when he had a finger severed in the swiftly revolving fan on his car engine, and two or three other fingers badly injured.

Mr. Albers was over on another piece of land which his boys are working a couple of miles from the home place, taking them their dinners While there he had some engine trouble and was making some adjustment on the fan belt on the engine when his glove caught in the swiftly revolving fan, severing one finger on his left hand, badly cutting another and in trying to free himself Mr Albers somehow got his right hand into the fan also with the result that the nail was sheared from the tips of two fingers.

Mr. Albers was brought to Klemme and the injuries given prompt attention.

It is reported that he is getting along well at this time and will not be laid up long.

CAMP FIRE GIRLS HELD MEETING AT HOME OF LEADER

Girls Memorize Many New Camp Fire Songs

On Monday evening, November 15 the Ta-Ta-Pochan Camp Fire Girls held their meeting at the home of the guardian. This meeting was called for the special purpose of memorizing the Camp Fire songs After singing the songs for several times, the Girls noticed their guardian had disappeared from the room Of course, the question was, where had she gone, but she soon reappeared carrying lunch plates. The Girls all smiled and said, "Oh, how nice, we're going to have something to eat." The Gaurdian said, "yes, but this is really a lunch with a meaning" The Girls started in guessing, one remarked it must be Marie's birthday, no it's Gracka's, but still there was a doubt. After all had been served Marie came into the room and turned out the lights and she placed a small plate on the center of the rug, with the tiniest cake and on the cake only one, just one, candle. The girls all cried gleefuly "Why it's the Camp's birthday!" After that the girls did much laughing and talking. They ate their lunch sitting Indian fashion on the rug around the lighted candle. After lunch, the tiny cake was cut and there was quite a question about who should have the largest piece, but the party ended happily so everything must have been O. K.

The Ta-Ta-Pochan Camp was organized a year ago with ten members, two of whom dropped their membership one having moved out of town, and the other not having been able to attend the meetings. During the year four new members were secured; Valeria Koerner, has the honor of securing all these new members For each new member she receives from the National Headquarters a Gold Membership Pin.

The Camp has planned to give a Thanksgiving Party to the Goodell Camp, a regular get-to-gether party.

The Girls of the Klemme Ta-Ta-Pochan Camp will be very glad to welcome any girl over 11 years of age into their Camp, promising that they'll be happy to be a member.—By a member.

FIRST BASKET BALL GAME FRIDAY NIGHT

KLEMME PLAYS OPENING GAME AT CRYSTAL LAKE

Fourteen Games Are On Schedule Of Klemme High School

The Klemme High School baskot ball squad will open its winter season tomorrow night with a game at Crystal Lake with that high school team.

Despite the fact that Klemme lost practically all of last year's team by graduation, the men on the quad this year are showing up good and three veterans with former experience will help to round out a good cage team.

Crystal Lake has a good line up this year and have some seasoned men in their line up which may give the locals a chance to show their stuff.

The basket ball schedule for the season follows:

Nov. 19. Crystal Lake there.
Nov. 24, Rowan here.
Dec. 3, Swaledale here.
Dec 10, Garner there.
Dec 17, Crystal Lake here.
Dec 22, Kanawha there.
Dec. 31, Garner here.
Jan 7, Hayfield there.
Jan 14, Renwick here.
Jan 21, Ventura here.
Jan 28, Swaledale there.
Feb 4, Renwick there.
Feb. 11, Hayfield here.
Feb 18, Ventura there.

This is the same number of games played last season previous to our county tournament. Our boys last year won 11 of the 14 games, or between 75 and 80 percent. We hope our fellows can equal or beat this record this season.

Other School Items

Our "Ko Ho" Society program on last Friday night was well attended and the "Vogads" expect to be ready with theirs on Nov. 29, Monday evening.

Mr Gary was threatened with the Flu on Monday but refused to give up and heard all ofh is classes agani on Tuesday. With two groups requiring his leadership in orchestra together with some private lessons on the instruments, together with his regular school work, he is a very busy man He also has pupils in Goodell whom he gives lessons on Saturday morning.

Mr. Hockey is also busy with two squads of basket ball boys. Several boys are taking advantage of his instruction in the game who were not doing so last year.

School will be closed two days next week as usual for Thanksgiving vacation. Most of the faculty will be away at this time.

Some of our H. S. boys will no doubt, be making merry in the corn fields

FARM BUREAU ORGANIZING A BABY BEEF CLUB

Enrolling Members Now And Buying Calves For Club

The Hancock County Farm Bureau is putting forth a special effort at this time to secure enrollments and buy calves for the Baby Beef Club. Ten members have already secured their calves and a number of others have enrolled and will buy their calves soon The club is open to any boy or girl in Hancock County between the ages of 10 and 18 years and their enrollment is encouraged. The more members that can be gotten, the better the show will be. A good grade steer calf will be used. Some are using pure breds, however, this is not absolutely necessary. Calves dropped between the first of March and the first of October are being used. Calves will be weighed December 1, when the feeding period starts. An accurate record will be kept of the feeds during the entire feeding period. The calves will be shown at the State Fair and also at the county fair. They will be shipped to market just after the Hancock County Fair.

Mrs. Frank Gruetzmacher has a beautiful chrysanthemum plant, in ful bloom, in the window of their shoe store, that is certainly one of the nicest plants we have ever seen.

Lesson for November 21

JOSHUA RENEWING THE COVENANT

LESSON TEXT—Josh. 24:1-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Choose you this day whom ye will serve;....but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

PRIMARY TOPIC — The Israelites Make a Promise.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Covenant at Shechem.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Taking a Stand for God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Value of Covenants.

I. Joshua Rehearsing the History of the Nation (vv. 1-13).

This was his farewell address, the last message to the people. He began with Abraham's breaking with his religion, homeland, relatives and friends, at the command of God, and traced their history in Egypt, their deliverance at the hands of Moses and Aaron through the wilderness journey, and showed God's providential dealing in the crossing of the Jordan at flood tide, and their marvelous blessings now in the land solely by the favor of God.

II. The People Elect the Lord as Their God (vv. 14-24).

Joshua knew that the people were liable to lapse into idolatry, therefore he reviewed before them the history of God's goodness to them, and appealed to their sober choice as to whether they were going to remain faithful to him.

1. He appealed to them for a rational consideration and judgment (v. 15).

He placed before them four candidates upon which they could vote according to their relative merits.

(1) The Lord.

(2) The gods worshiped by their ancestors in Chaldea.

(3) The Egyptian gods.

(4) The gods of the Amorites.

Having placed before them these candidates, he urged them to make a rational choice.

2. His own example in the matter (v. 15).

He followed his appeal with his own example. He told them that his mind was already made up. He associated his household with himself. He knew just where they would stand. His decision was not a hasty one. It had been talked over at home, therefore he voiced the united sentiment of his family.

3. The response of the people (vv. 16-18).

Joshua's earnest appeal, accompanied by his own example had its desired effect. When they calmly considered the claims of the Lord as against the other gods, they saw the overwhelming evidence in favor of the God of their fathers.

They assigned the following reasons for their choice:

(1) The Lord brought us out of Egypt (v. 17).

(2) He did great signs in our sight (v. 17).

(3) He preserved us in all the way we went (v. 17).

(4) He drove from before us all the people (v. 18).

It would have been very foolish, not to say criminal, after they had experienced all this at His hands to have turned Him down.

4. Joshua reminds them of who God is (v. 19).

Wishing them to think more seriously and deeply upon the matter, Joshua drew a somewhat dark picture of God's attributes which were most unattractive to them.

(1) He showed them that God is a Holy God.

(2) That He is a jealous God. He could not therefore tolerate a rival.

(3) That He will not forgive.

He did not mean by this that He was an unforgiving God, but that His nature was such that unless they followed Him fully, He would become the means of their destruction.

5. Joshua demands sincerity on their part (vv. 20-23).

He wished to have practical proof of their profession. He no doubt knew full well that some had idols yet in their possession.

6. The people's position (v. 24).

They cannot avoid their determination to serve God and obey His voice.

III. The People Enter Into a Solomn Covenant (vv. 25-28).

This is the clinching transaction of the meeting at Shechem. They entered into a formal covenant. Joshua wrote down their agreement in a book where it would remain a permanent witness against them. As a further help, he took a large stone and set it up as a witness. These would serve as barriers against their lapsing again into idolatry.

Lack of Faith

From lack of faith in Thy revelation of Thyself, from contempt of Thy promises, from readiness to think lightly of Thy holy commandments, and of that account of life which we all must render unto Thee, good Lord, deliver us!

God's Jewels

The saints are God's jewels, highly esteemed by and dear to Him; they are a royal diadem in His hand.—Beecher.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Coolidge Address in Kansas City Chief Event of Armistice Day.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FACING the east and standing in silence, all America paid tribute at 11 o'clock on Armistice day, to the memory of our World war dead—the 77,000 young men who gave up their lives in France or in the camps in this country. Eleven thousand posts of the American Legion participated in fitting ceremonies, and the American people generally joined in the solemn observation of the occasion. The remainder of the day was marked by celebrations patriotic and joyful.

Chief feature of the Armistice day doings was the dedication of the stately Liberty Memorial in Kansas City—chief because the speaker of the day there was President Coolidge. Five years before he was there, as vice president, to lay the cornerstone. Last week he returned, accompanied by Mrs. Coolidge, Everett Sanders, his secretary, and Secretary of War Dwight F. Davis, who, as the Missouri member of the cabinet, did the honors for his state at the exercises. The train arrived in Kansas City Thursday morning and after the dedication of the memorial the President and his party left in the afternoon for the return trip to Washington.

In the course of his address the President took occasion to discuss the matter of American entry into the World court, and he served notice on the other nations that he would not ask the senate to modify its reservations. To those who pretend to despise Americans as a nation of dollar chasers, newly rich and without refinement, he retorted that, even if this were true, there would be "more hope for the progress of true ideals in the modern world even from a nation newly rich than there is from a nation of chronically poor. Honest poverty is one thing, but lack of industry and character is quite another."

Mr. Coolidge asserted that as a nation we not only did not profit from the war, but we suffered immense losses. He spoke for adequate preparedness for the sake of protection without entering into competition with others in the maintenance of armed forces; and he reiterated his belief that wealth and all other material resources should be conscripted in time of war.

QUEEN MARIE of Rumania spent the week-end in Chicago, where she was fittingly entertained by both the city officials and society, and where there was the usual American exhibition of social pushing and of that inverted snobbery that advertises its disrespect for royalty and all that pertains to it. On the way east from the Pacific coast the squabbles among those who accompanied the queen continued, with the result that Lole Fuller, Samuel Hill and some others quit the party, leaving Col. J. H. Carroll, manager of the tour, and Maj. Stanley Washburn, the queen's personal aide, seemingly in supreme control. Marie took no sides in the controversies but insisted that there must be peace and harmony on the rest of the tour. It was announced that while the queen was resting in Washington for four days after the conclusion of the trip, Prince Nicolas and Princess Ileana would travel back to Chicago on a special train to witness the Army-Navy football game on November 27.

NOT the least interesting news of the week was the announcement that Princeton university had severed athletic relations with Harvard, thus breaking up the "Big Three" combination that has existed, with some interruptions, for many years. Princeton's board of athletic control decided unanimously that "it is at present impossible to expect in athletic competition with Harvard that spirit of cordial good will between the undergraduate bodies of the two universities which should characterize college sports." Harvard Lampoon has been making nasty attacks on Princeton, for which President Lowell of Harvard apologized to President Hibben of Princeton, and the Harvard Crimson aggravated the ill-feeling by its editorials. But the real reason for Princeton's action was the announcement of Harvard's proposed new policy in football matters, under which Harvard would have only one fixed game on its schedule each year—the contest with Yale. It would play Princeton some years, but not others, and Princeton resented this casual treatment. Princetonians have the satisfaction of having licked Harvard in the last game. Outside of Harvard men, Princeton will have the backing of the country generally in the controversy.

SUPPLEMENTING a statement from the White House, Secretary of the Treasury Mellon made an official announcement of the administration's plan for income tax reductions, showing it is not proposed to compute the flat percentage cut on 1926 tax payments on last year's incomes. As made known by Mr. Mellon, the program is to propose legislation authorizing a flat reduction amounting to probably 12½ per cent on individual and corporation income taxes to be reported in March, 1927, on 1926 earnings. The taxpayer will compute his tax at the rates provided by the present law. He then will be permitted to reduce his actual payment by the percentage agreed upon. If he pays his entire tax at the time of filing the return, he will deduct 12½ per cent from the total. If he pays in four installments, he will deduct 25 per cent from his March payment and also 25 per cent from his June payment. His September and December payments will not be subject to any cut.

The proposed 12½ per cent cut, it was estimated by Secretary Mellon, would mean a loss of approximately $250,000,000, all of which would be drawn from the prospective surplus of the fiscal year 1927, which ends on July 1, next.

VINCENT MASSEY has been appointed Canada's first minister to Washington by an order in council passed by the dominion cabinet. Mr. Massey is in England with Premier MacKenzie King attending the imperial conference. The question now naturally arises whether the United States shall appoint a minister to Ottawa. Some of the leading Canadian newspapers think no other course is open for Washington, and it is favored by some journals in states along the border. It may be the matter will be solved by the enlarging of the powers of the United States consul general in Ottawa.

ONCE more the United States protests to Mexico against the oil and land laws of that country. The latest in a long succession of notes on this subject was handed to the Mexican foreign office by Charge d'Affaires Schoenfeld, and again was stressed the necessity for fundamental modifications in these two laws to eliminate from them all possibility of their retroactive application in violation of agreements entered into between the two governments in 1923.

Late reports indicate that General Obregon is not having an easy time in carrying out his plan to destroy the Yaqui Indians as a people and scatter them through the country. The Yaquis are fighting with all their old-time desperation, have gathered strong forces and at last advices are threatening the towns of Mazatlan and Las Pastras, both of which have considerable American interests. The Cucupah Indians, who have been peaceful for years, are showing signs of going on the warpath with the Yaquis.

FORMER Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall and Edward L. Doheny, oil magnate, appeared before the District of Columbia Supreme court and pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiracy to defraud the government in the naval oil reserve leases. The trial was set for November 22 and counsel for the defendants said they will be ready to proceed with the case at that time. Both Fall and Doheny are named with E. L. Doheny, Jr., in another indictment which charges bribery in connection with young Doheny's delivery of $100,000 in "a black satchel" to Fall during the negotiations which resulted in the execution of the Elk Hills reserve leases.

AT THE bidding of Premier Mussolini, the Italian chamber of deputies expelled 120 members of the so-called Aventine opposition on the ground that they had absented themselves ever since the protest "strike" resulting from the murder of Matteotti, Socialist deputy. The ousted members lost their parliamentary immunity and some of them were arrested, but most of them had taken the precaution of leaving Rome.

The chamber also passed the law providing the death penalty for attempts on the life of Mussolini or the royal family. The duce took to himself another cabinet job—that of the minister of the interior—and issued orders for a systematic application of all laws for the protection of the regime and the preservation of public order. The premier has apologized amply to France for the attacks on French consulates, and it seems likely he also will be able to calm the indignation of the French brought on by the operations of Ricciotti Garibaldi as a Fascist agent in France. The Paris police are still trying to find out just what was Garibaldi's connection with the Catalan uprising which was nipped by the Perpignan arrests.

GREECE held its elections last week and the Republicans were victorious, winning about 65 per cent of the votes and 160 of the 280 seats in parliament. Premier Condylis and his government resigned and President Condouriotis called on Kafandaris to form a new cabinet. It was hoped that former Premier Venizelos would return and accept the ministry of foreign affairs.

WITH the simple declaration that light travels at the rate of 299,796 kilometers per second, made before the National Academy of Science in Philadelphia, Dr. Albert A. Michelson of the University of Chicago announced the practical completion of the research that has occupied most of his time for forty years. The old rate of light travel, as used in close scientific research and given in all the textbooks, had been established at 299,860 kilometers per second, or 64 kilometers more than that determined by Doctor Michelson. Astronomers and physicists will now have to overhaul and reshape their calculations. The Chicago scientist's latest results were worked out in California by flashing a beam of light from Mount Wilson to Mount San Antonio and back again, a distance of 44 miles. This work was carried on all summer.

HUNDREDS of natives were drowned and great property damage was done by a typhoon that swept over a section of the island of Luzon in the Philippines. Many villages were wiped out and the inhabitants blown into the sea to perish. It was estimated that the storm destroyed 5 per cent of the world's coconut crop.

The town of La Plata, Md., was struck by a tornado that wrecked a schoolhouse and some houses and killed about a score of persons, fourteen of whom were school children.

AMONG the deaths recorded during the week was that of James K. Hackett, one of America's best actors, in Paris. He had spent much of his time of late in France and was exceedingly popular in that country.

C. G. Sholes, who as a youth was Sherman's personal telegraph operator on the march to the sea, passed away in Chicago. Rev. D. D. Forsyth, secretary of the Methodist board of missions, died in a Chicago hospital.

FOLLOWING the example of the governments of Italy and Russia, Marshal Pilsudski, dictator of Poland, caused to be issued a decree which threatens with fines and prison sentences ranging from three days to three months whoever spreads wrong information about government action or government members or military movements. If reports are spread by the newspapers, they will be suppressed and the owners, as well as the men responsible for the news, will be fined or jailed. The important point is that the Polish government reserves unto itself the right to interpret this law as it pleases, therefore everybody in Poland is living in the uncertainty of the days of despotism.

The Borgias

THREE people sat in an upper room of a gorgeous Roman palace one night in 1492. The eldest of the trio was a singularly beautiful woman of perhaps forty. She was Rosa Vanozzi, the fairest Italian of her day. The room's two other occupants were her son and daughter, Cesare and Lucrezia Borgia. They were awaiting the signal that should announce the election of Rodrigo Borgia, father of Cesare and Lucrezia, as pope.

Italy, in the Fifteenth century, was split up into numerous petty kingdoms, principalities and duchies, more or less independent of one another, yet all subject to the spiritual authority of Rome. The pope, too, held vast possessions, territories and armed forces. There was little coalition throughout central and eastern Europe. Italy and Germany were full of minor states; Russia was slowly taking shape as an independent and united nation; the former Western empire was but a name, and the Eastern empire was a thing of the past. Spain's great powers, Castile and Aragon, were just uniting under Ferdinand and Isabella; France was recovering from the successive beatings England had given her, though much of her territory was still in British hands; Great Britain was not, as now, one nation, for wars with Scotland still recurred at intervals. Thus it may be seen that nearly all Europe was torn by dissensions and lack of coalition.

Yet a brighter day was dawning. In 1453 the Turks crushed the Eastern empire by capturing Constantinople, thus also ending the vague dream of re-establishing the old Western empire. This dream had impeded Italy's progress and obstructed Germany's consolidation. Now that it was a thing of the past, these and other nations were enabled to settle down and turn their thoughts to progress. Hence, during the latter half of the Fifteenth century, dawned the era known as the Renaissance (or rebirth).

It was the transition period between the Middle ages and modern times. And in this transition Rodrigo Borgia unconsciously played a strong part.

Borgia was elected pope, taking the title Alexander VI, in 1492 (the year Columbus discovered America). Like Richard III and many another scoundrel, he made a just and wise temporal ruler.

He was a man of most abandoned personal character. Through the favor of his uncle, Pope Calixtus III, he had in early life risen high in the church. Now, on mounting the papal chair, one of his first acts was to make his eighteen-year-old son, Cesare, a cardinal. He also married his daughter, Lucrezia, to the son of a neighboring prince. Soon after she saw a chance to make a better marriage, so poisoned her husband, as she is also credited with poisoning one or more of his successors. Giovanni, the new pope's eldest son, was created a duke. Cesare Borgia, preferring that rank to a cardinalship, murdered Giovanni and left the church for a military career. Within a very few years, by battle, diplomacy and cold-blooded murder, Cesare had conquered for himself a large part of Italy, and undoubtedly planned to make himself temporal ruler (as his father was the spiritual lord) of the entire nation. His cruelties, crimes and excesses set Italy aghast, but his father, who was completely under the young man's influence, refused to punish or in any way check him.

Charles VIII, king of France, cast envying eyes on the rich little kingdom of Naples and led an army across the Alps to annex it to his own dominions. Pope Alexander barred his way, and at last, by bribes, diplomacy and open force (combined with a fatal contagion that ravaged the French army), drove him back.

By 1503 the plans of Pope Alexander and Cesare Borgia were so far complete that the latter was about to be crowned king of Romagna, as an important step in his plan of ruling Italy, when fate intervened in a most dramatic fashion. Several cardinals who had offended the pope were invited by him to supper. Poisoned wine flasks were prepared for them by Alexander. Through a servant's mistake one of the poisoned flagons was set before the pope and Cesare. The former was killed and the latter made dangerously ill by the noxious draught. Cesare Borgia afterwards told Niccolo Macchiavelli, the wily Florentine diplomat and writer:

"I had prepared to meet every emergency except the simultaneous disabling of my father and myself."

As it was, Cesare's enemies gained instant control of the situation. The ambitious youth was overthrown and his golden plans crumbled to dust. A few years later he died, fighting, in exile. The Borgian dream of spiritual and temporal empire was forever at an end.

Through Alexander's degradation of the holy papal office a revulsion of feeling set in. Temporal power, abused, reacted in the throwing off of the fetters that had for centuries helped to hold back the nations from progress. The way was paved for a return to the original sacred purpose of the papacy. The political wrongs of the system, reaching their acme under Borgia, died down, leaving room for betterment of both church and state.

The Girl in the Mirror

By ELIZABETH JORDAN

(© by The Century Company.)
WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan, leaving Laurie on his own Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late, and he retorts that he seeks adventure From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo. Again in the mirror's reflection he sees her with a revolver and fears she means to commit suicide He rushes into her apartment, and, winning her confidence, induces her to lunch with him, though she warns him of danger

"When we were over in your studio," he said, "I admitted that twice in my life I had tried to—make away with myself. Only two other persons in the world know that, but I'd like to tell you about it, if you don't mind."

She looked at him. There were strange things in the look things that thrilled him, and other things he subconsciously resented, without understanding why. When she spoke there was a more personal note in her voice than it had yet held

"You?" she asked; and she added almost lightly, "That seems absurd"

"I know"

Laurie spoke with the new humility he had found only today.

"You think that because I'm so young I couldn't have been desperate enough for that. But—you're young, too."

He was looking straight at her as he spoke. Her eyes, a little hard and challenging, then dropped

"That's different," she muttered.

He nodded.

"I know the causes were different enough," he agreed "But the feeling back of them, that pushes one up against such a proposition, must be pretty much the same sort of thing. Anyway, it makes me understand; and I consider that it gives me a claim on you, and the privilege of trying to help you."

Her eyes were still cast down, and suddenly she flushed, a strange, dark flush that looked out of place on the pure whiteness of her skin. She had the exaggerated but wholesome pallor of skin that often goes with reddish hair and red-brown eyes. It does not lend itself becomingly to flushes, and this deep flush lingered, an unwelcome visitor, throughout her muttered, almost ungracious words.

"Oh, please don't talk about it," she said, brusquely. "It's no use. I know you mean to be kind, but you can't do anything."

"Oh, but that's just where you're wrong" Laurie spoke with a cheerful assurance he did not feel. "If I hadn't been there myself, I'd talk all sorts of twaddle to you, and do more harm than good; and I'd probably let you go on thinking you were facing a trouble that no one could help. Instead of that, you and I are going to hold your bugaboo up to the light, and see just what it is and how small it is. And then—" he smiled at her—"we're going to get rid of it together"

She echoed his words, vaguely, as if not knowing quite what to say.

"Get rid of it?"

"Yes. Tell me what it is, and I'll show you how it can be downed."

She pushed back her chair, as if anxious to put a greater distance between them.

"No," she exclaimed, nervously, "it's impossible; I can't talk about it." Then, in an obvious effort to side-track the issue, "You said you wanted to tell me about your—experience."

"I do, but it isn't a nice story. Fortunately, it won't take long." He spoke reluctantly. It was not easy to hook two such memories out of the darkest pool of his life and hold them up to a stranger.

"Oh, I was a young idiot," he rushed on, "and I suppose I hadn't the proper start-off. At least I like to think there's some excuse for me. My father and mother died when I was in knickerbockers, and I grew up doing very much as I pleased. I—made a bad job of it. Before I was twenty-one I was expelled from college and I had worked up a pretty black reputation. Then I gambled and lost a lot of money I didn't have, and it began to look as if about the only safe place for me was the family vault.

"I made two efforts to get there. The first time a wise old doctor stopped me and never told any one about it. The second time one of my chums took a hand in the game. I don't know why they did it. I don't suppose either my pal of the doctor thought I was worth saving. But they talked to me like Dutch uncles, and my chum kept at it till I gave him my word that I'd never attempt anything of the sort again."

"You were just an unhappy boy," she said, as if thinking aloud, "with all life before you and many friends to back you up."

"And you," he suggested, "are just an unhappy girl with all life before you. I don't know anything about your friends, but I'll wager you've got a lot of them."

She shook her head.

"Not one," she said, slowly. "I mean not one I dare to call on, now"

"I like that! You've got me to call on, right here"

This time she really smiled at him. It was a pathetic little smile, but both lips and eyes took part in it He waited, but she said no more. He began to fear that his confidence had been given to no purpose. Evidently she had no intention of making a confession in return He resumed his attack from a new angle.

"You've been disappointed in something or some one," he said. "Oh," as she made a gesture, "don't think I'm belittling it! I know it was something big. But the finish you chose wasn't meant to be, or it would have come off. You see that don't you? The very sun in its course took pains to show you to me in time to stop it. That means something, Miss Mayo."

She seemed slightly startled

"It is Miss Mayo, isn't it? That's the name the elevator boy gave me, yesterday."

"It will do." She spoke absently, already on the trail of another thought. Suddenly she caught it.

"Then you brought the basket, or sent it?" she cried. "It was you! How dared you'"

She had half risen from her chair. Bending across the table, he gently pushed her back into it.

"Sit down," he said, imperturbably.

She hesitated, and he repeated the command, this time almost curtly. Under the new tone she obeyed

"I'm going to tell you something," he went on. "I've exhausted my slender resources of experience and tact. I don't know what anyone else would do in this situation; but I do know what I'm going to do myself. And, what is a lot more important, I know what you're going to do."

She laughed, and he winced at the sound.

"That's easy," she said. "I'm going to finish the act you interrupted."

"Oh, no, you're not!"

Her lips set.

"Do you imagine you can prevent me?"

"I know I can."

His quiet assurance impressed her.

"How?" she asked, half mockingly.

"Very easily. I can take you from this restaurant to the nearest police station, and have you locked up for attempted suicide. You know, it's a crime here."

The word they had both avoided was out at last. Although he had spoken it very softly, its echoes seemed to fill the big room She shrank back and stared at him, her hands clutching the sides of her chair.

"You wouldn't dare!"

"Wouldn't I? I'll do it in exactly fifteen minutes, unless you give me your word that you will never make another attempt of the kind." He took his watch out of his pocket and laid it on the table between them. "It's exactly quarter past twelve," he said. "At half past—"

"Oh!—and I thought you were kind!"

There was horror in the brown eyes now and an antagonism that hurt him

"Would it be kinder to let you go back to that studio and—"

"How dare you interfere in my affairs! Who gave you the right?"

"Fate gave me the right. I'm its chosen specialist on the job, and you may take my word for it, my dear girl, the job's going to be done, and done up brown."

He lit a fresh cigarette.

"It will be mighty unpleasant for you," he went on, thoughtfully. "There's the publicity, you know. Of course, all the newspapers will have your pictures—"

"Oh!"

"And a lot of romantic stories—"

"Oh—you—you—"

"But of course you can avoid all that," he reminded her, "by giving me your promise."

She choked back her rising fury, and made an obvious effort at self-control.

"If I agree to these terms of yours," she asked, between her teeth, "may I be sure that you will leave me in peace and that I shall not see you again?"

He looked at her reproachfully.

"Dear me, no! Why, you'll have to see me every day. I've got to look after you for a while." At her expression his tone changed. "You see," he said, with smiling seriousness, "you have shown that just for the present you can't be trusted to guide your own actions. So I'm going to 'stick around,' and guide them for a few days, until I am sure you are yourself again!"

"This—" again she choked on the words—"this is intolerable!"

"Oh, I don't think so. You can see for yourself that I mean well, and that I'm going to be a harmless sort of watchdog. Also, you can depend on me to go off duty as soon as it's safe. But for the present you're going to have a guardian; and it's up to you to decide whether that guardian shall be Laurence Devon, very much at your service, or the police force of the city of New York."

She had her chin in her hands now, in her characteristic pose, and was regarding him without resentment. When she finally spoke, it was without resentment, too, but coldly, as one states an unpalatable fact.

"You," she said, "are a fool."

Laurie flushed, then smiled.

"That is not a new theory," he admitted.

"Two hours ago," she said, "I warned you that it would be dangerous for you to interfere in my affairs. Did I not?"

"You did."

"I warn you again. It may be a matter of life or death. Put your watch in your pocket, pay your bill, and take me home. Then go away and forget me."

Laurie glanced at the watch.

"We have used up eight minutes since I gave you your choice," he reminded her.

"You are like a child," she muttered, "spinning his top over a powder magazine."

Laurie frowned a little.

"Too melodramatic," he murmured.

"I tell you," she said fiercely, "you are acting like a fool! If you interfere with me you will be drawn into all sorts of trouble, perhaps into tragedy, perhaps even into disgrace."

"You're forgetting the net," he reminded her, "the nice net you mentioned this morning, with room for two. Also—" again he looked at the watch—"you're overlooking the value of time. See how fast these little hands are moving. The nearest police station is only two blocks away. Unless you give me that promise, you will be in it in—" he made a calculation—"in just about four minutes."

"I Warn You Again. It May Be a Matter of Life or Death."

She seemed to come to a decision.

"Listen to me," she said, rapidly. "I cannot be frank with you—"

"I've noticed that," Laurie interpolated, "with regret."

She ignored the interruption.

"But I can tell you this much. I am not alone in my trouble. Others are involved. They are—desperate. It is because of them that I—you understand?"

Laurie shook his head. He did not understand at all; but vague and unpleasant stories about espionage and foreign spies suddenly filtered through his mind.

"It sounds an awful mess," he said frankly. "If it's got anything to do with German propaganda—"

She interrupted with a gesture of impatience.

"No, no!" she cried. "I am not a German or a propagandist, or a pacifist or a spy. That much, at least, I can tell you."

"Then that's all right!" Laurie glanced at his watch again. "If you had been a German spy," he added, "with a little round knob of hair on the back of your head and bombs in every pocket, I couldn't have had much to do with you, I really couldn't. But as you and your companions are not involved in that kind of thing, I am forced to remind you that you'll be headed toward the station in just one minute."

"I hate you!" she said between her teeth.

He shook his head at her. "Oh, no, you don't!" he said kindly. "But I see plainly that you're a self-willed young person. Association with me, and the study of my poise, will do a lot for you. By the way, you have only thirty seconds left."

"Do you want to be killed?"

She hissed the words at him.

"Good gracious, no!" Laurie spoke absently, his eyes on the watch. "Twenty seconds," he ended.

"Do you want to be maimed or crippled, or—or kidnaped?"

He looked up in surprise.

"I don't know why you imagine I have such lurid taste," he said, discontentedly. "Of course I don't want any of those things. My nature is a quiet one, and already I'm dreading the excitement of taking you to the station. But now I must ask you to put on your gloves and button up your coat for our little journey."

"The journey you take with me," she said, with deep meaning, "may be a long and hard one."

He stood up.

"I wouldn't miss it for the world," he told her. "But we'll have to postpone it. Our journey to the station comes first."

She sat still, looking at him.

"I know your type now," she said suddenly. "You live in your little groove, and you think that nothing happens in the world except what you see under your nose."

"Something awfully unpleasant is going to happen under my nose right now," announced her companion, disconsolately. "Come along, please. It's time to start."

She stood up, faced him for a second, and then dropped back into her chair with a gesture of finality. Her expression had changed back to the lethargy of her first moments in the restaurant.

"Very well," she said. "Have it your way." She added significantly, "This may be the last time you have your way about anything!"

"You have a depressing outlook," grumbled Laurie, contentedly sitting down again. "It isn't playing the game to spoil my triumph with such predictions as that, especially as I'm going to have my way about a lot of things right now. I have your word," he added.

"Yes."

"Good! Now I'll give you my program. First, of all, I'm going to be a brother to you; and I don't think," he ended thoughtfully, "that I've ever offered to be a brother to any girl before."

"You're a nice boy," she said abruptly.

He smiled at her.

"A nice boy, though a fool. I hoped you would notice that. You'll be dazzled by my virtues before you're through with me." He went on conversationally: "The reason I've never offered to be a brother to any girl before is that I've got a perfectly good sister of my own. Her one fault is that she's always bossed me. I warn you from the start of our relations that I'm going to be the boss. It will be the first time I've ever bossed anyone, and I'm looking forward to it a lot."

The faintest suggestion of a smile touched her short upper lip. Above it, her red-brown eyes had softened again. She drew a deep breath.

"It's strange," she said. "You've let me in for all sorts of things you don't realize. And yet, somehow, I feel, for the time at least, as if I had been lying under the weight of the world and some one had lifted the wretched thing off me."

"Can't you, by a supreme effort of the imagination, fancy that I lifted it off?" suggested Laurie, mildly.

This time she really smiled.

"I can," she conceded. "And without any effort at all," she added somberly, "I can fancy us both under it again."

He shook his head.

A new character enters this mysterious drama. What does the girl fear? When will it strike?

Kruger's Idea Was to Make Camp on Ocean

The sight of the trackless ocean and a ship punching the waves, always brings back to this writer the authentic story of Paul Kruger, the president of the Transvaal republic, and his attempt to teach a group of Hottentot children the story of America's discovery, Pierre Van Passen writes, in the Atlanta Constitution. His representation of a ship conjured up a mental picture of a floating covered wagon. Oom Paul's imagination may have been magnificent, but it failed him miserably on the occasion when he was traveling from Capetown to Southampton in the pathetic mission of seeking aid for his country at the chancelleries of Europe. When night descended Oom Paul, who in his youth had slain an African lion with his bare hands, became nervous and agitated. Finally he could hold out no longer. Briskly he climbed the ladder to the captain's bridge. The officer saluted. "Tell me," said the Boer president, "where do you plan to unhitch tonight. It's getting dark, you know, and I think we had better make camp." When reassured by the skipper he went back to his cabin, read the story of St. Paul's shipwreck, drank a stein of beer and fell asleep.

Hoists Lift Stone Horses

With modern hoisting equipment ponderous steel beams, heavy safes and other large objects are raised with comparative ease, but in placing the huge stone horses on the palace of justice in Rome several unusual difficulties were encountered, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. To protect the sculptures from damage, chains were tied about the horses' feet so that the statues could be swung away from the walls and prevent damage. The irregular shape of the load made it hard to balance, and the placing had to be done around and through a network of specially designed scaffolding.

WORLD'S FEMALES IN THE MAJORITY

There are many millions of persons on earth who are unknown to the census taker and so there are no reliable figures of world wide scope concerning the division of population between the two sexes. In most of the countries for which there are figures, however, females have a slight majority. The greater occupational hazards which males face in war industry and commerce are chiefly responsible for this condition because among almost all races there are more males than females. In the United States census bureau figures show, there were 1,036 male births to every 1,000 female births registered in 1922. The United States is one country that maintains a male majority in its total population. In 1920 there were 54,900,131 males and 51,810,189 females. Germany on the other hand, at its 1919 census had 31,356,263 females and 28,196,119 males.

Independent Young Woman

Mlle. Eve Curie on being asked what her famous mother, Mme. Pierre Curie thought of her daughter's abandonment of science for music replied: "My mother's heart is with me in the career I have chosen for myself; she hopes I will be judged by my efforts alone, and not because I am her daughter."

Turks Change Time System

In Turkey another important step has been taken to break off from the old Ottoman traditions. Beginning with 1926 the European system of calculating time from the birth of Christ rather than from the date of Mohammed's flight from Mecca in 622 A. D., took effect.

Use of Telephone Grows

The United States, with a population of 114,000,000, now uses the telephone 63,000,000 times every day. It is interesting to note that in 1900 but 7,000,000 conversations daily were tabulated, while today nine times this number of telephone conversations are recorded.

SPLENDID JEWELS IN ROYAL REGALIA

These are the principal English crown jewels: King Edward's crown was made for the coronation of Charles II in 1662 by Sir Robert Vyner. The imperial state crown was made for Queen Victoria in 1838 by Rundell and Bridge. The imperial crown of India was made by Garrard for the coronation of King George V as emperor of India at Delhi in 1912. The queen's ivory rod, the crown of Queen Mary, the diadem of Queen Mary of Modena, the queen's scepter with the cross were all made for Mary of Modena, the consort of James I, in 1685. The state crown of Mary was made for the coronation of Queen Mary in 1911. The king's royal scepter and the king's scepter, with the dove, were made for Charles II in 1660. The queen's scepter, with the dove, was made for Mary II in 1689. The king's orb was made for Charles I in 1662. The queen's orb was made during the reign of William and Mary. The ampulla was made for the coronation of Henry IV in 1899. The spoon is attributed to the Twelfth or Thirteenth century. The sword of state was made for George IV. The spurs and Queen Elizabeth's salt cellar were made for Charles II. The first record of the bracelets was found during the time of Mary of Modena.

Real Attraction

We were talking with a friend who has just come back from a trip across the pond. (Note: One goes "across to Europe," but one returns from "across the pond.") He had a wonderful time, of course, but what do you suppose impressed him most? St. Peter's in Rome, or St. Mark's in Venice? Monte Carlo or Versailles? Notre Dame, Pompeii or the quaint streets of London? Wrong. It was a little brunette from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, he met in Naples.—Ottawa Herald.

Passed Wrong Refreshments

A high-powered salesman was explaining to Frank Wilson how he figured out prospects. "By taking one look at a man I can size him up," he said. He went on to explain that he carried two kinds of cigars—stogies and two-for-a-quarter. While he was talking he handed Frank an Old Virginia cheroot. Then he was told a few things.—Capper's Weekly.

Fitting Place

After one of the sessions held by the senate to consider the League of Nations and the World court, Senator Edge of New Jersey said:

"Gentlemen, before we adjourn, I move that our next conference be held on a merry-go-round." And as they gazed at him in astonishment, he added:

"We never get anywhere."

French farmers succeeded this year in raising enough wheat to meet the whole national demand, although the area cultivated was smaller than ever before. The wheat harvest yielded 180,000,000 bushels.

ED. WEISBROD HURT IN CORN PICKER

FENTON MAN LOST THREE FINGERS IN HUSKING ROLLERS

Had Operated Corn Picker Fourteen Years Without Accident

Ed. Weisbrod, Fenton, Iowa, farmer, well known in Klemme and a brother-in-law of Mrs Edwin Josten and the Schlei brothers living near Klemme, had the misfortune to get his hands caught in the husking rollers of his corn picker last week on Tuesday.

Mr. Weisbrod had on two-thumb mittens the day of his accident. He reached over to clean some stalks out of the husking rollers when the extra thumb on his mitten caught in the machine and dragged his hand into the husker. He was taken to the hospital at Fort Dodge and the surgeons made an effort to save his fingers but amputation was resorted to Sunday and three fingers on his right hand were taken off, leaving his thumb and index finger which were not injured.

Klemme relatives of the injured man report he is recovering nicely at the Fort Dodge hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Weisbrod have three children, two girls and a boy, the latter being old enough to assist about the farm during his father's absense.

Mr. Weisbrod has owned and operated a corn picking machine for fourteen years and never before had even a slight accident.

Buster Jorgenson was six years old Wednesday, November 17th. He had a 'stag" party and dinner that evening to which Dorance Day, Carlyle and William Gauger and Byrnes Missman were invited to help eat chicken, birthday cake and brick ice cream. Buster received some fine gifts from his friends. All say a big time was enjoyed.

A baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Christians Sunday morning. Grandpa Peter Merkel was in town Monday and looked up the Editor and the Times Office has been blue with smoke ever since. Pete explained all the good qualities of his newest grandchild and says he is a fine specimen.

Ing. Lauritsen and Soren Jensen left Wednesday via Waterloo, Dubuque, Freeport, Ill., bound for Sheboygan, Wisconsin, where they will seek carpenter work for the winter. If they find everything alright Mr. Lauritsen will return to Klemme in a few days to get his wife and they will spend the winter in Wisconsin.

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Waterman, M. F. Penrod, E. G. Gary, and the Misses Marie Gauger and Pauline Stoner drove to Mason City Saturday evening to take in the opera which was being put on at the Mason City high school. They report the entertainment was very good.

Dr. Anderson and Miss Geneive Schuldt visited with Ed. Buentenbach at the hospital at Mason City last Friday.

WEDNESDAY NIGHT PROGRAM AT IDLE HOUR BIG SHOW

Donald Gibbs Got The Free Sack Of Omar Flour

Wednesday night was a big night at the Idle Hour theatre when Mr Thompson put on a triple sized program: the regular run of pictures, a troupe of colored vaudeville artists, and the country store feature. Every part of the program was fine.

At the country store feature, the groceries were given away free as follows: Elmer Ludeke received a half gallon of syrup; Harvey Harberts, 1 bar Baker's Chocolate; Raymond Keeper, 1 quart cranberries; Mrs Louie Knoke, 5 loaves of bread; Keeper girl, Seeded Raisins; Otto Pringnitz, 1 pound coffee; Mrs. Len Sampson, Soup, meat, onions, cabbage, potatoes, pumpkin; Will Bock, 25 cents worth of bananas; Miss Stoner, 3 boxes macaroni; Wilbur Heifner, variety of pepper, salt, sardines, etc.; Keeper boy, box crackers; Orville Bridges, peanut butter; Bob Roths, vinegar; and Donald Gibbs a sack of Omar flour.

The country store is a feature on every Wednesday night.

REFORMED BIBLE CLASS HAS SURPRISE ON MEMBER

Class Celebrated Miss Edith Haupt's Birthday Tuesday Evening

The Young People's Bible Class enjoyed a pleasant surprise on Tuesday evening in honor of Miss Edith Haupt, whose birthday occured on that date.

The party of about twenty young people gathered at the home of Miss Haupt immediately after the Bible Class study period.

The evening was spent by playing various games which were enjoyed by all those present.

Miss Haupt was presented with various useful gifts and at a late hour a delicious lunch was served, after which everyone departed, wishing her many more happy birthdays.

Mrs. Wil Lemke entertained her Sunday School Class of the Liberty church at a party last Thursday evening which was attended by over twenty members of the Young People's class. This was the first of a series of parties the class expects to hold during the winter. After enjoying a social good time the hostess served delightful refreshments.

We were "nosing around" over at H. Lau Sons place the other day and Wes was making some tests with loud speakers of various kind. He showed us how the Fada cone-type speaker would bring in the deep bass tones and the vibrations of the drums, as well as the high pitched notes of a whistler. We were quite surprised with the results as we had never heard the equal of it before.

Sharpers, Crooks and Swindlers

GETTING something for nothing is the same old popular delusion today that it has ever been. And as long as there are people who believe in this ancient formula there will be those other individuals, just a little bit slicker and a trifle more sophisticated, who will come forward with schemes and plans founded on this unsound theory.

The gold brick man and the pea and shell expert have forsaken these once productive devices for a much more modern and scientific line of shady endeavor. Your up-to-date confidence man now goes in for "free lots" and similar schemes which apparently involve stable finance in the wake of investments involving real estate.

Posing as the representative of an eastern mortgage and security house, a confidence man of the new school has been swindling Montana investors with a "new plan of real estate financing," which, as a fraud, surpasses "free lot" schemes of the kind occasionally employed by crooked real estate developers. This Montana mountebank represents the new type of confidence man, he who has given up the wire-tapping and gold-brick game of his forebears and, adopting the methods of bucket-shop operators, appears to be a person skilled in matters of finance, especially as it relates to real estate operations.

This western harvester of "easy money" would approach well-known and active realty operators and tell them they had been especially "selected," because they owned property in the city of their residence, were under fifty years of age, insurable and prominent in their community, for "membership" in a new real estate financing company. This membership would make the person "selected" eligible to life insurance on a single premium basis with a loan feature on a fully paid policy in sums of not less than $40,000 and not more than $80,000.

Ah, Yes, the Advance Fee.

The swindler represented that the policies were issued by two well-known insurance companies, each company writing a joint policy and underwriting half the amount. The policy written in the name of the new "member" was to be assigned to the "mortgage and security company" which the schemer purported to represent. In return the "member" was to receive loan credits which would apply to his account.

A minimum advance fee was required in cash. To obtain this fee was the sole object of the game. When an adequate crop of victims had paid over their advance fees the promoter would disappear to fresh territory in search of another harvest from gullible investors.

As soon as the victims made inquiries of the named insurance companies the fraud was discovered. The companies declared that they were not issuing such a type of policy, knew nothing of the "mortgage and security company," and had no representative of a description fitting the swindler. In keeping with his role, the confidence man was neatly dressed, appeared to be about seventy years of age, and had a dignified bearing.

One doesn't have to travel to Montana, however, to find the confidence man "in real estate." Attorneys of fraud bureaus in the East have their hands full. In New Jersey a magnet to attract buyers was issued in the form of a metal disk which was distributed to "good prospects" with the information that the recipient might be lucky enough to win a lot. Before long, a group of holders received notice that they had won a lot and were requested to appear at the office of the developing company. There a benevolent looking gentleman informed them that there would be a small charge of $47 for each free lot to cover "surveying, conveyance, etc." This sum generally represented more than the piece of property was worth.

If You Win a Lot, Beware!

Another method employed with a certain amount of success is to send a postal card to a person, informing him that he has won a lot. Calling by request at the office of the development company, he receives an invitation to visit the development and view his property. To his chagrin he finds that the lot he has won, owing to an excessive amount of rock or high tide, is unsatisfactory. He wouldn't have it at any price, wouldn't care to pay the "carrying charges," but yes, he would consider buying a different piece of property. This is known as the "pull-in" method, and it works.

In St. Louis recently a man was approached in the lobby of a motion picture theater and asked to sign a card, as he might be "selected" to receive a free lot just for "advertising purposes." The next day he was informed that he had won a lot valued by the developers at $350. But he found it was a peculiar lot. A river ran through it. There followed the offer of a lot "just as good, if not better," elsewhere on the tract. This was valued at $1,150. But the company was willing to allow to the customer the value of the lot he had won if he bought the higher-priced lot. The latter was always priced high enough in excess of the "free" lot to cover the company's generosity.

Keyes Winter, deputy attorney general, in charge of the New York state fraud bureau, in a statement on the free-lot scheme, recently said:

The Wife Falls for This.

"The usual procedure is for some salesman to call at a person's home when the man of the house is away at business. The wife is informed that, through the recommendation of a friend, she has been placed on a list of prospective free lot winners selected to help advertise a development. About five days later the man reappears and informs the woman she has won a lot and should call at the office of the developer to get her deed. Naturally she is enthusiastic about her good fortune.

"Once in the office, which is as ornate as the old-time bucket shops, with their mahogany furniture, the woman is informed there is the small matter of $25 or $30 to pay for recording and registering the deed. Sometimes the victim wakes up at this point and leaves, but generally she pays and gets her deed. The next step is to look over her property, and when she finally locates it, if it really exists, she discovers it is back in the woods or far from the road. If she protests, a generous allowance, several times what she paid, is offered to her if she will trade her 'free lot' back as part purchase price on a much better piece of land. Rising to the last bit of bait, with her name on a contract to pay so much a month, the real estate sharks have finally landed their victim where they wanted her. She now is producing profits for them every month."

The traveling public has long been the prey of petty crooks and swindlers, and although most of us have been schooled to a point where we now are wont to regard with suspicion anyone who appears a trifle too friendly on a train journey, we occasionally meet up with the sharpers of the rail.

Buys a Fruit Stand, But—

On trains and in railway stations this type of crook still survives, and a single railroad employs a police force of 800 to prevent outrages upon those who travel. It is, of course, a difficult task that this road squad assumes, for it may take them over several thousand miles of railway, and not every train can carry a policeman. But enough trains can carry them to make the swindlers wary. Most crooks realize the increasing difficulties under which they must work, which is one reason for the astounding decline in railway crookery during the past few years.

Some of the schemes operated are ingenious; others are stupid. For instance, there is "Sixty-cent" Fleming, the railway station confidence man, who is always just sixty cents short of the price of a ticket, and make $100 a day thereby as invariably some kind-hearted traveler hands him sixty cents, or, more likely still, gives him a dollar.

But this is a small affair compared to the game worked upon a young alien who landed in America with a few thousand dollars and fell among the railway-station wolves of his own nationality. According to John R. Tunis, who has made a study of the problem confronting the railway police, the strangers took their victim into a large terminal, showed him the information booth in the center of the great rotunda, and suggested that it would make a choice spot for a fruit stand. As they had papers which seemed to prove their option on the place, he gladly passed over $2,000. The next morning when he went in to establish his new business, it took the combined efforts of eight railroad policemen, the station master, and a couple of city cops to dispossess him.

Hanging's Too Good for Him.

Writing in the Elks Magazine, Mr. Tunis relates the unfortunate experience of an old couple who, arriving at a railway station, were taken in charge by one of the public porters hanging about the entrance. Finding that his charges had an hour to wait for the Chicago train, this obliging porter seated the couple in the waiting room, got the old lady a drink of water, and soon discovered that it was their first visit to a large city. Had they bought their tickets to Chicago? They had not. So off he went, without, however, asking for any money. They never noticed this.

In twenty minutes he was back, and standing outside the gate, he handed them two long green slips, assured them he was not allowed to go inside, told them their train was ready to go, and then collected twice $41, the price of a Chicago ticket. They tried to get in, were stopped, and showed their tickets to a guard. They were two long strips of subway tickets, worth exactly two dollars.

Watch your baggage carefully until the train pulls out, is a good safety measure against a certain type of thief, Mr. Tunis says. This crook gets away with bags and suitcases by buying a ticket for the train's first stop and so getting through the gate, or sneaking around to another gate and working up to the limited train. Then they go through the pullmans, and when they observe a passenger outside waiting for the departure by taking a smoke on the platform, they pick up his bag and walk into the next car. Just as the train starts they drop off. This man is the species of baggage thief.

About A. Cohen, the "Creep."

Pullman car thieves are known as "creeps," and the most gifted of them was a character named Alphonse Cohen. His method was to take berths on the big trains out of Chicago and Denver and pick out likely victims during the hour in the diner. Then he would wait until early morning, slip under the curtains, rifle the clothes and if possible the baggage of his victims, and slip off at the next station. A railroad man trailed him for eight months before getting him cold on a job.

Then there was Palmer, the college graduate. Quiet, well-dressed, looking the part of big business, he worked pullman trains in much the same way as Cohen. But his method was far more efficient. He always left a certain sum of money in pocketbooks that he "dipped," and as a result the victim never realized his loss until he had left the train. But one night the detective of a western road discovered him emerging from a berth after a successful haul. Palmer climbed into his own berth while the detective quietly awakened the passenger and so discovered the theft. Then he went for Palmer. Cornered, Palmer fought, drew a pistol, and succeeded in opening the window of his berth and jumping out. He fell into the snow, but broke both ankles, and is now recuperating down in Atlanta where the climate is far more suited to pajamas than the bleak stretches of the Dakotas in midwinter.

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

"JEWEL" work—it sounds interesting, does it not? It surely is all that and more. In fact, it is so fascinating, once begin it, you will be planning a Christmas present for most everyone you know, bejeweled by your very own handiwork. There is simply no end to the pretty things one can make for the home with just sealing wax and a few colored glass jewels—and the cost is so trifling compared with the looks.

How to do it? Well, here are the directions which follow closely if you want the reward of perfect results. One can pick up such attractively shaped little wooden boxes or picture frames for a few pennies or perhaps you have been treasuring a cunning box or frame wondering "what to do with it." Here's your chance to transform it into a "thing of beauty and a joy forever." In this jewel work you cover your article roughly with melted sealing wax. This is done by melting one end of the stick of wax over a flame until it is very soft. Then dab it on your box or other article until the whole thing is covered roughly. Right here let there be a word of caution. Never under any circumstances attempt this work on a celluloid foundation. The box must be wood or tin, never celluloid, for it is inflammable and even if not in direct contact with the flame, it catches on fire when too near heat. Most everyone is familiar with the handling of sealing wax and it therefore may not be necessary to remind that a simple little wax taper in a candlestick with a good base to catch the melted wax drippings, or a wee alcohol wick as used in pyrography work is sufficient, no large blaze being required. Remember always, "Safety first."

After the box or other article, a tray, a frame or a jewel case perhaps, of wood or tin, but never celluloid, is covered with sealing wax, one begins on the real design. Dab more wax where you want your jewels. Insert them one at a time, by pressing each in its little pile of soft wax. Take your spatula (thin, pliable knife), heat it over the flame and carve the wax around the jewel to form a setting. One can trace or stamp a design on the box, say a Chinese dragon as the motif on the box in the picture shows, or a floral patterning, setting jewels in the center of each flower as has been done on the frames in this illustration. Any colors can be used, but the bronze waxes are the prettiest.

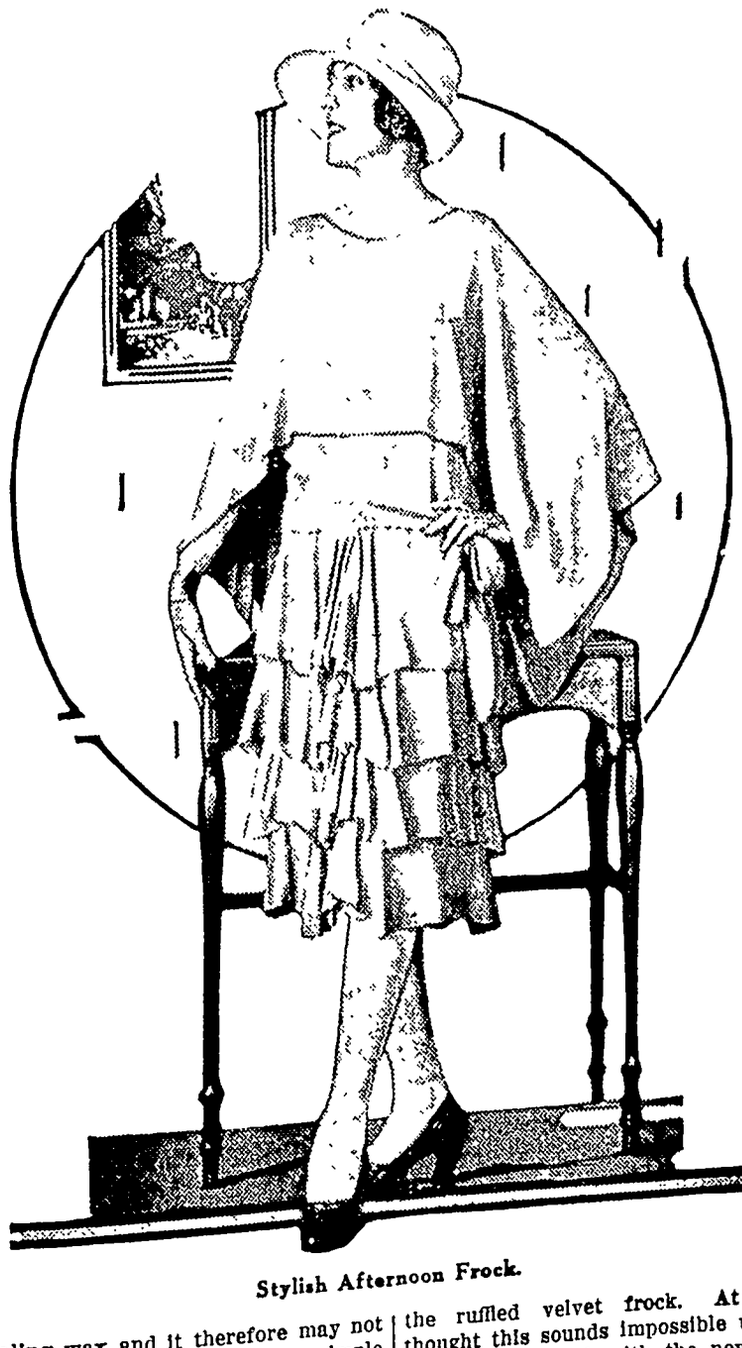
A frock which glorifies the material of which it is made, is the designer's joy and pride this season. A simple silhouette accomplished through an intricate handling of the fabric especially distinguishes the popular velvet frock, also those of solid colored georgette. To be sure, when trimming is conspicuous for its absence, there must be details to supply its place, and genius is admirably answering the challenge. Unique necklines is one way the stylist has of adding a note of interest, then there are unusual sleeves, multitudinous tiers on skirts, graceful blousings to the waistline, not to mention profuse shirring which is one of the dressmaker's chief assets this season.

Speaking of interesting necklines, the late idea is for huge cape-like collars. Of course these require supple fabric for their styling. The collar or capelet treatment lends itself gracefully to a georgette frock such as the picture shows. In this dainty afternoon dress the designer depends entirely on fabric for effect.

The idea of many ruffles or tiers on the skirt obtains in endless versions throughout the mode. The latest is the ruffled velvet frock. At first thought this sounds impossible unless one is acquainted with the new velvets, which are as supple and easily manipulated as the sheerest chiffon.

Fabric this season makes an eloquent plea through color. Again velvets triumph in this respect. Queen Marie blue and Rumanian purple pay compliment to the royal visitor we have with us. Beige velvet is also very highly regarded and as for black, the woman who owns not a black velvet gown this season will be the exception, not the rule.

For evening chiffon is a desired fabric. There are any number of black chiffon frocks.



Stylish Afternoon Frock.

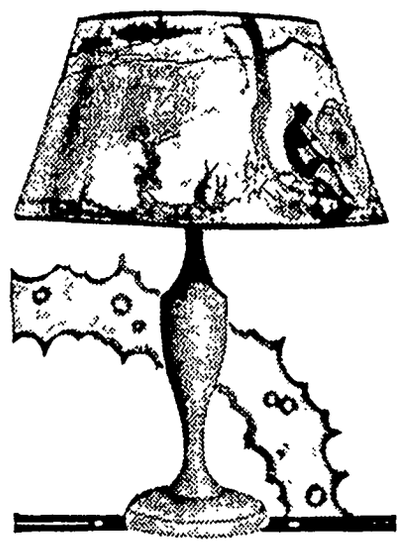
Suggestions for Holiday Shoppers

Lovely Homemade Shade



Scissor painted and "crystalline" lamp shades are going to shed radiant joy in the homes and hearts of many happy recipients this Christmas. These home-made shades are as beautiful as any that can be bought. They are made of handkerchief linen stretched over a wire frame and decorated with designs cut from printed crepe paper. Here is one in which the figures are silhouettes in black. After they are pasted on, the shade is painted over with thin transparent amber sealing-wax paint and, after this is dry, a background in soft yellows, reds and browns, is blended on.

Gay Holiday Aprons

Here is a gift that everyone, from grandma down to the youngest subdeb, will rejoice in at Christmas time—and long thereafter. It is a gay and quaint pinafore, made of brilliant, flowered cretonne, bordered and finished with black sateen, and is prettiest in cretonnes having a black background with many-colored garden flowers blooming against it. The black sateen borders the bib and pockets and makes the ...ng shoulder straps.

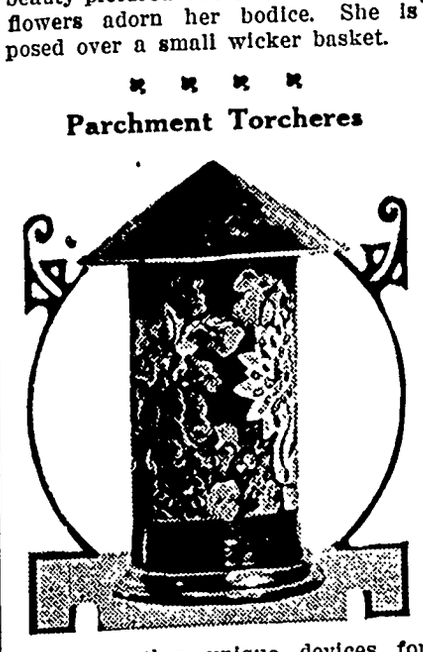
Useful Silken Ladies

Everywhere in the shops this year there are dainty and fascinating bisque ladies with dignified coiffures and pretty faces, waiting to be dressed in spreading silk skirts. These doll torsos are made in several sizes and are used as shades over electric lights or posed over telephones, bonbon or work baskets and pincushions. Wide taffeta ribbon clothes the blond beauty pictured and the tiniest ribbon flowers adorn her bodice. She is posed over a small wicker basket.

× × × ×

Parchment Torcheres



Among other unique devices for softening electric lights are the fashionable parchment torcheres which may be bought ready for painting. They may be tinted with soft yellows and reds blended together, or decorated with floral or other decorations. One who is not clever at painting can get beautiful effects by cutting out designs from crepe paper, pasting them on the torchere and then painting over the entire surface with thin, transparent, amber sealing wax paint.

Dentist Cured of Constipation and Run-Down Condition

A simple food does the work

TODAY thousands are enjoying new energy, new vigor, renewed youth. They have banished constipation and its attendant ills. Their appetite is keen. Their skin clear.

They have found a pleasant road back to robust health, through eating a common everyday food.

Read what one of them says:

"I have been taking C-Y Chocolate Yeast through the recommendation of a friend who was greatly benefited by it himself, and I feel obligated to tell you what a fine tonic and cure I found it to be for constipation and run-down condition from which I was suffering for many years.

"You are rendering a real service by dispensing yeast that does its work and yet tastes so good.

Gratefully yours,
Chas. S. Richman,
D. D. S."

For those who "simply cannot take yeast" here is news—if you like chocolate, you will like yeast in this new form.

It is C-Y Chocolate Yeast — as delicious—as easily eaten as fine chocolate.

Yet each wafer contains as much vigorously active yeast as the best grade of compressed yeast cake.

It corrects constipation, prevents bilious attacks, aids digestion, clears the skin, tones the system.

SCHOOL DOINGS OF THE PAST WEEK

REPORT CARDS FOR SECOND PERIOD GIVEN OUT TODAY

Parents Should Study Cards And Encourage Child In Study

Report cards go to parents Wednesday of this week and we wish they might be observed carefully and returned promptly. We need to be assured that parents have knowledge of our judgement of the quality of work being done by their children in comparison with others in their class. We feel that after the cards have come to them they may be depended upon to give the commendation or censure due on such an occasion If any parent should feel thatt he child bringing home unsatisfactory marks has done some unsatisfactory marks has done his or her full share and that failure is due in part to any of the instructors we invite them to give us a friendly call and give us their unbiased judgement of the matter Some no doubt will bring home such marks for they are made in every school of fair students. If we can help to eliminate failure we desire to do so. We need the parent's friendly spirit of co-operation in order to do the most for the child If there be any infrmation that parents can furnish us whereby we may help more toward the success of their children we wish it might be given us.

Lest some are unacquainted with the significance of the letters awarded we shall again explain that "A" stands for superior work, "B" for work slightly better than average "C" for average work, "D" for inferior to the work done by over half of the class, "E" unsatisfactory work that must be improved or failure results, and "F" unconditional failure.

Some children may work as hard as any in school and bring home C's and D's. They should not be censured. They deserve more praise than does a student who might easily earn A's and B's but who brings home C's. There may be students here who are making an honest effort who are doing failing work. Such students should not be censured at home nor at school Both parents and teachers need to get together and talk the situation over and see what each may do toward helping the child toward success in school work

Possibly nothing can be done about it but if anything can be it should. America's future depends upon the training we are now giving the boys and girls in our homes and schools of today. Let's co-operate in an effort to give them the best we can Greece lost her prominence in the world affairs; Rome had her day; Spain was once a leader among the nations of the world Today America ranks foremost in many respects Will she continue to hold that place? It depends upon the quality of training given her youth. Let's do our full share toward those of our day.

Lyceum Course Speaker Dead

Robt. Kemple who was to have appeared on our Lyceum Course December 9 will lecture no more. He will no longer inspire American audiences with his humor and philosophy He was operated upon for appendicitis at Rochester, Minn., and died there November 1st. We very much regret to announce Klemme will not be able to hear this big man for he was big physically, mentally and morally. He would have delivered a wonderful address. But we believe the Bureau has another man in the person of a Mr. Lacey who is a close second to Mr. Kemple, who will fill the date. From the bost information we have been able to secure, Mr. Lacey will give a mighty worthwhile address. He is recommended as eloquent, witty and inspiring. We belive Klemme will like Mr Lacey and that he will like the audience at Klemme. Let's all be at the Gym to greet him and enjoy his message., December 9th.

Basket Ball Team Going Good

Althot his is the thirteenth week of school we do not anticipate any bad luck. We believe we shall defeat Rowan tonight (Tuesday ev.) Our boys hauled down the colors of Crystal Lake last Friday evening in a basket all fray at the Lake and shall try to avenge the defeat suffered at the hands of the Rowan quartet last year at Rowan

Our team out be whole s not so rangy as last year's team but may be faster and judging from their initial performances may show as good or better form at basket shooting which is an important element in the success of the game They have been drilled on the art of pivoting, dribbling low and offensive plays Our guards may be expected tos how more skill and speed this season than last Donald Gibb at center should play as good a game there as his brother last year He is about as rangy and worn in condition shows as good or better form

Orville and Kermit may be depended upon to keep the scoring part of the machine in good running order We are reluctant about announcing individual scores for we feel it unwise to give encouragement to individual playing Basket ball is a game that involves above everything else team work When members of the team become interested in their individual scores instead of the success of the team as a whole the game usually ends with a lower score The total scores made at Crystal Lake last Friday night were Klemme 31, Crystal Lake 11 We do not predict a good showing against Rowan but belive our boys will win

A PROCLAMATION

Thanksgiving, 1926

WHEREAS it is the custom in America of annually setting aside one day on which to render thanks to God for the blessings of freedom and prosperity which are the result of heritage left us not alone by our Pilgrim ancestors, but by the pioneers of Washington, Madison and Lincoln periods; and

WHEREAS, we are indebted to the men and women of all the United States whose courage, perseverance and self denial whether in war or peace, have made this "the land of the free and the home of the brave" therefore, we should not only be thankful for our annual blessings but for our indebtedness to the outstanding years of our history years which should be ever enshrined in our hearts as a reminder of the struggles and sacrifices, efforts and achievements which paved the way for the America we today enjoy, the land of opportunity

NOW, THEREFORE I, John Hammill, Governor of the State of Iowa, do hereby designate

Thursday, November 25

as Thanksgiving Day and earnestly enjoin upon our citizens that they make it truly a day for rededication, a day when we should pledge ourselves anew in thanksgiving for the blessings which He has bestowed upon us, to give our beloved country through our manhood and womanhood the best that is in us Thus may we glorify our own lives and perpetuate Thanksgiving as a day of beautiful thought and inspiration, a day of patriotism and religious concentration, a day of gratitude for the blessings of the past the opportunities of the present and the hopes for the future

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be acixed the Great Seal of the State of Iowa

Done at Des Moines, this 12th day of November, A. D 1926.

JOHN HAMMILL,
Governor

ESTHER L. BLOOM MARRIED IN CAL.

FORMER KLEMME GIRL MARRIED AT LOS ANGELES

Wedding Is Of Interest To Many Iowa Friends

Of great interest to people of this community is the story of the wedding of a former Klemme girl The Times is indebted to Miss Hoover of Los Angeles who supplied us with the following particulars of the wedding of Miss Esther Bloom, daughter of Mr and Mrs Walter Bloom, former residents of Klemme

"At the home of Mr and Mrs Walter R Bloom of Los Angeles, California, on November 14 1926 in the presence of a few relatives and friends occurred the marriage of their daughter, Esther L., to Mr Clarence C Harbaugh. Dr Barth officiated

"The bridal pair was accompanied by Miss Hulda Johnson daughter of Mr and Mrs Joseph Johnson of Klemme, Iowa as bridesmaid and Mr Walter R Bloom, Jr., brother of the bride, as bestman

"The bridal procession entered the drawing room to the strains with Lohengrin's Wedding March played by the brides sister Miss Gail Bloom The ceremony was beautiful and impressive accentuated by the soft sweet music played during the ceremony

"After hearty congratulations and best wishes had been given, a sumptuous wedding breakfast was served over which the bride's father so graciously presided The bridal pair left immediately, on a motor trip, to San Fransisco and other places of interest in Northern California

"The home was simply but beautifully decorated with yellow chrysanthemums, the flower so typical of California this season of the year The bride wore a lovely gown of jungle green satin trimmed in tan and gold braid Her bouquet was of pink and white roses tied with tulle. The bridesmaid wore a beautiful gown of queen's blue satin crepe, also trimmed in tan and gold She wore a corsage of pink rosebuds The groom and best man were attired in tailored black suits The bride's mother was dressed in a soft pansy-colored silk so becoming to a woman with soft gray hair Miss Gail Bloom was dressed in a modish dress of black and white made of faille and georgette trimmed with beads.

"The bridal pair will be at home to their friends after December 15 in Therneal, California, where Mr Harbaugh is managinb the acairs of a large copmany."

The Times joins with the many friends of the Bloom family in wishing Mr and Mrs. Harbaugh much happiness and success.

HUSK FORTY ACRES CORN FOR FARMER

LARGE NUMBER OF HUSKERS INVADE BUENTENBACH FIELD

More Than Fifteen Rigs In Corn Field Make Ears Fly

Over fifteen teams and wagons and around thirty men, farmers and business men of Klemme, invaded Ed Buentenbach's corn field Tuesday and husked out nearly all of the forty acres which remained to be picked Just how much corn was husked is hard to tell, but over a thousand bushels was cribbed.

Neighboring women helped to prepare a big dinner for the men in the field and the huskers enjoyed the work.

The bang-bang ety- bang of the big ears hitting the bang boards resounded all over the field and there were many races on that day to see who could pick the most. Klemme business men, although not expert pickers, were good sports and managed to pick at least one row to the farmers' two.

The husking bee was pulled off as Mr. Buentenbach is in a Mason City hospital and was not able to look after his work.

KLEMME MAN ON GARNER BOXING EVENT NEXT WEEK

Roy Smock and Carrol Brede Will Go Five Rounds Main Bout

The Legion at Garner are staging a benefit athletic show at the Garner high school gym for Friday, Dec. 3rd, to begin at eight o'clock.

Roy Smock, of Klemme and Carrol Brede of Garner will furnish the main bout of the program when they will go five rounds. Local mitt fans will no doubt turn out to see the local in action.

Other events on the card include the following preliminary events:

Raymond Hejlik vs Harry Pritchard, 3 rounds; Archie Prouty vs. Lyle Smith, 3 rounds; Vere Brogan vs George Jensen, 3 rounds; 6 boys from theg rade in a telegraph battle royal Milton Duesenberg vs. "Duesey Duesenberg, 3 rounds.

"Harry Wills" vs. Bob Hejlik will provide the semi-wind-up show.

The main bout, Roy Smock, of Klemme, vs. Carrol Brede, of Garner in five rounds, should be a good match as both young men are about the same weight, Smock perhaps a bit lighter, but perhaps faster.

WILL MOVE TO MISSOURI

In this issue of The Times you will find the half page ad of the big farm sale Wm. Tiggeman is holding next week Thursday, Dec. 2nd.

Mr. Tiggeman and family are selling their farm goods and are going to quit farming here Mr. Tiggeman says as soon as arrangements can be made he and his family will move to St. Louis, Mo., where they will make their future home on a farm near that city.

Mr. Tiggeman came to Klemme eight years ago from Missouri where formerly he farmed.

BANK AT BRITT FAILS TO OPEN DOORS MONDAY MORNING

Britt Without A Bank, Reorganization Very Likely, Report

The First National Bank at Britt, weakened by a week of unusual with drawals of deposits produced by alleged rumors and lack of confidence, failed to open its doors for business Monday morning Its closing leaves Britt without a bank, the other bank the Commercial State Bank having closed there about a year ago.

H B Armstrong is president of the First National Bank at Britt, John Spalla is cashier and Morris Fox is assistant cashier Gov John Hammill i a member of the board of directors It is reported that a quick re-organization is likely to give the town banking service.

After the closing of the Commercial State bank at Britt a year ago, deposits in the First National jumped to nearly a million dollars and then by the process of withdrawal they were reduced to about $600,000. The institution, it is understood, had only about $125,000 in borrowed money.

Estherville Bank Closes

ESTHERVILLE, Nov. 24.— The First Trust and Savings bank here failed to open Monday morning. Reorganization at once to give the city and community banking facilities was regarded as almost certain.

H Smith A day of information, inspiration, and Christian fellowship is assured those who attend the meetings.

BERT MATHEWS' FATHER DIED AT GARNER MONDAY EVE.

Was Inmate Of County Home For More Than Thirty Years

Herman Mathews, father of Bert Mathews, of thisc ity, died at the county home west of Garner Monday evening of heart trouble. Mr Mathews had seemingly been in his usual health and his sudden death was unlookedf or.

For the past thi ty six years or more Mr. Mathews had not been in good health and was troubled mentally. At one time he was sent to the state hospital for insane but he couldn ot be cured and has been an inmate at the county home since.

Mr. Mathews was 68 yearso ld at the time of his death is is survived by two children, Bert of Klemme and a daughter, Mrs. Lillian Miller, of Albion, Penn. His wife and another son, Otto, preceded him in death a number of years ago.

Rev. Gauger, of thisc ity, went to Garner thisa fternoon (Wednesday) to conduct a short service at the Concord cemetery, where interment was made at 1:30 o'clock.

We are glad to report that Elmer Arnoldi s recuperating at his home southeast of Klemme. It was not necessary for him to go to Rochester as reported last week. He tok a number of treatments at Mason City and is now getting along fine.

KLEMME WINS TWO BASKET BALL GAMES

KLEMME STARTS CAGE SEASON WITH TWO WINS

Crystal Lake Easy; Rowan Put Up Real Opposition

The Klemme High School basket ball team won its initial game of the season against Crystal Lake, at Crystal Lake, Friday evening by a score of 31 to 11. Klemme showed up with excellent pivoting as an offense play in moving the ball down the floor

Klemme outplayed Crystal Lake in every part of the game and had a comparitively easy time winning their first game of the season.

Rowan Put Up Good Scrap

Tuesday night the fast Rowan five met Klemme on the local floor in one of the best and fastest games ever played in the Klemme gym.

The game was featured by fast work on both teams. Klemme displayed real skill in fast pivoting, both long and short passing and a powerful defense when occasion demanded. Klemme had possession of the ball at least three-fourths of the time. Their floor team work is excellent but the locals need a lot of practice in shooting baskets, both from the field and from the foul line. Had they been more expert along that line the game would have been "on ice." However, the boys are just beginning the season and have plenty of timet o develop some good basket shooters.

The game Tuesday night was close in every quarter. The first quarter Klemme lead 3 to 2; second Rowan 4, Klemme 4, third quarter Rowan 7, Klemme 6, last quarter resulted in an 8 to 8 tie and three minutes were added to the play when the locals piled up three scores on a free throw and a field basket, winning the game 11 to 8.

Coach Hockey developed the best team last year Klemme has ever had, winning eleven of the fourteen games played. The outlook for a winning team this year is rosy. He is developing a team we believe are faster on the floor and despite the loss of several good men on last year's team, we predict Hockey will have a winner in this year's quintet with Gibbs at center, Stokesbary and Koerner, forwards and Turgasen and Tanner at guard Hockey carries some good subs in Lemke, Gauger and Nelson, with others developing for that position.

Swaledale Here Fri., Dec. 3

The next game on thes chedule is a game here with Swaledale on Friday, December 3rd—next week.

The Inquisition

"I HAVE depopulated happy villages, rich towns and fertile districts of my beloved country in the holy name of religion," wrote Queen Isabella of Spain in the last part of the Fifteenth century.

But the religion of which she spoke was not one based upon the Scriptures, nor upon the creeds of either Catholics or Protestants, nor of any other branch of the Church of Christ. It was a man-made dogma, with torture and intimidation for basis.

In 1480 the Inquisition, or "Holy Office," as it was termed, was organized in Spain. The Spanish nation was almost at the height of its greatness. The marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella had united the mighty provinces of Castile and Aragon. There were thousands of Moors (Mahometans from Africa) and other non-Christians throughout the country. These were, in many cases, rich and powerful. The church feared that Christianity's supremacy was in danger. Hence the great body of Moors were driven out! and those who remained, as well as followers of other religions, were forced, on pain of death, to embrace Christianity. Then the Inquisition turned its attention to so-called heretics, and Spain gained a reputation for heartless cruelty from which it has never wholly recovered.

At Seville, in 1481, the Inquisition began its actual work. During that year, in Seville, alone, 298 victims were burned. Throughout all the nation about 2,000 suffered a like fate. Thomas of Torquemada, a Dominican, was made president of the holy office. He and his successor, Cardinal Ximines, made it a national institution whose name aroused panic and hatred in every district of Spain and aroused even the callous Fifteenth century Englishmen to indignation.

The Inquisition's mode of procedure was unique. A man, woman or child was suspected of heresy, seized and subjected to an irregular preliminary examination. Then all the evidence and suspicious circumstances in the case were submitted to a higher body. The members of this, fearing lest their own holy zeal might otherwise be questioned, usually decided against the prisoner. The latter was then locked up in solitary confinement and a sort of "third degree" was applied to force a confession of guilt and to enroll the victim as a "penitent." If no confession was forthcoming the most horrible tortures were applied.

Most of these tortures were of too atrocious a nature to bear description. A few of the less unspeakable were the "thumb-screw," the "boot," the "rack" and the "virgin." The thumb-screw and boot crushed the fingers and feet, respectively, to a jelly. The rack was an apparatus to which a prisoner was strapped while every joint was stretched and twisted until sinews were torn apart and bones crushed. The "virgin" was a hollow image lined with spikes. The victim was placed within it and the spikes driven slowly into his flesh. In these hideous ways did the Inquisitors of Spain seek to enforce the gentle doctrines of peace, forgiveness and love.

If the suspect still refused to confess he was carried to the highest court of the Inquisition, and there, for the first time, he heard the charges against him and was allowed to reply to them. Heretofore, he had had no clear idea of what particular crime he was accused. The defense was usually a mere mockery. If the victim had wealthy friends he could appeal to Rome. Thus, while the local Inquisition confiscated the captive's property, the papal headquarters also got his friends' money.

In the rare cases of acquittal there was no redress for torture, imprisonment and loss of fortune. If convicted, the condemned heretic was burned alive. The motto of the holy office was "Misericordia et Justitia"—"Mercy and Justice!"

Such horrors drove people from the country by the hundred thousand. In seventy years the hitherto increasing population of Spain dropped from 10,000,000 to 6,000,000. Trade, agriculture, manufactures and all industries were brought to a standstill. Whole districts were depopulated.

But there is, perhaps, no great evil without some compensating good. While the reign of terror was at its height a golden gateway of escape opened to westward. America was discovered. In the new land men might hope to live reasonably free from the demoniacal tortures of the Inquisition. Accordingly the maltreated Spaniards flocked thither in thousands. Towns, villages and rural districts in the New World were speedily filled by the refugees.

In considering the Inquisition it must not, for a moment, be imagined that the holy office had the approval of Christians at large, or that it reflected discredit on the true tenets of the church. There can be no great and holy cause that does not somewhere lead to abuses and misrule. So the medieval Spaniards merely used Christianity as an instrument wherewith to wreak their own cruelty and injustice.

And, after all, were their crimes so much more atrocious than the slaying of crazy old women as witches by the pious Puritans of New England or the wholesale slaughter of innocent Moslem children by Godfrey de Bouillon and the holy Crusaders?

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Nicaragua Asks Uncle Sam to Check Mexico's Aid to Rebels There.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MORE trouble with Mexico confronts the government of the United States, due to the admitted fact that the "Liberal" revolutionists of Nicaragua are receiving aid, in the way of men and war munitions, from Mexico. Adolfo Diaz, favored by Washington for the presidency of Nicaragua, was elected by the congress immediately after the peace conference presided over by Charge d'Affaires Lawrence Dennis which resulted in an agreement to return to constitutional government. Diaz was formally recognized by our government Wednesday, and at once he appealed to Washington for aid in stopping the gun-running expeditions from Mexico.

In announcing the recognition of Diaz, Secretary of State Kellogg took occasion to refer in veiled but unmistakable terms to the Mexican government's fomentation of armed conflict in the Central American republic.

"The department," said Secretary Kellogg, "has been informed that President Diaz intends to make overtures of peace and general amnesty to his political opponents, and that he will offer the Liberal party participation in the new government, including certain cabinet posts. I sincerely hope that this offer, if made, will be accepted by the Liberals, since only by co-operation between all factions can peace and tranquility be restored to that country, now so unhappily torn by revolution, a condition which has invited interference from outside sources; a state of affairs which must cause concern to every friend of stability in Central America."

General Moncada, rebel leader, was called on board the U. S. S. Rochester at Bluefields and given a dispatch from Washington, asking him to lay down his arms with the understanding that there would be a general amnesty. Otherwise, he was told, the United States would be obliged to take action to prevent further fighting.

The Calles regime in Mexico, which is called Bolshevist by its opponents, has been extending its influence over Central America, at least in Guatemala, and is reaching out for Nicaragua. It would not be pleasant for the United States to have such a "bloc" of nations controlled by the Calles group between it and the Panama canal.

In addition to his war on the Yaquis, which is going none too well for him, President Calles may have to meet a revolutionary movement in Chihuahua and along the northern border. Though Mexican officials scoff at this, the rumors persist that it is under way and is serious. Gen. Nicholas Fernandez, former member of the staff of Gen. Pancho Villa, is reported to have led a small band of rebels across the border east of El Paso for the purpose of recruiting a force of revolutionists. It was said the party was well mounted and armed and had plenty of money. A former follower of Adolfo de la Huerta was in El Paso recently recruiting men for a revolt.

COL. ORESTES FERRARA, a prominent politician and well-known duelist, has been appointed minister to Washington from Cuba, to succeed Dr. Rafael Sanchez Abalil, who resigned. Cuba had a brief quarrel with Uruguay during the week and its minister in Montevideo obtained his passports and left the capital. However, the trouble was soon adjusted and diplomatic relations were resumed.

After being in power for a year, the Chilean cabinet headed by Maximiliano Ibanez has resigned. At this writing President Figueroa-Larrain has not appointed a new premier.

RUMOR mongers in Europe continue to prophesy another war in the near future, but they are not agreed as to whether it will be between Italy and Turkey or Italy and France. Most of them are in accord as to Italy being one of the belligerent nations, because as every one knows, she is overpopulated and is looking for additional territory within easy reach of the mother country—somewhere along the Mediterranean. She believes Tunis should belong to her instead of France, for there are some three million Italians there; but wise observers do not believe Mussolini has any intention of fighting France. There remains the territory in Asia Minor which Italy would like to possess and which now is held nominally by Turkey. If Mussolini obtains any of this, it is more likely to come through the aid of the League of Nations. There is ground for the belief that France would be glad to transfer her Syrian mandate to Italy

Revelations following the arrest of Ricciotti Garibaldi in Paris have been rather startling and France might well find in them cause of serious quarrel with Mussolini's government, but in view of the duce's disclaimers and apologies for the acts of the more unrestrained Fascisti it is probable that France will take the view that those acts were unauthorized. On the other hand, London dispatches say the Italian volunteer officers in England have been officially notified that their services may be needed and to hold themselves ready to return to Italy at a moment's notice.

GEORGES TCHITCHERIN, soviet commissar of foreign affairs, and Tewfik Rushdi Bey, foreign minister of Turkey, held an important conference in Odessa, presumably to formulate an alliance. This led many European statesmen to believe that a league of western Asiatic nations, including Russia, comparable to the League of Nations, might be intended. At a banquet following the conference Tchitcherin said the crushing force of "imperialistic" nations had pressed Russia and Turkey into an international mutuality.

WHILE the British imperial conference in London is at this writing about over, there has been no official statement of its conclusions. Unofficially, it is asserted that the premiers of the dominions have refused to ratify the Locarno pact, which was drafted so as to exclude the dominions unless they expressed their participation; that the dominions have shown a decided disposition not to help maintain the naval forces of the empire and especially not to pay any part of the expense of building the huge naval base at Singapore, contracts for which are now being let; that the matter of privy council appeals will be left open for a future conference; and that there was complete agreement on the continuance of British control of Egypt.

ANOTHER group of Chicagoans, numbering 74, have been indicted for conspiracy to violate the prohibition laws, in the government's clean-up campaign in that city. Among the accused are Municipal Judge H. M. Walker and Police Captain John Prendergast, secretary to the chief of police. The rest are politicians, policemen and saloonkeepers. The federal officials have now had 153 residents of Cook county indicted, and another list, including more prominent men, is expected before long.

In announcing the return of the indictments, District Attorney Olson said: "Dishonest police officials working hand in glove with the political representatives of the criminal underworld, aided and abetted by many who hold high positions of public trust and at times even the scales of justice in their hands—that's Chicago's crime ring and crime cause; and if that criminal alliance can keep its present stranglehold by the exercise of intimidation and personal violence toward those who know the facts, then justice is dead and the courts may as well close their doors."

Mayor Dever and other city officials retorted that Olson's language was "unwarranted and unfair" and the mayor said in effect that the federal grand jury's action was a cheap rehash of a clean-up made six months ago by the city administration itself.

DISTURBED by cablegrams from Bucharest concerning the condition of King Ferdinand, Queen Marie of Rumania abandoned her American tour at Louisville and engaged accommodations on the Berengaria sailing from New York on November 24.

King Ferdinand is suffering from sigmoiditis, but Premier Averescu told parliament that his condition caused no anxiety.

MAJ. MARIO DE BERNARDI, the "flying Fascist" who captured the Schneider cup for Italy in the seaplane races at Norfolk, setting new speed records, made yet another world record over the three-kilometer course, which he covered at an average speed of 258.873 miles an hour. He and his team mates then went to Washington, where they received the personal congratulations of President Coolidge. Bernardi flew a little Macchi-Fiat monoplane and after it is returned to Italy and wheels are substituted for pontoons, he will go after the fastest of all speed records which was established by Bonnet of France at 278.48 miles an hour.

UNCLE JOE CANNON, who passed away in his home in Danville, Ill., lies at rest under a red haw tree in Spring Hill cemetery at that place. For several days his body lay in state while the neighbors and fellowtownsmen who had long known and loved him passed the bier with tears in their eyes. Then Vice President Dawes and scores of other well-known Illinoisans, together with many from other states, gathered there for the simple funeral ceremony. The procession to the church and from there to the tomb was led by Knights Templar, American Legion members and boy scouts.

Another well-known American passed away with the death of Lafayette Young, former senator from Iowa and for many years the editor and publisher of the Des Moines Capital. He was seventy-eight years of age and one of the few remaining members of the old school of American journalism. Chicago was shocked and grieved by the death of Patrick J. Carr, treasurer and sheriff-elect of Cook county. He was a self-made man, had risen high in the councils of the local Democratic party and was remarkably popular with all the people of the city. George Sterling, poet and dramatist of San Francisco, committed suicide in the Bohemian club by drinking poison. Allen Upward, well-known author and lawyer of London, also took his own life.

CONGRESSMAN DEMPSEY of Lockport, N. Y., chairman of the house harbors and rivers committee, offered to the Great Lakes Harbor association, in session in Buffalo, a solution of the lakes level problem in the form of passage of a bill in congress providing regulating works which would restore all the levels of the lakes, compensating not only the slight Chicago diversion but all other causes. The delegates, nearly all determined foes of Chicago in the controversy, immediately laid plans for the defeat of the bill mentioned by Mr. Dempsey. Of the nearly forty inches of lowering of levels, Chicago's diversion through the sanitary canal is only 5½ inches and can never be more, according to government engineers.

IT IS believed at this time that the British miners have voted against the acceptance of the government's terms for settlement of the coal strike. The adverse vote was heavy in Scotland and South Wales, and miners who had returned to work were not permitted to vote by the local miners' councils. Return of men to the pits goes on steadily, which fact may influence the final decision of the miners' federation.

FUGITIVE from justice for more than three years, "King" Benjamin Purnell, leader of the House of David at Benton Harbor, Mich., was arrested last week by the state police. During all the time when he was being sought throughout the country he had been hidden in the administration building of the peculiar colony. There are against him various charges of attacks on young girl members of the colony, and he is also named in receivership suits against the House of David.

COMMUNISTS in the island of Java have revolted against the Dutch government of the colony and several bloody battles have been fought. The Dutch seemed to have the better of the encounters and it was believed the rebellion would soon be quelled.

GIDEON AND THE THREE HUNDRED

LESSON TEXT—Judges 7:1-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Gideon and His Brave Band.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Brave Leader.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Gideon and the Three Hundred.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Working Together With God.

Because of Israel's sin, God permitted them to be brought under the cruel yoke of bondage at the hands of the Midianites. So grievous was this affliction that they hid in dens, caves and strongholds (Judg. 6:2). In their distress they cried unto the Lord and He sent deliverance to them through the judgeship of Gideon. The angel of the Lord appeared to him while at the post of duty. Gideon hesitated. His hesitancy was not due to unbelief but to modesty and cautiousness. He came from an obscure and uninfluential family (Judg. 6:15). Before going forward in this enterprise he wished to be doubly sure that God had called him (Judg. 6:36-40). The tangible evidence was furnished by means of the fleece. Gideon began his reformatory work at once (Judg. 6:25-27). He not only began at once, but began at home. This is God's order.

I. The Opposing Armies (v. 1).

Gideon and his army arose early on the eventful day of his victory and encamped by the spring of Herrod. Over against them was the host of Midianites in battle array. Gideon's army was quite insignificant in comparison with the Midianites.

II. The Sifting of Gideon's Army (vv. 2-8).

At Gideon's call, 32,000 men responded ready for the struggle. This seemed a small army to go against the Midianite army—135,000 strong, but God said even this was too many, lest they be led to boasting and self-confidence. Their real danger was not in their small army but in their pride. All that were faint-hearted were allowed to go back, leaving only 10,000. There were 22,000 cowards in that group of men and worst of all, they were not ashamed to confess it. Still, this was too many. When God was through with His sifting process only 300 remained. The 10,000 were brave men, but not of proper quality and fitness. Those who lapped the water showed alertness and watchfulness.

III. God Gives Encouragement to Gideon (vv. 9-15).

God commanded Gideon to go down to the Midianite camp where he would hear something that would cheer his heart and strengthen his hands. God always comes to cheer us when our hearts are faint. When he came near he heard a man tell a dream which was that of a barley cake tumbling into the camp and smiting it. He also heard the interpretation given to that dream which made Gideon to be that cake. This greatly cheered his heart and strengthened him for his work and caused him to break forth in praise to God. The barley cake is a very insignificant thing—a very cheap affair in itself, but with the hand of God upon it it would be sufficient to spread consternation among the Midianites and bring destruction upon their armies. No matter how weak and insignificant a man may be, if God is with him he shall not fall.

IV. God Gives Victory to Gideon (vv. 16-23).

His attack was unique. The whole matter was of faith (Heb. 11:32). The ground of his faith was God's Word and the token which He had given him. Gideon with his 300 men formed into three companies, each man being provided with a lamp concealed within a pitcher. Thus armed they surrounded the camp of the Midianites. They were all instructed to keep their eyes upon their leader and imitate him. We too are to keep our eyes on our Leader, Christ, and to ever do as He does. At the proper moment they blew their trumpets and broke their pitchers, giving opportunity for their lights to shine out. This awful crash of breaking pitchers, followed by the sound of trumpets accompanied by the shout "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon" threw the Midianites into a panic, causing them to fight amongst themselves: 120,000 were thus slain, leaving but 15,000 of that mighty army (Judg. 8-10).

In making the application to ourselves in this age, we can think of the sound of the trumpets as representing prayer or calling to God; the torches as the light of the Gospel; the pitchers our human nature, the whole as this treasure in earthen vessels.

The GIRL in the MIRROR

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan, leaving Laurie on his own. Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late, and he retorts that he seeks adventure. From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo. Again in the mirror's reflection he sees her with a revolver and fears she means to commit suicide. He rushes into her apartment, and, winning her confidence, induces her to lunch with him, though one warns him of danger. At lunch she admits there is a mystery in her life.

"That won't do!" he declared. "The lid is off. You've just admitted it. You feel better for having it off. So do I. As your big brother, and self-appointed counselor, I choose this opportunity to tell you what you're going to do."

She pursed her lips at him. It was the gesture of a rebellious child. Her entire manner had changed so suddenly that Laurie felt a bewilderment almost equal to his satisfaction in it. For the first time throughout the interview he experienced the thrill she had given him in the mirror.

"Yes?" she prompted.

"In the first place—" He hesitated. The ground that stretched between them now was firmer, but still uncertain. One false step might lose him much of what he had gained. "There's the question of your future," he went on, in a brisk, matter-of-fact tone. "I spent two months last year looking for a job in New York. I was about down to my last cent before I found it. It occurred to me that, perhaps, you—" He was beginning to flounder.

"That I am out of work?" she finished, calmly. "You are right."

Laurie beamed at her. Surely his way was clear now!

"I had a streak of luck last year," he resumed. "I collaborated on a play that people were foolish enough to like. Ever since that, money has poured in on me in the most vulgar way. I clink when I walk. Dollars ooze from my pockets when I make a gesture. Last week, at the bank, the cashier begged me to take some of my money away and do something with it. He said it was burdening the institution. So, as your adopted brother, I'm going to start a bank account for you," he ended, simply.

"Indeed you are not!"

"Indeed I am!"

"I agreed to live. I did not agree to—what is it you Americans say?—to sponge!"

He ignored all but the phrase of the reply.

"What do you mean by that?" he demanded with quickened interest. "Aren't you an American?"

She bit her lip.

"N-o—not wholly."

"What, then?"

She hesitated.

"I can't tell you that just yet," she said at last.

"Oh-h!" Laurie pursed his lips in a noiseless whistle. The girl's voice was musically English, and though her accent was that of London, up till now she had spoken as colloquially as any American. Indeed, her speech was much like his sister's. He was puzzled.

"Why didn't you tell me this before?"

"That I am not wholly American?" She was smiling at him ironically, but he remained serious.

"Yes. And—oh, a lot of things! Of course you know I am all at sea about you."

The familiar shadow fell over her face.

"When one is within an hour or two of the next world," she asked indifferently, "why should one tell anybody anything?"

"How long have you been in America?"

"All my life, off and on."

This at least was reassuring. He imagined he saw a gleam of light. The girl had declared that she was not a spy, nor involved in war propaganda; but it was quite possible, he reasoned, that she was enmeshed in some little web of politics, of vast importance to her and her group, of very little importance to any one else.

"I suppose," he suggested cheerfully, "that net you'ye said so much about is a political net?"

They had been speaking throughout in low tones, inaudible at any other table. Their nearest fellow diners were two middle-aged women at least thirty feet away. But she started violently under his words. She made a quick gesture of caution, and, turning half-around, swept the room with a frightened glance. Laurie, his cigarette forgotten in his fingers, watched her curiously, taking in her evident tension, her slowly returning poise, and at last the little breath of relief with which she turned back to him.

"I wish I could tell you all you want to know," she said, "but—I can't. That's all there is to it. So please let us change the subject."

His assurance returned.

"You're not a crown head or an escaped princess or anything of that kind, are you?" he asked politely.

This time she really laughed a soft low gurgle of laughter, joyous and contagious.

"No."

"Then let's get back to our bank account. We have plenty of time to run over to the Fifth avenue branch of the Corn Exchange bank before the closing hour. What color of check book do you prefer?"

"I told you," she declared with sudden seriousness, "that my bargain did not include sponging."

For the first time in the somewhat taxing interview her companion's good humor deserted him.

"My dear girl," he said almost impatiently, "don't be at the devil around the bush! You've got to live till we can find the right work for you, and that may take some time. You have intelligence enough to see that I'm neither a gay Lothario nor a Don Juan. In your present state of mind you're not fit to decide anything. Make up your mind once for all that I'm going to decide for you. It will save us both some trouble."

He stopped. He had discovered that she was not listening to him. She was sitting absolutely still, her head a little turned. Her lips were slightly parted, and her eyes, wide and staring, were fixed on some one across the room.

Laurie's eyes followed hers. They focused on a man sitting alone at a little table. It was clear that he had just entered, for a waiter stood by his side, and the newcomer was giving judicious attention to the bill of fare.

He was a harmless-looking person, of medium height and rather more than medium stoutness, carelessly dressed in a blue-serge suit. His indifference to dress was further betrayed by the fact that his ready-made four-in-hand tie had slipped the mooring of a white-bone stud, leaving that useful adjunct of the toilet open to the eyes of the world. His face was round, smooth-shaven, and rather pale. He had dark, slightly veiled gray eyes, which blinked near-sightedly at the menu. Altogether he was a seemingly worthy person, to whom the casual observer would hardly have given a second glance.

While the two pairs of eyes across the room stared at him, he confided his order to the waiter. It seemed a brief order, for the brow of the latter clouded as he wrote it down and detachedly strolled off. The newcomer leaned back in his chair, and, as he did, so glanced around the room. His projecting eyes, moving indifferently from table to table, suddenly rested, fixed, on the girl. They showed interest but no surprise. He bowed with a half-smile—an odd smile, bland, tolerant, and understanding. Then, disregarding her lack of response, he fixed his eyes on the wall facing him and waited patiently for his luncheon to be served.

Laurie's attention returned to the girl. She was facing him again, but her eyes looked past him as if he were not there.

"He has found me, even here," she muttered. "Of course he would. He always does."

Laurie looked at her.

"Do you mean," he asked crisply, "that that chap across the room is following you around?"

She looked at him, as if abruptly recalled to the fact of his presence. Her eyes dropped.

"Yes," she muttered, dully. "I may escape him for a time, but he always learns where I am. He will catch me when he chooses, and roll me about under his paws for a while, and then perhaps let me go again."

"That sounds like a certain phase of domestic life," commented Laurie. "Is he by any chance your husband?"

Her eyes held a rising anger.

"He is not," she said. "I am not married."

Laurie dropped his dead cigarette into the ash tray, and rose with a sigh.

"It's all very confusing," he admitted, "and a digression from the main issue. But I'm afraid I shall have to go to the exertion of reasoning with him."

She started up, but before she could protest or restrain him, he had left her and crossed the room to the stranger's table.

CHAPTER V

Mr. Herbert Ransome Shaw

The man in the shabby blue-serge suit detached his absent gaze from the opposite wall, and looked up quickly when Laurie stopped at his side. He was clearly surprised, but courteous. He half rose from his chair, but the

"I Came Over Here," He Said Casually, "to Mention to You That You Are Annoying the Lady I Am With."

newcomer waved him back and dropped easily into the vacant seat opposite him. He was smiling. The man in blue serge was not. He looked puzzled, though vaguely responsive. A third person, watching the two, might almost have thought the episode the casual reunion of men who frequently lunched together.

Laurie leaned forward in his chair, rested one elbow on the table, and, opening his cigarette case, extended it to the stranger. The latter rejected it with a slight bow.

"Thank you, but not before lunch," he said, quietly. His voice and manner were those of an educated man. The quality of his tone was slightly harsh.

Laurie lit a cigarette, blew out the match and looked straight into the stranger's projecting gray eyes. He had acted impulsively. Now that he was here, he was anxious to put the job over concisely, firmly, but, above all, neatly. There must be nothing done that would attract the attention of the few persons in the big room.

"I came over here," he said casually, "to mention to you that you are annoying the lady I am with. I want to mention also that the annoyance must stop."

The glance of the stranger held. Laurie observed with interest that the veiled look of the projecting eyes had changed a little. The change did not add to the stranger's charm.

"Before I answer you, tell me one thing," he said, formally. "By what right do you act as the lady's protector?"

Laurie hesitated an instant. The question was embarrassing.

"Has she authorized you to act?"

"In a way, but—"

"How long have you known her? How well do you know her?"

Command of the interview was slipping from the younger man. He resolutely resumed it.

"Look here," he said, firmly, "I came to this table to tell you something, but I will decide what that is to be. I am not here to answer questions. It is enough for you to know that circumstances have given me the right to protect the lady from annoyance. I want to make it clear to you that I shall exercise that right. Hereafter you are to let her alone. Do you understand? Absolutely alone. You are not to follow her, not to enter places where she can see you," he recklessly ended.

The stranger looked at him through the light veil which seemed again to have fallen over the projecting eyes.

"I should really like to know," he said, "when and where you met her. I saw you starting off together in the taxicab, but I am not quite sure whether your first encounter occurred this morning."

"And you won't be." Laurie stood up. "I've warned you," he said curtly. "I don't know how well you understand our laws in this country, but I fancy you know enough of them to realize that you cannot shadow a lady without getting into trouble."

"She admitted that?" The stranger appeared to experience a tepid glow of emotion. "She must know you better than I thought," he added reflectively. "Doris is not the type to pour her confidence into every new ear," he mused, seeming to forget the other's presence in his interest in this revelation.

"Have I made myself quite clear?"

Laurie was staring at him with a mingling of resentment and interest. The other nodded.

"You have, my young friend," he said, with sudden seriousness, "and now I, too, will be clear. In return for one warning, I will give you another. Keep out of matters that do not concern you."

Laurie grinned at him.

"You forget that I have made this matter my concern," he said, lightly. "Try to remember that."

The other man rose. His manner had changed to a sort of impatient weariness.

"Get her out of here," he said abruptly. "You are beginning to irritate me, you two. Take her home, and then keep away from her, unless you are looking for trouble."

He delivered the last words so clearly and menacingly that the waiter who had appeared with his luncheon heard them and fell back a step. Looking into the veiled eyes, Laurie also felt a sense of recoil. The fellow was positively venomous. There was something serpentlike in the dull but fixed look of those goggling eyes, in the forward thrust of the smooth brown head.

"I've said my say," he retorted. "If I ever catch you around that studio, or in any way annoying the lady, I'll thrash you within an inch of your life; and then I'll turn what's left of you over to the authorities. Understand?"

He nodded and strolled back to Miss Mayo's table. For an instant the other man stood looking after him, as if tempted to follow. Then, with a shrug, he dropped into his chair and began the luncheon the waiter had placed before him.

Laurie found the girl standing by the table, ready for the street, her coat fastened, her gloves buttoned.

"Oh, how could you!" she gasped. "What did he say?"

Laurie summoned the waiter with a gesture and asked for his account.

"Sit down a minute," he suggested, "and tell me who he is."

"Not here," she urged. "I couldn't breathe here. Hurry, please. Let us get away!"

She was so obviously in earnest that he yielded. He paid the bill, which the waiter had ready, accepted that appreciative servitor's help with his overcoat, and escorted his guest from the room.

"But, for heaven's sake, don't run!" he laughed. "Do you want the creature to think we're flying before him?"

She flushed and moderated her pace. Side by side, and quite deliberately, they left the restaurant, while the stranger watched them with his dull, fixed gaze. He seemed to have recovered his temper, but it was also plain that the little encounter had given him something to think about. When he resumed his luncheon he ate slowly and with an air of deep abstraction, as if working out some grave problem.

"What's his name?" asked Laurie, as he helped Miss Mayo into a waiting taxicab.

She looked startled. Indeed, his most casual questions seemed to startle her and put her, in a way, on her guard.

Who is this hard-boiled stranger? Is Laurie letting himself in for a peck of trouble?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

And Now the Cowgirl Is Declared a Myth

A former state official of Kansas has declared that the cowgirl of fiction and tradition is a "mythical creature." If he had merely talked it, perhaps no one would have paid much attention, but he has written it in reminiscences filed in the archives of the Kansas Historical society at Topeka. He has taken from the writers of stories of the great open spaces a prize treasure, and he has created doubt in the minds of their readers.

Are we to believe that the splendid creature who rode like the whirlwind and outshot Wild Bill Hickok is a myth? How she dashed through page after page, turning stampeded cattle into a gentle, lowing herd by her mere presence after the cowboys had given up the job and how, when desert water holes proved dry, she saved the herd from dying of thirst by discovering through intuition streams of crystal purity! What a glorious figure she was riding at the head of a cowboy cavalcade to take vengeance on a band of "rustlers," and how indescribably brave when she dashed, a two-gun woman, into a lynching bee and rescued her hero! Are we to believe that all this never happened and that the cowgirl never existed?—New York Sun.

World's Greatest Novels

Lists of greatest novels are often compiled by literary authorities. They vary somewhat, as is natural where taste is a factor in the selection, but any comprehensive list of the world's greatest novels would include the following: Fielding's "Tom Jones," Richardson's "Clarissa Harlowe," Flaubert's "Madame Bovary," Hugo's "Les Miserables," Hawthorne's "The Scarlet Letter," Dicken's "David Copperfield," Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina," Dostoevski's "Crime and Punishment," Balzac's "Eugenie Grandet," Turgeney's "Fathers and Children," and Romain Rolland's "Jean Christophe."—Kansas City Star.

Drink Water to Help Wash Out Kidney Poison

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Begin Taking Salts

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

HELD UP MONDAY NIGHT BY BANDITS

FRED BELL HAS TRILLING EXPERIENCE

Bandit Gets Two Cents For His Evening's Work

Fred Bell iso ne Klemme man who has found out that being held up by an armed bandit on a lonely country road is no joke.

Fred Bell was returning to town Monday evening at about 6:30 or 6 45 o'clock and was on a lonely country road three miles west and a half mile suth of Klemme near the Schlei farm, and was hauling two head of cattle to town in Larsen's Ford truck. A man stepped suddenly onto the road in front of Bell's car aiming a shot gun at Fred and commanding him to stop and get out Fred complied with the request. The lone bandit further told him to "stick 'em up high," and at the same time frisked his coat pocket, evidently to see if Fred carried a weapon Then re comanded Fred to lower one arm and un-button his coat, which he did. The man then searched through Fred's coat and his overalls and all he got was two cents. Fred was then ordered back into his truck and droveo n.

Fred says the man who held him up was rather short, a little over five feet and a few inches tall and rather heavy set, and wore a light gray overcoat. He was not alone for almost as soon as Fred had gotten into the truck a large touring car picked up the stranger and drove west As near as Fred could tell the car resembled a Buick or Nash and had yellow wheels. The car drove up from behind Fred as he started home.

Hadt he bandit made a more thorough search of Fred's clothing he would have found more money, as Fred had another pair of pants on under the overalls and had some money in one of the pockets.

The experience Ferd had is one he does not care to have repeated for some time He has hadp lenty of excitement for af ew days.

CHILDREN ASKED TO GIVE DOLLS TO ORPHANS' HOMES

A national appeal is being made asking that school children donate their old dolls for Thanksgiving to the inmates of orphan's homes.

"Schools, women's culbs and civic organizations throughout the country are co-perating in the movement to supply dolls to orphan sylums on Thanksgivin," according to Dorothy Jhnson, se retary of the national committee. "In Japan and other countries beautiful doll customs have been established, but America still lacks definite doll lore."

The Times thinks the move is of real worth, and although the appeal comes a little late for Thanksgiving perhaps something could be done along this line to collect dolls and toys for the orphan children and get them ready for shipment for Christmas. We are sure the gifts would be gladly accepted.

Would anyone in Klemme volunteer to look after such a movement here?

The Odd Fellows Orphans home at Mason City, the Home at Council Bluffs and other homes will be glad to receive any such donations.

GRADE CHILDREN PRESENT BEAUTIFUL FLORAL PIECE

One of the most beautiful floral pieces was presented in memory of little Gertrude Bachman for the funeral services by the grade children in Miss Wheatman's and Miss Bell's rooms at chool Gertrude was a pupil in the first grade and the little chair in which she sat in her classes at school was beautifully decorated with white ribbon and covered with chrisanthemums and carnations, interwoven about the chair and sprinkled with smilax and fern Gertrude will be greatly missed by her little class mates at school, and no more touching remembrance could have been expressed than the flora piece by the pupils.

GREIMANNS SHOOT RED FOX EAST OF KLEMME

Last Friday Aaron, Henry and Rubin Greimann went out hunting for big game They were about to give up the chase, after tracking a fox for several miles when Henry went through a lot of brush and chased out wary Mr. Fox Aaron was on the shooting side and stopped him with one bullet from his high power rifle

If there is any big game in the country the Greimann boys will bring them in.

The fox shot Friday was a fine specimen and was large. A Mason City man bought the pelt.

WHERE THE TEACHERS WILL SPEND THANKSGIVING

The Klemme schools closed Wednesday afternoon of this week until Monday morning for the annual Thanksgiving vacation. This gives the teachers, who so can, an opportunity to spend a few days with folks at home or friends elsewhere.

The Klemme teachers will make use of their Thanksgiving vacation in various ways. Miss Bell will visit at her home at Des Moines. Her mother drove up from Des Moines today to get her. Miss Kidder will spend her vacation visiting at Indianola, but we do not know at what particular home. Miss Wheatman has such poor train connections to her home at Decorah that she will remain in Klemme. Miss Gauager will spend her vacation at home in Klemme. Mr. L. Hockey is going to eat turkey at "some-one's" home in Iowa somewhere—we do not know where the young lady lives. Mr. E. G Gary and family will spend their vacation visiting with Mrs. Gary's parents near Fort Dodge. Miss Stoner will spend Turkey day and her vacation in Klemme. And Mr. Penrod says he would like to spend Thanksgiving withh is mother at Pulaski, Iowa, but the distance is too great and the roads are bad, so he will postpone his trip until the holidays Anyway, we wish them all an excellent time.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

On Thursday morning at ten o'clock we will have our Thanksgiving service We shall begin promptly and close on time to afford those that may have other plans for the lay to carry them out.

From the very beginning it was a day of happy family gatherings and festivities. This is well and good. It should however not detract from the real or greater meaning of the day as a day of real Thanksgiving unto God from whom all blessings flow. Enter His courts with praise and come into His presence with Thanksgiving.

All services on the coming Sunday are regular.

A meeting of special interest is planned for Thursday Dec. 2, at Garner Thisi s one of a number of group meotings held within the bounds of the Algona district. Every phaseo f church work will find recognition and inspiration. It is, desired and hoped that each organization of the church will send delegates to this gathering and that as many other as can attend this meeting.

It is a one day meeting beginning at 9:30 and lasting throughout the day and evening.

EXPERIENCE OF WESTERN GIRL

Found Cannery Work Too Tiring

The fertile valleys of Oregon help to supply the tables of America. This is possible through the magic of the humble tin can.

In one of the canning establishments, Julia Schmidt was employed. It was complicated work because she did sealing and other parts of the work. It was strenuous work and she was not a strong girl. Often she forced herself to work when she was hardly able to sit at her machine. At times she would have to stay at home for she was so weak she could hardly walk. For five years she was in this weakened condition.

She tried various medicines. At last, a friend of hers spoke of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she gave it a trial.

"Everyone says I am a healthier and stronger girl," she writes. "I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to all my friends who tell me how they suffer and I am willing to answer letters from women asking about it." Julia Schmidt's address is 652 North Front St., Salem, Oregon.

Girls who work in factories know just how Miss Schmidt felt. Perhaps they, too, will find better health by taking the Vegetable Compound.

Mr Wize—"Do you know what is good for rats?"

Miss Slowe—"Why, poison, of course."

Mr Wize—"No, that would kill them—cheese."

Do you know what's good for a cold, or more properly speaking, what's good for a person who has a cold? The answer is

Thanksgiving, 1621

THERE are many holidays, but of all the holidays observed in this country none is more distinctively American than Thanksgiving. It is a legacy of the Puritans, cherished because of the romance and traditions which surrounded it.

Thanksgiving as we have come to know it is an American institution, but days of thanksgiving in celebration of special events and favors have been common to almost all nations and have been known since the earliest times. We cannot even guess, much less know, what primitive people of a forgotten age first gave thanks in their crude, superstitious way for rain after drought and for food after famine.

It appears that the Israelites were among the earliest people to observe a special day of thanksgiving. They observed faithfully, with great rejoicing and solemn ceremonies, their Feast of Tabernacles, a day of thanks not only for the bounties of the land, but also for the escape from Egypt.

The feast of tabernacles shalt thou hold for thyself seven days, when thou hast gathered in the produce of thy threshing-floor and of thy wine press.—Deuteronomy 16.13.

The ancient Greeks also had a day of thanksgiving, known as the Feast of Demeter. This nine-day feast was in honor of Demeter, goddess of the field and harvests, and was meant, very obviously, as a day of gratitude for the richness and bounties of the harvest. Sacrifices of fruit, wine, honey, and milk were made. The Romans appear to have had a similar festival called Cerelia, a time of rejoicing and thanksgiving.

Gave Thanks in England.

In England, as in other countries, it was customary to hold special days of fasting and prayer in times of danger, of famine, of pestilence. When the danger was past, when there again was plenty of food, plenty of water, no ravaging diseases, feasts and celebrations would be held by the people. These celebrations were fundamentally thanksgiving festivals. A special day of thanksgiving was proclaimed by Oliver Cromwell at the time of the defeat of the Spanish Armada. Another day of thanksgiving was declared on the day that the famous gunpowder plot was discovered.

Among the Siamese there is an old festival known as the "Swing Festival," which is similar to our own Thanksgiving. Its purpose is to show gratitude for the richness of the land, the happiness of the people. In this festival the much-quoted sacred white elephant of Siam assumes a prominent part. But although there have been many days of thanksgiving, and although many festivals like our own November holiday exist in many parts of the world, America was the first nation definitely to set apart one day in each twelfth month for the sole purpose of rejoicing in the good things of life and "giving God thanks."

All of us know the appalling hardships that the first settlers of America were forced to endure. A handful of homesick men and women in a strange, bleak country, Indians everywhere, food scarce and home across many long miles of ocean. No—home here, for they could not return to the land from whose intolerance they had fled.

In the first year, forty-six of the one hundred and one white people who settled in Plymouth died and were buried on the bluff overlooking the landing. But in the autumn of 1621 the remaining men of Plymouth gathered in a wonderful crop from the twenty acres of corn and six acres of barley and peas they had planted. And the cold weather brought plenty of game into the harbor. Plenty of food—and a great new hope in the hearts of the wanderers.

Friendly Massasoit Attends.

Governor Bradford gave directions that a day of thanksgiving be held on December 13, 1621, to give thanks for the great blessings that had been bestowed upon them. A feast was prepared including "as much fowle as with a little helpe beside, served the company almost a week." Friendly Massasoit, with his ninety Indian braves, was invited to the feast, and they came in all their holiday paint and feathers. Of white men and women there were only fifty-five at this First Thanksgiving.

Although Thanksgiving did not then become a regular yearly festival, our own Thanksgiving, which we observe every November, is a direct legacy of that historic feast with the Indians. Just when Thanksgiving became a fixed annual festival in New England has not been definitely established.

On February 22, 1630, a great public Thanksgiving was held in Boston by the Bay colony. It was in celebration of the safe arrival of the ships bringing food and friends from across the ocean.

As clearly as can be established, there were about twenty Thanksgiving days from 1630 to 1680—one every two or three years. In 1675 when the Indians attacked the settlers and engaged them in widely separated warfares there was no Thanksgiving. In 1742 there were two such festivals.

It was not until after the Revolution, when congress adopted the Constitution in 1789, that Thanksgiving was definitely established as a yearly day of festivity. Just before the congress adjourned one Boudinot moved that a day be recommended for universal thanksgiving. The motion was carried, and Washington appointed Thursday, November 26, as the "National Thanksgiving day."

For a period the holiday was observed faithfully, but somehow a break occurred, and one by one the states began to observe the day of Thanksgiving at different times. Just before the war between the states each state had a different day on which it celebrated Thanksgiving, but all these days were in November.

Lincoln Fixes a Day.

Reaffirming Washington's original intention, Abraham Lincoln in 1860 appointed a national Thanksgiving day to be observed the last Thursday in November. And so it has remained ever since.

The first Thanksgiving was unquestionably held in the winter of 1621, and was a simple expression of gratitude. There are some writers, however, who attribute the establishing of Thanksgiving to a different cause. It seems to be a common notion that "to the mind of the Puritan, Christmas smelled to heaven of idolatry," and that the Puritans abolished Christmas as a hateful relic of paganism, establishing Thanksgiving as a purely Puritan festival to take its place.

Wanting a day to replace Christmas, says one writer, the Puritans "appointed every year some day in autumn, generally in late November, as a day of solemn prayer and thanksgiving for the blessings of the year, and especially the bounties of the harvest."

According to this belief, Thanksgiving was simply a day of rejoicing and family reunion in November instead of December. The Puritans ate turkey, Indian pudding and pumpkin pie instead of the "superstitious meats and plum pudding" of Christmas time. But, we are told, the influx of Roman Catholics and Episcopalians brought Christmas and its customs into vogue again, and both holidays were accepted.

The distaste of the Puritans for Christmas may very possibly have helped to establish Thanksgiving as a national holiday. Years earlier in England the Puritans prevailed upon parliament to prohibit the extremely elaborate Christmas festivities then in vogue. Christmas was declared a day of fast, and festivities were prohibited by law. But we can be absolutely certain that Thanksgiving had its true inception in 1621, when fifty-five grateful men and women, surrounded by ninety painted Indians, gave thanks for the corn and fowl upon which they feasted.

Turkey and Pumpkin Pie.

Pumpkin pie and turkey are associated with Thanksgiving because both of these palate-ticklers were headliners on the first Thanksgiving bill-of-fare. Cranberries also appeared, they having been gathered from the nearby marshes.

Thanksgiving is a time of great social activity. The Puritans invited Massasoit and his gang of ninety to the feast. The hostess today invites a houseful. Somehow one feels more strongly at this time of year than at any other time the urge to give, to share, to be hospitable.

Before the war between the states it was a popular custom for families to hold great reunions on Thanksgiving. The children came from school; the married sons and daughters came with their families; aunts, uncles, cousins, friends, everyone came to the great turkey-carving. During the war and for a time afterward this custom died out, but later was revived. Today many families, both in the cities and in the country, still observe this old custom of reunion on Thanksgiving day.

The custom of making up baskets of food for needy families originated early in the Eighteenth century and was started by a group of young women who determined to set aside one day of the year to be devoted to purposes of charity. They selected Thanksgiving as the most opportune time. Today this custom survives in certain sections of the country, but the charity at Christmas time has replaced it in many communities, especially in the cities where newspapers have regular Yuletide campaigns for Christmas charity funds.

Every hostess knows that at Thanksgiving good food is as important as good fun, and that all other considerations hold but second place to what the table has to offer. A fowl of some kind is inevitable, and there is nothing like a great pumpkin pie for Thanksgiving atmosphere.

Hints for the Hostess.

Remembering the background on which this first of our purely American holidays is built, the hostess plans to have as much good cheer as good cooking. She starts off right by having the proper setting. The table decorations, for instance, are simple fruits and vegetables, instead of the customary flowers. For the centerpiece a huge pumpkin may be used, banked around with polished apples, autumn leaves and nuts. At each place there may be a scooped-out apple filled with shelled nuts, or perhaps just a lighted candle, if the children can be induced to be careful. Sometimes a great yellow paper pumpkin is used for a centerpiece, and it is filled with favors for the guests. Green and orange ribbons attached to the favors reach out across the table and end under the service plate.

True to the traditions of the day, the hostess brings forth all her finest and most cherished silver and chinaware. For this is a great day indeed to be celebrated as a jolly old-fashioned affair. It is the one time of the year when everyone likes to linger at the table, browsing in mellow lanes on memory, reminiscing fondly until the last candle has flickered and died.

According to one authority, Thanksgiving is not Thanksgiving at all if the pie is lacking. Lillian Eichler in her book, "The Customs of Mankind," quotes the following description of mince pie:

The true mince pie should be an inch thick, with a thin, flaky crust tinted by its imprisoned juices which threaten to break through. Around its edges must be a slight crinkle made by the tines of a fork, and in its top a hole here and there from the stroke of a knife to let the steam out. This steam, once known, can never be forgotten.

It typifies the joyous, generous Thanksgiving spirit, that steaming mince pie!

These Are the Games.

At the first Thanksgiving the Indians entertained with weird dancing, pantomine, feats of skill. The others, according to Edward Winslow, "among other recreations . . . exercised our arms." For three days they feasted and made merry, and somehow the spirit of jollity has hovered about the holiday ever since.

An old Thanksgiving game is called the cranberry contest. A large bowl of cranberries is placed on the floor and around it are seated from four to ten contestants. Each one is supplied with a spool of thread and a needle. At a given signal they thread the needle and begin to string the cranberries into a necklace. At the end of three minutes the one who has made the longest necklace is awarded the prize.

The corn game is very old, but it is always popular. Five ears of corn are hidden in the room, and the guests begin a search for them. The five to find the hidden ears are the contestants in the game; the losers look on. Then at a given signal the five contestants begin to remove the kernels from the corn and drop them in a bowl which has been placed on the floor for that purpose. The one who removes all the kernels in the shortest time wins.

In the old-fashioned pumpkin race, always a favorite, small pumpkins are rolled over a short distance with a spoon. The smaller the spoons the greater the fun. The pumpkins roll this way and that out of line, and must be coaxed back again, but not with the hands.

Drugless Treatment

Quickly Relieves Constipation

Baltimore Man Cures Self by Eating Simple Food

So common is constipation that we realize that nervousness, run-down condition, sour, gassy stomach, headaches, spells, lost appetite, blotchy, sallow skin, boils are caused by this common disorder.

Read the interesting letter from Mr. Rose:

"Several weeks ago one of your salesmen mentioned the wonderful results obtained from the use of Fleischmann's C-Y Chocolate Yeast and gave me several cakes which I ate. The results were very pleasing; a chronic case of constipation which had been troubling me for many years disappeared."

Harsh, irritating cathartics bring temporary relief. Eighty out of every hundred people go on suffering for years needlessly.

Doctors have long prescribed raw yeast for constipation, skin disorders, as a general tonic and digestive aid. Yet the majority of sufferers "simply could not take it." The sour yeasty taste was objectionable. Mixing with water was "too much bother." For these reasons the marvelous benefits of yeast were lost to thousands.

Now You Would Never Believe You Are Eating Yeast

C-Y Chocolate Yeast is live, vitalizing yeast, so skilfully blended with rich chocolate that all you taste is the chocolate. Yet it is full vitamine, regulative and tonic qualities are retained. The sour yeasty taste is gone. In handy wafer form C-Y is convenient to take any time, anywhere. No mixing, no delay.

Take C-Y Chocolate Yeast before meals for a week. Then good-bye constipation and its accompanying ills.

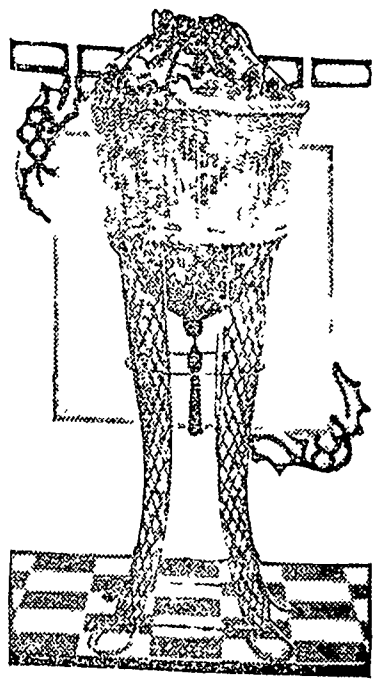
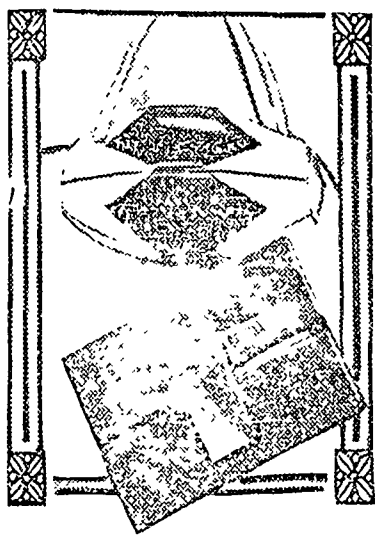
Things to Make or Buy for Christmas

A Pretty Work Basket



This highly decorative work basket makes a charming gift that every woman will love. It is made of paper rope, in a dark brown shade that will harmonize with any woodwork, or furnishings, and requires a wire standard and frame for the basket. The rope is woven over this, leaving open spaces about the sides. A gay cretonne forms the lining and is gathered into a brown silk tassel at the bottom and closed with draw strings of brown silk cord at the top.

New Ribbon Fancies

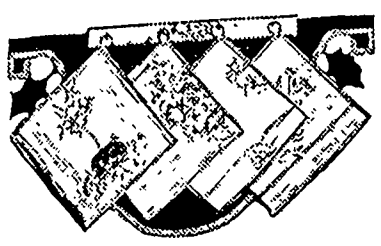


For Christmas gifts, purses, card cases and all sorts of fancy bags, neatly and ingeniously made of ribbon, come into bloom as regularly as poinsettia and Christmas trees. Here are two of this year's contributions—a flat envelope purse of black moire ribbon and a little melon-shaped work bag. The envelope purse has two flat pockets and fastens with snap fasteners under a flap that bears a rhinestone ornament. Sections of light satin ribbon with black diamond-shaped applique form the bag, that is left open between the handles of narrow ribbon.

Conceals a Gift

This demure colonial dame, with her quaint poke bonnet, conceals a box of talcum powder and provokes pleasant and grateful thoughts at the same time. Crepe paper, narrow ribbon and wire are required for her costuming. Her head is made of a bit of domestic stuffed with cotton, the pretty face painted on with water colors, topped by curly, artificial hair.

Gift for the Housewife



Here is a group of new holders to hang near the kitchen stove ready to serve a double purpose; for they are decorative as well as useful. They are made of gay cretonne, showing black stripes and bright flowers, on a white background. Each holder is bound with braid and has a little brass ring sewed to one corner, to hang it by. A small bar of wood is covered with the cretonne and carries four small hooks screwed into it, to support the rings. This is a gift that every housewife will appreciate.

Rabbit Wastes as Fertilizer

Feet, Heads and Other Discarded Refuse Have Commercial Value.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The left hind foot of a rabbit may or may not bring its possessor good luck. A sufficient number of rabbits' feet, however, together with their heads and the other refuse discarded when they are prepared for market, have a real commercial value. Raising rabbits for both meat and fur is a rapidly growing industry in this country, and the question of the most profitable disposition of the wastes is one of sufficient importance to challenge the attention of scientists.

Discarded Material Recoverable.

As in the case of packing-house wastes, part of the discarded material is recoverable as grease, part as dried blood, and the greater part as tankage or ammoniate fertilizer. Accordingly the bureau of soils has co-operated with the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture in an analysis of rabbit offal with a view to estimating its probable value if converted into these products.

Basis of Comparison.

Taking as a basis of comparison the fact that about 15,000 rabbits a week are slaughtered for meat in the neighborhood of Los Angeles, Calif., it has been found that products having an estimated commercial value of $30 daily should be obtainable from the offal of these rabbits. Incineration of these wastes would yield less than 150 pounds of ashes daily, containing bone phosphate of lime and possibly a little potash, worth less than $1 as fertilizer. While at the present time various practical problems present themselves to those who might consider establishing plants for reducing rabbit wastes, it may be possible for those persons to negotiate with firms already engaged in rendering meat scraps.

Mixing Acid Phosphate With Barnyard Manure

Fertilizer plots established 45 years ago at the Pennsylvania experiment station have yielded some very interesting information. According to Professor Gardner, manure applied at the rate of six tons per acre to these plots made it worth $3.85 per ton, but when used at the rate of ten tons it was worth only $2.72 per ton. The results of his experiment show that the most profitable use of manure is to spread it at the rate of five or six tons per acre rather than ten or twelve tons, which is commonly practiced.

These experiments also show that when manure was supplemented with acid phosphate, the increased crops produced yielded a substantial profit over the cost of the acid phosphate. It is profitable to mix barnyard manure with some form of phosphate fertilizer, especially on soils which have been growing crops for many years as they are likely to be deficient in phosphorus. Even the dairy farmer is finding it to his advantage to supplement manure with various fertilizers. The lowlands are quite likely to be lacking in potash and unless there is an unlimited supply of horse manure, some form of potash fertilizer can be used with profit on such soil.

Save Some of Choicest Leafy Hay for Chickens

In making plans for the poultry flock this winter save some of the choicest green leafy hay for the hens. This leafy material gives them to a certain extent a substitute for green grass at a time when everything is covered with snow. An easy way to feed it is to have a rack along the side of the wall and keep hay in this all the time much in the same manner as when feeding hay to other live stock. If the hay is put on the floor under their feet it becomes matted and holds moisture, and they do not get the maximum benefit from it. Alfalfa or clover leaves are about the finest thing you can have to stimulate egg laying during the winter.

BIG BUSINESS DEAL CLOSED SATURDAY

A. G. KOERNER TELEPHONE CO. SOLD TO MASON CITY MAN

Company Began Twenty Five Years Ago With Eight Telephones

One of the biggest business deals ever put over in the history of this town, took place Saturday at Mason City when A. G. Koerner, owner of the Koerner Telephone Company of Klemme, soldt he entire business, lines, cables, telephones and the exchanget o Mr. N. G. Clark, of Mason City.

A little history in connection with this transaction will be of interest to our readers as the Koerner Telephone Company is the oldest business in Klemme that has not changed owners in a quarter of a century of continuous service.

Back in the year 1901, in the early fall, Wm. Koerner, Sr. and his son Albert G. Koerner, saw the necessity of having telephone lines run out into the country to give the farmers closer connection with the town for the transaction of business. And like all pioneer attempts at establishing something new, there was doubt expressed by some as to the wisdom of the venture However, the first little telephone system was launched and one line was run out from the Koerner Bros. Store, which stood on the site now occupied by the Wellemeyer building. The first line had eight telephones.

In the spring the venture had been proven a success and a demand for telephones encouraged the Koerners to extend the lines further and install a 10-drop switchboard at the store and a real "central" thus was established with Al's sister, Helen Koerner, now Mrs. A. G. Lau of Mason City, as the first operator.

The installing of the switchboard was a far step ahead and was then a real business venture. However, the Company outgrew that equipment in about a year and further extension of lines was made.

Moved Into Bank Building

The Company was growing and larger quarters were needed so the "central" was established in the rooms at the rear of the banking rooms at the State Savings Bank. It was at this time or in the year 1903 that Albert Koerner made another big step—by getting married. The telephone exchange occupied the lower rooms for three years and about that time the bank began to grow and needed more room, so the telephone equipment was moved up stairs. The building had been remodeled and the former hall had been converted into living rooms and a telephone office and Mr. and Mrs. Koerner resided next to the office. Another switch board had to be installed and this time a 50-drop was purchased which seemed to be of ample size for many years.

Bought Present Location

In 1908 Mr. Koerner purchased some property in the northwest part of town from his father, which is now the present site of the Koerner Telephone Co., and the residense of Mr and Mrs. Koerner. Mr. Koerner also bought his father's interest in the Company at this time.

When the equipment was moved to its present location a 100-drop board was put into operation and since that time another 50-drop section has been added which takes care of 380 telephones scattered along twenty-six rural lines, the longest of which extends about nine miles from Klemme, the lines radiating out in every direction, besides the many lines and cables in town.

The Company has grown up with the town and Mr. Koerner has always kept just one pace ahead of the fast advancing times so that at all times he could render perfect service. The growth of this local company has been very interesting; starting with eight telephones on what was then a rather doubtful experiment, but Mr. Koerner had faith in the enterprise and through hard work has built up one of the best independent telephone exchanges in Iowa.

Whole Family Are Interested

We cannot give Al all the credit for the success of the telephone business Every member of his family knows the business from from A to Z, and even the younget daughter is an expert operator; in fact, all of the girls know the complete system. The two boys are expert line men as well as "trouble shooters" and electricians.

Mrs. Koerner Holds Record

Mrs A G Koerner can probably claim the record for length of service as a telephone operatbr Mrs Koerner has been the main operator of the system for twenty-three years continuously. She is the one who invariably answers all the night calls, so she has been on duty for twenty-four hours a day for twenty-three years. Very few, if any operators can claim such a record.

Has Given Good Service

No other business gives more service than a telephone company. A telephone company deals almost entirely with individuals in rendering a direct personal service. The Koerner Telephone Company has been especially striving to give the best of service and they have succeeded.

In our experience with the Company we have found them at all times very courteous and always ready to give prompt service on all calls at any time of the day or the night, and we believe they have broken many records for speed in getting long distance calls through

Will Remain In Klemme

Although they have sold their business, the Koerner family will remain in Klemme and will continue to operate the exchange for Mr. N. G Clark, for a few months at least. They have retained their home and property in northwest Klemme and will continue to reside in Klemme. Mr. Koerner recently purchased an acreage adjoining his place and he will go into the dairy and poultry business to some extent. The Koerner family is a fine family and we are glad they will remain in Klemme.

Will Make Improvements

The new Company, we understand are already making plans to rebuild the lines in town and will add new equipment at the central office. The exchange will be moved down town some place, but as yet we have not been informed as to just where the Company will locate permanently

Henry Suckow left last week Wednesday night for Unionville, Iowa, to spend Thanksgiving and the week-end visiting with his brother, Ed Henry says it is thirteen years since he last made the trip. It takes nearly twenty-four hours to get there on the train, although it is not so far. Ed. Suckow was here a couple of years ago visiting for some time. Henry got back into Klemme again Tuesday morning and said he sure had some big feeds and had a fine time.

AVERY-TWIN LAKES LADIES MEET

CO-OPERATORS OF TRAINING COURSE HELD LAST MEETING

All Day Session Held In Basement Of U. B. Church

The Farm Bureau Ladies of Twin Lakes and Avery Townships Co-Operators of the Training School held their last meeting of this course in the Parlor of the U. B. Church at Goodell, Monday, it being an all day session.

The lesson was lead by Miss Merle Ramer and was principally on Furniture, and she explained and illustrated how to distinguish the different kinds of Furniture from one period to another and how to distinguish the different kinds of wood and uphlstering used in the construction of the same

The subject of buying and placing furniture in the home in different rooms to make it useful and homelike and care of same was also discussed.

The last project discussed was how to make useful articles out of old discarded furniture which illustration was greatly admired and was certainly a clever demonstration.

At the noon hour a picnic dinner was held, the guests being Rev. and Mrs. Scott and family and Miss Iris Sherwood and Lela Griggs.

The meeting was adjourned at 4 o'clock and all present enjoyed themselves and received many good ideas and were glad to know Miss Ramer will be our demonstrator again next year.

The following ladies who attended this interesting meeting were from Twin Lakes: Mesdames Landon, Warnock, Wm. Greiman and C. Bode.

From Avery they were: Mesdames G. Snearly, W. Thada, J Griggs, L. Wilson, C. Arnold, W. Sherwood and E Hemingway.

NO JURY TRIALS FOR THIS TERM OF COURT

Wade Case Probably Postponed Until Some Future Term

Judge Edwards again convened court at Garner Monday following several days vacation over Thanksgiving when court was adjourned last Wednesday until Monday.

The Petit Jury was called to report for duty Tuesday morning, but we understand they were dismissed.

The Wade case will undoubtedly be postponed now as it was about the only case up for jury trial. In, this matter, the grand jury at a previous session, returned an indictment against J. A Wade for wife desertion The State will be assisted by Attorney John Senneff in the prosecution. Mr. Wade has Attorney J. E. Williams, of Mason City as his defense attorney

Walter Lau Indicted

Last week Tuesday the Grand Jury was in session and returned one indictment, and that against Walter F. Lau, now of Minneapolis, but who formerly conducted the elevator here. Lau is charged with the selling of grain from the Greisemer and Wenck farms and not accounting to L. R. Boomhower and J. W. Knadler, the assignees, with the funds.

The Grand Jury has been dismissed for the term.

Mr. and Mrs. Wes Heifner entertained a number of people at their home Thanksgiving day for dinner. Those who were present were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schuldt and daughter, Genieve; Grandma Heifner, and Dr. D. P. Anderson.

A. D. Gimer says he received a letter from his son, Harl, who is attending college at Morning Side, at Sioux City, and that some of the boys at Harl's rooming house have scarlet fever. The boys were all given a 'shot" and so far neither Harl or the other boys have not come down with the sickness and they will probably escape it.

P. T. A. WILL MEET TUESDAY NIGHT

MRS. J. N. SPROLE OF GARNER WILL GIVE TALK

All Are Invited To Attend Program Tuesday Night

On Tuesday night, December 7th, the Klemme Parent-Teacher Association will give a program at the high school auditorium.

Mrs. J. N. Sprole of Garner has been secured to come to Klemme to give an address before this meeting. Mrs. Sprole has filled many speaking engagements before P. T. A. meetings and various clubs in this part of the state the past year and she will give an interesting talk that all should hear.

Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, local minister will appear on the program and will give a talk. Rev. Grosshuesch will have an interesting message for the meeting.

Harvey Nelson, a high school boy, will read a paper on his reasons why farmers should be well educated. This is a subject which should be of real interest to all.

Orchestra Has New Set Of Drums

Mr. Gary was glad to receive the drums furnished by the School Board for his orchestra. We are glad for the Board's interest in our musical organization which has been enlisted the enthusiasm of so many of our high schol students. Music is an accomplihment that any young person today can be proud to possess. for it serves to introduce him into circles he otherwise might never be permitted to enter.

Vogads Will Perform Friday P. M.

The Vogads have no convenient night available for their literary program and will render it on next Friday afternoon at 3:00 P. M. Not so many can attend but we hope those who can will do so. The same admission will be charged that was charged at the Ko Ho Society program two or more weeks ago, ten and five cents.

In addition to the regular program a debate will be heard on a question of interest to Americans. There will be music both vocal and instrumental, readings and stunts. We believe the program will please those who hear it.

Last Number Of Lyceum Course

On Thursday night of next week Mr. Lacey will appear on our Senior Class Lyceum Course. He is being substituted for Robert Kemple who died Nov. 1. Mr. Lacey is an author, publicist and lecturer and may be after all superior to Mr. Kemple. He has been lecturing for several years and has many return dates.

Judging from the several subjects he has prepared addresses on, he has a lot of ability and information. He is represented as one of the most gifted lecturers on the American platform today. They say his speeches overflow with wit and humor—that they are so human you'll cry, laugh, think and rejoice.

Since we want many to hear this last number of the course we are reducing the price of admission to 35 and 25 cents. We hope everyone will take advantage of the treat offered them. We are confident he will please the most particular of his audience.

Neither Absent Nor Tardy!

The following pupils in our school have been neither absent nor tardy the first twelve weeks of this year:

First Room, Miss Wheatman teacher: Buster Jorgenson, Juanita Pavey, Aileen Smith, Max Barz, Carmen Kluckhohn.

Miss Bell's Room: Milvern Barz, Everett Barz, Leo Brinkman, Mabel Schlichting, Ruth Wellemeyer, and Thomas Gimer.

Miss Gauger's Room: Dorance Day.

Grades 7 and 8: Kenneth Kluckhohn, Byrnes Missman, Ethel Barz, Nova Koerner, Emma Goll, Gladys Schlichting, Willis Busch, Ruby Miller.

High School: Lela Bachman, Raymond Barz, Irene Bridges, Leona Buseman, Reva Elder, Wm. Gauger, Otho Keraus, Valeria Koerner, Agatha Stlemann, Wayne Pavey, Willa Wareham, Clarice Wellemeyer, Golda Moberly and Chas. Busch.

This is a pretty good record. To be neither absent nor tardy for 12 weeks in succession speaks well for both pupils and the home from which they have come. It means habits of regularity and punctuality are being formed and such habits are not formed by the carelessly inclined. It requires effort and forethought on the part of many parents to see that children are regularly at school and that they are started to school at such an hour they will be certain to arrive in time. Such habits pupils can well afford to cultivate and fortunate are the children whose parents help them to be cultivated. Several other pupils have seldom been absent or tardy and when they have been, doubtless have had just reasons for being late or out of school. Few students come very late. It would seem that just a little more care on theirs or their parents part might get them started amply early to arrive in time.

High School A and B Students

Below we give the names of high school students who have done the last six weeks better than average work. The highest quality of work is indicated by an "A," work above average is indicated by the letter "B."

Freshman Class

William Gauger 3 A, Clarice Wellemeyer 2 A and 2 B, Lela Bachman 3 B, Wayne Pavey 2 B, Agatha Stiemann 2 B, Jane Dutheridge 2 B.

Each of the following Freshmen 1 B: Raymond Barz, Valeria Koerner, Dorothy Helps, Leona Buseman, Helen Lemke, and Elsina Albers.

Junior Class

Gladys Wilson 3 A and 1 B, Harvey Nelson 2 A and 1 B, Golda Moberly, Ethel Johnson and Florence Stokesbary each 1 A.

Seniors

Hallie Greiman, 4 A, Luther Tanner 4 B, Vernon Turgasen 2 B, Asa Arnold 4 B, Kermit Koerner 1 A and 2 B, Ethel Wellemeyer 2 A and 2 B, Fern Stille 2 B, Myrtle Irving 3 B, Gertrude Johnson 1 B.

Sophomore Class

Kenneth Gast 1 A 3 B, Lucile Krause 1 A and 2 B, Laurence Greiman 3 B, Irene Johnson 2 B, Oral Gibson 2 B, Mabel Schuldt 2 B, Ray Lange and Elmer Larsen each 1 B.

The above letters include marks in the four major subjects.

The letters received show Hallie Greiman our leading student the last six weeks. She is a Senior and from a farm home. Hallie is modest and unassuming but is recognized as having superior ability. Gladys Wilson follows her very closely with 3 A and 1 B. Both girls have been absent some of the time, due to illness, but in spite of this handicap have excelled all others in their respective classes.

Asa Arnold and Luther Tanner are tied for third honors in the Junior Class. They have done better than average work in each of their four major subjects. They have been excelled by two girls, Ethel Wellemeyer and Gladys Wilson, Ethel getting two superior marks and two above average, ranking second in her class.

Kenneth Gast has won first honors in the Sophomore class. He has 1 A and 3 B. William Gauger and Clarice Wellemeyer are running a close race for first honors in the Freshman class.

Next week we shall indicate grade children who are doing better than average work.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Next Sunday has a threefold interest—it being known and recognized as Golden Rule Sunday—it is World's Bible Sunday—and it is the second Sunday of the Advent Season. All these interests should command and make our church life very real to us. Wea re trying to keep these several things in mind as we plan our Sunday services.

Both the Klemme and the Liberty W. F. M. S. held their meeting on Wednesday of this week.

BASKET BALL GAME FRIDAY NIGHT

KLEMME WILL PLAY AT GARNER NEXT WEEK FRIDAY

Game Friday Night Promises To Be Full Op Pep

On Friday night of this week the Swaledale High School Basket Ball team will invade the local camp of cagers. Swaledale and Klemme are ancient enemies and in the past have had some hard fought loop battles. The hatchet has never been buried and the war will break loose again Friday night.

The Shamrocks defeated Swaledale last year in both games and romped away with a comfortable margin and the long end of the score. Swaledale seeks revenge and is invading the local gym in hopes of looping more than the local Irish.

Supt. Mounce, who showed up so well as a referee in the game here with Rowan, has again been secured to referee the battle Friday night.

HOME TALENT PLAY DREW BIG CROWD AT GOODELL

U. B. Church Realized Over $100 From Proceeds Of Entertainment

The Stewarts of the U. B. Church at Goodell put on a "Home Talent" play and a Thanksgiving Food Sale in the basement of the church which drew a large crowd and proved a big success.

Those taking part in the program were Mr. and Mrs. Amos Hanson, Mrs. A. C. Carpenter, Alva Matson, Harold Savogue, Louise Mason and Floyd Scott, who all deserve much praise for the talent they displayed. And last but not least was the singing of several Southern Melodies by a quartette composed of Jule Cook, R. Van Tassel, Harry Newgardt and Matt Smith, acompanied by Mrs. Nellie Cook at the piano. These songs were illustrated by a Tableaux. Those taking part in the tableaux were, R. Van Tassel as Black Joe, who surely made a typical appearance of Joe, Iris and Lavonne Sherwood, Lela Griggs, Lolores Cook and Audrey Griggs. This entertainment was well wrth seeing and hearing, and all present enjoyed themselves immensely.

After the Sale of refreshments they realized the neat sum of $100.96. The community hopes they may have the pleasure of attending similar program some future time.

At the Country Store at the Idle Hour theatre last week Wednesday night Mrs. R. W. Elder received the sack of flour. Oofie Lau was sure of pumpkin pie for Thanksgiving as he got two cans of canned jack-o-lanterns; Mr. and Mrs. M. O. Barr must have been born under a lucky star as Marvin gathered in a bunch of celery and cranberries and Mrs. Barr took her pick of the breakfast food. Gracka Quandt captured another big bunch of celery and a hat ful of cranberries and Mr. Hummel was likewise treated, as well as Mr. Wayne Pavey who diminished Thomson's store of cranberries and celery. Buster Jorgenson brought home about seven yards of "dogs" and a can of sauer-kraut. Ye Editor is so full of "hot dogs" that he barks at the moon. Oscar Wenig, who lives on the same block as the Times outfit helped keep the groveries in the right part of town by taking home a package of breakfast food. Oscar didn't get up in time for breakfast, so he had it for dinner. The Hubbard girl was another cranberry and celery winner. Somebody got a pound of coffee, but they didn't leave their address. If the person who got the pound of coffee will bring a cup of it to the Times Office and a ham sandwich, we will give them due and proper mention. Mr. Thompson features the country store every Wednesday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Griffen entertained the following to a Thanksgiving dinner at their home: Mr. and Mrs. James Ferrier, of Mason City; Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Buechele, of Garner, and Mrs. F. L. Schweinefus, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Charles V

A GOUTY old man sat in a monastery cell, surrounded by dozens of clocks and watches.

"I cannot even make two clocks tick in unison," he whined peevishly. "No wonder I failed to make millions of people think alike!"

The old clock fancier was Charles V, who had given up affairs of state at the age of fifty-six, and who was spending the two remaining years of his life in monastic retirement. He had had a half century of experiences such as lent a certain pathos to his complaint about the clocks. Born in 1500 to the greatest power ever inherited by mortal man, he had risen to heights reached by no other ruler of his century and had lived to see his most-cherished plans fall to pieces.

Here are some of the titles that Charles fell heir to, as a mere boy: the archduchy of Austria, the sovereignty of the Netherlands, the kingdoms of Spain, Sicily and Navarre, and the rulership of all Spain's American possessions. In addition to this, when only nineteen, he was chosen emperor of Germany, and at twenty-six was crowned king of Italy. He ruled four nations which had nothing in common and no ties of mutual interest. These facts, of course, led to endless rivalries, revolts and international complications.

Moreover, a throng of outside enemies rose against the young monarch. Francis I, king of France, who had been one of his competitors for the German crown, promptly declared war on him, seizing the duchies of Milan and Burgundy, which Charles regarded as his own. Soliman, the Magnificent (under whom, from 1520 to 1566, Turkey reached its pinnacle of greatness), invaded Hungary, advancing to the very walls of Vienna, and, with his fleets, held the Mediterranean, menacing Italy and Spain. The Netherlands, too, were ripening for revolt, while a furious revolution broke out in Spain.

Added to this, an Augustinian monk of Germany, Martin Luther, defied the pope, protested against certain tenets of the Catholic church and advanced a "reformed" creed. He drew to him thousands of Germans, his adherents becoming known as "Protestants." The security of the Catholic church, of which Charles was the acknowledged champion, was thus menaced. Altogether he had his hands full.

To beat back France's armies on the Flemish frontier and in Italy, to check the Turks on the Mediterranean and in his own duchy of Austria, to stem the tide of religious disagreements and to reconcile clashing political parties—this was the task before him. He entered on an eight-year war with France, during which he drove the French from Italy and captured King Francis. He forced a humiliating treaty on Francis. This the latter at once broke, but in a second [illegible] as again beaten.

[illegible] led a great Turkish army [illegible] war w[illegible] Soliman German frontier and Charles over[illegible] in person to meet him, and [illegible] the Turks back to their own [illegible]ry. Then Francis, forming an [illegible]ce with Soliman, again invaded [illegible]. But Charles opposed the also successfully that they were [illegible]n glad to sign a treaty of peace. [illegible] revolt in Spain was put down [illegible] the Netherlands for the time appeased, so Charles had at last time to attend to the Reformation, which, under Luther, Melancthon and other teachers, had by ths time swept Germany from end to end. The emperor had crushed every military foe and had humiliated every royal rival; but here, in this new religious movement at home, he found an opponent he could not conquer—a power that throve under persecution.

Council after council was held, scheme after scheme proposed. Compromises were suggested, but found favor with neither party. As if this one setback had undermined his whole edifice of greatness, so the failure of Charles in reconciling the religious sects was followed by a series of new disappointments and misfortunes. He had hoped to bequeath all his power and possessions to his son Philip, but to this the German electors would not agree. So he foresaw that on his death the mighty one-man empire he held would be split up as had those of Alexander and Charlemagne. To add to his worries, Henry II (son of Francis I) of France, backed by other rulers, invaded Germany and captured several important cities, notably Metz. Charles sought to recapture Metz, but failed, and until 1870 it remained in French hands.

Charles made one more throw of the dice against fate. He arranged a marriage between his son Philip and Queen Mary of England, thus forming an English alliance to strengthen his own power and that of the Catholic church. But the couple had no children to perpetuate the scheme.

His most cherished plans set at naught, his own subjects refusing to be guided by him in matters of religion, his health broken, his territory successfully invaded, his son debarred from inheriting his chief possessions—the combination was too much for the old emperor. He gave up his throne and left to others the helm of state which would no longer obey his enfeebled hand.

His was that saddest of fates: The fate of the man who outlives the greatness he himself had created.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Leader of the Cantonese Armies Issues a Bold Defiance to World.

By E. W. PICKARD

THERE is to be no peace in China until the foreign powers abandon their extraterritoriality rights and concessions and the "unequal treaties" have been abolished.

Such is the bold assertion of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, the young leader of the Cantonese armies that have been sweeping upward from the south along the Yangtse river toward Shanghai. In his declaration, which is virtually a defiance of the great powers, he says:

"Conquering of the northern militarists is but a step in the revolutionary army program. We must instantly remove extraterritorial foreign concessions, put an end to the foreign supervision of customs, and to the foreign post offices.

"We positively will not agree to the gradual abolition of extraterritoriality over a period of years or await readjustment of China's law courts, but we must abolish before the revolution ends foreign judicial jurisdiction.

"This revolution purposes the downfall of imperialism, not as it is confined to China alone, but our opposition to it must spread to other countries under imperialist yoke.

"Denunciation of the Belgium treaty by Wellington Koo, minister of finance in the Peking government, meets our approval. We are willing now to enter into treaties with the powers on an absolutely equal basis, considering at present no treaties exist as all are unequal.

"Within this month we will have established the capital of China at Wuchang, removing the government bureaus there from Canton. China will have a committee form of government.

"Our attitude toward America is friendly, but we consider America an imperialist because she has not given the Philippines freedom. Any country holding territory outside its natural boundaries has an imperialist nature and must relinquish claims to such territory."

This may sound like bombast, but it must be remembered that Chiang is generalissimo of a huge army with unknown resources, that his campaigns have been remarkably successful, that he has the advice of Russian military experts and presumably the promise of backing by the Russian soviet government. The day after his defiance was made public dispatches from China said that General Yang-sen, former ally of Wu Pei-fu of Peking, who controls the western portion of Hupeh province and the eastern part of Szechwan province, definitely had gone over to the Cantonese. He has 50,000 troops, including 12,000 around Shansi province, near which fighting has been reported. General Yang-sen's defection gives all Szechwan to the Cantonese, also clearing the flanks and giving freedom of action against Marshal Wu Pei-fu's forces in Honan province.

It is asserted in Washington that the United States and 11 powers are soon to make the announcement that they cannot abandon their nationals in China to the mercy of the Chinese courts of law until order is restored there and the dispensation of justice is assured. This decision is based on the facts uncovered by the international commission headed by Silas H. Strawn. The report has not yet been given to the public, but it is known to give accounts of the travesties on justice perpetrated upon foreigners within the last two years under the regime of the war lords of China, each of whom in the territory he rules has constituted himself judge, jury and high executioner.

WHEN the State department at Washington gave out the recent correspondence with Mexico City in the controversy over the oil and land laws it was revealed that Secretary Kellogg in his last note served plain notice on the Calles government that confiscation of American property under those laws, which go into effect on January 1 next, would be followed by severance of diplomatic relations. Mr. Kellogg gave Mexico to understand that if Americans are deprived of the properties they acquired prior to 1917, when the nationalization program was adopted and in defiance of the understanding on which Washington recognized the Obregon government in 1923, the American government will withdraw recognition of the Mexican government.

Down in Mexico City the party leaders assert there is no prospect of the enactment of any legislation acceding to the American demands; but they also look for nothing more serious than a continuation of the controversy. The United States is expected to reiterate that the laws in question are retroactive and confiscatory. The Mexican government is expected to stand pat on its suggestion to Secretary Kellogg that he base his protests on concrete cases of retroactivity and of confiscation.

OF ALL the dominions of the British empire, only India and North Ireland seem dissatisfied with the decision reached by the imperial conference—that the empire shall henceforth consist in theory as well as in fact of an alliance of independent British nations under one king. As the adopted plan states of the dominions: "They are autonomous communities within the British empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any respect of their domestic or external affairs, though united by common allegiance to the crown and freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations."

India is displeased because she is omitted from the arrangement for the reason that her status was fixed by the India act of 1919. North Ireland objects because the new title of the king—"George V, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British dominions beyond the seas, king, defender of the faith, emperor of India"—includes Ireland as a unit, not recognizing the partition of Ulster. The Ulsterites fear this is part of a plan to force them to unite with the Irish Free State.

THERE were two important developments in the long-standing controversy over the best route for the proposed waterway from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic. The joint engineering commission of Canada and the United States made public its report indorsing the St. Lawrence plan. It urges harnessing of the St. Lawrence river for development of about 2,500,000 electrical horse power for apportionment between the United States and Canada and the opening up of the river and lakes to permit the commerce of the world to penetrate to the head of the Great Lakes. The cost is figured at $509,000,000. Of this total $275,000,000 is set out as chargeable to the navigation project, which, from the standpoint of the Middle West, is the big feature.

On the other hand, the Mississippi Valley association declared itself in favor of the so-called all-American route from the lakes to the seaboard at New York city. This was the recommendation of the resolutions committee headed by Thomas F. Cunningham of New Orleans.

ALBERT B. FALL, former secretary of the interior, and Edward L. Doheny, oil magnate, went on trial last week in the Supreme court of the District of Columbia, on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government in the oil leases. The prosecution contends that for $100,000, the purchase price of a New Mexico ranch, Fall aided Doheny's Pan-American Oil company in obtaining a fraudulent lease on the government's naval oil reserves in the Elk Hill fields of California, that the money was paid November 30, 1921, and that it was a bribe.

The defense is that the leases were made to aid the government's naval policy, that patriotism dictated the contracts on both sides, that the $100,000 was a loan to Fall because of a friendship that had existed for 30 years, cemented around a prospector's campfire on the southwestern desert.

AMONG the decisions handed down by the Supreme court of the United States last week was one of especial importance to public utilities concerns and their patrons. The court held that the "spot" reproduction cost of a public utility's property is its fair value for rate-making purposes and that the utility is entitled to not less than a 7 per cent return on the value so determined. Justice Brandeis, in dissenting from the opinion of his colleagues, declared that "'spot' reproduction would be impossible of accomplishment without the aid of Aladdin's lamp." He held that any estimate of "spot" reproduction would be "delusive" if based on "spot" prices of labor, materials and money when the plant required years for completion.

Other opinions of the court upheld the confiscation of automobiles used in the illegal transportation of liquor; declared rigid zoning laws constitutional and a public necessity; and rejected an appeal questioning the validity of the Massachusetts daylight saving law. The court also upheld the sentences imposed upon William F. Brims, former president of the Carpenters' District council in Chicago, and 24 other officers of either the council, the mill men's association or the Carpenter Contractors' association in Chicago, for conspiracy to violate the Sherman act.

WET members of the senate are determined to prevent any tightening up of the prohibition laws in the short session of congress, if that is possible. Senators Edwards of New Jersey and Broussard of Louisiana have called a conference for December 6, inviting Senators Edge, Bruce, Copeland, Wadsworth, Reed of Missouri, Hawes and Walsh of Massachusetts. Reed of Pennsylvania also was asked to be present.

The coast guard pulled off a rather startling stunt when it seized the German barkentine Carmen 140 miles off New York and brought her to port, presumably because she was laden with whisky though she had not landed any. But orders came from Washington to release the vessel and she was conveyed out of the New York port. In shipping circles it was believed the coast guard had mistaken the identity of the ship.

Gov. W. W. Brandon of Alabama went with eight friends to a camp near Magnolia Springs, and the sheriff raided the place and seized a lot of liquor. Every member of the party denied ownership of the booze, but each was held under bond on charges of illegally possessing liquor. Every one who attended the last Democratic national convention will remember Brandon as the perpetual announcer of "24 votes for Underwood."

CHICAGO, having been assigned the annual Army-Navy football game, fairly spread itself to do honor to the event. The game itself, the outcome of which is not known at this writing, was almost a minor feature. The cadets from West Point and the midshipmen from Annapolis were taken to the city on special trains, paraded on Michigan boulevard, took part in the formal dedication of Soldier field and its stadium, and were handsomely entertained at lunches, dinners and dances. Vice President Dawes and General Pershing were among the throng of notable personages who attended the dedication and the game.

JOSEPH McKENNA, former justice of the Supreme court, died in his apartments in Washington after an illness of several months. He was eighty-four years of age. Chief Justice Taft and the associate justices acted as honorary pallbearers at the funeral.

Leonid Krassin, Russian soviet charge d'affaires in England, died in London of pernicious anemia. He was one of the most gifted of the Russian diplomats of today and was in the midst of important negotiations with the British government.

New York society lost one of its best-known leaders in the death of Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs at Newport. She was Theresa Alice Fair before her marriage, and for years she, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish and Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont were the rulers of New York and Newport society.

IT IS probable that there will be a great railway strike soon in Canada, for 15,000 conductors and trainmen have voted to quit their posts. They are dissatisfied with the refusal of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways to grant them the 6 per cent wage increase which was obtained by trainmen in the United States.

Lesson for December 5

RUTH AND NAOMI

LESSON TEXT—Ruth 1:14-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Ruth.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Ruth a loyal Daughter.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ruth the Loyal.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Message of the Book of Ruth.

In order to grasp the matter contained in the lesson subject, there must be swept into view the whole book of Ruth. The lesson text which is to be printed has been confined to the first chapter, verses 14-22.

I. Ruth's Connection With Naomi (1:1-15).

On account of famine in Bethlehem of Judah, Naomi with her husband and two sons sojourned in the land of Moab. After the death of her husband her two sons married Moabitish women. After a time her sons died also. After the death of her sons Naomi resolved to return to her homeland, having heard that the Lord had visited his people in giving them bread. They went to Moab to escape trouble but only got into more. It was not until Naomi was thus chastised that she resolved to return. One purpose of God's chastisement is to cause His children to return. Naomi had the good sense to recognize that the hand of the Lord was upon her for good. When the time came for her to go, Ruth and Orpah accompanied her for a distance. This she permitted but determined to place before them frankly the difficulties which would necessarily confront them.

II. Ruth's Noble Choice (1:16-18).

Much as Naomi loved her daughters-in-law, she would not have them go into this matter blindly. She wished them to know the seriousness of their undertaking. She told them the worst that could come upon them. This principle ought to be carried out by us in all our relations in life. In this respect Jesus is our supreme example.

1. No chance to marry again. Naomi told her that she had no more sons for whom she could wait. In that day to be unmarried was the greatest disgrace. Society differed then from now. No avenues were left open by which a woman could earn her living and be independent. Furthermore, it was against God's law for the Jews to marry outside of their own people.

2. She must renounce her gods. Her idolatrous worship could not be carried on in the land where God's people dwelt. This was delicately touched upon when Orpah went back (v. 15). Orpah went back when it was plain there was no chance to get a husband. Now Naomi puts an additional test upon Ruth, that of giving up her religion. Ruth was equal to the occasion. Her mind was fully made up. She was willing to accept as her God the one who was able to produce in His subjects the nobility of character she had observed in Naomi. Naomi's very frankness in dealing with her caused Ruth to be more determined to cast her lot with her. Ruth's position was so definite and unfaltering that the very expressions have come down to us in words which "no poetry has outrivaled, and no pathos has exceeded, and which have gone through centuries with the music that will not let them be forgotten." She was determined to share Naomi's journey, her home, her God, her lot in life, and her grave.

III. Blessings Which Attended Ruth's Faithfulness.

Ruth was never sorry for her choice, because:

1. She found the true God (1:16).

Instead of her heathen god who was unable to help her, she now had the living God, the God of Israel.

2. She found human friends (ch. 2).

As she went to glean in the field she was led to the field of Boaz, a man of wealth and grace. The servants of Boaz treated her with consideration.

3. A good husband and a happy home (chs. 3, 4).

She not only secured a husband, but a man of God who had an abundance of this world's goods.

4. An honored place in the Israelitish nation (4:13-17).

Though she had to forsake her own people she became one of a nobler people.

5. She became a link in the chain of Christ's ancestry (4:18-22; cf. Matt. 1:5).

The one who fully decides for Christ and gives up all for Him shall gain a hundredfold in this life, and in the world to come eternal life.

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys If Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Economical Marriages

Economy marriages are on the increase in England. Mary and John are taking vows before a registrar in increasing numbers and eliminating the religious ceremony because of the expense. The civil marriages for a period of five years have made up 24 per cent of the total, which is a marked increase over prewar days. Registrars believe this is no indication of the slackening of religious belief.

PRAISES DRUGLESS TREATMENT

For Children's Constipation

Nashville Mother Finds a Simple Food Efficient. Children Love It!

MOTHERS have long looked for a harmless cure for constipation—one that children would readily take. For constipation works havoc with tender, growing bodies. Skin disorders, fretfulness, faulty digestion, lost appetite, lost resistance to disease, etc.,—are all traceable to that most common affliction—constipation. Read how Mrs. Davidson solved the constipation problem in her family:

> "While in New York a few weeks past I purchased a quantity of your C-Y Chocolate Yeast and found it most efficient for the treatment of constipation in children."

Harsh, irritating cathartics are not good for tender little bodies, give only temporary relief and are avoided by all careful mothers.

For years Doctors have prescribed raw yeast—a simple food, for correcting constipation, skin disorders, digestive trouble and as a general tonic, yet children, and most grown-ups too "simply could not take yeast." The sour yeasty taste was objectionable. Mixing with liquids was "too much bother." Thus the marvelous benefits of yeast were lost to thousands because of its yeasty taste.

Now You'd Never Believe You Were Eating Yeast!

C-Y Chocolate Yeast is live, vigorous yeast so skillfully blended with rich chocolate that all you taste is the chocoalte. The full vitamine value, regulative and tonic qualities are retained. The yeasty taste is gone. In handy wafer form C-Y is ready to eat anytime—anywhere. No mixing. No delay.

The GIRL in the MIRROR

By Elizabeth Jordan

COPYRIGHT BY THE CENTURY COMPANY
WNU Service

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan, leaving Laurie on his own. Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late, and he retorts that he seeks adventure. From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo. Again in the mirror's reflection he sees her with a revolver and fears she means to commit suicide. He rushes into her apartment, and, winning her confidence, induces her to lunch with him, though she warns him of danger. At lunch she admits there is a mystery in her life. She says also that her funds are almost exhausted, but refuses flatly Lauries' offer of financial help. As a stranger enters the restaurant, the girl mutters "He has found me." Upon learning that the man has no claim on her, Laurie warns the stranger not to molest the girl, whose name, Laurie learns, is Doris.

—3—

"Shaw," she answered, unwillingly. "Is it spelled P-s-h-a-w?"

Laurie asked the question with polite interest. Then, realizing that in her preoccupation she did not follow this flight of his mercurial spirits, he sobered. "It's a perfectly good name," he conceded, "but there must be more of it. What's the rest?"

"He calls himself Herbert Ransome Shaw."

Laurie made a mental note of the name.

"I shall call him Bertie," he firmly announced, "to show you how unimportant he really is. By the way"—a sudden memory struck him—"he told me your name—Doris."

He added the name so simply that he seemed to be calling her by it. A faint shadow of her elusive smile touched her lips.

"I like it—Doris," Laurie repeated, dreamily.

"I am so glad," she murmured.

He ignored the irony in her tone.

"I suppose you have several more, like our friend Bertie, but you needn't tell them to me. If I had to use them every time I spoke to you, it might check my inspiration. Doris will do very nicely. Doris, Doris!"

"Are you making a song of it?"

"Yes, a hymn."

She looked at him curiously.

"You're a queer boy. I can't quite make you out. One minute you're serious, and the next—"

"If you're puzzled over me, picture my mental turmoil over you."

"Oh—me?" With a gesture she consigned herself to the uttermost ends of the universe.

The taxicab had stopped. They had reached the studio building without observing the fact. The expression on the features of the chauffeur suggested that if they wanted to sit all day they could do it, but that it would not be his personal choice. Doris held out her hand.

"Good-by," she said gently. "And thank you. I'm really more—appreciative—than I seem."

Laurie's look expressed more surprise than he had ever really experienced over anything.

"But we haven't settled matters!" he cried. "We're going to the bank—"

"We are not."

She spoke with sharp decision Then, relenting at the expression of his face, she touched the heavy gold-and-amber chain around her neck.

"I can pawn this," she said briefly. "It didn't seem worth while before, but as I've got to go on, I promise you I will do it. I will do it today." she added hurriedly, "this afternoon, if you wish. It is valuable. I can get enough on it to keep me for a month."

"Till we find that job for you," he suggested, brightening.

She agreed, with a momentary flash of her wonderful smile.

"And you will let me drop in this evening and take you to dinner?"

"No, thank you. But—" again she relented—"you may come in for an hour at eight."

"I believe you are a crowned head," murmured Laurie, discontentedly. "That's just the way they do in books. When I come I suppose I must speak only when I'm spoken to. And when you suddenly stand up at nine, I'll know the audience is over."

She laughed softly, her red-brown eyes shining at him. Her laughter was different from any other laughter he had ever heard.

"Good-by," she repeated.

He helped her out of the cab and escorted her into the studio building, where he rang the elevator bell and waited, hat in hand, until the car came down. When it arrived Sam was in it. Before it stopped he had recognized the waiting pair through the open ironwork of the door. To Laurie, the elevator and Sam's jaw seemed to drop in unison.

The next instant the black boy had resumed his habitual expression of indifference to all human interests. Dead-eyed, he stared past the two young things. Dead-eared, he ignored their moving lips. But there was fellowship in the jocund youth of all three. In an instant when Laurie stepped back into the hall as the car shot upward, the eyes of the negro and white man flashed a question and an answer:

In Sam's: "You done took her out an' fed her?"

In Laurie's: "You bet your boots I did!"

CHAPTER VI

Laurie Solves a Problem

Laurie walked across the square to his own rooms. A sudden gloom had fallen upon him. He saw himself sitting in his study, gazing remotely at his shoes, until it was time to dress for the evening and his formal call on Doris.

The prospect was not attractive. He hoped Bangs would be at home. If so, perhaps he could goad him into one of the rages in which Bangs was so picturesque; but he was not sure of even this mild diversion. Rodney had been wonderfully sweet-tempered the past three days, though preoccupied, as if in the early stages of creative art. Laurie half suspected that he had begun work on his play. The suspicion aroused conflicting emotions of relief and half-jealous regret. Why couldn't the fellow wait till they could go at it together? He ignored the fact that already the fellow had waited six weeks.

Bangs was not at home. The square, flat-topped mahogany desk at which the two young men worked together blinked up at Laurie with the undimmed luster of a fine piece of furniture on which the polisher alone had labored that morning. Without taking the trouble to remove his hat and coat, Laurie dropped into a chair and tried to think things out. But the process of thinking eluded him, or, rather, his mind shied at it as a skittish horse might shy if confronted on a dark road with shapes vaguely familiar yet mysterious.

Frankly, he couldn't make head or tail of this mess Doris seemed to be in. His memory reminded him that such "messes" existed. He had heard and read of all sorts of plots and counter-plots, in which all types of humans figured. His imagination underscored the memory. But, someway, Doris—he loved to repeat the name even to himself—someway Doris was not the type that figured in such plots.

Also, there were other things hard to understand. She had let herself starve for four days, though she wore around her neck a chain that she admitted represented a month's support. And this fellow, Herbert Ransome Shaw—where the devil did he come in? A fellow with a name like that and with snaky eyes like his was capable of anything. And yet—

Young Devon had the intolerance of American youth for the things outside his personal experience. The sort of thing Doris was hinting at didn't happen here; that was all there was to it. What was happening seemed pretty clear. The girl was, or fancied herself, in the power of an unscrupulous scamp who was using that power for some purpose of his own. If that was it—and this thing, Laurie handsomely admitted, really did happen sometimes—it ought to be fairly easy for an athletic chap of twenty-four to put an end to it. He recalled the look in Shaw's projecting eyes, the snakelike forward thrust of his sleek head; and an intense desire seized him to get his hands on the fellow's throat and choke him till his eyes stuck out twice as far as they did now. If that were duty, then duty would be a delight.

Having reached this edifying point in his reflections, he rose. Why delay? Perhaps he could find the chap somewhere. Perhaps the waiter at the restaurant where they had lunched knew where he lived. But, no, of course not. It was not the kind of restaurant his sort patronized. Shaw had simply followed him and Doris there; that was all there was to it. He, Laurie, would have to wait for another encounter. Meantime he might run around to the club and box for an hour. He had been getting a bit out of condition this month. A bout with McDonald, the club trainer, would do him good. Or, by Jove, he'd go and see Louise Ordway!

He had promised his new brother-in-law, Bob Warren, to keep an eye on Bob's sister while Warren and Barbara were in Japan, and Laurie had kept the promise with religious fidelity and very real pleasure. He immensely liked and admired Mrs. Ordway, who seemed, strangely, to be always at home of late. He had formed the habit of running in several times a week. Louise not only talked, but, as Laurie expressed it, "she said things." He had spent with her many of the afternoons and evenings Bangs checked up to the cabarets.

He glanced at his watch. For an hour he had been impersonating a gentleman engaged in profound meditation, with the sole result that he had decided to go to see Louise. It was quite possible he could enlist her interest in Doris. Now, that was an inspiration! Perhaps Mrs. Ordway would understand Doris. Every woman, he vaguely believed, understood all other women. He smoothed his hair, straightened his tie, and hurried off.

He found Mrs. Ordway reclining on a chaise longue before an open fire, in the boudoir in which his sister Barbara had spent so many hours of the past year, playing the invalid to sleep. She wore a superb Mandarin coat, of soft and ravishing tints, and her love for rich colors was reflected in the autumnal tones of her room and even in the varl-colored flames of her driftwood fire. To Louise these colors were as definite as mellow trumpet-tones. She had responded to them all her life. She was responding to them still, now that she lay dying among them. Something in their superb arrogance called for an answering note from her own arrogant soul.

She greeted her brother's young brother-in-law with the almost disdainful smile she now turned on everything, but which was softened a little for him. Ignorant of the malady that was eating her life away, as indeed all her friends were ignorant of it, save Barbara and her doctors, Laurie delighted in the picture she made. He showed his delight as he dropped into a chair by her side. They fell at once into the casual banter that characterized their intercourse.

"I wonder why I ever leave here?" he mused aloud, as the clock struck six. He had been studying with a slight shock the changes that had taken place in the few days since he had seen her. For the first time the suspicion crossed his mind that she might be seriously ill. Throughout their talk he had observed things, trifles, perhaps, but significant, which, if they had occurred before, had escaped him.

Susanne, Mrs. Ordway's maid, though modestly in the background, was rarely out of sight; and a white-capped nurse, till now an occasional and illusive vision in the halls, blew in and out of the sickroom like a breeze, bringing liquids in glasses, which the patient obediently swallowed. Laurie, his attention once caught, took it all in. But his face gave no hint of his new knowledge, and the eyes of Louise still met his with the challenge they turned on every one these days—a challenge that definitely forbade either understanding or sympathy.

"The real problem is why you ever come." She spoke lightly, but looked at him with genuine affection. Laurie was one of her favorites, her prime favorite, indeed, next to Bob and Barbara. He smiled at her with tender significance.

"You know why I come."

"I do," she agreed, "perfectly. I know you're quite capable of flirting with me, too, if I'd let you, you absurd boy. Dearie"—for a moment or two she was almost serious—"why don't you fall in love?"

"And this from you?"

"Don't be foolish. You know I like your ties," she interpolated kindly. "But, really, isn't there some one?"

Laurie turned his profile to her, pulled a lock of hair over his brow, clasped his hands between his knees and posed esthetically.

"Do you know," he sighed, "I begin to think that, just possibly, perhaps, there's a slight chance—that there is!"

"Be serious. Tell me about her."

"Well, she's a girl." He produced this confidence with ponderous solemnity. "She lives across the square from me," he added.

"Things brighten," commented Louise, drily. "Go on."

"She's mysterious. I don't know who she is, or anything about her. But I know that she's in trouble."

"Of course she is! I have never known a mysterious maiden that wasn't," commented the woman of the world. "What's her particular variety of trouble?"

Laurie reflected.

"That's hard to say," he brought out at last. "But it appears to be mixed up with an offensive person in a crumpled blue suit who answers to the name of Herbert Ransome Shaw. Have you ever heard of him?"

Louise wrinkled her fastidious nose.

"Never, I'm happy to say. But he doesn't sound atttractive. However, tell me all about them. There seems a good chance that they may get you into trouble."

"That's what she said."

"It's the one gleam of intelligence I see in the situation," commented his candid friend. "Is she pretty?"

"As lovely in her way as you are. Think you could help her any?" wheedled Laurie.

"I doubt it. I'm too selfish to be bothered with girls who are in trouble. I'll tell you who can help her—Sonya Orleneff."

"Of course!" Laurie beamed at her. "Wonder why I didn't think of that."

"Probably because it was so obvious. Sonya is in town, as it happens, stopping at the Warwick. She has brought the Infant Samuel to New York to have his adenoids cut out. Samuel made a devastating visit here this morning. He's getting as fat as a little pig, and when he walks he puffs like a worn-out automobile going up a steep grade. He came up my stairs on 'low,' and I'm sure they heard him on the avenue. I almost offered him a glass of gasolene. But he is a lamb," she added reflectively. Oddly enough, Samuel, late of New York's tenements, was another of her favorites.

Laurie was following his own thoughts. Sonya was in town! Then, however complicated his problem, it was already as good as solved.

"My dinner will be up soon," suggested Louise. "Are you dining with me?"

He glanced at his watch, reproachfully shook his head at it, and rose.

"Three hours of me are all you can have this time. But I'll probably drop around about dawn tomorrow."

"Nice boy!" Her hot hand caught his and held it. "Laurie, if—if—I should send for you suddenly sometime—you'd come and—stand by?"

All the gaiety was wiped from his face. His brilliant black eyes, oddly softened, looked into her haughty blue ones with sudden understanding.

"You bet I will! Any time, anything! You'll remember that? Send for me as if I were Bob. Perhaps you've forgotten it," he added, more lightly, "but I happen to be your younger brother."

For a moment her face twisted. The mask of her arrogance fell from it.

Fate is about to turn a trick, but Laurie is too practical and hard-headed to worry over "mysteries."

Ten Apostles on Roll of Martyrs of World

According to the generally received traditions of the church the twelve apostles came to the following ends: Andrew suffered martyrdom at Patrae in Achaia, on a cross of the form known as St. Andrew's cross; Bartholomew was crucified at Albanopolis in Armenia; James the younger was probably stoned to death; Matthew died a natural death; Philip died a violent death at Hierapolis, but by what mode is uncertain; Simeon Peter was crucified at Rome; Thaddeus, or Jude, probably suffered martyrdom in Persia; John, the beloved disciple, lived, according to Jerome, to be about one hundred years old, and died at Ephesus; Simon Zelotes was crucified at one hundred twenty-nine years of age; Thomas was put to death in India, and Judas Iscariot hanged himself.

When some men start out to look for the deserving poor their first step is in front of a mirror.

Modesty is the citadel of beauty and virtue.—Demades.

Cajun Justices Not Ruled by Blackstone

The old cajun justices of southwestern Louisiana were important personages. The trials, which were held at the justices' homes, were made all-day affairs, the neighbors driving in from miles around. Evidence was taken interminably, although the verdict was usually based upon the justice's point of view rather than upon any mere point of law.

For example, I know of a planter who brought suit against one of his tenants for the recovery of a calf. His ownership being proved, he was awarded possession of the animal. Next he was ordered to pay the costs of the court.

"But," objected the planter, "I have won my case. The loser should pay."

"True," agreed the justice. "But then, m'sieu, you have the money, whereas the other has not."

However, it was in domestic matters that these "prairie judges" really shone. One of them declared proudly that he could marry and divorce quicker than any other man in the state.

"It is quite simple," said he. "Gobbie wishes to tie up with some girl. That is all right. He gives me $5 and I write down his marriage in my book.

"After a while he don't like it? He wants to be free? That is all right again. For $10 more I tear out the page."—Nevil Henshaw in Adventure Magazine.

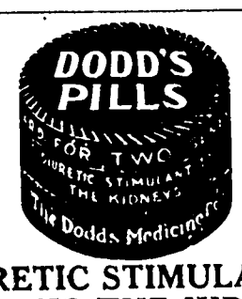
His Ambition

"You say you want a whole roast chicken?" asked the waiter.

"Yes," snapped the weary-looking man at the table. "I said a whole one—w-h-o-l-e whole one."

"Are there to be others at your table?" inquired the waiter.

"No," shouted the man, "there are not! For once I am going to carve up a chicken and serve myself the parts I like. If I just ordered chicken you'd serve me pieces of the back, a wing or the neck, and that's just the kind of chicken I enjoy at home."



DIURETIC STIMULANT TO THE KIDNEYS

Standard for Generations

We received this letter from Mrs. J. Dota, of Zanesville, O.:

"For twenty long years I suffered with heart disease and bladder inflammation. I had frequent chills, cramps in the muscles, and suffered from headache and backache. I was often dizzy and had flashes of light and floating specks before my eyes. I could get no help until I started to take Dodd's Pills. Then I began to improve right away and six boxes of these pills completed the cure. My little boy also had kidney trouble and was cured by Dodd's Pills. I hope thousands of others, suffering as I have, hear of your wonderful remedy."

NOTICE OF ASSESSMENT OF BENEFITS

On Additional Lands Included In Drainage District No. 9

To all persons named herein, owners of lands that have been added and included within Drainage District No. 9, and to all other persons whom it may concern, including occupants of lands embraced in such additional and inclusion.

You and each of you are hereby notified that the Commissioners heretofore appointed, viz: A. J. Lilly, H. V. Reed and J. C. Ford, to apportion costs, costs of construction, damages and assessment of benefits between the several tracts of land which have been added to and included in Drainage District No. 9, have filed their report and the same is now on file in the County Auditor's Office in Garner, Iowa. And you are further notified that the Board of Supervisors has fixed the 13th day of January, 1927, at 1:00 o'clock P. M. as the time for hearing the same before the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, at the Court House in Garner, Iowa.

All objections to the said report must be in writing, filed with the County Auditor at or before the time for hearing on said 13th day of January, 1927, at 1:00 o'clock P. M.

The said Board of Supervisors will then and there hear and determine all objections, made and filed, to said report and may increase, diminish, annul or affirm the apportionment made in said report, or any part thereof, as may appear to the Board to be just and equitable, or the hearing may be adjourned from time to time for cause.

NEAR EAST AGAIN SENDS CALL TO AMERICA

Unto whom much is given much is expected. America, in material resources and wealth, has every other nation of the world far out classed. People of other lands stand amazed at our industrial progress and achievements. In mass production America excels every nation. She excels every nation in the acres of coal land, production of iron, cotton, corn, petroleum, copper, timber but put, and agricultural products.

We have become since the war the nation to whom all others have gone to for money or loans. We have changed from a debtor nation to the greatest creditor nation.

Because we hold such an eminent plare as regards wealth among the nations of the world and, because our government has discouraged further loans to nations of Europe until they have signed agreements about the payments of these loans we have lost the affection of many peoples we enjoyed before the war Tourists return from abroad and report an ugly feeling there toward us They seem afraid we are to get a mortgage on all Europe. They look upon us as "dollar chasers," as lords of the earth with little or no interest in the welfare of others outside of America.

Yet next Sunday we shall prove we have been misjudged. On this Golden Rule Sabbath day Americans everywhere will open their hearts to the needs of the children and adults of the Near East, of Armenia, Syria and Palestine. A great many children have been rescued from freezing and starvation by American money. Orphanages have been built and food and clothing obtained, nurses employed, and training given the people of these lands who have lost homes, parents and their all during the war. These people will learn the heart of America is not the cold one it has been represented.

One million lives have already been saved by our money and others have been equipped to become independent. But the work is not yet done. Last October Armenia suffered the severest earth quake it has ever known, wrecking many homes and American orphanages, and while thousands of Americans have been heavily clothed in woolen blankets and robes while seated in million dollar college stadiums of our wealthy land enjoying our national college game of football, folks in the near East were suffering for shelter, clothing and food on the wind and snow swept plains of Armenia. From Omaha has come the call to Klemme. Shall we do our part toward these unfortunate victims who thru no fault of their own have been left in this sorry plight?

Shall these little children be allowed to suffer the needed good food and become a prey to epidemics, tuberculosis, measles, dysentery, and other disease? In one day 40 children died of measles, in another thirty-one passed away.

Were we in their places and they in ours, how grateful we'd be for help at this cruel hour. If given we'd be their friends the remainder of our lives.

America will be given an opportunity next Sunday to win lasting friends among foreign peoples, an opportunity to show her heart is sound and Christian, to disprove the charge that we are interested only in material things.

"In as much as ye have done it unto these ye have done it unto me."

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you do ye even so unto them."

Near East Relief.

Receiving letter via. air mail in Klemme is rather a novelty as yet. A. D. Gimer received such a letter Thanksgiving day which was mailed at the Hudson Terminal station at New York City at 6:00 P. M. Nov. 23 and recancelled at Chicago the next morning, Nov. 24 at 7:30 A. M. Mr. Gimer received it here at 8:10 A. M. Nov. 25th. The letter was approximately 38 hours only on the way. The letter carried 15 cents in postage.

Sumner Trumbell was at Britt on business Tuesday afternoon. While there he saw a big highway snowplow go through to Emmet county. The men taking it through put on a demonstration at Britt. "Sum" says it looked like a good outfit. It had two big augers for loosening up hard snow and a big fan blew the snow to the side of the road.

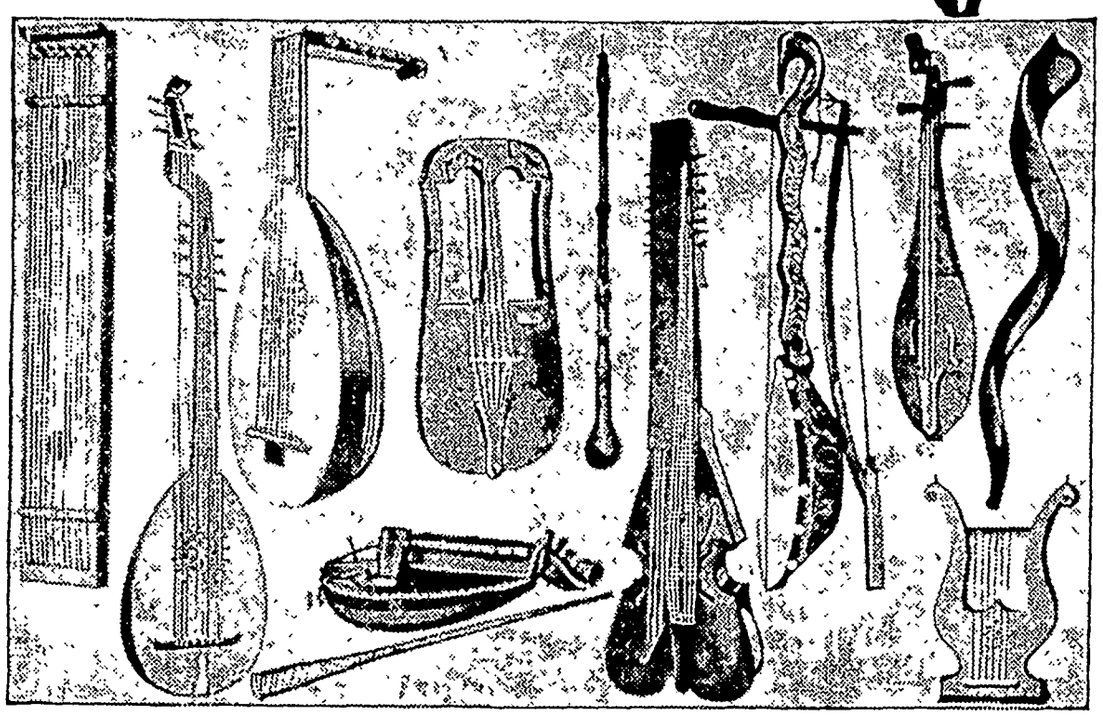
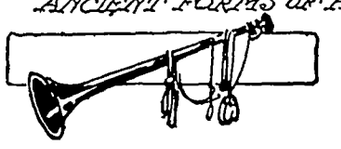
Music Through the Ages



EARLY REED INSTRUMENTS

A MODERN MUSICAL ODDITY

ANCIENT FORMS OF HORNS



THE Nile had overflowed its banks. When the waters receded, a tortoise was left upon the bank. In time this tortoise went the way of all other tortoises: he was completely dried up in the sun. But the tendons attached to the shell remained, becoming tightly drawn by the expansion of the shell. Hermes, wandering upon the bank, accidentally struck his foot against it. The tendons resounded, and Hermes found the natural lyre.

This legend of the discovery of one of the oldest of musical instruments is to be found in Greek and Hindu mythology, and indicates the great antiquity to which the art of music traces itself. Nobody knows just when or where music had its beginning, but we do know that music began long before the dawn of history. It is certain, too, that music antedates painting, sculpture and other arts. Whether instrumental music was the forerunner of singing, or vice versa, [illegible] there is no questioning that from the dimmest ages of recorded time down to the present day the strange power of controlled vibrations has left its influence on man.

The wherefore of music is another mystery. As to whether music was an imitation of natural sound or merely the natural expression of human feelings, there remains little doubt. Students are inclined to believe that musical instruments in their primitive forms were derived directly from nature. The whistling of the wind through the trees and vines, the twang of the bowstring as the arrow is released, the echo in the cave, or the rumbling of a hollow log when struck are but a few of the many causes which may have suggested to the early man the possibilities of sound-producing instruments.

Here's How Music Is Made.

Since the first musical instrument was conceived, there have been hundreds of different kinds evolved, most of which have long since been forgotten. All, however, have been based on three methods by which musical sound may be produced. One is by vibrating strings, another by vibrating bodies either hollow or solid, set into motion by blows. In the first, the strings or corresponding material, are set into vibration by being rubbed, plucked or struck; in the second the air columns in the tubes of various lengths may either vibrate themselves or the air currents may set into vibration thin tongues of reed, or metal in the mouthpieces of the instruments, or, they may cause to vibrate the lips of the players pressed against the mouthpiece, while in the third, the bodies which are set into motion by blows may consist of almost any substance—stretched skins, parchments, pieces of wood, or metal, and may be of any size or shape. In the modern orchestra, these methods are represented in the string section, the wind section made up of "woodwinds and brasses," and the percussion section.

It is not without probability that the first musical instrument was a primitive form of drum, although the flute in its earliest forms dates back to two or three thousand years before the Christian era. Rapping or pounding on something is almost an instinctive emotional outlet, and in the childhood of the race such instinctive outlet probably gave rise to some forerunner of the present percussion instruments. It was music of a sort, but it was crude, harsh and discordant—to modern ears at least, as is most of the music found in savage tribes today.

The horn was another instrument that made its appearance early. The very word, "horn," used to designate the great family of wind instruments, holds the suggestion of its origin. There is every reason for believing that the earliest musicians utilized the crude horns of beasts for their instruments, and to this day the sho-far is blown in Jewish synagogues in connection with certain festivals.

Egypt Improved the Art.

Of the ancient nations, the Egyptians contributed greatest to the music in their time. The Egyptians discovered the mathematical formula which controls sound vibrations, and made use of this knowledge to fashion instruments which would give forth the tones they desired. This was the beginning of artificial instruments—in the sense that they were not mere adaptations of something found in the natural state. String instruments were used extensively by the early Egyptians, and up until the Napoleonic expedition to Egypt, the outstanding musical instrument of Egypt was the sistrum. This was merely a short oval hand frame which held three or four metal bars. Bells were hung upon these bars, and by shaking the instrument, as a baby shakes a rattle, which it really in principle resembles, a jingling of the bars and bells was produced. The harp was very popular, too, though it lacked the front board or "pole" found in the present-day instruments of that name, and there were a variety of lyres. In addition there was a nabla, a sort of guitar; flutes, single or double, tambourine and handrums. The flute was generally played by men and the tambourine by women.

India was another ancient nation high in musical development. Music there seems to have had the treatment of a fine art, and had both taste and discrimination. Of the Hindu contribution to music, the vina comes first. It had four strings and resembles more the guitar than the lyre. Its tone is both full and delicate and the music composed for it is usually brilliant and rapid. The Hindus seem to have had their Listzs and Rubensteins, and in the Eighteenth century Djivan Shah was known throughout India as a virtuoso on the vina. A guitar called magoudi is another popular instrument, and the Hindus to this day have four kinds of drums, of which a muffled drum called "tare" is used exclusively for funeral occasions.

The Horns Have Their Day.

With the rise of the Roman empire in the world picture, there was a decided change in the style and popularity of instruments. There was a trend away from the string instruments and more towards the horn type of instrument. The reason for this is not hard to find. String instruments were found unsatisfactory for military purposes. They not only lacked carrying power, but also did not force the emotional reaction that would lead an army to battle. Consequently, the trumpet and the drum came into common use, the trumpet retaining something of the shape of the natural horn, although it was now made of copper and sometimes of bronze. Two instruments of this period stand out. One was the lituus, a sort of trumpet used by the Roman cavalry. This was nearly five feet long with the bell turned back toward the performer after the fashion of a huge, long-stemmed pipe. The buccina, remotely similar to the modern helicon in that it was curved in a circle and was carried about the body of the performer, was probably the ancestor of the modern trombone. Both instruments possessed a martial quality of tone which was used to good effect wherever the Roman armies engaged in combat.

Contact with the Saracens through the Crusades brought Europeans a knowledge of strange eastern instruments, principally the tom-tom in one form or another, and bells.

The Fifteenth century finds wide use of a queer instrument called the may horn. This consists of a piece of bark twisted into the shape of a funnel, into the narrow part of which was fitted a short section of marsh reed. These instruments were made and played upon by the country folk much as youngsters in America make willow whistles. Before very long, however, we find this instrument undergoing development in two directions. In one case it became a short conical wooden tube with a flaring bell, later to be known as the oboe, and in the other it developed into a long wooden tube of large calibre known today as the bassoon. In Europe this instrument is called the fagot because of its resemblance to a bunch of sticks.

Bagpipe First of the "Moderns"

The first really modern instrument is the bagpipe, which came into prominence in Scotland about the time Columbus discovered America. It is regarded as modern because this instrument today is essentially what it was when first originated. While bagpipes had been known in both Ireland and England, the Scotch did what the others failed to do—they made the bagpipe a national institution, and today there is no instrument so intimately associated with, none so typical of, a people, as the bagpipes of the Scotch. The Sixteenth century also saw the coming of the serpent, a cup-mouthpiece instrument. The serpent marks the first attempt, except for the ancient form of the trombone, to get more than one progression of tones from the same tube. It is the direct progenitor of the keyed bugle, and therefore the ancestor of all valve and key instruments in use today.

Early in the Seventeenth century came the hunting horn, and toward its close, the chalumeau, which laid the foundations for the development of what we know today as the clarinet. The invention in 1830 of the valve for introducing different lengths of tubing in brass instruments so as to give wider range of notes, and the perfection a little later of the piston valve by Antoine Sax, who later invented the saxophone, made possible musical instruments as we know them today.

The saxophone continues to hold a unique place among musical instruments in that, being a brass instrument, it has a mouthpiece which contains a reed like a woodwind. Its voice is therefore a blending of the tone qualities of both the reed and the horn.

Efforts in more recent years have been devoted largely to improving existing instruments and adapting them to special requirements of the day. The perfection of the hydraulic process in the making of instruments has all but revolutionized the industry and the human element has practically been done away with in their manufacture. The mechanical precision with which band instruments are manufactured today makes it possible for the most inexperienced youngster to secure an instrument that is many times superior to any played by the master artist of the seventies and eighties.

Find Music Everywhere.

It is interesting to contrast the music of old and the place it holds in the national life of today. In olden days, the playing of a musical instrument, like reading and writing, was an accomplishment possible only to a limited group of members of the leisure class, or of those whose duties required it of them. Group music, to be sure, was often in evidence before royalty and at the military and social affairs, but for the average person, it was more or less of an event. Today, it may be said that nothing is begun or ended without music of some sort. In school, in church, in lodge, in meeting, in theater, in convention—music is closely intertwined with all these activities. The radio, phonograph, music memory contests, school-band tournaments, and similar events have made music an intimate experience of every man, woman and child, so that there is more active participation in music today than at any other time in the history of the world.

Extraordinary evidence of the value present-day society places upon music is to be seen from the status of this subject in our public schools. Music is now included in the curriculum of a large number of grade schools, half of our colleges and universities, and it has been estimated that about a million high-school boys and girls each year receive some sort of musical training.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most d icate system. Besides, it is absolu ly harmless, and so pleasant that ev a cross, feverish, bilious, sick ch gladly takes it.

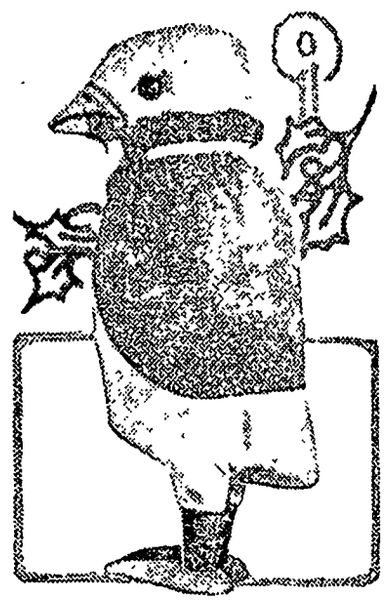
Prized Hand-Craft Toys



She who is ingenious with paint and needle can make many amusing Christmas gifts, including toys that are more highly valued than those the factories turn out. Turkish toweling, unbleached domestics, bits of bright-colored flannel and felt, with a little box of water colors, are mainly the stock in trade of the toy maker. Here is a little chick made of turkish toweling and wearing a red flannel cape. A shoe button makes his eye; a bit of domestic his yellow bill; his feet are are whittled from wood and his body stuffed with cotton.

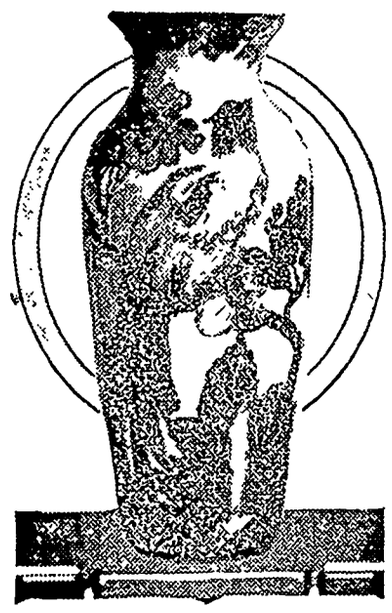
"Scissor Painted" Vase



"Scissor painting" is an easy new method of decorating pottery, lamp shades and other things so that they look as if they were hand painted. Here is a pretty vase decorated with designs cut from crepe paper and pasted to it, and glazed with thin, transparent amber sealing wax paint. The pattern is cut out carefully and the paste applied with the grain of the paper, being sure to cover the edges. It is then put in position and pressed down securely. Paint over the entire surface with the thin sealing wax paint, and after it has dried paint in a background with thicker paint, about as thick as cream, in one color or in shaded effects.

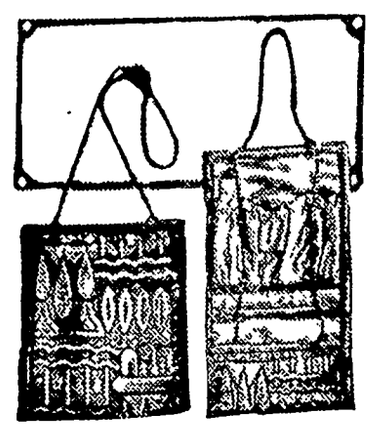
Ribbon Vanity Case



Santa Claus will find himself distributing a lot of new vanity cases this Christmas, for nothing is more popular as a gift. Here is a rich and elegant homemade one, that requires about twelve inches of gold brocade ribbon, six inches wide, and about eighteen inches of rose-colored satin ribbon for lining and pocket. The case is bound with narrow gold lace and two tiny brass rings are sewed to the top. A gold cord, attached to the bottom of the case, slips through these rings and serves to close and suspend it. The little pocket carries compact, powder, rouge and any other desired fitting.

Beret and Earlap Type Smart; Paris Features Fabric Contrast

VERY considerate is it of our milliners this winter to make way for our fur collars by creating hats which have little or no brim. Of course with brims conspicuous by their absence, responsibility for the conveying of the style message devolves to a great extent upon the crowns of our hats.

There is the little hat shown first in this group; modishness is written all over it, yet it is mostly all crown save just a suggestion of a cunning little brim forming an earlap effect at the back. This clever model is styled of arctic blue antelope felt, edged with grosgrain ribbon of self tone. There is an ombre lacquered quill half encircling it.

By the way, the latest millinery sensation is the earlap hat. A fetching version of this new type is portrayed in the center of this picture. For this the designer draped and slashed and folded into place a cameo-brown felt hood, binding it with grosgrain ribbon of self shade, adding a gold buckle fastening.

In the stylish beret shown to the right at the top again is demonstrated the idea of hats trending mostly to crown these days. The beret, of which this is an arresting exponent, is proving immensely popular. This one is of totem-orange felt with band effect of flat lizardite in tones of black and red. Further bandlug is accomplished with black grosgrain ribbon.

A band of felt arranged as a sash about the crown line of a soft draped felt hood describes the stunning shape to the left below.

Again the beret attains distinction in the model shown last in this group. The broad band of black belting ribbon together with two brushes of black burnt peacock impart the finishing touch to this charming model.

Paris has become interested in suits of the youthful short-jacket type. Many are the fascinating interpretations which this newest mode promises. The fact that the short-jacketed costumes feature fabric contrasts adds to their novelty. Velvet or velveteen for the jacket, with kasha cloth, crepella or some other wool material for the skirt outlines one of the various developments of this recent style innovation.

Very swagger types are of fine wool repp or mixtures for the entire suit, collared, cuffed and pocketed with spotted calfskin or some other equally as fashionable smooth fur. Sometimes the entire coatee is made of the smooth pelt, the cloth of the skirt being inset in the collar and cuffs.

Of tuxedo inspiration is the modish short-jacket suit in this picture. Beige kasha is employed for the skirt with grackle blue velvet for the nifty coat.

A pleasing costume emanating from a leading Parisian atelier consists of a short Norfolk jacket of beige velveteen worn over a like-colored crepe frock printed in tiny plaidings. Topping this outfit is a hat of stitched beige velveteen.

Very striking is an ensemble the skirt of which is black velvet. Over this is posed a short jacket of black-and-white-spotted calfskin. Ultra-smartness is the word for this combination.

And then there is the sleeveless jacket! French women are wearing them over dresses of matching crepe or suede cloth. Beige is a favorite color. It is said that the sleeveless jacket will play a very important part in spring styling.

Mr.a nd Mrs Ing Lauritsen left in their car Tuesday for Sheboygan, Wisconsin, where they will make their future home Mr Lauritsen will enter the contracting and building business there. Soren Jensen started out Tuesday afternoon for the same place in his car. He also intends to work at the carpenter trade at Sheboygan, as there is a great deal of building going on in that city this year. We are sorry to lose these fine people from our community, but we wish them much success.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Suckow, of Garner, were pleasantly surprised Sunday when a number of Mrs. Suckow's brothers and sisters and their families gathered at her home each bringing well filled baskets of good things to eat and had a real Thanksgiving dinner, which they had postponed until Sunday. Those who were present att he home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Suckow at Garner, were: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ax and children; Mr. John Newberger, Jr.; Arthur Schoenwetter and daughter Ethel; little Lucille Stille; George Schoenwetter and children; Elmer Ludeke and children; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ludeke and children; Mrs. Henry Ludeke and son, Paul and sister, Miss Wilda Greene. Mrs. Elmer Ludeke was unable to be there on account of sickness, and Mesdames Art and George Schoenwetter and Henry Ludeke were visiting a sister at Fenton that day. All report they had a fine time.

Your Future
In India--

There is the belief that the future can be foretold in India by looking into the depths of the crystal.

In the United States, we have learned that the future can be foretold not by crystal gazing but by planning and obtaining the objective we desire. If you want to avoid vain regrets in later years, discomfort all your life, and a penniless and cheerless old age, save some of the money you are now earning, and, when you make up your mind to save, may this strong bank be part of the plan.

This animal disease, unheard in the state until last year, has ready caused the death of one per- n at Iowa City and the serious ill- ss of two other hunters, one at venport and the other at Spencer thin the last two weeks. Clay, ott and Monroe counties are add- to the list of those known to have infection. According to Dr. Gris- old, the germ from the infected bbit may be secured in handling, t proper cooking, however, kills germs and there is no danger of fection through eating rabbits.

STRANGER HELD AS SUSPICIOUS CHARACTER

Officer Leitzinger And M. O. Barr Run Down Bum

A man wanted by the authorities at Fort Leavenworth for breaking prison there who was in for three years on a charge of robbing interstate freight shipments, was thought to be the man wanted and picked up here last Friday.

Last week Tuesday Agent M. O. Barr observed a "bum" walking into town from the north. He asked permission to stop at the depot waiting room, claiming he had no money. Barr gave him permission to remain there and even gave the man a lunch as he had nothing to eat. The man asked about work and Barr referred him to Dr Zinn, who might need a man on the farm.

Then last Friday Harold Leitzinger, Klemme policeman, showed Mr Barr a card he had received from Leavenworth showing a photograph and giving a description of a man wanted there and offering $100 reward for his capture. Barr recognized the picture as being a likeness of the man who stopped at the depot. Mrs Barr was shown the card and also stated she believed he was the man wanted.

The $100 looked good to the boys so they decided to round up the man They drove out to Zinn's farm Friday afternoon, but he had not showed up there but they learned he was husking corn for Clint Stokesbarry A drive to that place was also futile as the man had finished and gone to Joe Stokesbarry's farm to work. He was found there picking his last load and ready to leave The men convinced him to ride to town with them and after he was brought into the depot he was questioned. Harold Leitzinger placed him under arrest and brought him before Mayor Gruetzmacher for further questioning Gruetzmacher decided there was not enough grounds for holding him so turned him loose with the instructions to get out of town at once When last seen he was headed south down the tracks.

Thus a nice Christmas present for Leitzinger and Barr went a glimmering.

Anyway they got a big "kick" out of their sleuthing.

BACHMAN BABY DIED EARLY THIS MORNING

The little infant daughter of Mr. died at four o'clock this morning (Thursday) after being seriously ill for several weeks with whooping cough and later other complications developed which was more than the little infant could ward off.

Their oldest daughter, a little girl six years old, passed away about a month ago with pneumonia.

Funeral services will be held at the Reformed Church here on Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, in charge of Rev. Grosshuesch.

Mr. and Mrs Bachman have the sincere sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement. They seem to have more than their share of grief in the loss of two children in a little more than a month.

KLEMME HAS THREE RADIO STATIONS

STATION 9DSG HEARD IN NINE U. S. DISTRICTS

Established Communication With A Ship Off Costa Rico

Klemme is well represented with radio "hams" and can boast of three radio broadcasting stations owned and operated by three Klemme young men.

The three stations are 9 DSG, owned and operated by "Jack" Wellemeyer; station 9 AME, owned and operated by Fred Arnold, and the latest station to receive a license is station 9 ARX, owned and operated by Maurice Greiman.

Wellemeyer Veteran Operator

"Jack" Wellemeyer began his radio activities several years ago and built one of the first receiving sets in this part of the country. Broadcasting was then more of an experiment than an amusement feature and "Jack" assisted pioneer broadcasting stations by sending them reports on reception. He sent in some of the first reports to eastern stations on signals heard west of the Mississippi river Those were the days of one-tubers and flat ears from wearing head phones.

Built First Station

The last couple of years Wellemeyer has turned to the amateur code end of radio and began the study of code receiving. He built a low wave receiver and has heard stations and sent in reports to all parts of the world.

About a year ago "Jack" built his first sending station and received a license to operate His call letters are 9DSG. A number of changes were made until the present time when his station "kicks out" just about perfect, according to reports he has received from distant stations.

Up to date Jack has established connections with stations in all of the nine U. S districts, has been heard in thirty-eight states, Canada and Central America.

One of his best records he established November 11th when he put in a call at 2·30 A. M to KJOE, a ship belonging to the Atlantic Refining Co., of Philadelphia. "Jack" got immediate action when operator Fred Smith came right back at him with a message and reported his signals were coming in R-5" which means moderately strong. Smith reported they were off the coast of Costa Rico Smith's signals came in here varying from R-4 to R-6, the variation being due to the swinging of the ship.

Wellemeyer and Smith "talked" for nearly an hour that night.

"Jack" says his best daylight record was established Nov. 25th when a station at Chappaqua, N Y, reported his signals at R-4 to R-5. Night signals are always the best. The record on daylight was made at about 3·30 P M.

It takes a great deal of patience to get a set adjusted properly for long distance broadcasting and Jack made many changes before he got good results The other boys are "young" at the game and have not had an opportunity to get their sets working to capacity.

The stations here were built by the boys themselves and are a neat piece of work.

KLEMME LADY INTERESTED IN WISCONSIN MURDER CASE

Famous Olson Murder Took Place Near Home Of Mrs. Ludeke

Mrs. Henry Ludeke is quite interested in the Clara Olson murder case which is causing considerable excitement in Crawford County, Wis., and the scene of which took place only about twenty miles from Mrs. Ludeke's old home.

The body of the Olson girl was found buried in a shallow grave near Mt Sterling, Wis. She disappeared from home in the early part of September and her sweetheart, Erdman Olson disappeared at about the same time. The body of the girl was found but a short time ago. Erdman Olson is being sought and is charged with the murder.

FARM BUREAU LEADERS HELD CONFERENCE AT BRITT

Over Forty Club Leaders Attend School Of Instruction

Forty leaders from all parts of Hancock County attended the Rural Leaders' Conference at Britt, Dec. 2. This school was put on by the Hancock County Farm Bureau and was for the benefit of the community leaders and publicity writers of the county.

W. H. Stacy and H. J. Metcalf of the Extension Service of Ames were the instructors in charge.

Mr. Stacy brought out the importance of community activities and told how they could be successfully conducted. He told how township Farm Bureau meetings could be made to fill an important place in the community from both a business and social view point.

The use of a definite program for these meetings was suggested. These programs to be planned for the entire year by a committee and published in booklet form for the convenience of the members. Plans are being made to do this in all townships in the county.

Mr. Metcalf told of the importance of good publicity and the desire of the papers of the county to get good news. The newspapers of Hancock County are more than willing to co-operate in every way. He defined news as something of interest to a large number of people and said that all community activities were good news when properly written. He gave instructions on the use of good newspaper English and proper spelling.

The Rural Leaders Conference is an annual affair put on by the Farm Bureau. It has always been a very successful meeting. According to Mr. Metcalf, it was the most successful they had attended this year.

The County Farm Bureau is planning to help in every township with these two valuable projects. Better township meetings and better publicity will result.

IDLE HOUR PROGRAM

The Idle Hour has a good program for the coming week that should be just what the general public will like as it is well mixed to suit all

Friday and Saturday night a real good western is on, Bob Custer in "The Fighting Boob." Another 2 reels of the Fighting Heart series will also be shown.

Monday and Tuesday nights is indoor sports nights with popular roller skating.

The ever popular Lefty Flynn s on the bill for next Wednesday nite in "Sir Lumber Jack."

Big Doings next Thursday night! A real old fashioned, hard time dance is on, played by honest to gosh old time musicians. Step lively you old timers—it's for you and everybody who likes old dances!

Roller skating has been the big attraction at the Idle Hour theatre Monday and Tuesday nights. A big crowd turned out for the first night but a larger crowd enjoyed skating Tuesday night. We understand the roller skating will be a regular feature every Monday and Tuesday.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. George Buseman Monday night. George is so elated over the arrival of the new daughter that he made a special trip to The Times office to tell the Editor all about her and the office is a cloud of blue smoke as the result of the smokes be gave the Editor. Mr. and Mrs. Buseman now have four boys and two girls.

Ed. Buentenbach came home from the Mercy Hospital at Mason City, Wednesday afternoon of this week. Mrs. Buentenbach drove over in their car to get him. Ed. is feeling pretty well again now and is glad to be home after his long siege in the hospital. We are glad to report that he is home again. A trained nurse will remain for a few days, however, to see that he gets along alright.

Roy Smock, who appeared on the boxing card at Garner lat Friday night against Carrol Brede, received to worst of the argument. Brede proved to much for the Klemme boxer who went out in the second round of battle.

KLEMME PLAYS AT GARNER FRI. NIGHT

KLEMME LOST TO SWALEDALE IN HARD FOUGHT GAME

Locals Lacked Usual Flash In Floor Work And Passing

The Klemme high school cagers went down to defeat at the hands of Swaledale last Friday night when the invaders carried away the long end of a 16 to 19 score.

Swaledale did not have a fast quintet and Klemme should have won the game. The locals could not get organized and their floor work was weak and their passes were not clean cut as in former games. It was one of those times when a team don't seem to get off on the right foot for some reason or other.

Swaledale profited in several instances when they intercepted Klemme's long passes. (Both teams shot some clean field points that showed real skill.

Will Meet Garner Friday Night

The Klemme boys go to Garner on Friday night of this week and expect to show Garner a fast time

This will be Garner's first game of the season, and Klemme's fourth. This should give Klemme an edge on the game and if they get into their former fast stride Garner will not be able to stop them.

A large delegation of Klemme fans are going with the boys to furnish the yelling part of the game.

Listen for the K. H. S. bell to ring Friday night!

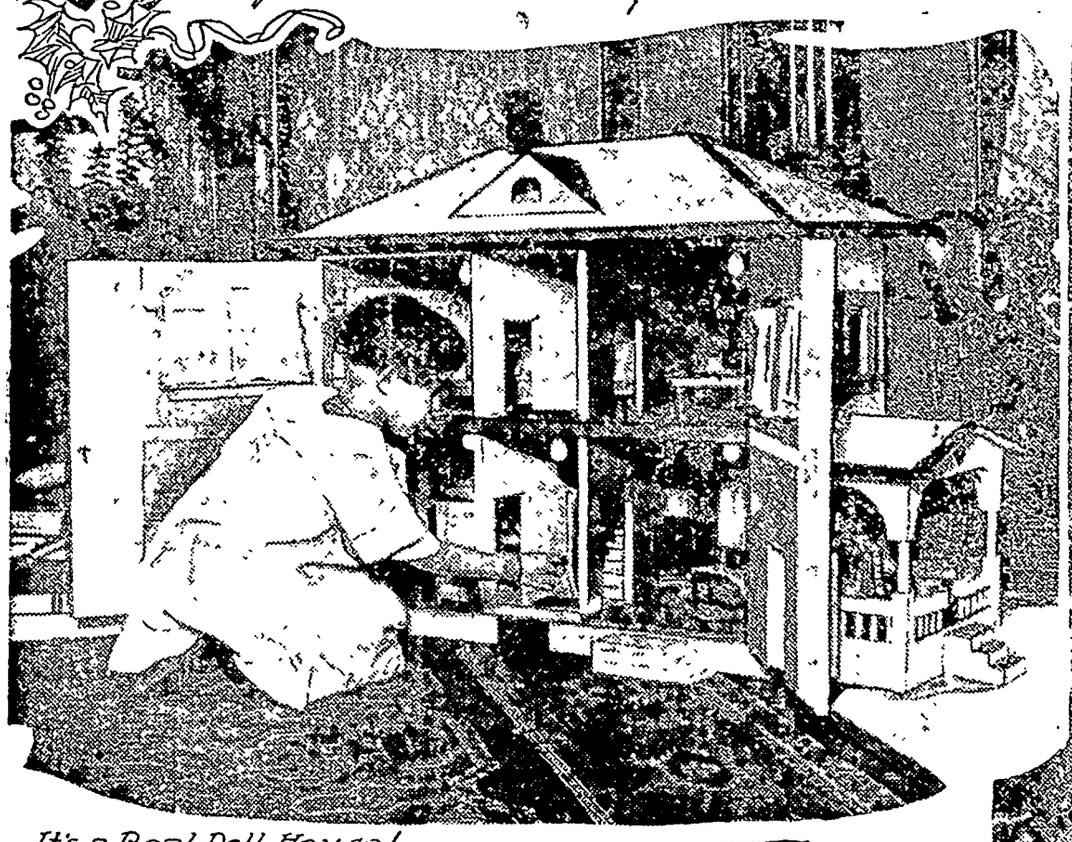
When Christmas Comes



It's a Real Doll House!

The Christmas Trees Arrive

His Busiest Season

OUT of the distant past comes a whispered greeting that warms the heart of humanity. Merry Christmas! It echoes and re-echoes back across the long ages. It throbs through the generations of life, while kingdoms rise and fall, while men and nations move like checkers on a checkerboard.

Merry Christmas! It stirs the heart like some beautiful old memory It quickens the pulse like a passionate violin. We forget to play at grownup, and in a moment we are all children again.

"Of all the old festivals," says Washington Irving, "that of Christmas awakens the strongest and most heartfelt associations. There is a tone of solemn and sacred feeling that blends with our conviviality, and lifts the spirit to a state of hallowed and elevated enjoyment."

From the early centuries of Christianity the anniversary of the birth of Christ has been celebrated. It is called "Christmas" because in early England the festival was called "Christesmesse," which means "Christ's mass." At first the time of the festival varied in different places. Some churches observed it in December, others in January, April, May. There is no historical record as to the exact birth date of Christ. It seems possible, says Lillian Eichler in her "Customs of Mankind," that December 25 was established as the festival day because it marked the beginning of the great winter festival when Britons, Germans, and Gauls made merry in pagan fashion. Christmas replaced these old pagan festivities, the customs of the old blending into the customs and symbols of the other.

The celebration of December 25, as Christmas, spread to various parts of the Christian world. Later, as the festival spread, differences in date occurred owing to differences in calendar. But the general belief prevailed that Christ was born "at the hour of midnight on Christmas eve."

Many of our popular holidays appear to have been nature festivals at one time. Easter and May day were very likely spring festivals; Halloween, an autumn festival.

Christmas was originally a festival of the winter solstice. At this period of the year it was customary to hold great feasts in honor of the heathen gods, to dance and make merry. But the early teachers of Christianity prohibited these primitive festivities as unsuited to the character of Christ.

Yet the old festival was not discarded entirely. Its symbols and customs were adapted to the new festival in celebration of the anniversary of Christ's nativity. And so we find Christmas patterned with many curious customs that are of pagan origin. The Yule log, the holly, and the mistletoe go much farther back into antiquity than we suspect.

It is said that the first Christmas day festival held in Britain was celebrated by King Arthur in the city of York, A. D. 521. It lasted several days. The new customs were grafted upon the old, and the new symbols were adaptation of old ones. The festivals appealed instantly to the masses; a tiny spark was fanned into flame and it has burned brightly throughout all these generations.

By the early Middle ages, Christmas had become the greatest of popular festivals. Beggar and king observed the day. Churches were decorated and quaint plays concerning the nativity were enacted. Carols were sung in the streets and images of the Virgin and of Christ were carried about from house to house. And, of course, there were feasting and merrymaking, as there always are at a festival time.

In Shakespeare's time the Christmas festivities were extremely elaborate. Sometimes they lasted until Twelfth day, or Epiphany—twelve days after Christmas. During this period there was no work of any kind. The people gave themselves over to feasting and gay celebration.

Then there was a reaction, as there generally is. The Puritans developed a keen distaste for the Christmas festivities, and prevailed upon parliament to prohibit them. Christmas was declared a day of fast, and festivities were prohibited by law. After the Restoration, however, the old observances came back—somewhat subdued, but gay and festival as ever.

The observance of the Christmas festival spread all over the Christian world. The date is not everywhere the same, nor are the customs identical. January 6 is the date observed in the Armenian church. The Dutch watch for St. Nicholas on the eve of December 6. The French have their own particular Christmas observances; the Germans have theirs. But wherever and whenever Christmas is celebrated, it is a day of rejoicing and good cheer.

At one time the customs and observances that we associate with Christmas had a very definite significance. Today they survive as part of our social scheme.

In America we have made of Christmas a period of great social activity. The old customs of other lands, combined with tender memories of the first Christmases in this country, make of the holiday a rare interval of joy and cheer which find expression in a semisocial, semireligious celebration. Everybody wishes everybody else a merry Christmas, and even the echoes are glad!

The first Christmases in America were not the gay festivities to which we are accustomed. They were days like all the rest, devoted to work and prayer. Governor Bradford wrote, "Ye 25th day begane to erect ye first house for comone use to receive them and their goods." A few years after this was written the Church of England established Christmas services in Boston.

Our Christmas celebration carries threads from many lands. People coming here from France, England, Germany, Norway, Italy—all brought their own customs with them. Our Christmas tree and Santa Claus are imported. Our carols and our stocking superstition came from across the ocean. Even our "Merry Christmas" belongs to England.

Yet our Christmas festivities are individual, American. They are like those of no one country, but like a tapestry that has been patterned with many beautiful threads, our festivities reflect the customs, beliefs, and superstitions of many and widely separated lands.

Jolly old Santa Claus with his tinkling sleigh bells and pack of toys is very closely associated with the American Christmas. Our children hang up their stockings in high glee, fully believing that Santa will come down the chimney and fill them with good things, until, of course, they are old enough to separate fact from infancy, or until some cruel person shatters the beautiful belief.

Santa came to America by way of Holland. The old Dutch settlers of New York brought with them all the joyous and hospitable observances of their fatherland. They introduced to their neighbors in the New world St. Nicholas, or San Nicolaas, patron saint of children. And San Nicolaas promptly grew a long white beard, belted his jovial stoutness in a red coat, and made his bow to America as Santa Claus!

England, too, has its Santa Claus. The name appears to be derived in slurred interpretation from San Nicolaas, the English for which would be St. Nicholas. According to the popular myth, both here and in England, Santa Claus is supposed to sweep down the chimney, and fill the stockings hanging before the fireplace with gifts.

St. Nicholas became everywhere the child's saint, though his personality underwent some striking changes as he traveled from country to country. In Holland he remained St. Nicholas, but his personality was modified by memories of Woden, god of the elements and the harvest. He became the patron saint of the children of France, although it is Bonhomme Noel (Father Christmas, sometimes called Pere Noel) who brings the good things for the children. In Germany the Christkindlein is the patron saint of the children. From this German phrase for Christ Child comes our synonym for Santa Claus—Kriss Kringle.

Among the Norwegians, the toys are hidden away in unexpected places and the children search for them. In Italy the gifts are drawn from what is known as "The Urn of Fate." This custom originated with the ancient Romans who had also an "Urn of Fate" from which gifts were drawn. In Spain there are elaborate street festivals at which the children receive gifts.

This age-old custom of presenting the children with gifts makes Christmas one of our most enjoyable festivals. In "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" the thought is beautifully expressed.

For days beforehand, every time the three babies go into the garden they expect to meet the Christ Child with His arms full of gifts. They firmly believe that it is thus their presents are brought, and it is such a charming idea that Christmas would be worth celebrating for its sake alone.

There is an ancient tradition in Holland that St. Nicholas makes his rounds upon Woden's horse, Sleipner. This famous old horse of Dutch mythology is represented by the reindeer whose hoofs our children are supposed to hear on Christmas eve.

According to the old tale, the children of Amsterdam set their little wooden shoes in the chimney corners because they believed Sleipner would pass by unless he saw them there. And St. Nicholas would give no gifts unless he saw the little shoes in a row by the chimney place and so knew that the children were tucked away in bed. Evidently some parents of long ago created the myth for their own convenience; it spread quickly, as such things do, and gradually became an established custom.

From Holland the custom spread to France, and children were taught to place their wooden shoes upon the hearth to receive the gifts of Bonhomme Noel. In Germany and Scandinavia the gifts are not placed in the shoe, but hidden in out-of-the-way places about the house.

The stockings that the children of England and the United States hang up on Christmas eve developed from the shoe. Shoes won't stretch, you know, and stockings are so much more roomy! Thus the shoe of Amsterdam became the stocking of New Amsterdam, and the custom was established.

There existed in the east of Russia, among the peasantry, an old custom whereby the young girl discovered through divination whom she would have as husband. The traditional formula, still prevalent, is, "Come and take my stockings off." Among the professional classes, and sometimes in the lesser nobility, parents placed money in the stockings of their child—boy or girl—at marriage as a gift for the other partner in the ceremony. Some writers, prominently among them Havelock Ellis, believe that the custom of hanging up the stocking at Christmas is a relic of these two customs from Russia.

European Corn Borer Control

Aid of Powerful Organizations Is Being Sought Against Pest.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Continuance of the complete research and control program against the European corn borer, as carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture and its co-operating agencies, was strongly recommended in an international conference held recently in Detroit. Representatives of the federal, state and Canadian Departments of Agriculture took part in the conference, and also those from the college of agriculture and experiment stations of nearly all the corn belt states, leading manufacturers of farm machinery, aud others. It was agreed that the corn borer situation is now so serious that the aid of the most powerful financial and business organizations of the country should be sought against the pest. A public relations committee was appointed, with this and other functions.

Quarantine Commended.

In the comprehensive report presented by the joint committee on the corn borer appointed by the American Association of Economic Entomologists and the American Society of Agronomy, the quarantine and research work of the department was commended. The committee also found that excellent progress has been made in the development of harvesting machinery to meet the corn-borer menace. All co-operating agencies were urged to support present policies in respect to quarantine and quarantine enforcement.

An automobile tour of inspection covering sections heavily infested by the corn borer and the corn-borer laboratories at Monroe, Mich., and Chatham, Ont., gave an opportunity to see many interesting features of the work, and some of the insect parasites of the corn borer in action. Demonstrations were made of two types of new harvesting machinery. In Essex and Kent counties, Ont., where much of the corn acreage had been completely ruined, many severely damaged fields were seen In one field all the ears were infested, and the average was 32 borers to the stalk.

New Harvesting Machines.

Several new and promising types of harvesting machines were demonstrated at the Monroe County farm, Michigan. There were two types of corn harvester, each equipped with a new, low-cutting device, which cut the corn so as to leave practically none of the stalk above the surface of the soil. This low-cutting is very important in the control of the borer, because most of the insects are found in the lower joints of the stalk at corn harvest time, and the removal and disposal of all the stalk are essential in control.

Another machine was shown which, in one operation, cut the corn, picked and husked the ears, and shredded the stalks in a way that destroyed all the borers in them. Although this machine is not yet ready for production and sale, it is so nearly perfected that it should be available to farmers at an early date.

Haul and Spread Manure on Dry Days in Winter

Either haul out the manure and spread thinly on the fields planted to small grain or let it stay in the stables where it is packed down. Don't pile it out in a corner of the lot where it loses all of its nitrogen as ammonia gas which escapes into the air.

"Any time during winter, when the ground is dry enough, is a good time to spread manure on small grain," says E. C. Blair, extension agronomist at the North Carolina State college. "This is better than to pile the manure outside of the barn. When piled loosely and exposed to weather, the manure is always damaged by certain bacteria which change the nitrogen to ammonia gas and this escapes into the air. Much of the value of the manure is thus lost. Leaching also plays a part in this loss of fertility."

Mr. Blair states that when manure is spread out on the field, there is too little in one place for the destructive bacteria to become active. Rains will leach out the nitrogen but it is carried into the soil where it is so badly needed.

FARM NOTES

Grapes are propagated in the winter by means of cuttings.

* * *

Cod liver oil will help keep the poultry flock in good health and keep the eggs coming this winter.

* * *

Prune the fruit trees after they have shed their leaves, while the weather is good and the farm work is slack.

* * *

Winter is the time to plan. The long months when farm work must be slackened give us a splendid opportunity to think things through.

* * *

Where plenty of skim milk is available it may pay to feed calves to an older age before putting on the market. Some dairymen find this a fairly satisfactory practice.

* * *

A ton of wheat straw contains $4 worth of nitrogen when applied to the land, a ton of oat straw contains $4.80 worth of nitrogen and the nitrogen in a ton of cornstalks is worth $6.40.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

EARLY OVERHAUL HELPS SPRAYING

Defective spray machines cause big losses of time and materials to growers each year. Low pressure, due to worn pumps or to faulty operation of engines, and delays while repairs are being made, can be largely avoided by thoroughly overhauling the sprayer during the winter months, suggests A. Freeman Mason, extension specialist in fruit growing, New Jersey College of Agriculture. The grower or an experienced mechanic should make a careful examination of the machine and repair or replace all worn parts, and give the rig a general cleaning and overhauling

The engine valves should be ground, new piston rings installed if compression is weak, bearings adjusted, batteries, coils, spark-plugs, and wires tested, and dirt and grease removed with gasoline or kerosene

The pump generally will need most attention. Place new packing in the boxes, replace plunger washers on the pistons, or replace pistons if the old ones are worn or scored Valve seats should be turned over or replaced. If balls are worn down or scored they should be removed. Clean and grease all moving parts on the pressure regulator, placing new packing in the stuffing box at the top of the stem and a new rubber diaphragm at the base if this type of regulator is used Bearings on the pump and agitator should be examined and replaced or tightened as needed, new packing placed in the boxes, and any broken paddles replaced.

All hoses should be tested at a somewhat higher pressure than is to be used in the field. A new brass or copper strainer should go on the suction hose and on the strainer box in the filling vent. Examine hose connections and repair leaky ones; clean guns and nozzles; and install new disks. Paint the entire sprayer with a high grade paint.

An ample supply of repair parts should be on hand for use in case of emergencies. Most needed of these are valve seats, packing, plunger washers, new pump pistons, hose connection clamps and bolts, spark-plugs and coils. With these precautions taken the grower may face the spraying season with but little apprehension.

Protecting Fruit Trees From Injury in Winter

That mice injury to fruit trees occurs nearly every winter, says J. H. Gourley, horticulturist at the Ohio experiment station, is indicated by the annual call for information on bridge grafting of girdled trees.

Protecting the trees and destroying the rodents are recommended as much cheaper than repairing damage or possibly losing trees.

The first means of protection is to clear up litter about the base of trees. Long, uncut grass, or the piling of fodder, straw, hay, or other material against the tree, provides an ideal harbor for mice and other rodents. A clear area should be maintained around the tree trunk.

A mechanical barrier or protection for young trees is an excellent precaution, particularly in sod orchards. Paper tied about the tree trunk is usually effective, but must be removed in the spring.

Hardware cloth makes a more or less permanent protection until the trees are of a size to be reasonably free from attack, although old trees are sometimes girdled.

Thoroughly Remove Dead or Injured Peach Twigs

Some of the smaller fruiting twigs of the peach naturally die as the tree develops and fruits. Those near the base of the tree begin to die first, followed later by others higher up through the top of the tree. At times, weather, spray, brown rot, mechanical injuries and other factors, greatly add to the normal number. All such twigs should be thoroughly pruned off during each dormant season. Even though there may be some question as to whether they reduce the vigor and vitality of the tree to any measurable extent, they most certainly interfere with the operations of spraying, thinning, and harvesting and are the direct cause of many scratches and blemishes upon the fruit, particularly where the orchard is in an exposed location. In addition, they attract orchard pests, such as bark beetles.

Fruiting twigs and branches that may not be dead but are seriously girdled or weakened by spray burning so that they cannot produce large fruits, should be pruned off or cut back to stimulate growth.

Mulching Plum Trees

Mulching the plum trees after the ground is thoroughly frozen may save the plum crop from freezes late in the spring, says A. L. Ford, extension specialist in horticulture at South Dakota State college. Ordinarily plums blossom too early in South Dakota. A mulch in the fall will keep them dormant for a longer period in the spring and may retard the bloom until after the critical frost period. This mulch should be applied around the base of the tree.

CHIFFON FROCKS FOR THE DANCE; CLOTH COATS SANS FUR TRIMMING

IN ACCORDANCE with fashion's decree, youth will dance its merry way through the coming holiday festivities robed in lovely, colorful chiffon. Rather than the glimmer and sparkle of paillettes and beads which her elders select for the adornment of more sophisticated dress, the young girl chooses the daintiest of French flower trimmings—just like Gertrude Olmsted, the youthful film actress of beauty-prize fame, is wearing in this picture

Peach-colored chiffon trimmed with French flowers is a brief description of this delectable gown. But look close; do you not observe something unusual about this adorable dance costume? Yes! That's it! A bag of chiffon festooned with the same kind of flowers which trim the dress! And a lovely idea it is. Who would attend the dance next week or this without a cunning bag flower-trimmed to match one's dress?

Embellished With Wee Flowers.

Two-toned chiffon dresses are ever so attractive and so up-to-date. This method of combining a light chiffon with a dark tone of the same color is inspirational to the designer, who is thus enabled to work out many clever stylings. One very fetching dance frock following out the two-tone idea uses a delicate coral tone for the waist portion with a skirt of deeper toned red. A three-tone effect appears in the border and the girdle of a frock in green.

Another way of achieving a two-tone effect is to wear a shoulder bouquet whose flowers are of deeper tone than the dress. Often the chiffon frock is not trimmed, or rather is self-trimmed with floating airy-fairy streamers, panels or draperies. A monotone frock of flesh-colored chiffon, for instance, has graceful, flowing lines, and its coloring is intensified in the deep pink rose at the shoulder, with a matching one at the girdle. A coral georgette is accented in color value by means of a deep red rose at the neckline.

Not infrequently the two-toned color scheme is carried out by applying velvet darker in tone than the dress it trims.

Not every coat in Paris is fur trimmed. Not a few of the season's smartest modes rely on tailored simplicity for chic, rather than upon fur adornment. Quality-kind material and patrician styling are the marks of distinction which characterize the nonfurred coat. The all-cloth-sans-fur wrap, often the preference of the elegant Parisienne for informal daytime wear, usually boasts a cape which tops a straight, narrow, mannishly tailored coat portion, just like this picture shows. The material is likely to be finest navy blue twill, although dark green suede cloth is also finding favor in recent models, while there are some few beige and gray cape types which are without fur.

A handsome separate fur neckpiece comes not amiss if the day be cold, a madame or mademoiselle frequently carries such over her arm, as you see in the illustration.

Women of last-word fashion in the French capital are also displaying interest in coats sparsely trimmed in fur, these directly contrasting the lavishly befurred cloaks, which have reached that stage of popularity which voids their exclusiveness. Sometimes only the collar shows a bit of fur. The very swagger coat bears a small military collar, frequently made of flat fur such as calfskin or broadtail. The long, straight line of the coat is broken by a narrow novelty belt, sometimes of the smooth, sleek fur, which is attractive.

A number of leading Parisian stylists are flaring the cloth coat about the knees. They accomplish this by a circular piece as pictured in the background in this group or by means of a broad shirred ruffle which is frankly full about the hemline. Gray suede cloth with a discreet use of gray squirrel for collar and cuffs was the medium chosen for the model here shown.

Late Paris Modes in Coats.

Fur-lined, but not fur-trimmed—at least not ostentatiously so, bespeaks coat elegancy for a select clientele. Sports coats thus fashioned employ in their development stunning novelty woolens, such as English tweeds, Scotch plaids and similar weaves of highest standard.

Little Pollyanna Saw Bright Side

S. G. writes in great dejection: "There is nothing in life for me now since the shattering of my firm belief that movie serials never end. I have just witnessed the tenth and last installment of a thriller, and the denouement is, I think, worthy of note. The sister of the villain, who complicates the plot dreadfully by being the finest little woman in the world, rides up on her galloping steed to the scene of a bloody combat between the hero and the shameless rascal, but only our hero is visible, his head bloody but unbowed.

"'Where,' pants she, 'where is my brother?'

"Our hero walks with bowed head to the edge of the cliff, and points to the ledge below where the villain lies crushed to a pulp.

"'Oh, well,' says our little Pollyanna, 'he was only my half-brother, anyway.'"—Kansas City Times.

Camouflaged Ankles

Traveling investigators claim the English women have notoriously fat ankles, even the young women losing all beauty lines on that portion of her anatomy early in life if, indeed, she ever had that treasure in her possession. So an inventive designer over there has brought out camouflaged hose, the clever feature of the World war being used to help the English woman make her ankles appear to be less huge and unwieldy than they really are, and the wise inventor claims, with confidence in his advertising, his new hose will make the fattest ankle appear trim, sylphlike and graceful. The art of camouflage is wrought by hand-painted shadows on either side of the ankle, making longitude appear pronounced while breadth of beam is made to appear less than it really is.—Ohio State Journal.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa will be in session at the Court House at Garner, Iowa, on the 21st day of December, 1926, at 10 00 o'clock A. M, for the purpose of receiving bids for the construction of drainage improvement known and designated as Drainage District No. 131, Hancock County, Iowa

The time fixed for the commencement and completion of the contract shall be as follows: Work must be commenced on or before April 15th, 1927 and completed on or before June 15, 1927

Said work to be let in one section known as section one.

Section One—Main

	Length	Size	Av Depth
Corrugated Pipe	20'	15"	4
Tile	2980'	10"	5
Tile	288'	8"	4 9
Headwall Cone		7 cu yds
4 Intakes		18"

Average haul from Goodell about 3½ miles

All tile must pass the specifications of standard drain tile of the American Society for Testing Materials

The specifications state that where the line of tile being constructed is within 100 feet of trees all joints are to be entirely surrounded with concrete of a minimum thickness of three inches In quick sand all joints are to be wrapped in double thickness tar paper

All tile to be delivered at the ditch side subject to inspection at this point and to be delivered as ordered by the construction engineer

Whenever the tile improvement is laid in existing ditches the average depth will be computed from the natural surface of the ground and the contractor will be required to backfill all trenches to the height of the natural surface of the ground so that the existing ditch will be completely filled

All ditches and drains to be constructed in all respects in accordance with the plat, profiles and specifications on file in the Auditor's office at Garner, Iowa, subject only to such changes and alterations as may be made as provided by law.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, up to 10:00 A. M on the day of letting.

Each bid must be accompanied by a cash deposit or certified check in a sum equal to ten per cent of the total amount of the bid as a guarantee of the good faith of the bidder

The price must be stated in the bid in figures, and permission will not be granted for the withdrawal or amendment of any bid after time for closing

All bids must be made at a fixed price per station of 100 feet for each size tile and also a fixed price for each section complete in all respects, including corrugated pipe, intakes and filling of ditches and must also include schedule of overdepth adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, and on file in the Auditor's office for possible verdepth or underdepth beyond the average specified.

Bids will be received for material alone, for labor alone or for complete labor and material.

The Board will at their discretion, let the work as a whole or in sections to the lowest responsible bidder, reserving, however, the right to reject any and all bids, and also reserving the right to adjourn the time of awarding the contract.

ALL BIDS NOT MADE IN CONFORMANCE WITH THE ABOVE REQUIREMENTS WILL BE REJECTED.

The party to whom any contract is being awarded will be required to attend at the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, within ten days after such award, and execute a contract thereby agreeing to all provisions, terms and conditions thereof and shall file with the County Auditor a bond, subject to his approval, for the sum equal to seventy-five per cent of the amount of the bid and in case the party to whom any work is awarded fails to enter into this contract and furnish bond within ten days as herein required the deposit of such party shall thereupon become forfeited to Drainage District No 131, Hancock County, Iowa, together with all rights under said award.

The deposit of the unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them within twenty-four hours after demand, and the deposit of the successful bidder will be returned to him upon his executing the contract and filing with the County Auditor the bond as herein required.

By order of the Board of Supervisors.

Dated at Garner, Iowa this 6th day of December, 1926.

H. C. MEYER,
County Auditor,
Hancock County, Iowa.

William the Silent

A YOUNG man—scarcely more than a boy—tall, dark, strikingly handsome, stood listening to a plan outlined to him by Henry II of France, to whose court he had been sent as hostage by his sovereign, Emperor Charles V of Germany. Henry's plan was of a somewhat alarming nature, for it involved the massacring of all the Protestants in France and the Netherlands. Yet the young man, himself a Netherlander, gave no sign of the horror he felt, and spoke no word to put the wily French king on his guard. For this bit of discretion he received thereafter the nickname of "William the Silent," although his nature was open, frank and far removed from taciturnity.

"William the Silent," prince of Orange and count of Nassau, was born in the Netherlands in 1533. As a youth he attracted the favor of Charles V, who taught him war and statecraft. On Charles' abdication the retiring monarch's son, Philip I, became king of Spain and of the Netherlands. He was cold-blooded, bigoted and stupid; the exact opposite of his great father. The Dutch states making up the Netherlands had even in Charles' time resented royal authority, and it had required all the old emperor's tact and statecraft to keep them pacified. Now, under the new king, they again grew restive. To make things worse Philip ordered a branch of the cruel Inquisition established in Holland. This raised a storm of angry protests, and Philip sent the bloody duke of Alva with an army into the Netherlands to enforce order.

Enraged by the oppression of his countrymen, William the Silent raised an army to oppose Alva; but the dull Dutch burghers were not yet ready for so radical an act, and William had to disband his forces for lack of support. In no way discouraged, he hit on a new plan for harassing the hated Spaniards. By advice of Admiral Coligny of France he issued "letters of marque," authorizing Dutch privateers to prey on Spain's ships and seacoast. These privateers banded together under the nickname of the "Beggars of the Sea." They did incalculable damage to Spanish commerce and for years made their name a terror to all their country's foes.

In 1572 the Dutch again revolted against Spanish tyranny and made William their stadtholder, or governor. Yet, warned by his former failure, he saw that the people were not yet ready for absolute freedom; so he simply ruled in the name of King Philip. Spain increased its oppressions and war followed. William's two brothers were slain in battle, and at one critical juncture he ordered the dikes broken down that kept out the sea from the low-lying Netherlands and the country flooded to save it from falling into the enemy's hands. Philip's armies besieged Leyden, but William drove them away and raised the siege

At last the time for freedom was ripe. Through William's efforts a number of the Netherland provinces combined, drew up and signed a declaration of independence, with the avowed purpose of driving out the Spanish and forming a free and united country where all religious sects should be at liberty to worship God in their own way. Thus the United Netherlands was founded.

In 1581 allegiance to Spain was formally renounced. William, the prime mover and central figure in the revolution, had devoted his entire life to this one great purpose. Yet when it was accomplished he would not make himself king of the newly created nation, but contented himself with governing it under the less pretentious title of "count."

Philip, seeing that William was the backbone of the entire revolutionary movement, hit on a most characteristic plan for wrecking the union of the provinces. Instead of sending armies at once to attack the revolutionists or to ravage their country in true medieval Spanish style, he merely issued a proclamation offering a huge sum of money for the murder of William.

Even in the country William had freed there were many scoundrels ready and eager to win the reward. Attempt after attempt was made to kill him, and for the last three years of his life the Liberator was in continuous danger of death. Undaunted by this new peril and the black ingratitude it involved, William continued calmly on his way.

But, though threatened men live long, the end came all too soon for the welfare of the United Netherlands. On July 10, 1584, a man named Balthazar Gerard, actuated by desire for the blood-money promised by Philip, entered William's house and shot him.

Philip had conquered, in so far as he had rid himself of an invincible foe. But the independence that William the Silent had won for Holland has remained to this day. The example in disinterested patriotism, statesmanship, honesty and justice that he set to the whole world served as a guiding star to many another sorely perplexed ruler in those dark corrupt days.

William the Silent's character and career bore a striking resemblance to those of George Washington, the resemblance being further carried out in the former's affectionate nickname of "the Father of the Netherlands."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Schemes to Grab Rumanian Throne Are Foiled by King Ferdinand.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

EVEN though he be sick almost unto death, King Ferdinand of Rumania has no intention of permitting the former crown prince, Carol, and his friends, or any other clique to seize the throne or otherwise get control of the government. The king, whose death was rumored several times, issued an edict to the nation warning against any attempt to interfere with the regency established after Carol eloped with Magda Lupescu and renounced his rights to the succession in favor of his little son, Michael. Ferdinand said he felt his strength was returning, and undoubtedly his condition is much improved for the time being.

Meanwhile Queen Marie reached Paris, had a long private conference with Carol, and left hurriedly for Bucharest, abandoning her plans for two days of shopping because Ferdinand sent a pathetic plea for her quick return home. Decision as to an operation on her husband was postponed until after her arrival.

In Bucharest Foreign Minister Mitilineu deplored the rumors of the danger of a revolution or military coup d'etat, with Prince Carol attempting to seize the throne at the king's death. He said it is not true that the military hierarchy supports the ex-crown prince. Nevertheless, the newspapers hinted that there was likely to be a great shakeup among the high army commanders as a safeguard to prevent treachery or a sudden shift to the support of Carol. It was said Premier Averescu and Bratiano, generally considered dictator of the country, had agreed on a coalition cabinet.

DESPITE charges of excessive campaign expenditures, Arthur R. Gould, Republican, was elected senator from Maine to succeed the late Senator Fernald, and the control of the senate was thereby assured to his party. With Gould in, the upper house will have forty-eight Republicans, forty-seven Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite. The last, Senator Shipstead of Minnesota, is expected to line up with the Republicans because he formerly belonged in that party and the Farmer-Laborite party of Minnesota has now dissolved. Senators Brookhart of Iowa and Frazier of North Dakota, who supported LaFollette for President two years ago, have been taken back into the fold of regularity.

AS MEMBERS of congress gathered in Washington for the short session, now opened, there was general agreement that nothing in the way of farm relief legislation could be enacted this winter and that the problem would be left for the next congress to tackle. Leaders of the corn and wheat belts, still insistent on the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill to force up the domestic prices of farm produce, found its prospects at this time were poor, owing to the fact that the Southern Democrats still refuse their support. The Democrat leadership opposes this bill and all similar plans because the underlying principle, they think, is a scheme for making the protective tariff on farm products effective. Furthermore, it is asserted by corn belt Republicans, the Democratic leaders are determined to kill any farm relief legislation before the Presidential election of 1928 on the theory that the failure of all such legislation would prove exceedingly embarrassing to the Republican party in that contest. Senator McNary has prepared a revised bill which will make it optional with the farm marketing board to buy the surplus outright or to advance funds for this purpose to the co-operatives. None of the basic commodities, corn, wheat, cotton, swine and rice, is exempted from assessment of the equalization fee designed to cover losses on disposal of the surplus.

AFTER trying for nine years to enforce its prohibition law, the province of Ontario, Canada, went to the polls on Wednesday and voted overwhelmingly in favor of substituting a system of liquor traffic under government control The dry law will be repealed at the next session of the legislature in February, for out of a membership of 112, about 80 of the new legislators are pledged to take this action It was a great victory for the Conservative government headed by Premier G. Howard Ferguson. Only one cabinet member, Dr David Jamieson, was defeated. Sinclair and Raney, respectively the Liberal and Progressive dry leaders, won by narrow margins. William Nickle, until recently Premier Ferguson's attorney general, who left the government to support the drys, was beaten in Kingston by a majority of more than 2,000. His downfall was a demoralizing defeat for the drys. Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are the only provinces of Canada that still cling to prohibition.

FOREIGNERS in Foochow, China, who are numerous, were in dire peril for some days while the Cantonese and northern troops were fighting for control of Fukien province. However, calls for protection were speedily answered and Japanese, British and French gunboats were hurried to the scene. To protect American lives and property the mine detachment vessel Hart was sent from Manila to Foochow. Latest reports of the fighting indicated that the Cantonese were having the best of it and would soon capture Foochow, Chekiang and the entire province.

Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, told the house of commons that the government opposed armed intervention in China and had taken all the steps it deemed necessary to protect British nationals in the war zone. As opposed to the recent pronunciamento of the Cantonese commander is the report of the international commission headed by Silas H. Strawn on extraterritoriality in China. After eight months of study the commission recommends that extraterritorial rights be retained by the powers for the present, being progressively abolished only as changing conditions warrant, and that the administration of the laws be entrusted to a judiciary independent of the executive or the military authorities.

SECRETARY OF STATE KELLOGG has devised and formally proposed a plan which he believes will settle the age-old dispute between Peru and Chile over Tacna and Arica. He suggests that those provinces be ceded to Bolivia, now shut off from the sea, and that Peru and Chile receive compensation for public works constructed there. The provinces, under his plan, would be maintained as a perpetually demilitarized zone, the city of Arica would be made a free port and the Morro promontory would be established under international control as a memorial to the valor of both Chile and Peru with a monument on the headland commemorating the friendly settlement of the question.

Prompt resumption of diplomatic relations between Chile and Peru would be expected under the formula, which, Secretary Kellogg explained, "does not call for a moral surrender or anything that can be so construed, by one country to the other." Further, he said, its acceptance would embody "a settlement which South America as a whole would welcome as one insuring permanent peace and stability."

NICARAGUA'S troubles are not over by any means. Last week General Sacasa, the former vice president who was supported for the presidency by the revolutionists, landed at Puerto Cabezas with men and arms and announced his cabinet. He expects that Mexico and Guatemala will recognize him as president. The press of San Salvador is protesting against the American recognition of President Diaz. Sacasa arrived with two schooners from Puerto Barrios, Guatemala, and was escorted by a Mexican gunboat. General Moncada, commander of the rebels, has rejected the government's surrender proposals transmitted through Admiral Latimer.

HENRI BERENGER having refused reappointment as French ambassador to Washington, Paul Claudel, at present ambassador to Tokyo, has been selected for the place and the French cabinet has approved the appointment M Claudel is an author of considerable note and of delightful personality. Born at Lyons in 1870, he began his diplomatic career as attache to Washington 30 years ago. Later he was consul to Canada. He lived in China nearly twenty years as consul. He was transferred to Frankfort in 1912 as consul general, and later served as minister to Brazil, minister to Denmark, and was named ambassador to Japan in 1923.

FOREIGN MINISTER BRIAND, successfully defending his policy of reestablishing friendship between France and Germany, told the chamber of deputies that a peace policy is the only means of averting another calamitous war He said the policies of Locarno and Thiory were merely steps toward peace, adding that he and Herr Stresemann differed on many points but were trying to get together Regarding the Rhineland, he said: "We are not on the Rhineland to throttle Germany we are there to see that the treaty stipulations are carried out, and we have every reason to withdraw when we are satisfied. I am convinced the substitution of the League of Nations for the interallied control commission instead of weakening France's security would strengthen it."

M. Briand also took occasion to warn Italy not to get too gay. He said it was all right for the Italians to lose their tempers, but that they must not do it too often.

HERBERT HOOVER, secretary of commerce, says in his annual report that the year has been one of unprecedented progress for American industries and never has been surpassed in the volume of production and consumption, in the physical quantity of exports and imports, and in the rate of wages. There has been practically no unemployment. He adds: "As in the preceding year there were a few points where conditions were less satisfactory, as in the New England textile industry, two or three sections of the agricultural industry, and the bituminous coal industry.

"On the whole, however, the country was able to maintain the highest standard of living in its history, a standard far above that in most other countries of the world at this or any other time. This represents a remarkable recovery from the great losses incurred by the nation in the World war."

Agriculture still lags behind other industries, Secretary Hoover concedes.

"The steady advance in prices of agricultural commodities from the time of the great fall in 1920-21 up to the crop year 1924-25 has contributed to the restoration of agriculture, although there are still weak spots," says Mr. Hoover.

ONE of the most important attacks yet made on the Volstead act was repulsed by the Supreme court of the United States in an opinion that upheld that section of the act which limits to one pint in ten days the amount of spirituous or vinous liquor a physician may prescribe for a patient. Five of the justices held that this restriction is clearly valid under the power granted congress in the eighteenth amendment to enforce prohibition by appropriate legislation. Justices Sutherland, McReynolds, Stone and Butler in a dissenting opinion asserted that not only is the restriction an unlawful interference with the medical profession and the right of individual states to control medical practice, but that it is plain, from a reading of the eighteenth amendment, that congress and the states which ratified the amendment, sought only to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor for beverage purposes.

REVOLT in Albania, of which not much has been heard over here, has grown serious. But the news is now given out that Italy has signed a treaty of amity and co-operation with Albania, and Mussolini's government indicates that it will go the limit in supporting Achmed Zogu, head of the Albanian government, Yugo-Slavia, Greece and other neighbors are warned off.

Lesson for December 12

THE BOY SAMUEL

LESSON TEXT—I Sam. 3:10, 15-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Boy Samuel.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God Calls the Boy Samuel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Boyhood of a Great Leader.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Hearing and Heeding God's Voice.

In order to grasp the story of Samuel's boyhood life, a survey should be made of I Samuel, ch. 1-3.

I. Samuel Given in Answer to Prayer (I Sam. 1:19, 20).

The name Samuel means "asked of God." He was given to Hannah in answer to her prayers. In connection with her asking this gift from God, she vowed to give him to God. He was to be therefore a Nazarite all the days of his life.

II. Samuel Given to the Lord (I Sam. 1:24-28).

For a time he was cared for by his mother in the home. The best nurse and teacher for a child is its mother. According to her vow when she asked the Lord for this child, at an early age she took him to the sanctuary and gave him over to the charge of Eli, the priest, to minister in the sanctuary.

III. Features of Israel's History in This Period (2:12-36).

1. The demoralized priesthood.

(1) They were actuated by greed (2:12-17).

It was God's will that those who ministered at the altar should live of the things of the altar, but they broke through the divine regulations touching this matter, even to securing their selfish ends by force.

(2) Gross immorality (2:22).

The courts of God's house were thus polluted. The condition of the nation was most appalling: Degradation and ruin follow rapidly when God's ministers are under the sway of lust and greed.

2. An alienated people (2:30-32).

Their sins separated them from God. God's holiness is such that those who practice sin are alienated from Him.

3. The cessation of divine revelation (3:1).

The Word of God was precious in those days. "There was no open vision." This shows that God was silent. The message from the Lord was more a memory than a present experience. The same thing in principle is true of the individual life today. Some who once enjoyed fellowship with God no longer hear His voice speaking to them.

IV. God Called Samuel (3:2-10).

In striking contrast with the degeneracy of the nation, we have before us the beautiful life of Samuel. Dwelling within the sacred courts and ministering before the Lord with Eli is the innocent Samuel who is become the savior of his people. In Samuel we have a striking pattern of child religion. The Lord gave him in answer to Hannah's prayer. From his birth he was dedicated to the Lord. While quite young his mother took him to the sanctuary of the Lord where he served and slept. Two traits in Samuel's character stand out in this call, namely, his cheerful obedience to the Lord's call and his surrendered will. He expressed his willingness before he knew what was required. He did not inquire what was wanted and then let his obedience depend upon its suiting him. We should believe that the Lord knows what is best and be willing to yield glad obedience to His commands.

V. Samuel's First Prophetic Message (3:11-18).

Up to this time Samuel obeyed the one who was over him, but the time had now come when he must directly hear and obey the Lord. The first message entrusted to him was a most terrible one. To deliver it was a most trying task. He hesitated to tell it to Eli, but when pressed by him he manifested the true courage which was lying back of his fear. It must have been a bitter experience to Eli to see Samuel recognized and himself passed by, but he was submissive. He knew that the slight was just. He could not fail to interpret it thus in view of the appearance of the man of God to him (2:27-36). This fearful visitation upon Eli's house was due to the sins of his sons. He was held accountable for not restraining them.

VI. Samuel Established in the Prophetic Office (3:19-21).

"And Samuel grew and the Lord was with him and did let none of His words fall to the ground and all Israel from Dan even to Beersheba knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord."

If Back Hurts Begin on Salts

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally by Drinking Quarts of Good Water

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Too much rich food creates acids which clog the kidney pores so that they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood. Then you get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin to drink soft water in quantities; also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone can take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby often preventing serious kidney complications.

The Girl in the Mirror

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan leaving Laurie on his own. Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late and he retorts that he seeks adventure. From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo. Again in the mirror's reflection he sees her with a revolver and fears she means to commit suicide. He rushes into her apartment, and, winning her confidence, induces her to lunch with him, though she warns him of danger. At lunch she admits there is a mystery in her life. She says also that her funds are almost exhausted, but refuses flatly Laurie's offer of financial help. As a stranger enters the restaurant, the girl mutters "He has found me." Upon learning that the man has no claim on her, Laurie warns the stranger not to molest the girl, whose name, Laurie learns, is Doris. To Louise Ordway, his invalid sister-in-law, Laurie admits his interest in Doris.

"Bob didn't know," she said. "If he had felt the least suspicion he wouldn't have gone so far, or for so long. I thought I had three or four months—"

Laurie beat and kissed her cheek. "I'm coming in every day," he said, and abruptly left the room.

In the lower hall he stopped to take in the full moral realization of what he had discovered. Louise, superb, arrogant beautiful Louise, was really ill, desperately ill. A feeling of remorse mingled with his sense of shock. He had believed her a sort of nervous hypochondriac. He had resented her excessive demands on Barbara, but it was only since he had seen much of her in this last month that he had been able wholeheartedly to like and admire her.

As he stood silent, he became conscious of another presence—an august, impressive one, familiar in the past but veiled now, as it were, in a mist of human emotion. It was Jepson, the butler. He coughed humbly.

"Hexcuse me, sir," he faltered. "But Mrs. Hordway h'ain't quite so well lately, sir. 'Ave you hobserved that?"

Laurie nodded. "I noticed it today," he admitted.

"She's losin' strength very fast, sir. Hall of us 'as seen it. Cook says she don't eat nothing. And Susanne and the nurse says it's 'ard work to get 'er from the bed to 'er chair—"

Laurie checked these revelations. "Has the doctor been here today?"

"Yessir, two of 'em 'ave been 'ere. Doctor Speyer comes hevery day. This morning 'e brought Doctor Hames again. Hit's very hupsetting, sir, with 'er brother away and hall."

The man was genuinely anxious. Laurie tried to reassure him.

"She may be better in a day or two," he said, more buoyantly than he felt. "But I'll come in every day. And here's my telephone number. If anything goes wrong, call me up immediately. Leave a message if I'm not there."

"Yessir. Thank you, sir." Jepson was pathetically grateful and relieved. He had the English servant's characteristic need of sanction and authority.

When Laurie reached his rooms, he called Sonya on the telephone. Like Jepson he was feeling rather overwhelmed by his responsibilities. It was a relief to hear Sonya's deep, colorful voice.

"Didn't know you were here till just now," he told her. "I'm coming to see you in the morning. I want to talk to you about a lot of things."

"Including Mrs. Ordway?" suggested Sonya.

"Yes. You saw her today. You noticed—"

"Of course. Samuel is to be operated on tomorrow. I'll send him back to Devon House with his mother in a few days, as soon as he can safely travel and I shall stay right here."

"That's splendid of you!"

"It's what Barbara and Mr. Warren would wish. And Mrs. Ordway, too, I think, though she would never suggest it."

"I'm sure it is."

Laurie hung up the receiver with a nervous hand. To a youth of twenty-four it is a somewhat overpowering experience to discover that destiny is especially busy over the affairs of two women for whom he has assumed a definite responsibility. As he turned from the instrument its bell again compelled his attention. He took up the receiver, and the voice of a girl came to his ear. A week or two ago he had rather liked that voice and its owner, a gay, irresponsible, good-hearted little creature who pranced in the front row of an upstown pony ballet. Now he listened to it with keen distaste.

"Hello, Laurie," it twittered. "Is that you? This is Billie. Listen. I gotta plan. A bunch of us is goin' out to Gedney to supper tonight. We're goin' to leave right after the show. Are you on?"

Laurie got rid of the fair Billie. He did it courteously but very firmly. A rather unusual degree of firmness was necessary, for Miss Billie was not used to having her invitations refused. She accepted the phenomenon with acute naïve surprise and very lingeringly.

Banks was not at home, to divert his client's mind with his robust conversation. As he dressed for his call on Doris the sharp contrasts of life struck Laurie with the peculiar force with which they hit the young and the inexperienced.

But were they really contrasts? On the one side were Louise, dying, and Doris, secretly eager to live. On the other were Billie and her friends—foolish little butterflies enjoying their brief hour in the secret garden of life.

At Eight o'Clock Laurie Found Doris Sitting Under the Shade of a Reading Lamp In Her Studio.

eternally. Enjoying their good times, praying they were happy, perhaps even thinking they were happy, but infinitely more tragic figures than Louise and Doris. Yet a week ago he had thought they were silly!

Pondering on these and other problems, he absently rubbed the bloom from three successive cigarettes.

CHAPTER VII

Griggs Gets an Order.

At eight o'clock Laurie found Doris sitting under the shade of a reading lamp in her studio, deep in the pages of a sophisticated French novel and radiating an almost oppressive atmosphere of well-being.

Subconsciously, he resented this. His mood was keyed to tragedy. But he returned her half-serious, half-mocking smile with one as enigmatic, shook hands with grave formality, and surveyed with mild interest a modest heap of bank-notes of small denominations that lay on the table, catching the room's high lights. Following his glance, Doris nodded complacently.

"I left them there for you to see," she remarked.

"Did the kind gentleman under the three balls give you all that?"

"He did. Count it."

Laurie frowned.

"Don't be so arrogant about your wealth. It's fleeting. Any copy-book will tell you so."

She opened a small drawer in the table, swept the bills into it, and casually closed it. Laurie stared.

"Are you going to leave it there? Just like that?"

She looked patient.

"Why not?"

"I begin to understand why you are sometimes financially cramped."

He took the bills, smoothed them out flat, rolled back the rug to the edge of the table, laid the money under it, and carefully replaced the rug.

"That's the place to put it," he observed, with satisfaction. "No one connected with a studio ever lifts a rug. Bangs and I used to throw our money under the furniture, and pick it up as we needed it, but others sometimes reached it first. This way is better. How lovely you look!" he added. As he spoke he comfortably seated himself on the other side of the reading lamp, and moved the lamp to a point where it would not obstruct his view of her.

"I look lovely. She had put on her evening gown, very simply made, but rich in the Oriental coloring she loved. She was like Louise in that. Laurie's thoughts swung to the latter's sick-room and his brilliant, wasted face grew somber. The girl sitting in the big chair observed the sudden change in his expression. She passed a box of cigarettes toward him.

"Smoke if you like," she said, indifferently. "All my friends do."

He caught the phrase. Then she had friends?

"Including Herbert Ransome Shaw?" he asked, as he lit a match.

"Don't include him among my friends. But he was here this afternoon."

"He was!" In his rising interest Laurie nearly let the match go out. "What did he want?"

"To warn me to have nothing to do with you."

"He has a moral clock!"

Laurie lit the cigarette and puffed at it savagely. Then rising he drew his chair forward and sat down facing her.

"See here," he said quietly, "you'd better tell me the whole story. I can't help you much if I'm kept in the dark. Put if you'll let me into things—and before I forget it," he interrupted himself to add, "I want to borrow a friend of mine to call on you. She will be a tower of strength. She's a Russian and one of the best women I know."

She observed with a slight smile:

"What's her name?"

"Miss Orleneff. Sonya Orleneff, a great pal of my sister's and an all-round good sort. I'd like to bring her in to-morrow afternoon. Will five be convenient?"

"No." She spoke now with the curtness of the morning. "In no circumstances," she added, decisively.

"But why?"

He was dazed. If ever a knight errant worked under greater difficulties than those Laurie told himself he'd like to know the poor chap's name.

"I have no wish to meet Miss Orleneff."

"But she's an ideal person for you to know, experienced, sympathetic, and understanding. She did a lot for my sister last year. I must tell you all about that sometime. She could do more for you—"

"Mr. Devon!" The finality of her tone brought him up short. "We must understand each other."

"I should like nothing better." He, too, was suddenly formal.

"This morning you projected yourself into my life."

"Literally," he cordially agreed.

"I am grateful to you for what you did and what you wish to do. But I will not meet any more strangers. I will not meet Miss Orleneff, or any one else. Is that clear?"

"Oh, perfectly!" Laurie sighed. "Of course you're a crowned head," he mused aloud. "I had forgotten. Would you like my head on a charger, or anything like that?"

She studied him thoughtfully.

"Almost from the first," she said, "and except for an occasional minute or two, you have refused to be serious. That interests me. Why is it? Aren't you willing to realize that there are real troubles in the world, terrible troubles, that the bravest go down under?"

"Of course." He was serious now. He had begun to realize that fully. "It's my unfortunate manner, I suppose," he defended himself. "I've never taken anything seriously for very long. It's hard to form the habit, all of a sudden."

"You will have to take me seriously."

He made a large gesture of acceptance.

"All right," he promised. "That brings us back to where we were. Tell me the truth. If there's anything in it that really menaces you, you'll find me serious enough."

Before answering, she rose and opened the studio door, on which, he observed with approval, a strong new lock and an inside bolt had already been placed. He saw her peer up and down the hall. Then she closed and bolted the door, and returned to her chair. The precaution brought before him a mental vision of Herbert Ransome Shaw prowling about the dim corridor. He spoke incredulously.

"Are you really afraid of that chap?"

"I have good reason to be," she said quietly. She sat down in her chair again, rested her elbows on the table and her chin in her hands, in the pose already so familiar to him, and added quietly, "He is the source of all my present trouble."

She stopped and turned her head to listen.

"Do you hear anything moving in the hall?" she asked, almost in a whisper.

"No. Shall I look?"

She shook her head. "Don't unbolt the door."

"You're nervous. I'm sure there's nothing there. Please go on," he urged. "Our little friend Bertie—"

Seeing her expression, he stopped short. "Forgive me," he said humbly. "But the plain truth is, it's awfully hard for me to take that fellow seriously. Oh I know he's venomous," he conceded, "but I can't help feeling that he hasn't as much power over you as you think he has."

He realized that she was listening, but not to him.

"There is some one outside that door!" she whispered.

Laurie leaped to the door as noiselessly as a cat, unbolted it and flung it open. The hall was empty. He had an instantaneous impression that something as silent as a moving shadow had vanished around the staircase at the far end, but when he reached the spot he saw nothing save the descending iron spirals of successive stairways. He returned to his companion, smiling reassuringly.

"It's our nerves," he said. "In a few minutes more I shall be worrying about Bertie, myself."

"Bolt the door again," she directed.

He obeyed. She went on as if there had been no interruption to their talk.

"It isn't what he is," she admitted. "He himself is nothing, as you say. It's what is back of him that—that frightens me! Why don't you smoke?" she interrupted herself to ask.

Laurie automatically selected and lit another cigarette.

"I know what's going to be back of Bertie pretty soon," he darkly predicted. "Whoever he is, and whatever he is doing, he has a big jolt coming to him, and it's coming fast."

He laid down the cigarette and turned to her with his most charming expression, a wonderfully sweet smile, half shy, wholly boyish. Before this look, any one who loved Laurence Devon was helpless.

"Come," he said gently, "tell me the whole story. You know it's not curiosity that makes me ask. But how can I help you when I'm working in the dark?"

As she hesitated, his brilliant eyes, so softened now, continued to hold hers.

"And I want to help you," he added. "I want that privilege more than I want anything else in the world."

For a long moment she sat still, as if considering his words, her eyes on her hands, folded in her lap. The strange, deep flush he had noticed once before again stained her face. At last she straightened up with a quick movement, throwing back her shoulders as if to take on again some burden they had almost cast off.

"I am sorry to seem so mysterious," she said, "and so unresponsive. I will tell you this much, and it is more than I ought to say. In the situation we are in I am in his power, horribly so. He can crush me at any time he chooses."

"Then why doesn't he?"

The gentleness of her caller's voice softened the brusqueness of his words.

"Because—" She stopped again. For the first time she had become embarrassed and self-conscious. She made her climax in a rush: "Lately he insists that he has fallen in love with me!"

Laurie uttered an ejaculation. It was not a pretty one, but it nicely fitted the emergency.

"He has hoped that to save myself, and others, I will marry him, the contemptible, crawling snake!"

The listener was impressed by her comparison. Certainly there was something ophidian about Shaw. He himself had noticed it.

"Then, for the time being, you're really safe?" he suggested.

"No. His patience is exhausted. He is beginning to realize that I'd rather die."

Laurie gets the idea that the police ought to be notified, but Doris warns him that would spoil everything.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Marriage Rites That Are Old as Humanity

The girl who today treads the aisle to the tune of the wedding march is still the victim of certain marriage rites so old that the idea originally underlying them has been forgotten. Her wedding veil, for instance, is a relic of the canopy that used to be held over the bride to seclude her from profane gaze. The ancient Romans attached great importance to the custom of veiling the bride. Its primary object was to protect her against the evil eye, a superstition current among many tribes and nations.

With some people the veiling was required because the bride's own glance was considered to be dangerous. Misfortune would surely befall any person or animal the bride looked at before she had seen her husband on her arrival at his house.

From the early Romans is handed down the custom, not infrequently observed by an American bride of today, of being married in a previously worn marriage veil. Great luck is supposed to attend the practice, especially if the former wearer had been happy in the married state.—Eileen Bourne, in Liberty Magazine.

Troth

Man's idea of pledging himself to marriage, according to some sources, comes down to us from the Roman ages. "Treouth," which was what the Romans called the pledging of oneself, is still ours in the shape of the English word "troth."

In the Roman era great ceremony was attached to the act, but these traditional rites have been simplified gradually until today about the only thing remaining is the giving of the ring, this having persisted through the centuries. As originally practiced, the ritual included troth rings for both maid and man and this double ring custom is still preserved by some European peoples.

In Which Class Are You?

Last year, there was a huge gain in the savings deposits of America. Over $600,000,000 were added to the savings of the country. This means that most savings accounts showed a steady and regular increase. It means that the average person wisely added something to his income during the year, but some did not. Ask yourself the question—"In which Class am I?"

Grammar Grades Selling Seals

Our Grammar grades are putting the regular annual Christmas l Stamp Sale in and about Klemand we hope those who can will courage them by buying liberally Last year the proceeds from our are were used in the purchase of First Aid Red Cross Kit for our ool. We can use to advantage ew books on athletics and health. l might well start a fund toward n equipment Our share of the e of these stamps is one half and other half goes toward the state paign for better health and esially against the dreaded disease berculosis from which over 100, people still die each year in the ited States Our health camigns in Iowa have reduced the rate mortality from this disease here less than half what it is in the ited States. Iowa, by using the ney from the sale of these stamps l from other sources, has gained national reputation for the work is doing in her schools. For years Iowa has led the states in respect, but there is work still be done right here in Iowa. These s are pertinent. $5,300,00 is annual loss to school taxpayers Iowa because of absences due to ventable illness in the five lower des. 241,000 school children in a have remediable physical de-ts. 180,000 have teeth defects. 500 have defects of nose and oat, 43,500 have impaired vision eye trouble. 7,500 have defect- hearing. Buy the stamps and p keep up the fight toward mak- Iowa a healthier and happier ce to live and carry on. Last r Klemme bought over $25.00 rth of Stamps.

Hallie Greiman Made Record

Hallie Greiman, one of our Seni- girls, made an enviable record in current events test given by our gh School Principal, Miss Stoner, ently. She scored 47 out of a ssible 50 which would have been perfect score. Comparatively few gh school students in such tests re over 45. Students from Otwa seem to be excelling most bers in Iowa. These tests are epared by an editor at Washing-, D. C. and presuppose a careful ding of a current events paper blished by this same editor, who o gives references to such magaes as Harpers, Review of Reews, and Literary Digest, which have in our assembly room.

Orchestra Has New Member

Orville Stokesbary has begun work on the drums received only recently and will soon be sitting in with the other members of our high school orchestra Mr Gary, who leads our orchestra is a very busy man these days since he is giving private instruction to several students who will add to the volume of music made by that organization A beginners class is meeting regularly and will later be joined to the advanced class.

Any one knowing of a bargain in bass viols or string bass will do us a favor by reporting same as we need such an instrument for our orchestra but cannot at this time secure a new one at the regular price.

Lyceum Course Finished

U. G. Lacey gave a very good lecture in closing the Lyceum Course financed by our Senior Class. The course we feel was a decided success both from the standpoint of quality and support. Enough season tickets were purchased to insure against deficit and those who came speak favorably of the course. This success of course we feel is also a credit to our community

Cagers Eat Oysters!

Our basket ball team, coach and superintendent, were treated to an oyster stew Monday evening at our local restaurant by the proprietor, Mr Quandt The affair was a sequel to the boys' success in the fray with Garner Friday night We all appreciate this favor on Mr Qaundts part whose strict attention to his busines kept him from the game against his personal wishes It was good weather for oysters and they were mighty good We undertand our boys have other treats awaiting them which shows a splendid support for athletics. Our boys cannot but feel with such support that it is up to them to give the very best there is in them And we belive they will.

Other School Items

We take this opportunity to announce that $12.21 was collected in Klemme to send to Near East Relief Headquarters at Omaha We are glad for the generous response of the few Wish more could have been persuaded to show faith in the Golden Rule and that it pays to cast bread upon the waters.

WAYNE LEMKE STARS ON IOWA B. B. TEAM

Started Scoring For Leading Quad Section In Tourney

Klemme is always interested in knowing what our boys are doing at college The Times is glad to report that Wayne Lemke, a star on the Klemme high school basket ball squad last year, is breaking into college basket ball at Iowa City and as this is his first year at the University, he stands in a fair way of becoming a regular on the college team, as he is gaining recognition as a good man according to the following report which we clipped from the Iowa City "Iowa Daily:"

"The quadrangle basket ball tournament opened with a rush last night when section A defeated C by a score of 19 to 16, and section B took a narrow victory from section D in a last period rally by an 11 to 8 count

"Section A, in the first game of the evening scored first when Lemke dropped one in from the foul line They quickly ran the score up to six points before C scored, then, after the ball had traveled up and down the court a few times, C tied the score. Moulton dribbled in for a set up as the half closed

"The second half of the opening game started slowly with the odds shifting back and forth, but Lemke and Moulton who starred for the winners put A on top of the scoring column as the game ended.

"In the second of last night's games, section D got away to a six to one lead in the first period with Jenkins responsible for four of the six counters Section B rallied in the second half, with Richter leading and managed to hold a three point lead as the game ended"

Moved To Missouri

Wm Tiggeman loaded a car of household goods Saturday at the R I tracks preparatory to moving to St Louis, near which city he will go on a farm this coming year. On Tuesday evening Mr Tiggeman and his family left for their new home They will visit for a time with his brother, Emil Tiggeman, at Florissant, Mo, before moving to the farm. The Tiggeman family had intended to drive through, but the sudden cold snap caused them to abandon that plan, and acordingly he shipped his car with his household goods.

Twins At Albert Etchen Home

Twin boys were born to Mr. and Mrs Albert Etchen Tuesday night The boys are of standard weight and tip the scales at 8¼ pounds each. They are a dandy pair of boys and Albert is a real proud father. He has a pair of sons worthy of crowing about The Times extends congratulations.

Snow Fence Stolen

Farmers, mail carrier and others who have to travel the road past the Albert Barz farm east of town are cussing the party who had the audacity to appropriate a hundred yards of snow fence which had been placed on the north side of the road. Just where the thieves removed the snow fence is where the roads drift the worse and caused a lot of grief to those who had to drive on the road.

This is another indication of the bumper corn crop in this vicinity, as whoever borrowed the fence has undoubtedly used it for corn cribs.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank our many friends and neighbors for their kindness and assistance in our recent sorrow. We especially thank the teachers and all who contributed flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Mart Bachman and family.

Notice

A special Christmas Tree collection will be taken up at the Methodist Sunday School next Sunday, in each Class. Bring your money and have it ready.

COLDEST WEATHER HERE PAST TWO YEARS

Thermometer Hits Low Mark On Tuesday

This part of the state has been in the grip of a severe cold wave the past few days, the coldest temperature recorded for two years.

Monday the thermometer took a sudden drop from a day of thawing and rain Sunday when it hit about 8 degrees below Monday morning. The mercury dropped steadily when the low mark was reached Tuesday morning of 20 degrees below zero; the coldest day recorded since Dec. 27, 1924 when it was officially recorded at 20 below. Last year the lowest temperature was reached in December with 15 below, 13 for January and 8 for February.

As a result of the extreme zero weather garage men were busy Tuesday thawing out frozen up cars and radiators and traffic was light on all the highways, although roads in vicinity were not badly blocked

SISTER OF F. GATES BURIED AT GARNER

WAS EARLY SETTLER OF ELL TOWNSHIP

Towship Was Named After Her Grandfather, Sebastian Ell

On Sunday afternoon the funeral of Mrs Ira Latham took place in Klemme While her home for many years had been elsewhere, still she was well known here, having grown to womanhood in Ell Township She was a grand daughter of Sebastian Ell, after whom the township of Ell was named.

Anna Louisa Gates was born September 17, 1866, at Rochelle, Illinois In 1870, when four years of age, she came with her parents to Iowa where they became some of the early settlers of this community.

Deceased was married to Mr. Ira Latham in Sioux City, Iowa, on June 2, 1888 After residing there for several years they moved to Garner where they entered business, having charge of a restaurant for some time and later ran a laundry for a number of years. They lived in Garner for a period of sixteen years. During their residence here they formed a large circle of friends who keenly sympathize with the husband and other relatives in the loss they have sustained.

After residing in Garner they moved to Minneapolis, Dec. 6, 1906, where they lived since and where death called her to the Great Beyond. During the 38 years of their married life the best of health had been enjoyed by Mrs. Latham until within the last year when her health began to fail. Cancer was the direct cause of her death. When first she took sick many doctors and specialists of the Twin Cities were seen and consulted in hope that her health might b eregained and her life spared. However, all proved of no avail as it became apparent all too soon that she must go. She had the loving care of her husband and a sister who made her home with them.

She died December 9, 1926, after a lingering illness covering more than five months.

Her remains were brought to Klemme accompanied by her husband and her sister. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at the home of her brother, Mr. Fred Gates Rev. A. W. Gauger of the Methodist Church officiated. Prof. Penrod and Miss Kidder of the high school faculty assisted by singing several appropriate duets, as well as a solo sung by Miss Kidder.

Mrs. Latham is survived by her husband and companion of many years, by one sister in Minneapolis, two sisters reside in California. She leaves one brother in Minneapolis, one brother, Fred Gates, of Klemme and two brothers live in the state of Washington. She is also survived by her stepfather, Horace Merrill, of Garner.

Interment was made in the Garner cemetery.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

In bothchurches we had audiences last Sunday that came to worship. Considering the weather conditions and that in many homes there is sickness, the attendance was splendid. We hope that it may be much better on the coming Sabbath. On this Sunday right before Christmas we shall keep the Christmas thought in mind and have it feature in our worship.

Song and sermon will have this for the leading thought. There will be special music.

Both Sunday schools are busy preparing programs for Christmas eve. If each will do the part assigned it will surely help to make the whole a success. Parents can help much to make it so.

We have shipped out a shipment to the Goodwills Industry in Sioux City. This has been done at regular intervals during the past yeras. The Goodwills Industry is a product of the Centenary movement, or the special Missionary effort put on by our church during the recent years at home and abroad. So far we have only fifteen such institutions thruout the country—one of these is located in Sioux City under the supervision of our conference. The great mission is to make over lives of such who have fallen or are down and out—or who by reverses and hard luck have been forced into the breadline. The Goodwills Industry helpss uch by giving them a chance. For a chance, not charity, is what most of them want. They give them this chance by giving them an opportunity to make over and repair or renovate things that are sent to Goodwills, things that perhaps your children have outgrown or that may still are very usable for someone. have become a little threadbare but still are very usable fr someone.

Thus things and lives are made over at the same time If any others have such things or clothing that may help warm some poor boy or girl during these cold winter days and wish to send them, then we shall be glad to get a Gootwill bag to the L so they may fill it. We still have a number of bags on hand and can get more.

SCHOOL CLOSES NEXT WEDNESDAY FOR XMAS VACATION

The Klemme Schools will close on Wednesday afternoon of next week, December 22nd. This will give the teachers ample time to be at their homes by Christmas eve. Vacation will last approximately two weeks. School will again begin on Wednesday, January 5th.

IDLE HOUR PROGRAM

Tonight (Thursday) an Old Time Dance with old time music. Everybody invited to come.

Friday and Saturday Raymond McKee stars in a real speed picture, "The Speed Limit." This is an especially good program.

Roller skating every Monday and Tuesday evening.

"The Ungaurded House," a First National Production and the first of the new products is billed for next Wednesday night.

LOCALS BEAT GARNER SQUAD 16 TO 8

KLEMME BOYS TOO FAST FOR GARNER TOSSERS

Large Crowd Accompanies Team To See Cage Victory

The Klemme basket ball squad took the pep all out of the Garner five at Garner Friday night when Klemme walloped the county seat aggregation with a 16 to 8 score.

The Klemme boys started out in fine form by slow, easy passing that had Garner buffaloed, as they evidently expected the fast Shamrock quintet to start with a rush. The Klemme boys showed up fine in their systematic pasing and shifty floor work all through the game. The Garner boys lacked form and rushed madly around the floor trying to get through Klemme's smooth passing. However, Garner had the edge on Klemme at the end of the first half with a score of 6 to 4.

Things began to hum when Klemme opened up at the beginning of the second half and wore down the Garner tossers with their speedy passing and fast, shifty floor work. Garner was only able to score one field throw in the half, while the Klemme boys piled up twelve counters.

Turgasen, of the Klemme line up was removed on personal fouls and Clarence Lomke went in for him Garner attempted a rush at this stage of the game, expecting to find a weakness in the Klemme line because of the change However, Lemke put up a stiff battle and the game went on uninterrupted.

The locals have shown a great deal of improvement since their last game. Their passing and floor work and especially their basket shooting has greatly improved. Coach Hockey has developed a fine machine and the Klemme boys should win most of the games this year.

They were greatly handicapped at Garner because of the very low ceiling and could not even attempt a long shot. Each field basket was made by passing the ball in close and throwing from directly under or within a few feet of the loop.

Garner plays a return game here on December 31.

More than a hundred from here took in the game at Garner Friday night We expect Garner to return the compliment.

Crystal Lake Here Friday

Crystal Lake will play Klemme here this week Friday night. The locals played their first game at the Lake a few weeks ago and gave the fishermen a bad trimming. They expect to get the long end of the score again.

Children Surprise Their Mother On Birthday

Friday evening all the children of Grandma Haefner came in and surprised her; it being her birthday All brought well filled baskets of roast chicken and all the trimmings that go with a big feed and spent the entire evening at Grandma Haefner's home. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schuldt, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gruetzmacher, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Stille, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Stille and Mr. and Mrs. John Terhufen. A good time was enjoyed by all.

Christmas Sketches From Dickens

"DON'T be cross, uncle!" said the nephew.

"What else can I be," returned the uncle, "when I live in such a world of fools as this? Merry Christmas! Out upon merry Christmas! What's Christmas time to you but a time for paying bills without money; a time for finding yourself a year older, and not an hour richer; a time for balancing your books and having every item in 'em through a round dozen of months presented dead against you? If I could work my will," said Scrooge indignantly, "every idiot who goes about with 'Merry Christmas' on his lips should be boiled with his own pudding, and buried with a stake of holly run through his heart. He should!"—Christmas Carol, Stave 1.

The noise in this room was perfectly tumultuous, for there were more children there than Scrooge, in his agitated state of mind, could count; and, unlike the celebrated herd in the poem, they were not forty children conducting themselves like one, but every child was conducting himself like forty. The consequences were uproarious beyond belief; but no one seemed to care; on the contrary, the mother and daughter laughed heartily, and enjoyed it very much; and the latter, soon beginning to mingle in the sports, got pillaged by the young brigands most ruthlessly. What would I not have given to be one of them! Though I never could have been so rude, no, no! I wouldn't for the wealth of all the world have crushed that braided hair, and torn it down; and for the precious little shoe, I wouldn't have plucked it off, God bless my soul! to save my life. As to measuring her waist in sport, as they did, bold young brood, I couldn't have done it; I should have expected my arm to have grown round it for a punishment, and never come straight again. And yet I should have dearly liked, I own, to have touched her lips, to have questioned her, that she might have opened them; to have looked upon the lashes of her downcast eyes, and never raised a blush; to have let loose waves of hair, an inch of which would be a keepsake beyond price; in short, I should have liked, I do confess, to have had the lightest license of a child, and yet to have been man enough to know its value.

* * * * * * *

But now a knocking at the door was heard, and such a rush immediately ensued that she, with laughing face and plundered dress, was borne toward it in the center of a flushed and boisterous group, just in time to greet the father, who came home attended by a man laden with Christmas toys and presents. Then the shouting and the struggling, and the onslaught that was made on the defenceless porter! The scaling him, with chairs for ladders, to dive into his pockets, despoil him of brown-paper parcels, hold on tight by his cravat, hug him round the neck, pommel his back, and kick his legs in irrepressible affection. The shouts of wonder and delight with which the development of every package was received! The terrible announcement that the baby had been taken in the act of putting a doll's frying pan into his mouth, and was more than suspected of having swallowed a fictitious turkey, glued on a wooden platter! The immense relief of finding this a false alarm! The joy, and gratitude, and ecstasy! They are all indescribable alike. It is enough that, by degrees, the children and their emotions got out of the parlor, and, by one stair at a time, up to the top of the house, where they went to bed, and so subsided.—Christmas Carol, Stave 2.

Oh, a wonderful pudding. Bob Cratchit said, and calmly, too, that he regarded it as the greatest success achieved by Mrs. Cratchit since their marriage. Mrs. Cratchit said that now the weight was off her mind, she would confess she had her doubts about the quantity of flour. Everybody had something to say about it, but nobody said or thought it was at all a small pudding for a large family. It would have been flat heresy to do so. Any Cratchit would have blushed to hint at such a thing.

At last the dinner was all done, the cloth was cleared, the hearth swept, and the fire made up. The compound in the jug being tasted, and considered perfect, apples and oranges were put upon the table, and a shovel full of chestnuts on the fire. Then all the Cratchit family drew round the hearth, in what Bob Cratchit called a circle, meaning half a one; and at Bob Cratchit's elbow stood the family display of glass, two tumblers and a custard-cup without a handle.

These held the hot stuff from the jug, however, as well as golden goblets would have done; and Bob served it out with beaming looks, while the chestnuts on the fire sputtered and cracked noisily. Then Bob proposed:

"A merry Christmas to us all, my dears. God bless us."

Which all the family re-echoed.

"God bless us every one!" said Tiny Tim, the last of all.—Christmas Carol, Stave 3.

"I don't know what day of the month it is," said Scrooge; "I don't know how long I have been among the spirits. I don't know anything. I'm quite a baby. Never mind. I don't care. I'd rather be a baby. Hallo! Whoop! Hallo here!"

He was checked in his transports by the churches ringing out the lustiest peals he had ever heard. Clash, clash, hammer; ding, dong, bell. Bell, dong, ding; hammer, clang, clash! Oh, glorious! glorious!

Running to the window, he opened it, and put out his head. No fog, no mist; clear, bright, jovial, stirring, cold; cold, piping for the blood to dance to; golden sunlight; heavenly sky; sweet fresh air; merry bells. Oh, glorious! Glorious!

"What's today?" cried Scrooge, calling downward to a boy in Sunday clothes, who perhaps had loitered in to look about him.

"Eh?" returned the boy, with all his might of wonder.

"What's today, my fine fellow?" said Scrooge.

"Today!" replied the boy. "Why, Christmas day."

"It's Christmas day!" said Scrooge to himself. "I haven't missed it. The spirits have done it all in one night. They can do anything they like. Of course, they can. Of course, they can. Hallo, my fine fellow!"

"Hallo!" returned the boy.

"Do you know the poulterer's, in the next street but one, at the corner?" Scrooge inquired.

"I should hope I did," replied the lad.

"An intelligent boy!" said Scrooge. "A remarkable boy! Do you know whether they've sold the prize turkey that was hanging up there?—Not the little prize turkey, the big one?"

"What, the one as big as me?" returned the boy.

"What a delightful boy!" said Scrooge. "It's a pleasure to talk to him. Yes, my buck!"

"It's hanging there now," replied the boy.

"Is it?" said Scrooge. "Go and buy it."

"Walk-er!" exclaimed the boy.

"No, no," said Scrooge, "I am in earnest. Go and buy it, and tell 'em to bring it here, that I may give them the directions where to take it. Come back with the man, and I'll give you a shilling. Come back with him in less than five minutes and I'll give half-a-crown!"

The boy was off like a shot. He must have had a steady hand at a trigger who could have got a shot off half so fast.

"I'll send it to Bob Crachit's," whispered Scrooge, rubbing his hands and splitting with a laugh. "He shan't know who sends it. It's twice the size of Tiny Tim. Joe Miller never made such a joke as sending it to Bob's will be!"

The hand in which he wrote the address was not a steady one; but write it he did, somehow and went down stairs to open the street door, ready for the coming of the poulterer's man. As he stood there, waiting his arrival, the knocker caught his eye.

"I shall love it as long as I live!" cried Scrooge, patting it with his hand. "I scarcely ever looked at it before. What an honest expression it has in its face! It's a wonderful knocker!—Here's the turkey. Hallo! Whoop! How are you! Merry Christmas!"

It was a turkey! He never could have stood upon his legs, that bird. He would have snapped 'em short off in a minute, like sticks of sealing wax.

"Why, it's impossible to carry that to Camden Town," said Scrooge. "You must have a cab."

The chuckle with which he said this, and the chuckle with which he paid for the turkey, and the chuckle with which he paid for the cab, and the chuckle with which he recompensed the boy, were only to be exceeded by the chuckle with which he sat down breathless in his chair again, and chuckled till he cried.

Shaving was not an easy task, for his hand continued to shake very much; and shaving requires attention, even when you don't dance while you are at it. But if he had cut the end of his nose off, he would have put a piece of sticking-plaster over it, and been quite satisfied.

He dressed himself "all in his best," and at last got out into the streets. The people were by this time pouring forth, as he had seen them with the Ghost of Christmas Present; and walking with his hands behind him, Scrooge regarded every one with a delighted smile. He looked so irresistibly pleasant, in a word, three or four good-humored fellows said, "Good morning, sir! A merry Christmas to you!" And Scrooge said often afterward, that of all the blithe sounds he had ever heard, those were the blithest in his ears.

The Community Supper Really Like Christmas

"THESE community suppers are always so stupid!" declared a pretty girl to a small group around her. "I wish we could put some pep and fun into this one and give the people a good time. Something really like Christmas, and not so dull."

The others looked dubious and scratched their heads. "What'll we do?" they asked.

"I know!" declared the pretty girl. "Just got the idea. Now, listen everyone! Why not imitate the way they used to do in olden times? A minstrel in the gallery, lots of minstrels! Singing and playing on horns and things! Hide them by screens covered with greens. Let the people get seated at the tables, then all pipe up with old songs every one knows. Dress the minstrels in gay colors. Then have them come down the stairs singing and playing. Let them wind among the tables. Have a jester in front joking and making fun. A real old English custom. It will help a lot and give the diners a good time."

"And," added another, fired with enthusiasm, "red candles on the tables, wreaths at all the windows, waitresses with red ribbons about their heads and a sprig of holly tucked over one ear."

"Not to mention," laughed a third, "a dinner of roast turkey, cranberry sauce, mashed potatoes, rolls, coffee and mince pie!"

"Right-o!" said the rest.

And so it was done. The very merriest community supper that was ever given in that town.—Patience Eden.

Sing Heigh-Ho! Unto The Christmas Holly

NOTHING quite so typifies the spirit of Christmas as a bough of beautiful, glistening foliaged and scarlet-berried holly. Holly seems the quintessence of Yule and should and generally does occupy the place of honor in Christmas decorations.

There are states where the holly isn't to be found in great abundance. In some sections of the South a limited supply must be made to serve the purpose. For profuse decorations other greens fashioned from sprays of Irish yew whose fan-like and lacy foliage is ideal for this use; and, too, there are the beautiful, waxy leaves from the magnolia as well as cedar.

But the holly bough, of course, of all Christmas green is the loveliest and most popular, not only here but in other lands and in France, in particular, as Brittany grows it in quantities. The holly is of slow growth and propagated by seed which do not germinate until the second year. We think of holly berries always as being red, but some kinds bear yellow fruit, some white, and others even black.

The holly has a commercial value that isn't generally known. Its even-grained and hard wood is ivory white and is used for inlaying and as an ebony substitute for teapot handles and other articles, when stained. The leaves are used in medicine.—Frances Marshall Morgan.

He—I was thinking of some nice warm woolen stockings, dear.

First Christmas Trees

Christmas trees became popular in the United States about the same time that they were introduced into England. In England the first Christmas trees were set up in the royal palace of St. James at the time Queen Victoria married the prince consort, in 1840.

Christmas Comes

Heads of families think it is remarkable what a short time there is between Christmases.

The Christmas Tree

It requires the sweet adaptability of the child mind to enable its recent admirers to revel in a bonfire made of the Christmas tree.

Eat It by the Ton

Twelve hundred tons of plum pudding are consumed in London at Christmas.

Start Day Early

In Finland it is a custom to attend church services at five o'clock on Christmas morning.

THE ANGEL WITH THE SWORD

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

LTHOUGH the doctor had told them that there was nothing more he could do, Steele and his wife waited in the sick- beside their boy. He was an child, eight years of age. He in a stupor now; the lips, which mercifully ceased to mutter, re- half open, and the breath between them. For several the crisis had been approaching; ours it had been a losing battle. ele, the bank clerk, remained at the bedside. He held one y hand in his own, and his were fixed unseeingly upon the log eyes of the child.

am Steele knelt at the boy's her head on her arms. She had irred for an hour. In her heart been the unspoken prayer, al- reiterated:

God, if Thou art merciful, spare boy and take from some other y where there are many chil- . . .

had almost seemed to her as if tensity of her prayer must find answer. Yet Charley had stead- grown worse, and she had not d to meet her husband's eyes.

Torn out by her long vigil, cramped the position she had assumed, am Steele slept. Suddenly it ed to her as if a cold blast blew, opening her eyes, she saw the h Angel at the bedside. And she out her hand to stay the sweep that mighty sword.

Thy must he die?" her heart ded.

The little room on the instant faded n her sight, and she seemed to in the following vision an answer her question.

She was seated, a middle-aged wom- in the parlor. The door flew open the boy, a lad of twenty, ran into arms.

"Mother!" he cried. "Just think! I 've got that position in the bank! w, we'll be rich, and some day I ll be president; you mark my ds!"

She kissed him; she was very proud her son. Her husband came home, learn the news. When Charley had e from the room they turned and ed each other. It seemed incred- e that they had borne this wonder, s prodigy who had secured a post the great bank against fifty com- itors.

A year had passed. Miriam Steele the boy again. He had come home e; his face was flushed, and there s a curious unsteadiness about him he stood, swaying and smiling, upon threshold.

"Charley!" she cried, and then the ful realization came home to her. She rose and went toward him. He ed her foolishly.

"Just been out with th' boys, muz- " he mumbled, and collapsed into chair, where he sat, blinking and ing to assure her that he was all ht.

The agony of the night when, with arms about him, she helped him the stairs. The agony upon the her's face when he learned; the row of both when the rumor of neighborhood came to them, last all. Charley Steele was a notorious ligate. Doors were closed to him. s turned their heads aside when encountered him; other girls ed laughingly after him—but se were in their turn outcasts from prim society of the little town.

Then came the day when the boy mbled home, discharged by the k.

He was quite impenitent. "I'm go- to get out of here," he said. "No- y trusts me—and I'm going West, re a man has a chance. Give me hundred dollars, father, and you'll er be troubled by me again."

A man! This boy! Miriam Steele k him in her motherly arms and bed over him. In the end the bank ident agreed to give him another nce.

Months passed. Charley had be- e strangely furtive in his man- . Something ailed him. He was, hagging in his attention; he was ays the first to arrive at the bank, d the last to leave. He had thrown t obscure hints of wealth to come.

This scene faded. Miriam was con- ous of the Awful Death Angel at bedside, its weapon poised, its e turned inquiringly toward her. She saw herself in black, kneeling, ing at the bank president's feet. her men were there, with hard, un- pathetic faces. Charley was there, ite, and wearing a look of bravado. knew what had happened. He been caught a hundred miles , in the metropolis, after a three ks' chase, with half of the pur- d twenty thousand dollars still ent.

"Give him another chance," she ded.

"He has had his chance," the presi- answered coldly. "Now he must Justice." He advanced and put hand on Miriam's shoulder. "See he stands, impenitent," he said, ing toward the boy. "Only a sentence will avail to set him with men."

Miriam rose, her face set in agony, mother's heart yearning toward the boy, in spite of his bravado. Then she was aware that her husband stood at her side.

"He is right, Miriam," he said. "It was our own indulgence that brought him to where he stands. He must pay his debt to man."

The scene changed. Miriam Steele was aware of a long lapse of time. She looked up, to see a man of thirty, broken, prematurely old, emerge from the gates of a prison. Haggard, sneering, scornful, and hard of heart, this was her boy.

She seemed to watch him during that long railroad journey back to the little town. She saw him pause before the house. A harsh-faced woman came out—out of her own home—and mocked him.

"Get out, you jail-bird!" Miriam heard her say, and her own heart swelled with bitterness. Then she was aware that she herself stood at Charley's side, comforting him, and that he could neither see her nor feel her presence.

She turned away with the boy, walking at his side until they reached the little cemetery upon the hill. She entered with the boy, and presently they paused before a grave with a new headstone. On it she read her husband's name—and hers.

She gasped; and then she was aware that the vision lasted, and that the Angel of Death stood still at the bed's head. Beneath the sweep of the wide wings she could see her husband seated, still holding Charley's hand, and the child lying just as he had lain.

Then came a final scene. She saw her boy lying, white-haired, in a bed in a pauper ward of a hospital She seemed now to read his heart. She saw the tardy penitence for the folly, the grief, the sorrow that the earthly pilgrimage had brought him. And over the vision thundered the voice of the Death Angel.

"Choose!" it seemed to say. "You have prayed as few women have prayed, as few mothers have prayed, and because the kingdom of heaven is taken by violence, it has been revealed to you to know the inscrutable meaning of God's actions. Choose now, between life and death!"

Miriam Steele raised her head and answered.

"You say the kingdom is taken by violence," she answered. "Well, I will take it. I do not believe these pictures. I know that man is gifted with free will, and that no inexorable fate can lie in wait to trap my boy. I know that if his heart is right, and if he is treated rightly, he will grow up to be a good man. What you have shown me is a warning, not a prophecy; it is a lesson, not an inexorable doom. I choose, and I choose life; and I will save my boy against all the terrors of life and all the promptings of the Evil One."

In the dread silence that followed the face of the angel seemed to assume a majestic benignancy. He turned and she saw a slow, pitying smile cross his face.

"It is possible. But it is hard," he seemed to say.

"What is a mother worth if she cannot guard her own?" answered Miriam Steele. "Begone! I choose life for our child, and I will make that life what it should be."

She saw the angel lower his sword. A moment, and the grim shadow vanished from the room. Then, out of blank unconsciousness, Miriam Steele awoke, to find the doctor bending over her.

"He has come through the crisis," he said gravely.

Miriam Steele raised herself painfully from her bent knees. Her husband sat by the bedside still, holding the hand of the boy, whose eyes were open and, for the first time in days, filled with consciousness. And outside the glow of dawn was filtering into the room.

She felt her husband's arms about her. Her tears of joy mingled with his, and she knew that a mother's love is stronger than all, stronger than death, and strong enough for life.

The Denial

Senator Capper, discussing his anti-price-cutting campaign, said at a dinner party in Washington:

"That denial reminds me of a story. A League for the Prohibition of Henpecked Husbands was once formed in a small town, and at the first meeting a chap named George Jones was elected president.

"Well, George had just taken the chair and whacked the table for order with his gavel when a tall, gaunt, raw-boned woman burst into the hall. She glared round, and as soon as she saw George she dashed down the aisle and up onto the platform. She clutched him by the collar.

"'You come home,' she said, and while she spoke she kept shaking him viciously. 'What business have you got in a league of this kind? You ain't henpecked.'"

The Nonconformist

With "longies" on the little fellows, and almost the entire group of high school freshman boys going into regular long trousers, Marceline, who is a freshman herself, had forgotten that such a thing as short trousers for boys existed. Blowing in from a party the other evening, and trying, after the fashion of her crowd, to tell the whole thing in one breath, she said:

"Oh, it was a lovely party! The best eats! And everybody was just all dolled up in their very best! All except Howard Martin, and, mother, what do you think? Howard Martin came to a party in golf pants!"

PEOPLE who call on the inmates of furnished rooms either wait in the hall while the footsteps that brought the means of ingress go upstairs and become responsible for knocks somewhere in the darkness, or go downstairs into oblivion, leaving the caller to a personally conducted tour of exploration for the discovery of "two flights up; —th door."

The top floor at Mrs. Cawthorn's was an exception to furnished room rules, for two of the doors stood wide open all day. The one in front, facing north, disclosed a tiny, desolate room containing a narrow iron bed, a chair, a bureau furnished with meager toilet fittings, a trunk, and a corner curtained off for a wardrobe.

The door opposite disclosed an entirely different interior. In one window a bird in a brass cage sang above blooming plants and in the other an old lady sat in a rocking chair, when she was not peering out into the hall, or leaning over the banisters, or trotting about on visits.

Every morning precisely at 7:45 the door of the north room opened and a little, weazened shabby old man pulled the corner of the trunk forward to keep it so. Then he hung a very small empty aluminum milk can on his wrist, put its cover in his pocket, took up a neatly tied package of refuse and went away.

Mis' Bascomb got his story from the servant the morning she arrived and found him a case after her own heart. He was Amos Binks; he had lived in that room for ten years.

Christmas drew near and she was very busy making presents and planning surprises and treats among her multitudinous friends, but every time she passed Binks' door her heart ached for him, and so the days passed and it was Christmas Eve.

She had been out shopping all morning; her arms were full of bundles and her heart of plans; but she glanced, as she always did, at Binks' door, and what she saw there brought her to an abrupt stop with tears running down her cheeks. Poor old man, poor old man! On the miserable bureau, among the meager toilet things there stood a Christmas tree, a very small one, and as desolate and bare as the room. The poor, proud old creature had Christmas in his heart. She would give him a surprise.

She selected the choicest of her purchases and laid them, gayly tied with red ribbons and bits of holly, on the foot of his bed. She hung the stark little tree with bags of candy and all sorts of jolly trifles, chuckling over his surprise and delight as she departed to replenish her stock for tomorrow's festivities. He would never know. Bless him.

That morning as he was going out the little woman with three children had popped her head out of the front parlor door and asked if she might leave her Christmas tree in his room so the children would not see it.

"It's the last place in the world anyone would look to find a Christmas tree," she said.

Binks had borrowed three lumps of sugar from her when he had a cold and he had worried about having to buy a whole half pound to return it. This would cancel the obligation.

"If you don't make any mess," he said sourly and went out.

He had forgotten all about the tree when he returned that evening and he was even more than usually dour and bitter, for he could not avoid giving presents to the children of his partner and the janitor of the office building. It was one of the penalties of wealth. Thank goodness, no one at the rooming house had the ghost of an idea that he wasn't poor Amos Binks, although he was Amos Binks, the millionaire.

He stopped in the doorway of his room in a paralysis of amazement when he saw the tree and the presents, and then a smile infinitely sly and sneering broke over his face. He glanced at Mis' Bascomb's door; it was closed, but he understood and chuckled. He heard steps coming stealthily upstairs, the little woman coming for the tree! He stripped it of its decorations with hasty fingers and carried it out to her.

"It's in my way," he said testily.

The day after Christmas he deposited to his own credit at the bank $6.50 which he had intended to spend on Christmas presents until Mis' Bascomb gave him enough to go round, and keep a nice warm pair of socks for himself.

PROPER PRUNING HELPS VINEYARD

Owners of commercial or home vineyards would do well to adopt the long cane pruning system, demonstrations conducted last year by W. R. Martin, Jr., extension horticulturist of the Kansas State Agricultural college, showed.

Ninety per cent of the vineyards in Kansas are pruned on a short cane system at present, Mr. Martin estimates. His demonstrations, duplicated five times each in Doniphan, Shawnee, and Wyandotte counties, have convinced him that the yield will be doubled at least on the long cane system as compared with the short cane.

Four pruning methods were employed in the demonstrations—the four-cane Kniffen system, four canes, 10 buds long on each vine; the two-cane Kniffen, two canes, 20 buds long; the short arm fan, eight canes, five buds long; and the spur, 13⅓ canes, three buds long.

Average yields, in pounds per acre, from the four pruning systems in the 15 demonstrations made were as follows:

Four-cane Kniffen, 3,570; two-cane Kniffen, 3,905; short arm fan, 2,293; spur, 1,745.

The reason for the increase, Mr. Martin explained, is that the first two or three buds on a cane either are sterile or produce very small bunches of grapes. The most fruitful buds are found on the sixth to ninth nodes. Buds from the ninth on diminish in fruitfulness, but are more productive than those under the fifth. Therefore on short cane pruning sytems, the most productive buds are cut off.

In conducting pruning operations, which should be done from December 1 to March 1, Mr. Martin pointed out further, secondary growth from nodes on the fruiting wood should be entirely cut away. In a Doniphan county demonstration canes pruned to leave the secondary growth yielded 3,019 pounds to the acre, while similar canes without spurs yielded 4,386 pound to the acre.

Grapes and Bush Fruits Need Winter Protection

Grape vines and berry bushes do not ordinarily need winter protection in the commercial fruit areas, but in the other sections where winter temperatures commonly fall to 25 or 30 degrees below zero, they should be sheltered, according to Prof. Joseph Oskamp at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

This is often provided by "laying down" the canes before the ground freezes, and covering them with earth. With grapes, this is easily done if they have been trained to the fan system. Berry canes also may be laid on the ground and covered with straw and earth. Loosening the plants in the ground with a spade will often aid in doing this.

The different kinds of bush fruits as well as the different varieties of each kind vary widely in their hardiness. Red raspberries are the hardiest of the brambles; black raspberries are intermediate; while blackberries are the most tender. Currants and gooseberries are hardy and need no winter protection.

The grapes best suited to cold locations are, in general, those classed as early or very early which mature in a relatively short season.

Protect Against Winter Damage From All Rodents

That young orchard which is coming along so nicely should be protected against winter damage from rabbits and mice.

The best device of this sort is a tube of old window screening or other finely meshed wire, placed about the trunk of each tree. It should reach two feet above the ground.

Old sacks or corn stalks are sometimes tied around the trunks to keep off rabbits. While this device may serve, it actually encourages mice damage, since these pests nest in any convenient trash.

Better clean and keep away all such rubbish, and be sure of safety by using the screening at only a little more cost.

Horticultural Hints

Strawberry fields must be covered with a straw mulch to a depth of four to five inches.

* * *

Keep a weather eye on the bugs and blights. Keep the sprayer in working order and shoot on sight.

* * *

It is much better to take out the old canes and keep the raspberries and blackberries clean.

* * *

A recent survey of New Hampshire revealed that more than half of the apple trees in that state are of the Baldwin variety.

* * *

Keeping a good set of records is largely a matter of habit. There is no other way of knowing and a record eliminates guessing.

The cherry trees, which are a famous feature of the national capital, were propagated from 15,000 stocks raised with particular care in a Japanese nursery.

Julius H. Tuttle, librarian of the Massachusetts Historical society, says that so far as he can learn there was no known relationship between Daniel and Noah Webster. Daniel Webster, the great statesman and orator, who was born at Salisbury, N. H., January 18, 1782, was descended from Thomas Webster who first appeared in Watertown, Mass., in 1638. Noah Webster, of dictionary fame, who was born in Hartford, Conn., October 16, 1758, was descended from John Webster, one of the first settlers of Hartford in 1636. According to Mr. Tuttle, it is not known how Thomas and John were related, if at all.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Law Taken Seriously

The English immigration law is rigid, and formidable and the men who enforce it make no exceptions. When a cross-channel airplane crashed into a haystack near Dymchurch not long ago, killing three of its passengers and injuring twelve, immigration officials from Folkstone were quickly on the spot and the passports and baggage of all the unfortunate passengers were carefully examined. None of the uninjured was allowed to leave until these formalities had been completed.

Logical-Minded Parent

A young lady living in Irvington is quite fond of ice cream. She pilots her father to the "sweet shop" on frequent occasions, but on one evening he rebelled.

"Why do you insist on going after ice cream so often?" he asked.

"I like it," replied the daughter.

"Well," said the indulgent father, "I like eggs, but I don't run after every hen I see."—Indianapolis News.

Hollywood's Beginning

Hollywood, the goal of the world's movie-struck people, owes its rise to its obscurity. It was selected because of its insignificance not so many years ago. When the first studio was established there in 1911 the population was about 7,000. Today it is estimated at 125,000. With the rise of filmdom to power the fame of Hollywood spread. Although Hollywood became a part of Los Angeles in 1910 it still retains its name.

DIURETIC STIMULANT TO THE KIDNEYS

Mrs. Julia Browning, of Mulberry Grove, Ill., wrote us as follows "For eight months I suffered with rheumatism and inflammation of the bladder. I had a swelling of the limbs, stiffness in the joints and cramps in the muscles. There was a sandy deposit in the urine. My head and back ached. I was tired and nervous and could not sleep, and became exhausted with the least exertion. Nothing seemed to do me any good until I saw your ad in the paper. Dodd's Pills have done me lots of good and I tell all my friends what helped me. I have taken three boxes in all and am greatly benefited. I have got others to use them." Buy a box today, 60 cents at your drug store or the Dodd's Medicine Co., 700 Main St., Buffalo, N. Y.

Christmas Daring

by Eleanor E. King

LOUISE had not been oblivious to the courteous "How do you do's" and attempts at conversation—at least those that could be appropriately engaged in from the other side of the bars. The conversation assumed such a form as: "Two fives, a ten or some ones?" with an accompanying smile. Today, as she entered the great, white stone building, she made a resolve. She wrote her check and approached the desk. The smile and the same "How do you do?" greeted Louise. She hesitated, then nerved herself to meet the occasion and with quivering smile burst forth:

"Did—didn't I meet you at the University of Chicago? It seems to me I did. I—"

"N-um, well yes, perhaps. Yes, I believe you are right," acquiesced Bert, putting down some figures in the little bankbook so vigorously that the pen point protested sputteringly, making the ink fly to the right and left.

"Looks like Christmas is making inroads in my bank account. Oh, but the joy I get out of buying the things I have in mind; I wouldn't trade for a dozen bankbooks with full pages of deposits. By the way, did you know Tom Masters at the university? Your fraternity pin made me think of him. He had one just like it."

A queer look shot across Bert's face. "Of course. He was the best old scout. Can't we talk over old times some evening?"

Three days later Louise, all expectancy, put the finishing touches to the living room—a small Christmas tree gracefully distinguished one end. Wreaths hung in the windows and little sprigs of holly ornamented the center ceiling light. Louise turned on the circuit of Christmas tree lights and sat down to admire the tree and collect herself. She was a little worried. What in the world had prompted her to be so brazen? Never before had she acted so. To say the least, her customary timidity had certainly been put to flight—had deserted her. She had not long to ponder, for the doorbell rang.

Bert, the picture of neatness, looked more than his usual six feet in height as he stood alongside of Louise when he greeted her. For the first few minutes the evening seemed doomed to be a miserable failure. Finally Louise could stand it no longer.

"You probably will hate me forever when I tell you this, but I can't keep up this farce any longer. I knew you never attended the University of Chicago. I knew exactly what school you graduated from and that it had been with high honors, too. I knew what type of family you came from and the kindly care you gave your mother. I learned these things from the woman I am living with, as she is an intimate friend of your aunt. I have been lonely for company since my coming her and so determined I would not spend this evening, of all the ones in the year, alone. Now you can hate me if you like. I wouldn't blame you."

"On the contrary, I think this is a lark. I had a presentiment of just such a situation, but I couldn't imagine why you picked out this evening—Christmas Eve—for me to come and talk to you about mythical fraternity brothers. I was sure tired of waiting for an introduction. Then you know my name and history? Ami at last the meeting," cried Bert with one of his famous smiles. "Well," praise be to Christmas and the courage it gave you!"

The CHRISTMAS EVE HOME-COMING

by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

IT WAS so cheerful when the unknown crowds were left behind and the known ones appeared. That was on the last part of the journey.

Dexter Lyons had been traveling all day and now it was dark and the lamps on the little branch line train were lighted and all the home-comers from all directions had met. Everyone knew everyone else on this train and the conductor knew them all.

The stove at the end of the train was burning almost too warmly. The train joggled along. The car was filled with people, bags, suitcases, packages of all shapes and sizes. The conductor took the tickets only as a secondary consideration. His first interest was in hearing how everyone had been, what they had been doing, when school or college began after the holidays, when the business folk must be back in the cities. To everyone he wished a merry Christmas.

They had hurried so to make connections, they had scrambled and pushed through the great holiday crowds. But now they were all sure they would get home on Christmas Eve. After they got on this train there could be no missing of connections and the conductor had promised them they would be on time.

Out of the windows occasional lights could be seen in the farmhouses they passed and in the streets of very small villages. But every house, no matter how separated and alone, was decorated. Christmas reached everywhere. It penetrated the traffic of cities and reached out to the most remote places.

There was a general chatter going on, a renewing of friendships, a talk between some who only saw each other at this time of the year, who had different interests and occupations and lived in different places but who enjoyed this annual little talk.

And then the engine gave a long, long, long whistle. It was not the ordinary whistle of an engine. It was the way the engine always whistled on Christmas Eve, so as to carry word to the waiting families and friends at the little station at the end of the line that the train was doing its part to wish them a merry Christmas by bringing its load of people.

Dexter was out on the station platform. Oh, such greetings as there were. And then a rush to the different homes where hot suppers were spread out upon candle-lit tables and where ruddy fires radiated their glow of cheer.

Dexter was surrounded by his family. And besides—there was Nancy That made the home-coming perfect. For it gave him the hope, the unspoken promise that he would have his own, own home-coming before long.

Nancy would never have joined this family gathering on Christmas Eve when Dexter was just home, if she had not decided that certain matters he had taken up with her in letters were to be answered by assent!

"Oh, Nancy," he told her later, "it does, it does mean that you say 'yes,' doesn't it?"

And Nancy said that it did!

Klemme Locals

Miss Minnie Lenz went to Charles City Saturday for a weeks visit.

Dr. Wesson, of Garner, was a business caller in Klemme Tuesday.

Frank Ward left yesterday for Northern Minnesota in company with his father. Their trip may take them into Canada also.

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Pavey drove to Mason City on business last week Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Elder and daughter, Reva, were visiting at Mason City Saturday.

Rev. A. W. Gauger and daughter, Miss Marie, were at Mason City on business Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Newberger were at Mason City on business Saturday.

Mrs. Sadie Turgason and son, Vernon, and Mrs. Frank Kluckhohn were Mason City visitors Saturday.

Eva Stokesbary was visiting at Mason City, Saturday.

One pioneer Iowa dairyman used to say, "It's cheaper to heat water for dairy cows with corn cobs, wood or coal than with crn and oats." The moral is: Use a tank heater.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson and son, Buster, and the Misses Stoner and Kidder, were Mason City visitors Saturday.

The roads were drifted in places the fore part of the week. Mail Carrier Sumner Trumbell had Geo. Lawhon with him a few days to help him get over his route, as in some places it required both pushing and shoveling to get through.

"Cooney" Quandt is a "regular feller" acording to the basket ball squad. "Cooney" was so elated over the basket ball victory over Garner that he gave the boys and their coach and Mr Penrod, an oyster stew Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Johnson were at Mason City Saturday on business.

Frank Pringnitz is enjoying a visit from his sister and her daughter who came from Riverside, California Wednesday and will remain here for a few days.

As soon as the weather becomes settled, Mr. Wellemeyer will install the new plate glass windows in his store. The cycone late last fall raised havoc with several of his big winodws.

If all plans materialize an outdoor ice skating rink will be built on the vacant lots north of the Aug. Ridder residence. This will make a good sized pond and will furnish some real sport for old and young.

Mrs. J. J. Poort entertained a number of friends at a party Tuesday evening as a surprise on Mr. Poort's birthday The evening was spent in playing cards after which delicious refreshments were served. A good time was enjoyed by all.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa will be in session at the Court House at Garner, Iowa, on the 21st day of December, 1926, at 10:00 o'clock A M., for the purpose of receiving bids for the construction of drainage improvement known and designated as Drainage District No. 131, Hancock County, Iowa

The time fixed for the commencement and completion of the contract shall be as follows: Work must be commenced on or before April 15th, 1927 and completed on or before June 15, 1927.

Said work to be let in one section known as section one.

Section One—Main

	Length	Size	Av. Depth
Corrugated Pipe	20'	15"	4.
Tile	2980'	10"	5.
Tile	288'	8"	4.9
Headwall Conc.		7 cu. yds
4 Intakes			18"

Average haul from Goodell about 3½ miles

All tile must pass the specifications of standard drain tile of the American Society for Testing Materials

The specifications state that where the line of tile being constructed is within 100 feet of trees, all joints are to be entirely surrounded with concrete of a minimum thickness of three inches In quicksand all joints are to be wrapped in double thickness tar paper.

All tile to be delivered at the ditch side subject to inspection at this point and to be delivered as ordered by the construction engineer

Whenever the tile improvement is laid in existing ditches the average depth will be computed from the natural surface of the ground and the contractor will be required to backfill all trenches to the height of the natural surface of the ground so that the existing ditch will be completely filled

All ditches and drains to be constructed in all respects in accordance with the plat, profiles and specifications on file in the Auditor's office at Garner, Iowa, subject only to such changes and alterations as may be made as provided by law

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, up to 10.00 A. M on the day of letting

Each bid must be accompanied by a cash deposit or certified check in a sum equal to ten per cent of the total amount of the bid as a guarantee of the good faith of the bidder

The price must be stated in the bid in figures, and permission will not be granted for the withdrawal, or amendment of any bid after time for closing

All bids must be made at a fixed price per station of 100 feet for each size tile and also a fixed price for each section complete in all respects, including corrugated pipe, intakes and filling of ditches, and must also include schedule of overdepth adopted by the Board of Supervisors, of Hancock County, Iowa and on file in the Auditor's office for possible verdepth or underdepth beyond the average specified

Bids will be received for material alone, for labor alone or for complete labor and material

The Board will at their discretion let the work as a whole or in sections to the lowest responsible bidder, reserving, however, the right to reject any and all bids, and also reserving the right to adjourn the time of awarding the contract.

ALL BIDS NOT MADE IN CONFORMANCE WITH THE ABOVE REQUIREMENTS WILL BE REJECTED.

The party to whom any contract is being awarded will be required to attend at the office of the Auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, within ten days after such award, and execute a contract thereby agreeing to all provisions, terms and conditions thereof and shall file with the County Auditor a bond, subject to his approval, for the sum equal to seventy-five per cent of the amount of the bid and in case the party to whom any work is awarded fails to enter into this contract and furnish bond within ten days as herein required the deposit of such party shall thereupon become forfeited to Drainage District No. 131, Hancock County, Iowa, together with all rights under said award.

The deposit of the unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them within twenty-four hours after demand, and the deposit of the successful bidder will be returned to him upon his executing the contract and filing with the County Auditor the bond as herein required.

By order of the Board of Supervisors

Dated at Garner, Iowa this 6th day of December, 1926.

H. C. MEYER,
County Auditor,
Hancock County, Iowa.

(Publish Dec 9-16, 1926.)

CHRISTMAS CAROLS

THE world these days is thrilling with the singing of Christmas carols. When the angels sang out their glad news above the plains of Bethlehem, they started all the best music and singing that our world has ever known.—Herald and Presbyter.

Christmas Spirit

By Martha Banning Thomas

NOT the green wreath hung on the knocker of the door. Not the gleam of silver tinsel dripping from the Christmas tree. Not the pile of packages heaped about—fat packages, slim packages, packages fairly bursting with their own secrets. Not the plump turkey and cranberry sauce and pies steaming with fragrant, holiday odors. Not the blizzard of greeting cards coming by every mail. Not the exciting ring of the postman who has a special smile as he hands out the letters.

Not the happy voice of the carol-singers who tramp through the snow under the stars to bring a bit of Christmas cheer to those shut away from the usual festivities.

Not bulky stockings knobby with gifts. Not the crunch and squeak of footsteps on snow on a frosty night.

Not these things alone make Christmas. They all help. They add the happy trimming, as it were. But only as they take on the true spirit of this holy time do they merge into the power and the glory of the precious season.

Christmas! The interlude between the old year and the new. The promise of great things to come. The consummation of things that have gone. The priceless moment when men may reach up and be God-like in their pity and understanding.

The Star of Bethlehem is a symbol—a gift—an opportunity for the justification of the faith that is in us.

Let us be merry. Let us be gay. Let us feel the last, full measure of happiness at this happy time. But let us also dedicate ourselves anew to the highest possible expression of Christmastide, tolerance, unselfishness, liberality, peace and good will toward men.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Asks an Income Tax Rebate—Fight on New Maine Senator.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONGRESS convened for the short session, received President Coolidge's message and budget statement, and got down to work on the appropriation bills. The opening session of the senate was enlivened by an unusual incident. Four newly elected senators, Stewart of Iowa, Hawes of Missouri, Robinson of Indiana and Gould of Maine, marched down the center aisle to be sworn in when Senator Walsh of Montana stopped the proceedings by offering a resolution calling for an investigation of charges that Mr. Gould had presented officials of New Brunswick, Canada, with a gift of $100,000 in a railroad deal eight years ago. The resolution provided that Mr. Gould should be permitted to take the oath of office, so that ceremony proceeded. Next day the senate voted, 70 to 7, that the privileges and elections committee should inquire into the charge. Mr. Gould merely asked that the investigation be speedy, asserting that it would vindicate him. He says the New Brunswick officials sought to hold him and his associates up in a railroad franchise grant and that he counseled resistance, but his associates came across.

On Wednesday congress was officially informed of the death of Senator William B. McKinley of Illinois, and both houses adjourned in respect to his memory. Vice President Dawes and Speaker Longworth appointed committees to attend the funeral in Champaign.

President Coolidge in his message made numerous recommendations for legislation, although it is admitted that there will be time to do little more than pass the necessary appropriation bills. The President asked the house ways and means committee to introduce a bill granting a reduction of income taxes due in March and June, 1927, stating that the surplus of government revenue for the current fiscal year which could be so applied was about $383,000,000. He said he did not think any change in the special taxes or any permanent reduction was practical at this time. The Democratic leaders have indicated that they will demand a permanent reduction.

In the matter of farm relief legislation Mr. Coolidge reasserted his opposition to anything in the nature of price fixing by the government, but suggested that something might be done to solve the surplus problem by supplementing the operations of the co-operative marketing organizations. As for the cotton growers, he said they must reduce their acreage for the coming year by about one-third. Corn belt leaders in congress answered this clause of the message with the announcement that the McNary-Haugen bill would be reintroduced at once.

Mr. Coolidge recommended that the Philippines be transferred from military to civil rule as soon as possible, but said the islands should not be given complete independence until the natives are "politically fitted for self-government and economically independent." He added the assurance that the United States would always bear some responsibility for the defense of the islands.

Concerning prohibition the message called for reform of abuses in enforcement and said congress should speedily enact such supplementary legislation as the Treasury department might ask to strengthen the Volstead act. The first of the treasury measures was introduced in the house Wednesday and it included the appropriation of $500,000 for "advances to be made by special disbursing agents," which means the purchasing of evidence. Several members of the committee refused to vote for this, and others said they would fight it on the floor of the house.

ANOTHER angle of the prohibition matter was presented Wednesday when the Chief Executive transmitted the budget estimates of expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928. Here is what he said:

"For the enforcement of prohibition nearly $30,000,000 is provided in the budget by direct and indirect appropriations. The coast guard has been enlarged and strengthened to enable it to prosecute effectively its part of the campaign of enforcement, while the other enforcement agencies have been amply financed.

"Whatever is necessary to put into effect the expressed will of the people as written into the eighteenth amendment and the will of the congress as expressed in the Volstead act will be done. Whatever funds may be necessary to vindicate the law and secure compliance with all its provisions should be provided. The constitutional duties of the President and the congress make any other course indefensible."

Naturally the wets didn't like this at all, and they were reinforced by the advocates of strong national defense when the budget figures for the army and navy were read. For those branches it is proposed to expend in the coming year more than $7,000,000 less than in the 1927 fiscal year. Though the coast guard rum fleet is to be increased, the navy will have to place some of its 309 ships in reserve and it is alleged the fleet is undermanned and suffering deterioration for lack of funds. The decline in the personnel of the army already had been called to public attention by army officials. The budget provides for $574,000,000 for national defense, and the President said this was "a very considerable amount to spend for protection in time of peace."

Mr. Coolidge called attention to the fact that no provision is made in the estimates of the Navy department for commencing construction of the remaining three of the eight light cruisers which the act of December 18, 1924, authorizes to be undertaken prior to July 1, 1927. He expressed his approval of this omission. Against this "interference" the house naval affairs committee promptly revolted. Secretary of the Navy Wilbur and his chief aids were called before the committee and told it that of the eight cruisers mentioned, which were scheduled for completion in 1927, only two have been started and they cannot be completed before 1929. Chairman Butler then declared that so far as he and most of the majority members of the committee were concerned, no more navy proposals will be approved until assurances are received that, once authorized, the programs will be pushed to completion in accordance with the legislation.

Under a special order the house passed the senate bill providing for increases in the salaries of federal judges in the Supreme, Circuit, District and other courts.

REVERTING to the agriculturists, the American Farm Bureau Federation was in session in Chicago and apparently got the Middle West and the South together on a proposed program of farm relief. They adopted the ideas of Frank O. Lowden and outlined a surplus control measure which they will ask congress to pass. Briefly, it will do these things:

Provide a federal farm board, administering an adequate revolving fund, with whose help surpluses can actually be handled by co-operative agencies created by the farmers.

Distribute the costs of managing surpluses just as broadly as the resultant benefits are distributed, that is, over each marketed unit of a particular commodity through the equalization fee.

The federation adopted a long list of resolutions on matters vital to agriculture, and elected these new directors: Central section, Hugh Harper, Lancaster, Wis.; eastern section, E. B. Cornwall, Middlebury, Vt.; southern, Frank Demmick, Shuteston, La.; Western section, M. S. Winder, Salt Lake City. Re-elected officers were: W. H. Settle, Indianapolis; J. F. Porter, Columbus, Tenn., and C. S. Brown, Mesa, Ariz.

ITALY'S recently signed treaty with Albania has stirred up a great fuss in the Balkans and in some European capitals there were fears that it would lead to another war. The Serbs were especially angry, feeling that it was directed primarily against them, and Foreign Minister Ninchitch resigned, and was followed out by the entire Jugo-Slav cabinet. This was a surprise to the Italians for they had considered Ninchitch their good friend. Officially, Mussolini's government declared the treaty contained no secret military clauses and could in no way be considered injurious to peace in the Balkans. It was, said the Italians, merely a pact of friendship and arbitration between Italy and Albania, insuring peace, guaranteeing absolute sovereignty and territorial integrity to Albania, and confirming and emphasizing the principles upheld by the League of Nations.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI, by a decree law, has imposed a tax on all bachelors in Italy between the ages of twenty-five and sixty-five. This is another step in his campaign against birth control. The tax is progressive according to income, and the proceeds will be turned over to the National Institute for the Protection of Motherhood and Childhood. Unmarried women are not subject to the tax.

MOST eminent of those taken by death last week was Claude Monet, the French painter. He was eighty-six years old and the last survivor of the great impressionist group of the 80's which included Manet, Renoir, Pissaro and Sisley.

ACTIVITIES of the administration in behalf of Adolfo Diaz, president of Nicaragua, seem fated to prove decidedly injurious to the prestige of the United States in Latin America. Juan B. Sacasa, who was the candidate of the revolutionary liberals, has set up his government in Puerto Cabezas and has been formally recognized as president by Mexico. This lead is expected to be followed by Salvador, Guatemala and Panama, while Costa Rica and Honduras are awaiting developments. Guatemala sent an offer of mediation, but Diaz considered this as favoring Mexican intervention. However, he advised Sacasa that he would give him safe conduct to the interior to discuss peace negotiations. Sacasa's followers are confident that he will win eventually and must be recognized by the United States. Toward the end of the week it was reported that Sacasa and his cabinet were effectually penned up in Puerto Cabezas by American warships.

WHEN the League of Nations council began its December session in Geneva it was confronted by the demands of Germany that allied military control of that country be abolished and that the evacuation of the Rhineland take place speedily. Opposed to these demands was the determination of the French that France and her allies on the east first be assured against future aggression. Stresemann, Chamberlain and Briand had private conversations and reached an agreement on the military control question. The new accord provides that the interallied military control commission, with headquarters in Berlin since the armistice, will leave Germany and be dissolved by January 15 or 30. Supervision of Germany's disarmament will be placed in charge of a league commission, as provided by the covenant.

The three foreign ministers then tackled the other problem, and it was said they probably would agree on an early evacuation of the Coblenz and Mayence bridgeheads and the withdrawal of all British and Belgian troops of occupation.

THE League of Nations virtually lost another member, for under pressure from Shia Ting, representing the Canton Kuomintang government, the delegate from the nominal Peking government, Chao Hsin-chu, agreed to take no active part in the proceedings and to make no commitments regarding China. Shia said the Kuomintang, which claims to be the only real government in China, does not recognize the league and would not join it after the civil war is ended unless the powers recognized its full independence and sovereignty. He said further that China is ready to join Russia, Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan in the Asiatic league which was really started by the recent meeting of Tchitcherin of Russia and Rushdy Bey of Turkey in Odessa.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

Columbus

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, Genoese mariner, student and ex-pirate fighter, incurred charges of heresy and insanity in the latter part of the Fifteenth century by evolving the idea that the earth was round and that by sailing west from Europe one might in time hope to arrive in the East Indies. After many failures he succeeded in interesting Queen Isabella of Spain and a capitalist named Pinzon in his great idea. With a fleet of three little ships, manned by a crew of felons and other offscourings of European ports, he began his supposedly insane journey which later proved successful.

Criminals and beggars, led by a fanatic on a mad cruise, made possible by the generous whim of an uneducated woman!

On October 12, 1492, Columbus reached San Salvador island. Three later voyages he made, opening up other parts of the new continent. For reward he fell into disgrace, was imprisoned and died in poverty and obscurity, with no realization whatever of the incalculable importance of his discoveries.

After him John and Sebastian Cabot, father and son, explored North America in the name of the miserly King Henry VII of England (the "Henry of Richmond" who conquered and succeeded Richard III), and were informed by that worthy monarch that their voyage was a failure.

Sir Walter Raleigh a few years later colonized Virginia and introduced tobacco into Europe. He named the newly settled province after Elizabeth, the "Virgin Queen" of England. His reward was imprisonment and execution. Captain John Smith followed him, making the Virginia settlements permanent and opening up New England. He, too, died obscure and in poverty.

Balboa, in the name of Spain's king, pushed on from Darien across a trackless wilderness and discovered the Pacific. He was beheaded. The Spaniard De Soto explored the great Southwest, discovering the Mississippi river and finding an untimely grave in its waters. Pizarro and Cortez, Spanish adventurers, conquered Mexico and Peru. The former explorer was banished from Charles V's court, the latter was murdered in his palace.

Hendrik Hudson, English sailor in the Dutch merchant service, discovered New York in 1609, landing first at Coney Island, then stopping at Manhattan island and then proceeding up the river that now bears his name to a point north of Albany. Later, while exploring Hudson's bay in search of the North pole, he was cast adrift in a small boat by his own men and left to die. Cartier and other adventurers meantime had "put Canada on the map" as French territory.

So much for discoverers and explorers. They risked their lives, their fortunes, their whole careers, not for themselves, but for the greater wealth and glory of the kings they served. Their final reward in nearly every case was poverty, disgrace or execution. Never before or since was the maxim "Put not your trust in princes" so terribly verified as in the instances of these Fifteenth and Sixteenth century heroes. They are immortal in fame, but their earthly recompense was shame and death.

Roughly speaking, America was divided up among Europe's nations as follows: Spain held the Far South; England, the Virginian and adjacent colonies; the Dutch ruled New York; England, the New England colonies; and the French, Canada. But the English colonists were hardier and backed by greater home power than were any of the other settlers, except perhaps the French. So by 1655 England held all the Atlantic coast north of Florida and south of Canada. War sprang up between the French and English colonists, the Indians siding with the French. After a long and bloody struggle the English finally won.

England, however, neglected and oppressed her American colonies, failing to send them succor, levying heavy and unjust taxes; allowing them no representation in parliament and sending incompetent men to govern them. For centuries dissatisfaction increased throughout the thirteen colonies, and in 1775 they formally banded together against the mother country, and in the following year drew up the Declaration of Independence, casting off forever the yoke of monarchy. The eight-year war followed, wherein the weak little colonies, under George Washington's glorious leadership, fought with varying success for their rights, at last winning complete victory and freedom.

The new Union, still under Washington's guidance, began its career as a republic. Despite a second war with England, in 1812, and the needless, tragic Civil war between North and South, in 1861-1865, the country has grown and prospered as none other in all history; taking its place among the greatest nations on earth and winning the respect of those who in earlier days predicted speedy collapse for the mighty young republic, and setting a high example of government, freedom and patriotism to the world at large.

Progress Made in Live Stock

Reports Show Steady Increase in Number of Owners Using Pure Breds.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

On October 1 the "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign, fostered by the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with various states, reached the beginning of its eighth year. The activity is aimed at the general improvement of live stock in the United States, and all stock owners and their organizations are invited to co-operate. Reports of progress issued quarterly during the period have shown a steady increase in the number of owners agreeing to use pure-bred sires for all classes of domestic animals. There has been also a wide demand for publications, posters, lantern slides and other information showing the benefits of well-bred animals over common stock.

Outstanding Results of the Work.

Among the results of public interest thus far have been:

The distribution of nearly half a million copies of Farmers' Bulletin 1107, "Essentials of Animal Breeding," prepared early in the progress of the campaign.

The participation of an increasing number of live-stock owners, who, on October 1, numbered 16,993 persons, each of whom signed a written declaration to use pure-bred sires exclusively.

The publication of a department circular showing the utility value of pure-bred live stock—meaning that good breeding increases the earning power of farm animals as well as adding to interest in their breeding.

The recent publication of a circular describing the results of the extensive beef-cattle demonstration at Snl-a-Bar farms, Grain Valley, Mo. This circular shows the value of pure-bred beef bulls in producing steers that topped the market sixteen out of twenty times and that sold consistently for about $2 a hundred pounds more than the average of other cattle on the same market.

The publication of charts and pictorial material portraying the greater dressing per cent of well-bred cattle, sheep and swine and better market returns.

The establishment of the first county in the United States (Union county, Kentucky) free from all grade and scrub bulls.

Many Barn Signs Issued.

In recognizing the efforts of live-stock owners to improve their herds and flocks, the department, in co-operation with county agents and state extension workers, has issued several thousand lithographed barn signs resembling a metal tablet. It has also issued certificates of recognition to co-operating stock owners.

For the benefit of persons unfamiliar with the early organization and plan of the work, the bureau of animal industry explains that the method of enrollment is simple—and informal, consisting merely in signing a blank, which may be obtained on request, in which a stock owner declares that henceforth he will use pure-bred sires exclusively for all kinds of animals raised. The blanks have been distributed among county agents and extension workers in most states.

Some communities have made outstanding progress in the improvement of their live stock. Forty-three counties have one hundred or more farmers who are using pure-bred sires exclusively and in several counties the number exceeds five hundred such owners. Copies of the latest reports of progress, dated October 1, may be obtained on request to the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Elimination of Worms From the Herd of Hogs

The Lee County (Ill.) farm bureau is strongly urging attention to the elimination of worms from the herd of hogs. This requires treatment with a dependable vermifuge, the safest and best of which is the drug santonin. This drug not only kills worms but acts as an intestinal antiseptic, and in any case of irritation it has a soothing effect rather than causing additional trouble.

It is a mistake to assume that the only time to treat for worms is in young pigs. It is highly advisable to treat brood sows as far as possible in advance of farrowing time. If the brood sow is infested with worms, it is almost impossible for the young pigs to avoid infestation. Santonin is entirely safe for such use, which is not true of some various substitute worm treatments now being offered.

Lesson for December 19

SAMUEL THE JUST JUDGE

LESSON TEXT—I Sam. 7:1-17, 12:1-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare your heart unto the Lord and serve Him only.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God Helps the People at Mizpah.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Victory at Mizpah.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Samuel Did for His People.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How the Lord Helps.

I. Samuel Called the People to Forsake Their Idols (7:1-6).

Under the administration of Eli, the nation rapidly deteriorated. For their sins, God permitted the nation to be bitterly oppressed by the Philistines. Samuel promised them deliverance on the condition of repentance.

II. Samuel Prayed for the People (7:7-14).

Moved by fear of the Philistines the people besought Samuel to cry unto God for them. In response to his prayer God miraculously delivered them from the Philistines.

III. Samuel Judging Israel (7:15-17).

Bethel, Gilgal, Mizpah and Ramah were his circuit, to each of which he made annual visits. These centers were for the accommodation of the people.

IV. Samuel's Farewell Address (12:1-25).

When Saul, the new king, was crowned, Samuel turned over to him his authority, and gracefully retired.

1. Samuel's challenge to the people (vv. 1-5).

(1) A reminder of the way the king had been given (v. 1).

He showed that they were directly responsible for the change in government. Though keenly feeling the reflection upon himself, and their ingratitude to God in their demand for a king, he had not resisted their wish.

(2) Review of his own administration (vv. 2, 3).

a. Walk from childhood (v. 2). Samuel's was a remarkable life; from childhood to old age he had lived an upright and pure life.

b. Career as judge and ruler (v. 3).

He boldly challenged them to show where and how he had ever oppressed anyone.

(3) The vote of confidence by the people (vv. 4, 5).

It was Samuel's right as he laid down the reins of government to have his record vindicated and to have his integrity established beyond a doubt, so that no evil-minded man should ever be able to cast reproach upon him.

2. Samuel reviews God's dealing from the time of Moses (vv. 6-15).

He reasoned with them concerning the good hand of the Lord upon them from the time of Moses. Though they with ingratitude turned from the Lord and demanded a king like the other nations, He had acceded to their request and set a king over them.

(1) National prosperity conditioned by obedience (v. 14).

Though they had displeased God in choosing a king, if they would fear the Lord and render obedience, national prosperity would still be given.

(2) Disobedience to God meant the nation's ruin (v. 15).

It is folly to ask God's blessing upon a nation while it is living in rebellion against Him.

3. Samuel's own vindication (vv. 16-19).

This was such a critical hour in the history of the nation that Samuel sought to indelibly impress its meaning on their hearts. This he did by means of the thunder and rain out of season. Harvest time was not the season for thunder and rain, so when it came at the call of Samuel, the people were affrighted. They saw it as an example of God's mighty power, which if directed against them, would destroy them in an instant.

4. Samuel's gracious response (vv. 20-25).

(1) "Fear not—serve the Lord with all your heart" (vv. 20-22).

Samuel did not minimize their sin but assured them that if they would serve the Lord wholeheartedly He would not forsake them. The ground of their hope was the faithfulness of God in keeping His covenant.

(2) "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you" (v. 23).

The people had rejected Samuel, yet he had such magnanimity of soul that he did not allow their ingratitude to cause his intercession for them to cease. He assured them that in spite of their sin their one concern should be to fear the Lord and serve Him wholeheartedly.

Pleasure

The pastor says: To expect adequate refreshment for the human spirit from mere pleasure is like gathering dewdrops and blowing upon them to keep them moist.—John Andrew Holmes.

Repentance

Repentance is a hearty sorrow for our past misdeeds, and a sincere resolution and endeavor, to the utmost of our power to conform our actions to the law of God.

The GIRL in the MIRROR

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, a gay young chap somewhat inclined to wildness, has recently succeeded as a playwright. His wealthy sister Barbara, who has helped him to succeed, has just been married and is going to Japan, leaving Laurie on his own. Epstein and Bangs, his theatrical partners, have promised Barbara to keep an eye on Laurie. They scold him for his laziness of late, and he retorts that he seeks adventure. From his window in New York he sees the reflection of a beautiful girl in a mirror in the house opposite. From the elevator boy in the girl's house Laurie learns the girl's name is Mayo. Again in the mirror's reflection he sees her with a revolver and fears she means to commit suicide. He rushes into her apartment, and, winning her confidence, induces her to lunch with him, though she warns him of danger. At lunch she admits there is a mystery in her life. She says also that her funds are almost exhausted, but refuses flatly Laurie's offer of financial help. As a stranger enters the restaurant, the girl mutters "He has found me." Upon learning that the man has no claim on her, Laurie warns the stranger not to molest the girl, whose name, Laurie learns, is Doris. To Louise Ordway, his invalid sister-in-law, Laurie admits his interest in Doris. Mrs. Ordway offers her help, but Doris refuses flatly to meet her.

"The police can stop all this nonsense." But Laurie spoke without his customary authority.

"Don't imagine that. The police know nothing about this matter, and they never will." A sudden thought struck her and she rose almost with a spring. He rose, too, staring at her in bewilderment. She caught his shoulders and held them tightly, in a grip wholly free from self-consciousness.

"If you warn the police," she said swiftly; "if you draw them into this, you will ruin everything. You will do me a harm that could never be undone. Give me your word that you won't. Please, please!"

She was almost shaking him now. Under the clasp of her hands on his shoulders Laurie paled a little, but his black eyes held hers steadily.

"Of course I promise," he said, slowly, "as you make such a point of it."

She removed her hands and stepped back.

"Please go now."

"So soon? Why, I've only just come!"

"I know—but I'm tired."

There was no mistaking the sincerity of this. It was a poignant outcry. Clearly, she was at the breaking-point. He took both her hands.

"This whole experience gives me the oddest feeling," he told her gently. "In one way, I seem to be dreaming it. Under it all there's a conviction that I'm on the track of the mystery; that everything will be cleared up, for us both, in another minute or two. It's merely an instinct. I can't explain it. But one thing I know. Sooner or later—sooner, I hope—I shall be able to work it out for you."

She seemed suddenly to remember that he was holding her hands. Flushing, she gently withdrew them. Then she turned, and with a brusque gesture walked away from him.

"I'm sorry I got you into this," she cried.

"Don't worry about me." He smiled at her from the door he was holding open. "May I come and take you to lunch tomorrow?"

"Not tomorrow. The next day, perhaps."

"We've got to look for that job, you know."

"With all this?" She indicated with the toe of her slipper a significant spot on the rug.

Laurie regarded the slipper with approval. It was a beautiful slipper, on a charming foot. It so diverted his mind from the main issue of the conversation that he was in the elevator and half way down to the ground floor before he recalled that issue. He was not disturbed. Doris had enough to go on with; and certainly he himself had sufficient scope for thought in the revelations she had just made.

As he walked down the outer steps of the studio building and emerged on the sidewalk, a figure detached itself from the shadow of a low iron fence and stealthily followed him. It was a short figure, overcoated out of recognition. It carried its hands in its pockets, and its head was thrust forward in a peculiar way. It kept a dozen feet behind him, until he reached the pretentious entrance of the apartment building where he lived.

Here, in the glaring light of two huge electric globes, conveniently held aloft for him by a pair of brouze warriors, Laurie turned suddenly. Warned by the inner sense that tells us we are watched. The figure behind ducked modestly into the background, but not until he had recognized the round face and projecting ears of Herbert Ransome Shaw.

Laurie checked a passionate impulse to hurl himself upon the lurking and unpleasant shape. Slowly but surely he was learning self-control. Martin, the elevator operator, and Griggs, the night hall man, were already bidding him good evening and regarding him with friendly and interested eyes. To see him suddenly fall upon and beat a shabby stranger would surprise and pain them, besides unpleasantly stirring up the neighborhood. A better opportunity would present itself, or could be made.

In the meantime, however, he must convey to Herbert Ransome Shaw some idea of the utter contempt in which he held him. Taking Griggs confidentially by the arm, Laurie pointed out the skulking shadow.

"See that?" he asked in ringing tones.

Grigge was a Goliath in proportions and deliberate in his movements. He took his time to discover the object young Devon indicated. In the shadow the object stirred restlessly.

"Yessir," Griggs then said, uncertainly. "It's—it's a man, sir."

"Is it?" asked Laurie with interest, and still in loud, clear tones. "I'm afraid you're mistaken. But whatever it is, step on it!"

He entered the elevator after this crisp instruction, and was wafted up to his rooms. The hall man moved hesitatingly down the building's three steps to the sidewalk. One never knew exactly what young Devon was getting at. Still, if he really wanted Griggs to step on anything—"

As He Walked Down the Outer Steps of the Studio Building and Emerged on the Sidewalk a Figure Detached Itself From the Shadows.

Griggs stopped. A slight sensation of disappointment swept over him. He was a conscientious man who desired to do his duty. But there was absolutely nothing for him to step on, except the snow-covered and otherwise inoffensive pavement.

CHAPTER VIII

Samuel Plays a New Game

The next morning Laurie awoke from troubled dreams with a vague feeling that life was getting a rise out of him, a feeling that the absent morning greeting of Rodney Bangs did not help to dissipate.

Without realizing it, young Devon had rather sunned himself in the adulation of his chum. When this adulation was removed, he missed it; and for the present, at least, there was no question that adulation was lacking.

Not that Bangs failed in any of the outward forms of friendship, but his manner had changed. He was increasingly preoccupied. When Laurie spoke, Bangs had the effect of coming to him from a long distance, and even of having one foot extended, as it were, for the return journey.

The two young men breakfasted together, for the first time in several days; and over their coffee and cigarettes Laurie confided to his friend his new anxiety about Mrs. Ordway.

Bangs at once became human. Indeed, he showed a degree of solicitude that surprised his friend. It was suddenly clear that Rodney was vastly interested in Louise. He had even ventured to call on her, though Laurie did not yet know this; for the first call was made, as it happened, on the afternoon of the day when the two young men had indulged in their first serious quarrel.

Bangs, usually the most modest and self-conscious of youths, had abruptly lost his shyness under the urge of a need to talk about his chum to some one who would understand. And Louise had understood, quite surprisingly. Recalling the long talk he and she had had, the help she had given him, the plans they had made, Rodney grew very serious.

"It's lucky Sonya 's in town," he said, when this further fact had been revealed. "Let's go over to the hotel and see her right after breakfast. Perhaps we ought to cable to Warren. Sonya will know."

He spoke with such studied carelessness that Laurie flashed a sudden look at him. Under it Bangs flushed to the roots of his burnished pompadour.

"Well, well," murmured Laurie, "this is interesting! Odd I didn't notice it before."

Whatever "it" was, he gave his whole attention to it now. Leaning forward, he ostentatiously studied Bangs, with an expression at once indulgent and amazed.

"A flush on his cheek, too," he mused aloud.

"Shut up!" Bangs clenched his teeth, while the flush deepened.

"Easily irritated; respiration slightly irregular, all the familiar symptoms."

"For God's sake, Laurie, don't be an ass!" begged Bangs.

"All the familiar symptoms—of a heavy cold," murmured Laurie, sympathetically. "A hot bath and a dose of quinine might help at this stage. But if it gets worse—" Laurie reflected, anxiously shaking his head—"if it gets worse I'll send for Sonya," he finished brightly.

He rose, dodged the roll Rodney hurled at him, and strolled out of the room, opening the door again to add an afterthought that suddenly occurred to him.

"Don't risk your life by going to the hotel, old man," he added, kindly. "Take your quinine, and I will call on Sonya."

"She'll tell us whether or not to cable for Warren," repeated Bangs, with great dignity.

But Sonya, when she came into her hotel sitting-room an hour later, did not immediately solve this problem. For the moment her mind was wholly on the Infant Samuel, who was to have his adenoids cut out that morning, and who had been encouraged to look forward to the experience as a new delight. While they were expressing fitting interest, Samuel himself entered the room, alone, but with all the effect of a juvenile procession. By the left leg he dragged his most cherished possession, a battered and dim-featured rag doll. Hospitably greeting the two young men, he solemnly presented the doll to Bangs.

"What's this?" asked Rodney, with a friendly impulse to adapt his conversation to the young.

"Hullen," affirmed Samuel, "Hullen R. J."

"What does that mean?" Bangs appealed to Sonya.

"It's the doll's name. He gave it to her himself. 'Hullen,' I suppose, means Helen, and Mr. Warren's initials, you know, are R. J. Evidently Samuel liked the sound of them."

Samuel retrieved Hullen R. J.

"Hullen R. J. go hos'tl wiv Sammy," he further announced.

"She will," corroborated Sonya. "He never stirs without her, and she sleeps in his bed every night."

Laurie turned a shocked gaze on Samuel, and Sonya laughed, then gulped.

"I'm horribly nervous this morning," she admitted. "I wish it were over. You see, a certain cherub isn't going to like matters at all after they really begin at the hos'tl. And his mother will be more of a burden than a help."

Bangs had an inspiration.

"Suppose I go with you," he suggested. "Then if you need a strong man to hold the cherub—"

"Two strong men," corrected Laurie. "Do you imagine that I'm going to desert Samuel in his hour of need? Besides, I've got to keep an eye on Bangs," he added sweetly, and was rewarded by a glare from that overwrought young man.

"Noticed anything odd about Bangs lately?" Laurie asked Sonya.

She turned on Rodney the dark gaze of her serene eyes.

"Why, no."

"You will," Laurie predicted, with a mournful shake of the head. "Watch him closely, and call on me if there are alarming symptoms that you don't understand."

Bangs rushed into confused speech.

"He thinks I've got a cold," he gulped. "His nonsense, of course. Nothing in the world the matter with me. Er—how soon do we start?"

Laurie, helpless with laughter, rolled the ecstatic Samuel on the floor. Samuel's voice took on an added note of jubilation. Sonya, his mother, Hullen R. J., "Lawwie!", and "Misser Bangs" all going with him to the hos'tl—it was almost too much pleasure! Samuel became slightly intoxicated.

"He wants to sing," remarked Laurie, with masculine understanding of a fellow heart. "All right, old man," he encouraged. "How about that beautiful hymn I taught you at Bab's wedding?"

With considerable help Samuel recalled the ditty:

Hey, hey, ve gangsall here,
Whalahaloo we care,
Whalahaloo we care,
Now—wow—wow—WOW—WOW!

"Laurie!"

Sonya spoke with sudden austerity.

"It's a relief from his mental strain," Laurie explained. "Any doctor will tell you that."

In the hos'tl, however, things assumed a different aspect. Still firmly holding Hullen R. J. by the leg, and keeping a steadfast eye on the surgeon, Samuel took in his immediate surroundings with a dawning suspicion in his soul. Having two men throw lights on his face and look down his throat had lost its novelty, though Sonya had assured him that wonderful views were to be seen there which he alone could reveal. Also, the men seemed hurried, and didn't want to look at Hullen R. J.'s throat, though Samuel warmly recommended this variety in the entertainment.

In short, the situation had become sinister. The smiles around him were dreadful-looking things, all except Laurie's. With an appalling howl Samuel detached himself from the surgeon's grasp and fled to Laurie, who picked him up and held him firmly and comfortably in his lap until a lady in white came with something nice for Samuel to smell.

The next thing Samuel knew was that he was in bed in a strange room. He gulped and discovered that his throat was sore. He sat up, distended his mouth for a yell, and then very slowly closed it.

From every corner of the room familiar figures were hastening to his side. The lady in white, Sonya, and his mother all reached him at the same moment. On the pillow beside him Hullen R. J. awaited the honor of his attention like a perfect lady. No howls from her, as Sonya immediately pointed out. As she thus soothed, Sonya was kissing him. The lady in white was offering him something pleasant to drink. His mother was patting his back.

For a long instant Samuel took in the gratifying fact of these activities. Then he assorted his features, grabbed Hullen R. J., exchanged his yell for a large smile, and permitted himself to be waited on. Deep in his masculine consciousness he had realized that his world was normal again.

Bangs and Laurie walked up Fifth avenue together, stopping at a florist's to purchase the man's entire supply of roses for Mrs. Ordway. Bangs also discovered some masses of poinsettia and chrysanthemums that, as he said, "looked like her." Laden with these spoils, they took a taxicab to the Ordway house, where they found Jepson exuding an atmosphere of reassurance.

Yessir, Mrs. Hordway seemed better. She 'ad a more restful night, han' Susanne said was quite bright this morning. Hof course she'd see Mr. Devon, hand prob'bly Mr. Bangs, halso. Jepson would harsk at once.

Laurie gets mixed up in a nice, old-fashioned, knock-down drag-out, and something happens to him.

Poker Not Entirely According to Hoyle

The traveling agent of a liver pill concern in the East struck this town to contract for an advertisement in the Torchlight, remarks the editor of the Snagtown (Ark.) Torchlight. Finding that he was an old newspaper man and that he purposed remaining two or three days to take in the town, we set out to post him on some of the idioms and customs. He thought he knew it all, however, and that's the reason he is in bedroom No. 48 in the hotel with a bullet in his groin.

It seems that he dropped into the White Eagle still and took a hand in a game of poker. The game is rather eccentric in this town. Sometimes two pairs beat four of a kind, and sometimes not. It is a good deal according to who is playing and how much there is up. It seems that our friend got a royal flush and was called by three jacks. He at once jumped to the conclusion that he had won the jackpot, but he was sadly mistaken. Tom Ephriam Smith was in the game, and it was an occasion when a pair of sixes, if held by Tom, would beat four aces. While raking in the pot the liver pill man was stopped by a bullet, and even if he gets well he will have a limp in his left leg. This town isn't as big as Chicago or New York, nor as wicked as St. Louis or Cincinnati, but we have our customs and idioms just the same, and the stranger who can't tumble to them must take the consequences.

Couldn't Read It

An African houseboy, having saved a little money, visited an optician. He tried on pair after pair of glasses, but each time stated that he could not read the test letters. At last, in despair, the optician asked him if he'd ever been taught to read.

"No, boss," was the reply. "I have never had the money till now to buy glasses to read."

And it took the optician quite a little while to convince him that glasses alone would not have the desired effect.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Doing His Duty

A stranger entered the outer office of a pretentious suite and inquired: "Is the boss in?"

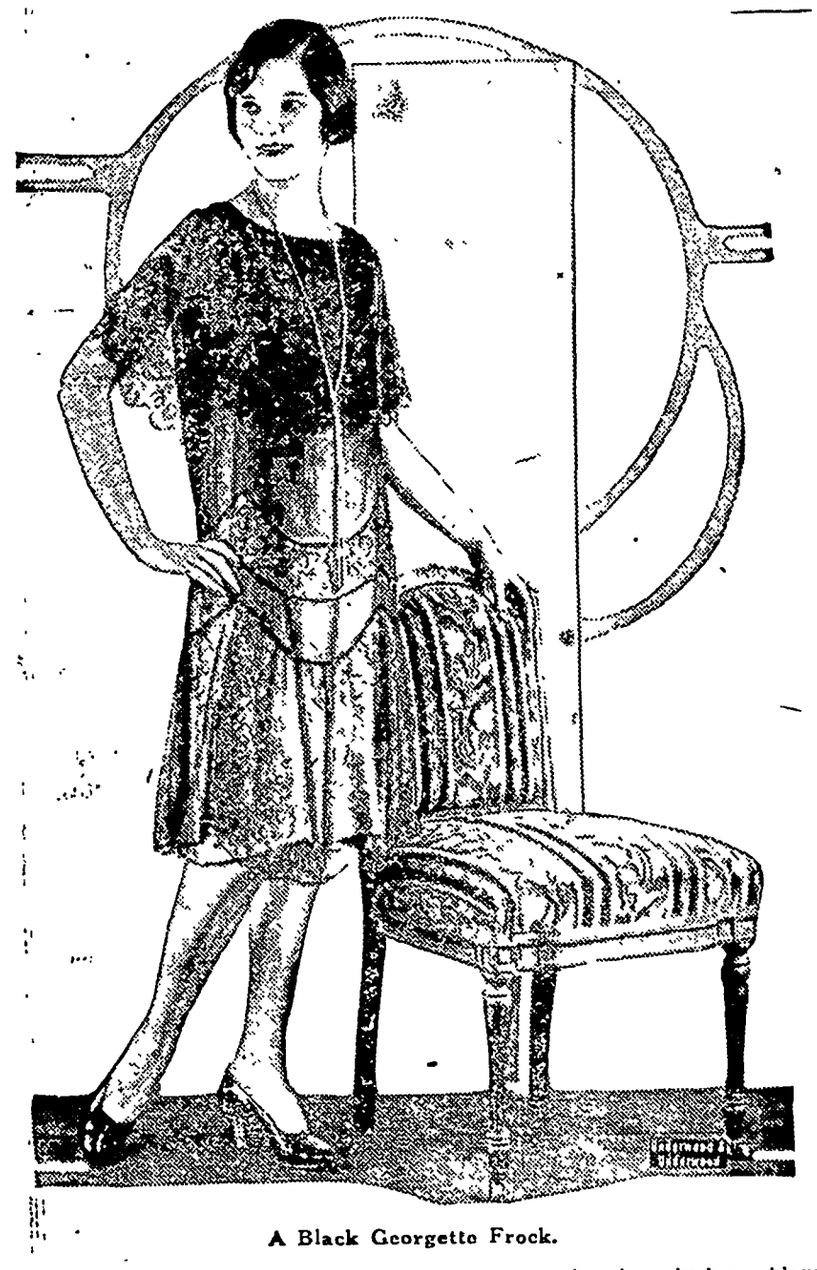
"I will see, sir," said the courteous attendant.

Returning, he reported: "Yes, the boss is in about $40. If you will give me your card I think he would welcome the chance to leave the game."

CHIC TRANSPARENT BLACK FROCK; COAT SUGGESTS BLOUSE EFFECT

MORE and more the mode asserts the smartness of black. For coats, the very latest is black suede trimmed in black wolf or lynx. The black velvet toque strikingly draped answers the call of the millinery mode. For dressy wear, in spite of the flare for gay colors, the sentiment for the all-black frock is very pronounced.

What the all-black party or formal afternoon frock lacks in color it makes up for in dainty grace of diaphanous draperies and alluring transparencies. A black georgette frock like the one in the picture, inset with black lace and with a deep lace cape collar is a desirable possession. It serves so charmingly for so many and varied occasions.



A Black Georgette Frock.

Worn over a flesh-colored satin slip it is ideal for the informal party or for afternoon tea. Posed over a black silk slip it becomes a costume of quiet elegance. The charm of the transparent black dress is that it affords so many delightful effects with the interchanging of various colorful costume slips.

The latest entree among black dinner gowns is that all of lace with long tight-fitting sleeves, for sleeves to the wrist are fashion's latest whim for the sheer evening dress. The skirt is bouffant with an intricately contrived girdle.

Black tulle evening gowns also come in for fashion's favor. The full skirts are a mass of fluttering tiers and the hemlines are always scalloped or pointed or gracefully irregular.

Recently arriving imports accented yokes of exquisite white or metal lace, with black as an outstanding number on the present style program.

The fringe-trimmed black chiffon frock is also an interesting interpretation of the all-black mode. The fringe is arranged in tiers on the skirt portion and appears in clever appointments on the sleeves with little or none on the bodice.

A decided blouse for the evening wrap, but merely the suggestion of a blouse for the practical daytime topcoat—this is the season's decision of the mode. The problem has been how to introduce the blouse into the coat of cloth without interfering with the straightline silhouette—for women of fashion are loathe to forsake slenderizing lines. In more ways than one this coveted effect has been achieved, at the same time introducing a blouse styling. By positioning a subtle fullness at the back above the skirt portion or perhaps placing it under the arm as the model shows in this picture, the almost impossible has been accomplished.

There is another difficulty which has confronted the designer from time to time, that is to adopt the very deep armhole without destroying the straight up and down lines of the coat, for in spite of the obstacles to be overcome, the final ultimatum from fashion headquarters is that both the blouse and the deep armhole must have their place in the season's modes. And they have! Most successfully, too, for proof of which let the coat in this picture again bear witness. It is an elegant model made of dark green suede cloth, with collar of natural gray fox.

Model of Dark Green Suede Cloth.

Referring to this collar, it is of exceptionally high-grade fur, appealing to a discriminating taste which prefers a restrained use of the best rather than a lavish display of quantity sans quality. Many of the season's better coats are notably of worthwhile cloth, collared and perhaps cuffed with fur of a most superior sort.

Out of the confusion of styles launched at the beginning of every season there is always some one which stands out prominently—becomes a pronounced vogue. Such is the black or richly colorful coat of either suede or deep pile weave, which is trimmed with light fluffy fur—the kind which flatters in its becomingness. In selecting the midwinter cloth coat one will be according to the dictates of the mode by selecting either a deep wine or dark green cloth trimmed with creamy colored badger or gray fox or wolf.

Figaro

—SUGAR CURING—

Smoked Salt

FIGARO Sugar Curing SMOKED SALT is a perfectly proportioned product for Smoking and Sugar Curing Meat. Ready to use as it comes in the can. Cures, Flavors and Smokes!

—HOW TO USE—

Use the same as any meat salt. Pack the meat down for a "dry salt" cure.

For a "dry sugar" cure, rub it into the meat with the hands. If a "liquid sweet pickle" cure is wanted put meat into a brine made from FIGARO Smoked Salt (2½ lbs. to each gallon of water.)

FIGARO Contains:—

Salt, made with condensed and refined (liquid) smoke, Salt Petre, Black Pepper, Red Pepper, properly proportioned for perfectly sugar-curing and smoking meats.

FIGARO PRESERVAR

A liquid comound made by condensing wood smoke and the addition of other beneficial ingredents. A perfect agent for Curing Salt Meat, being better and more economical than the old-fashioned smoke house. Just cure your meat the regular way—use Figaro Preservar instead of your smoke house.

The sale of beef quarters as advertised by the Klemme Meat Market for last Friday and Saturday was a big success. Mr. C. A. Larsen reports that this was a large car load and that Friday he sold about one-third of the car and the balance was sold Saturday. Mr. Larsen can sell a beef quarter cheaper than the farmer can afford to butcher his own stock.

J. N. Day and C. A. Larsen drove up to Day's farm east of Austin, Minn., yesterday. They found it hard traveling after leaving Osage as a regular blizzard was brewing north of there. They had to make the last three miles of their journey in a bob sled as the snow was so deep.

Ed. Buentenbach went over to the hospital at Mason City Tuesday to have his hand looked after by the surgeons. It was expected he would require to have skin grafted over the wound, but the surgeons decided it would not be necessary so they sent him home again. We are glad to report that Ed. is getting along fine now.

Mr. and Mrs. Lacnner, a sister of Mrs. Johnson, and her mother Mrs. H. A. Smith, and brother, Warner Smith, all of Spencer came Sunday to spend the day at the home Mr. and Mrs. Walter (Happy) Johnson. Miss Dorothy Smith, sister of Mrs. Johnson, returned to Spencer with the visitors, after spending about a month in Klemme.

After the basket ball game Friday night a number of friends surprised George Lawhorn, at the Henry Freie home, the occasion being his sixteenth (?) birthday anniversary. The evening was spent in playing cards after which the ladies served a fine lunch. George presided at the table and cut his birthday cake. All enjoyed a good time.

SCHOOL NOTES

The Grade School Christmas program on Monday evening of his week was well attended much to the satisfaction of our teachers who trained the children for the same. Thirty dollars was the amount taken in at the door. After expenses are paid a neat little sum will be available for library books for these three rooms.

Our Grammar room sold to the folks in Klemme and near it just 2,000 Christmas Seal stamps. The money is divided between the state and our local community, each getting half after expenses are paid. Mrs. E. J. Schneider of Goodell is County Chairman of the Stamp Sale campaign.

The pupils of both grades and the high school were given Christmas treats on Wednesday afternoon and school closed to resume its session again Jan. 5th. The faculty members were again grateful this year for gifts awarded them by students, and appreciated this expression of our student' good will. Our high school faculty was remembered last year by our students at this season and were grateful for the appropriate gifts.

We have enjoyed seeing our last year's Seniors back at school again in the roll of guests. Mr. Earl Josten, now teaching, was a welcome guest at our school this week.

How to Get One

To one of the chapters of a widely known national college sorority came a sister from a "hick" school but with splendid recommendations. After only a perfunctory examination the member was invited to become affiliated, but with, oh, how many regrets later. Her taste regarding men was striking, for she was immediately and repeatedly seen in company with the campus joke, a veritable Ichabod Crane. And to the ill-disguised comments of her sisters she was invulnerable.

"You could have gotten him, too," she told them, "if you had just coquetted him like I did."—Indianapolis News.

Jessie's Joy Ride

Freddie and Jessie had been playing one of those old-fashioned games with forfeits, and the girl had been ordered to give the young man ten kisses.

"Let's see," said Jessie, pausing for breath, "that's seven, isn't it?"

"Only six," corrected Freddie.

"Seven, I think."

"No, six."

"Seven!"

"Six!"

"Look here," said the girl, wearily, "sooner than have any argument, we had better start all over again."

Mr. White came from Estherville last Thursday and stayed at the Paul Grange home several days visiting and assisting Mr. Grange take inventory of the lumber stock at the Northern.

Mrs. Worthy Usher was visiting at Goodell Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Trumbell visited at Belmond Sunday with relatives.

ELKO BUSS DIED AT HIS HOME FRIDAY

WAS A PIONEER RESIDENT OF HANCOCK COUNTY

Was Born In Germany And Came To This Country When A Boy

Again the grim reaper of death has entered our community to claim his own This time it is one of the sturdy pioneers that is called One who may be termed a real frontiersman of this community, for he came when this country was new and sparsely settled, when the vast streches of prairie were practically all that the eye could behold. It was then that Mr Elko Buss along with other early settlers helped to develop this country and to shape its destiny. As we think of this it gives us genuine sorrow for we have learned to love and respect these sturdy early settlers Had it not been for them, and their like we of a following generation could not enjoy many of the advantages and comforts of life that are ours today May we ever cherish them with fondest memories!

Mr Elko Buss was born in Emden Ostfriesland, Germany, on September 24 1858, and died Friday afternoon at 1 45 o'clock, December 17, 1926 in his home east of Klemme Iowa, at the age of 68 years, 9 months and 23 days He spent the days and years of childhood and his youth in the place of his birth, receiving his education and training for life at that time in home, church and school After due instruction he was confirmed in the Reformed church during this period of life

When 19 years of age he came to America and remained here for a brief period when he again returned to his homeland. However, after a short stay in Germany he again came to America, this time to become one of her loyal sons by adoption He became a citizen that this country might well be proud of

When he arrived and settled near Ackley, Iowa where he lived for a time he then came to Wright Co and located near Goodell

It was there that he married Miss Jennie Harberts on December 22, 1892 Three years after marriage they moved to the farm east of Klemme where they built up a fine home for themselves and their sons and daughters that came to grace that home They succeeded well in rearing a fine family of six children as everyone knowing them will attest A pair of twin sons died in infancy The sons are Rank, Harry and Edgar, and the three daughters are Gail Mrs Sylvan Johnson and Alvina All live in this community

As a whole Mr Buss enjoyed good health through life and it was only during the last year that conditions arose that gave him and his family grave concern No effort or skill was spared to restore him back to health if possible. Being of a cheerful disposition he was greatly aided by his temperament in this battle for life and health Through it all he manifested a fine Christian spirit He was resigned, saying toward the last "If God wants me to die, my prayer is that I may be ready to meet my Master"

Funeral services were held on Monday, December 20, in the Klemme Methodist Church conducted by Rev A W Gauger, assisted by Rev Calvin Grosshuesch of the Reformed Church, who addressed the audience in the German language Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery (Rev. A W Gauger)

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank all who assisted us in any way, and for the expressions and acts of sympathy in our sorrow, and thanking all those who contributed the beautiful flowers

THOMPSON FAMILY MOVES TO ALBERT LEA

T C Thompson and family have moved to Albert Lea, Minn, at least that's the report they gave a Times reporter who was hot on the trail to collect a bill before they left our fair town.

Thompson made a noble effort to make a living for himself and family by running movie shows here and at Thornton Evidently the business was not good enough and so he quit when quitting was good, but rather hastily leaving town without bidding his friends a fond farewell

KLEMME TEAM WINS TWO MORE GAMES

CRYSTAL LAKE AND DUMONT SCALPS HANG HIGH

Fastest Games Ever Played Here Seen Tuesday Night

The fast Shamrocks, Klemme's quintet of basket ball warriors have hung up two more loop scalps since last week Crystal Lake and Dumont basket ball teams have both bowed to the powerful locals, the victims of a decisive defeat.

Crystal Lake Game Was Tame

Last Friday night Crystal Lake's high school cage team invaded the local gym in an endeavor to even things up from a few weeks ago when Klemme beat them three to one on their local floor The fishermen from the northwest again were defeated by the swift Shamrocks in a rather tame game which ended 21 to 10 in favor of Klemme. The locals took things easy and had no difficulty in piling up scores at will The game was unexciting as the visitors were too slow for the speedy, shifty Shamrocks.

Dumont Gives Real Battle

The Dumont "Baby Beeves," touted as one of the most powerful high school quintets in this part of the state and who played undefeated last year, and who have to their credit some big victories this year, made a fifty-five mile journey with sixteen players to meet the Shamrocks here Tuesday night in one of the fastest and roughest basket ball battles ever witnessed by the writer

No doubt Dumont had all they claimed a a fast line-up but they bucked into a faster squad than they had bargained for The game began with a rush Klemme's shifty floor work, lightning-like and accurate passes netted a field goal in the first minute of play, followed by basket after basket until at the end of the half they had piled up 14 points against Dumon't 5. Klemme showed exceptional speed in offensive plays and when in danger threw out their famous five-man defense that was like a stone wall against the visitors who found it difficult to pierce the line and get within range of the basket, being forced to make long shots at the loop

Klemme was materially weakened in the second half by the loss of Turgasen who was forced out of the battle on personals. Dumont took advantage of this break in the Klemme line-up and were able to hold the Shamrocks for equal scores in the half, both teams making seven points, ending the game 21 to 12 in favor of Klemme.

By winning over Dumont put a big feather in Klemme's cap, giving the Shamrocks the title to a high place in North Iowa basket ball.

Coach Hockey has developed a wonderful team, although he is handicaped in not having but a few men to choose from. Five regulars and three subs is the best he can do, where other schools are fortunate in having three or four complete teams to choose from. However we have five of the fastest men in any high school in North Iowa and their list of big victories proves the statement

Garner Here Dec. 31st

Garner will play here Friday evening, Dec 31st, in the hopes of evening up the score with the Shamrocks, who recently draubed Garner 16 to 8 on their own floor. According to a Garner paper the game was an experiment for Garner ,but it proved costly even on such a weak alibi Garner will have to develop some real speed if they hope to get a look-in on a long score here, as the locals have made some real gains since they played Garner.

Monday night the Alumni and the high school will mix it up in a non-official game Come out and see what the old-timers can do with a floor-full of wild cats on their heels!

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Recently the Mason City Gazette contained an article that I was indicted by grand jury for misappropriation of funds of the Wenck & Griesmer properties. The Tenent of properties mentioned placed this grain in store and I rec'd orders from him to pay no one untill notified. On Oct 23-1926 I rec'd my first notice. & made a special trip to Klemme to get my books After deducting my storage, insurance & handling charge of approximately $80 00 the Assignees were pail bal due them. Knowing the source of this matter, which I cannot have published, I want my Klemme friends to know the facts, & having lived there all my life I know an article of this kind may have been exaggerated by some.

M. O. BARR WILL RUN SHOWS HERE

CLOSED DEAL WEDNESDAY EVE TO TAKE OVER IDLE HOUR

Barr Will Start Shows After The First Of January

A deal was closed last night for the lease of the Idle Hour Theatre to Mr. M. O. Barr, of this city. Mr Barr takes over the business on the 1st of January.

Mr. Barr is a live-wire young man and we predict that if anyone can make a success of the business he is the man who can put it over.

The first show will be on January 5th and he is now making arrangements to get some good pictures.

He says he will run movies twice a week, on Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Here's wishing him success, and let's all boost for him.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Appreciative morning audiences greeted us last Sunday and the spirit of the Season seemed prevalent in our services. We shall try to keep this fine sentiment in our hearts and mind as we go through the Holiday season—that deep and abiding good may come to every one.

On Friday evening we will have usual Christmas festival. Through the kindness of the school board we shall again have it in the gymnasium as heretofore.

In Liberty church a fine program is in the making and will be rendered on the same evening. A cordial invitation goes out to all who do not go elsewhere to attend the one or the other of these programs. It will help you to catch the real Christmas spirit

On the coming Sunday the pastor will preach a Christmas sermon in both churches, with special music as a part of the worship

INFANT DAUGHTER OF MR. AND MRS. JOHN HYDE DEAD

Funeral Services Being Held Today At Garner

Mildred Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs John Hyde, who reside on a farm northeast of Klemme, died December 21st at the age of 1 year 7 months and 8 days, of bronchial peumonia of short duration.

The little girl was a beautiful child, strong and healthy looking and was always very contented and happy in the home. Her death was a great shock to her parents as she was ill but a few days.

Today (Thursday) the neighbors and friends of the Hyde family gather at the grief stricken home for the funeral services of the little one Rev Van Metre, of Garner, leads the services at 1:30 P. M in the M E Church at Garner and interment will be in the Garner Cemetery Mr Wellemeyer of Klemme conducts the funeral.

Mr. and Mrs Hyde and family have the sympathy of the entire community in their sorrow.

Central States Electric Company Install New Lines And Transformers

Sunday the "juice" was turned off in Klemme nearly all day to give workmen of the Central States Electric Co. and opportunity to rebuild some high tension wires without interfering too much with the comfort of those wh desire more light.

..New heavy lines and transformers were built to carry power to the big motors at the Farmers Elevator The lines were built to carry 'juice' up to seventy-five horse power.

13 IS LUCKY FOR DAIRYMAN HERE

COOK'S THIRTEEN COWS BRING HIM GOOD LUCK AND CASH

Has Good Cows, Proper Feed, And The Rest Is Easy

Usually the number "13" is looked upon as bringing bad luck, but not so with Virgil A. Cook, farmer living southeast of Klemme. The so-called "unlucky' number evidently has spelled success for Mr. Cook in the dairying business.

For the month of Nov. 1 to Nov. 30th, Mr. Cook lead the field in the Klemme Co-Op. Creamery Company high cream check list with $220.04, as his share of business.

He Makes Cows Pay Big

Mr. Cook has thirteen cows, all are good ones and every animal has to pay him a profit. Mr. Cook believes in testing and has an accurate record of each cow, just what she costs to fed and just what she can return in dollars and cents.

Last month his cost of producing a pound of butter fat was exactly 27 cents, and he received approximately 55 cents per pound for his product, or a net gain of 28 cents per pound, making his cows pay him better than one hundred per cent profit above feed cost.

For the month of December Mr. Cook's feed cost will be less, and as the price of butterfat is now up to 60 cents, his cows will pay him a bigger profit than they did last month.

Mr. Cook has good cows, he gives them the proper feed that will return the greatest profits. A little study along these lines will enable others to profit likewise.

Cook's cows are milked with a modern milking machine and this task is lessened.

Tuesday Mr. Cook brought in a big batch of cream to the Creamery, and checking up we found he had delivered 334 pounds for the week. That is a lot of cream.

Mr. Cook has been a steady patron of the creamery for thirteen years, and he says that is where he was lucky again. He has always found a square deal with them and says he has never found any cause for complaint.

LE ROY ELL DIED DEC. 19th

The Times is in receipt of a communication from Lew Ell, of Panama, Nebraska, which carries the following item of interest to Klemme Times readers:

'Lewis Ell, of Panama, Nebr. received word of the death of his nephew, Le Roy Ell, the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Ell, of Chicago, Ill. The son died December 19th at the age of 17 years and was buried December 21st. He was the grandson of J. C. Ell, who at one time was a resident of Hancock County. He leaves to mourn his loss, his parents, one brother, Lewis, and a grandmother, besides many other relatives."

MRS. BAUMEISTER DIED CHRISTMAS DAY IN KLEMME

Funeral Services Held At Methodist Church Tuesday Afternoon

Shortly after the noon hour on Christmas Day death came and relieved Mrs. Marie Baumeister from her long siege of suffering and pain. Beginning way back last winter the deceased began to ail Her condition turned worse about Easter time and soon after she was taken to Mercy Hospital where she spent several months and where her life was dispaired of for a time, only to turn for a slight improvement as the summer wore on. As autumn drew near she was released from the hospital and taken to her home where she resided until death fulfilled her wish to die

Marie Friedow Baumeister was born in Tauer, Province Brandenburg, Germany, on August 3 1862

Among some of her records one finds a certificate of confirmation showing that she was confirmed on the 8th day of October, 1876. The memory verse on this certiicate is of especial interest "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

Along with the other members of the family she came to America in the spring of 1883. On July 9 of this same year she was married to Mr. William Baumeister, in Morrison, Ill After their marriage they lived in Illinois until 1894 when they moved to this locality settling on a farm in the western part of Liberty township, where they lived two or three years. Thereupon they purchased a farm two miles south of Ventura and lived there for six years They then moved to the state of Washington where they lived eight years Their last place of abode being in the state of Oklahoma, where they lived about one year and where her husband died, June 2. 1913. During their one year's stay in Oklahoma their only child, a little daughter, died an infant.

Soon after her husband's death she came to Klemme and lived with her mother until the latter's death. Since then she lived alone

Mrs. Baumeister is survived by one sister, Mrs Anna Kaiser of Belvidere, Ill, who was here during the last weeks and gave her sister the best of care Two brothers, William and Martin, of Britt, also survive her.

Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon at the Methodist church in Klemme conducted by Rev A W. Gauger. Interment was made in the family lot in the Klemme cemetery.

HERES A NEW STUNT

CORWITH LEGION HAS NOVEL WAY TO RAISE MONEY

Make Handsome Profit By Raising Sugar Beets

In trying to devise some means of raising money for their local order, the American Legion of Corwith hit upon a novel idea of raising beets to raise money. It is reported from the sugar beet factory that they contracted for 18 61 acres. They tended this acreage throughout the season, hiring practically all of their help, including cultivation, etc.

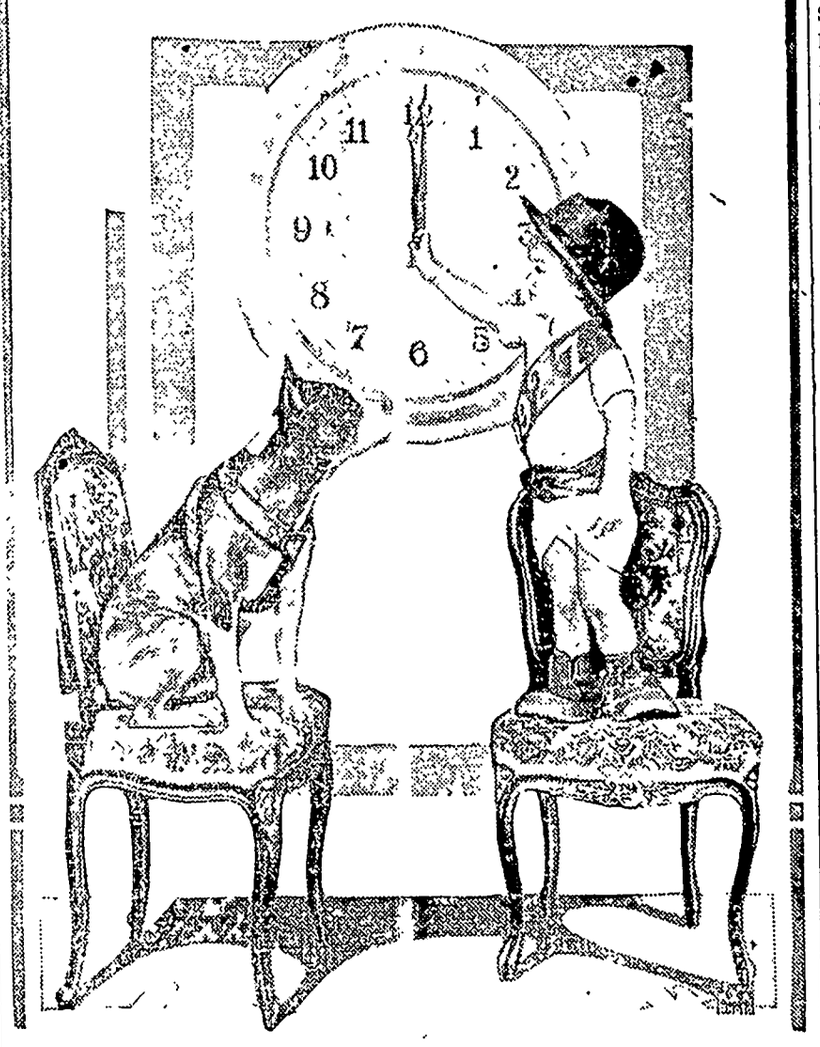
Their contract was made with the American Beet Sugar Company, of Mason City, and the beets were marketed to that company. They received in payment for their total crop of beets, $1,189.95. After deducting payment for their seed, fertilizer, labor and land rental, they had a net profit of $476.59.

COUPLE MARRIED HERE LAST THURSDAY EVENING

Wedding bells rang in South Klemme on Thursday evening, December 23rd, when Mr. Milton Dingman and Miss Irene Smith, both of Buffalo Center, were united in marriage by Rev. Gauger in the home of the groom's brother, Mr. F. W. Dingman.

The newly weds spent their honey moon here until Christmas Day when they went to Minnesota on a wedding trip.

Starting the New Year



HIGH PEAK HIT IN STOCK SHIPPING

SEVENTEEN CARS LIVE STOCK SHIPPED THIS WEEK

Equals Record of Big Shipment Of Last Year

The high peak in stock shipments was reached here this week, breaking the record for this year and equalling the record of last winter, with seventeen car loads of stock for the Chicago market.

Five car loads, consisting of two cars of hogs and three of cattle were shipped out Saturday night.

Tuesday morning at 2 50 o'clock a special took out another shipment of twelve car loads, all cattle. Of this shipment the Linden Ranch had eight car loads, Dr. Zinn two car loads, Dave Schwictenberg and Geo. Albers each one car load.

The shipment Tuesday morning went through in record time. Agent M. O Barr received a report that the train reached Cedar Rapids at 10:10 and should reach Chicago at 3:00 a. m. Wednesday, or approximately 24 hours time out of Klemme.

The peak was reached last year when seventeen cars were shipped at one time The record is week is the high peak for this year so far.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

The pastor's family gratefully acknowledge the many greetings and other expressions of esteem. All are greatly appreciated.

We take this means to express to all a very Happy New Year. It will not be a year full of sunshine only but of sunshine and shadows May these be tempered to do us the most good.

We shall begin the New Year on the coming Sabbath by celebrating the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in Klemme and Liberty.

This service should mean much to every follower of the Master. After a brief introductory thought this will be the main part of the morning service.

In our evening service we shall use a rare text, "that made history" —Rom. 8-28. and shall give the audience an opportunity to state whose it was. One of the great men of the past is closely associated with this text.

PICTURE SHOW TO OPEN NEXT WEEK

M. O. BAR WILL RUN SHOW TWO NIGHTS EACH WEEK

First Show Under New Management Wednesday, January 5th

M. O. Barr is making final arrangements for his first moving picture show for Wednesday evening, January 5th. Thereafter shows will be run each Wednesday and Saturday night throughout the winter.

Mr Barr is at Des Moines today to make arrangements for the booking of suitable pictures. He intends to show a better class of pictures than has heretofore been run in Klemme. The pictures will be "mixed up" to suit all so that every show should be a good drawing card.

Mr. Barr is, among other things, going to look to the comfort of his patrons and will have the hall nicely heated and kept clean at all times.

Mr. Barr is a live-wire young man a local man, so let's all get back of him in his new enterprise and help him to put it over big. Klemme needs a good picture show and we are glad to see a home man tackle the job—but let's help him by filling the show for the opening night and keep it up.

Alumni Wins Over High School

In the annual tilt between the K. H. S. Alumni and the high school basket ball squad, which was played Tuesday evening, the Alumni took the long end of a 19 to 14 score.

The Alumni is composed of college basket ball players home for the Christmas vacation. They were too much for the light high school aggregation but the latter put up a gamy fight against them. The half ended 9 to 7 for the ex-Klemme H. S. men. The game was unofficial and was a good practice game for the Shamrocks who took their defeat good naturedly from their former class mates.

FRANK HOYD INJURED IN EXPLOSION

Frank Hoyt was badly burned about the face when he was refilling the carbon tank on his lighting system which exploded. Mr. Hoyt suffered a great deal of pain, but at this time he is getting along fine.

E. H. Patet is on the sick list this week.

HANCOCK COUNTY BOYS AND GIRLS AT SHORT COURSE

NEW CLUB A SUCCESS

SUGAR BEET CLUB SHOWS GOOD RESULTS

Fifty Eight Club Members Put In Nearly Seventy Five Acres

The boys and girls acre sugar beet club conducted by the American Beet Sugar Company, Mason City, during the past year was very successful. The sugar beet company conceived the idea that the younger members of the family might be interested in growing beets and therefore started what they called the Acre Beet Club. The boys and girls of their territory were offered some very attractive prizes. They employed Gilbert Bonstetter and put him in charge of this department. He has done some excellent work with the club members and has laid the foundation for a very valuable boys and girls club activity. During the past year there were fifty-eight members contracted growing 74.28 acres. They grew 974 tons, an average of 13.11 tons per acre.

Iowa State Man Has Best Fruit

The biggest winner in the fruit section of the recent Midwest Horticultural show in Des Moines was R. M Clark of the Applegrove Orchards Mitchellville, a graduate of Iowa State College.

Apple trees may be pruned now.

Keeping the manure hauled out during the winter is one way of reducing the spring rush and it also prevents the leaching away of plant foods.

GARNER SQUAD TO PLAY HERE FRIDAY

WILL BATTLE RETURN GAME ON KLEMME FLOOR THIS WEEK

Ventura Plays Here Next Week On Friday Evening

Coach Mounce and his quintet of high school basket ball men from the county seat town will invade the Shamrock camp Friday evening to try to even things up with the local tossers who put a 16 to 8 crimp in Garner's score sheet a few weeks ago on Garner's own floor.

The game here Friday night between Garner and Klemme should be one of the big cards of the season and should draw a big crowd, both from Klemme and Garner.

Garner has been in hard training for this game, but the Shamrocks are not worried as they have "put away" some tough games since they gave Garner a drubbing a few weeks ago. The locals are in "pink' condition for the coming battle, which promises to furnish plenty of excitement for the fans.

Ventura Here Next Week End

The strong Ventura Consolidated basket ball squad will again invade the Shamrock camp next week end on Friday evening. This has the ear marks of being a game worth coming miles to see.

Ventura and Klemme are ancient basket ball enemies and the breaks are about even as far as past games are concerned.

Ventura has a good squad this year and have been playing some good games. They are going to try to get the best of Klemme, but the Shamrocks are confident they can keep the upper score on the fishermen from the east.

Shamrocks Going Strong

Coach Hockey's Shamrocks have gained recognition this fall as being a fast, shifty machine and Klemme's "scalp" is a trophy that is a highly seeked prize by nearby high school So far the Shamrocks scalp hangs in only one gym, while many scalps adorn the local gym this season.

Klemme fans have been loyal to their squad and their attendance at games here and abroad have given the boys encouragement to do their best.

Let's continue to support Coach Hockey and his whirlwind five!

WHERE OUR TEACHERS ARE SPENDING THEIR VACATION

Our teachers of the Klemme Public Schools are enjoying their Christmas vacations at their homes, scattered over the state. It may be of interest to our readers to know where the teachers are spending the two-weeks holiday vacation.

Supt. M. F. Penrod is visiting with his mother and other relatives at Pulaski, Iowa—way down south, almost in Missouri, where clay hills are studded with trees, making a beautiful winter's scene.

Miss Pauline Stoner, principal, is spending her vacation near South English with her folks on the farm.

Miss Bonnie Bell and Miss Elizabeth Kidder are both at Des Moines visiting with home folks.

Miss Lenora Wheatman is way over in north-eastern Iowa, spending the holidays with home folks at Decorah.

Mr E. G. Gary and family are visiting at Cushing, Iowa.

Mr. Lawson Hockey spent a few days at Mallard, Iowa—on the farm. But we are not saying on whose farm it was. He came back Tuesday to get his boys in shape for the Garner game.

May all have a good time!

FRED HAUPT SERIOUSLY ILL AT MASON CITY HOSPITAL

Fred Haupt was taken to the Mercy Hospital at Mason City Sunday morning where he underwent an operation. Mr. Haupt had suffered from hiccoughs for several days and was in a serious condition. At this writing Mr. Haupt is still in a critical conditon, although a slight improvement is reported.

Old Year, Good-Bye

THE Old Year is dying, Old Year good-bye!
We are grieved for you, it is hard to die;
But you've lived your life, and you've lived it well,
And now, you must say to your life —farewell.
You have brought to us both honor and shame,
But we hold for you neither praise nor blame,
You have brought us joy, you have brought us woe;
But all the years do the same as they go,
As the years before you have done, so you
Did only the thing it was yours to do
When you came to us another year went,
Another will come when your time is spent,
The New Year we hail with a smile, but sigh
For the year that is gone, Old Year good-bye.

The New Year's Eve Wedding

By MARION R. REAGAN

NEW YEAR'S EVE was set as the date for the wedding of Bob Wallins and Charlotte Main. Their friends thought, and so did they, that it would mean excellent luck to begin the New Year as man and wife. But as the time drew nearer, Bob, at least, began to have fears and forebodings, not so much about the day as about the event itself. Marriage was a serious thing. And after reflecting a long time on the subject—perhaps too long, he wasn't so sure that he was taking a wise step after all. It would have made things easier if Bob's mother had agreed with him, but she hadn't. Charlotte was her idea of the right kind of a girl for any young man to marry She was thrifty, domestic and sensible Sensible! She was too sensible, Bob thought. He would have liked her to be just a little bit foolish. Girls were supposed to be a little silly. That's what made them feminine! Still he had come to rely on her judgment and it would have been annoying to have found her undependable. She was a good pal and all that, and he liked her; of course he liked her. But was that love? Was that romance? Other fellows felt poetic about the girls they were about to marry; couldn't sleep at night for thinking of them; couldn't eat, and the whole state was described as "love." Well, Bob never felt that way about Charlotte. His appetite was as good as ever and he was a long way from insomnia.

Then he met Helen McKay at a house party, and his digestion at once began to suffer. It somehow took him a long time to go to sleep at night and during the day his mind was in a fog. He couldn't concentrate on business at all. Helen McKay with her trim figure and stylish clothes, her carmined lips and rouged cheeks, her artful, vampish ways, came tripping into his thoughts constantly. There was a girl, he thought—there was a girl.

He wouldn't have hurt Charlotte's feelings for the world, but he was plainly enamored of Helen, and surely he could go out with her a few times without Charlotte's finding out? He did; but Charlotte found out.

At first she was blindly jealous. She packed the diamond engagement ring into its little box, and was about to mail it back to him when her old good sense returned. To send back the ring would have been to admit defeat. The only wise thing to do was to laugh and beat Bob at his own game. She determined to dress up and vamp another man.

A likely "prospect" appeared in Sam Peck. Sam had just come to Quincy from New York, and with his worldly manner and handsome face was enough to arouse the jealousies of Bob Wallins, thought Charlotte, and she started out on her campaign. She had been wearing old dowdy dresses, saving her new things for her trousseau, but now she took out the new clothes, and in addition bought herself a lipstick and innumerable jars of make-up. For hours she sat at her mirror, "practicing." Evidently she became quite skillful, for Samuel Peck very easily did what is known as "falling hard," and soon Sam and Charlotte appeared at parties together. Bob stormed and raged. He threatened to break off their engagement, but when he found how apparently ready Charlotte was to have the engagement broken, he changed his attitude. He simply couldn't get over Charlotte acting that way. He became so worried about Charlotte that he forgot Helen completely.

One Sunday evening he went over to Charlotte's to call. She was tantalizingly gay, as she was always lately. Bob sank down in a chair, sullenly.

"People are beginning to talk," he said briefly.

"They are? About what, or whom?"

"About you."

"About me? How interesting! I didn't know that, and what do they say about me—complimentary things. I hope?"

Bob got up and walked back and forth in front of the fireplace.

"Likely. An engaged girl who begins to play around with another fellow scandalously, and to use that vulgar-looking make-up is liable to be held up as a model young woman to the Women's Bible class, I suppose?"

"I've always got along very well with the Women's Bible class, but what right have you to criticize?"

"You're engaged to me!"

"Yes, but that can be broken. You were engaged to me too, when you started going with that Helen McKay."

"Who?"

"Helen McKay."

"Charlotte, don't be ridiculous. I didn't mean that seriously at all. I'd even forgotten for a minute who in the world she was."

"You forget women rather quickly, it seems to me"

"Look here, Charlotte, I m tired of this. You've got to make up your mind right now whether you're going to be your old self and marry me New Year's Eve as you promised, or not. But remember, I can't possibly love you as I always—yes, always—have, unless you take off that terrible-looking make-up." The conversation took a very unsatsfactory trend after that and Bob left, swearing he was "off women for life."

The New Year's Eve wedding was called off. Bob Wallins became one of the worst grouches in town. He was never seen except at his office or home, while Charlotte came to look more and more worried.

Then came the reconciliation, and as the two sat one evening sending out invitations to the New Year's Eve dinner that was to culminate in their marriage, Bob said, "Gee, Charlotte. I'm glad we got all our quarreling over before our wedding, aren't you? Because we certainly are never going to have even the least argument again."

The Artist's New Year

By FLORENCE HARRIS WELLS

HE WAS an artist and had thought by traveling over the snow-bound prairies he could get an inspiration for the winter landscape he was planning But it was proving a dismal failure, he admitted to himself, as this first day of the New Year was drawing to a close.

He had not chosen to travel this day. His destination should have been reached 24 hours earlier. But here he was and here he was likely to be for some time from the present outlook. All day the slow-moving train had plowed through the heavy snow, now fast becoming a land of ice from the sleety rain that was steadily falling.

To make matters worse, it was an immigrant train. Why Fate had caused him to pick this train he could not understand. A great way indeed to begin the year, with this melange of human beings, instead of at his own fireside. And he had deluded himself with the thought that he might get inspiration from a trip such as this, he sarcastically reminded himself. Sleet, rain and ice without — a chill gray background; while within it was infinitely worse — immigrants with gutteral voices—he didn't like immigrants. He didn't like their numerous children.

He had just come to this unusual conclusion—as a rule all childhood appealed to him—when a grimy little girl crept into the seat beside him and with shining eyes upturned to his, asked:

"Is it not beau-u-ti-ful, mister?"

The artist looked where the grimy little finger pointed—and got his inspiration.

The heavy clouds, grown thin, were dashed with scarlet and pink, making the black farm buildings stand out in silhouetted gracefulness against a heavenly sky. The last rays of the setting sun sent a glow over the gleaming ice-covered prairie that made it shimmer and sparkle with a mystical radiance.

He put his arm about the travel-stained little immigrant. She, too, had the artist's soul. Busy with his own self-centered thoughts, but for this child he would have missed the greatest inspiration nature from her bountiful store had ever set before him.

The New Year had brought much to him after all.

The New Year

I wonder what the new year brings—
A hundred little happy things,
A little burden, a little care,
A little hope, a load to bear,
A little love, the fewest fears,
A lot of smiles, not many tears,
A lot of pluck the whole day long,
A little prayer at evensong,
A day well spent, all joyful things,
All these I pray the new year brings.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Doings of Congress Prior to Adjournment for Christmas Holidays.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CONGRESS adjourned Wednesday night for the holidays, and will not reassemble until January 3. Though the house was quite busy in the week preceding the recess, most of the interest centered in the senate. Tuesday night the house river and harbor bill was put to a vote, and despite the bitter attack that had been made on parts of it, the measure passed by the overwhelming vote of 57 to 9. Those voting in the negative were Couzens of Michigan, Frazier of North Dakota, Howell and Norris of Nebraska, Lenroot of Wisconsin, Willis of Ohio, Republicans; and Blease of South Carolina, Ferris of Michigan and King of Utah, Democrats. As passed by the senate the measure carries appropriations of $75,000,000, almost $10,000,000 in new projects and surveys being added in the closing hours of debate. Therefore it went to conference, but with a certainty that the differences would be adjusted.

For the Middle West the item of great interest is that providing for completion of the Illinois river link of the lakes-to-the-gulf waterway by the construction of a channel in the river nine feet deep and 200 feet wide from Utica to its mouth. A clause was inserted which specifies that the measure shall not be construed as authorizing water diversion from Lake Michigan.

"This gives Illinois a gateway to the ocean," Senator Deneen asserted. "We will be on the longest waterway in the world, running from the Gulf of Mexico to the St. Lawrence river. The Illinois provision satisfied the senate and I am sure it will satisfy the house."

Aside from the Illinois improvement, the most important items in the measure include an authorization of $12,000,000 for beginning the improvement of the Missouri river between Kansas City and Sioux City; an agreement for the purchase of the Cape Cod canal for $11,500,000, and $4,000,000 authorization for the construction of the intracoastal waterway from Jacksonville, Fla., to Miami.

Senators Gooding of Idaho and Pittman of Nevada attempted to tack on a long and short haul rider but were defeated and said they would bring up that measure at a later date.

SENATOR HARRIS of Georgia on Monday introduced a resolution for investigation of charges that federal appointments in the South are commonly bartered and sold by Republican national committeemen. This went to the judiciary committee, and Senator Ernst of Kentucky moved that the resolution be broadened to include similar charges against Democratic leaders and to inquire into the extent of the disfranchisement of Negroes in the South with a view to the enforcement of the Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. This naturally didn't please the Democrats at all, and the matter was referred to a subcommittee.

THE case of Frank L. Smith of Illinois, appointed by Governor Small to fill out McKinley's unexpired term, kept the senate on tiptoe. Smith was presumed to have accepted the appointment, though he did not appear to present his credentials, and Democrats and Republicans alike, with some exceptions, were ready to throw him out when he should show up. Watson of Indiana, assistant Republican leader of the senate, said: "Smith can come down here if he likes, but in my opinion the senate will take summary action in his case and without delay." McNary of Oregon said: "There are too many votes against seating him ever to permit him to take the oath," and this was echoed by various others. Ashurst of Arizona declared he would call up a resolution disqualifying Smith as soon as his certificate of appointment was presented to the senate.

It is to avoid the possibility of an extra session of congress that the Republican leaders are lining up against Smith and in favor of an immediate vote on the Ashurst resolution without too much debate. Adoption of the resolution would send the whole matter to the Reed committee, taking it off the floor until supply bills and other important legislation can be disposed of.

SENATOR HEFLIN of Alabama broke loose Monday with a speech in which he repeated the old story that Jess W. Smith, confidant of Harry Daugherty when the latter was attorney general, did not commit suicide but was murdered. He asse d that Smith was slain to prevent exposure of a plan whereby Secretary of the Treasury Mellon was to be reimbursed for a loan of $5,000,000 to the Harding-Coolidge campaign fund by contributions forced from bootleggers and brewers. "Jess Smith knew so much that it was desired to get rid of him," declared Heflin. "We were conducting a general investigation of the whole thing. It was rumored, also, that Jess Smith grew exceedingly nervous over it and that he had made up his mind to make a clean breast of it all, but Jess never lived to make that clean breast. He died. He was murdered."

"Sounds like delirium to me," was Secretary Mellon's only comment when told of Senator Heflin's attack.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE let it be known that he will not approve appropriations for the construction of additional cruisers for the navy at this session of congress. This followed on the action of the house naval affairs committee in submitting formally the Butler bill authorizing the building of ten light cruisers with the unanimous recommendation that an appropriation be made at once for the completion of the three cruisers already authorized in the 1924 building program. It was stated at the White House that while acknowledging the need of more cruisers if the fleet is to be rounded out as a balanced unit in comparison with other major powers, the President feels the present naval construction bill is heavy enough for the American public to stand at this time. He is insistent that the present airplane carriers, the Lexington and the Saratoga, together with fleet submarines now building, should be completed before cruiser building is begun.

FIVE bills revising postal rates were passed by the house. One is for restoration of the one cent rate for private post cards; another authorizes transmission of business reply cards, the return postage of not more than two cents to be paid by the original mailer when the card is returned. A third bill amending the postal act would fix at one cent an ounce the rate on publications when mailed as second-class matter by others than the publisher or his agent. Another would provide for an additional charge on first-class matter mailed with insufficient postage.

EFFORTS of the house and senate conference committee to agree on legislation to regulate radio broadcasting were futile and the matter was deferred until January 4. If no agreement is reached next month the house conferees purpose to move the passage of an emergency resolution suspending the granting of broadcasting licenses pending regulatory legislation by the Seventieth congress.

REPRESENTATIVE BLACK of New York, author of a pending bill under which the United States would relinquish its extraterritorialty rights in China, sharply attacked the report of Silas H. Strawn on conditions there. He said Mr. Strawn's utterances since he returned from China have not only created a wrong impression here and in China as well, but have "worked irreparable harm to the American cause in China," and compelled President Coolidge to point out that they express merely Mr. Strawn's personal opinion and not the policy of the administration.

LITHUANIA'S Socialist government having been overthrown by the military and Catholic parties, that country now has a president-dictator in the person of Antona Smetona, former head of the republic. Professor Waldemaras is premier and foreign minister. Doctor Grenius, the ousted president, and several hundred Socialists and Communists were arrested. The radicals declare the parties of the right are influenced by England, which seeks to unite the Baltic states into a federation against Russia. Smetona says he is going to have the Lithuanian constitution revised and it and the country Americanized. The unofficial state of war with Poland continues.

AS WAS forecast last week, the German cabinet could not maintain its majority in the reichstag, therefore Chancellor Marx and his ministers submitted their resignations. These were accepted by President Von Hindenburg with the understanding that the cabinet would continue to function until after the new year.

Germany is about to get back a small piece of the vast colonial holdings she lost in the war. The council of ministers of Portugal has voted to return the territory south of the Rovuma river, known as the Kionga triangle, this being a part of the former German East Africa that was allotted to Portugal by the treaty of Versailles.

POPE PIUS, as an allocution in private consistory, made a strong attack on the Fascist state which has aroused much comment. The pontiff, while expressing thanks for the escape of Mussolini from assassination, dealt harshly with the duce's followers for depredations and deeds of violence against the persons and property of Catholics. The government refuses to be drawn into a controversy with the pope because, it says, the past acts he referred to have not been repeated in recent weeks and the orders of the government for the preservation of order have been severe.

NEITHER Brazil nor Argentina is said to like the plan which Secretary of State Kellogg suggested to end the Tacna-Arica dispute, and now it is understood Peru has offered an alternative scheme, which probably has no chance of acceptance by Chile or Bolivia. According to a La Paz paper, this is Peru's offer:

1. Peru will remain in possession of Tacna and the city of Arica, including Morro castle, which protects the harbor.

2. Peru and Chile, in common agreement, without demanding any pecuniary or territorial compensation, will cede to Bolivia all territory south of Tacna and Arica as far as the River Camarones.

3. Chile will retain possession of the Chilcaya nitrate field.

4. Bolivia will remain in possession of the port of Vitor, which is the only one that exists in that zone.

DELAYED for a day by foggy weather, the five United States army airplanes, New York, Detroit, San Francisco, San Antonio and St. Louis, began their pan-American tour Monday auspiciously. The start was from San Antonio, Texas, and the first jump took the planes to Laguna Madre, near Brownsville. Wednesday afternoon they took off for Tampico, with the intention of going thence to Vera Cruz and then to Mexico City for the Christmas holidays. The 20,000-mile tour will take the planes to scores of Central and South American cities and will last more than four months. Maj. H. A. Dargue commands the squadron, the other aviators being Capt. A. B. McDaniel, Capt. Ira C. Eaker, Capt. Clinton F. Woolsey, and Lieuts. B. S. Thompson, C. McK. Robinson, M. S. Fairchild, J. W. Benton and L. D. Weddington.

RELATIONS between the United States and Panama have not always been pleasant of late, but a newly signed treaty submitted to the senate for approval will improve them.

In one of its most important articles Panama agrees to consider herself in a state of war in case of a conflict in which the United States should be a belligerent.

Under this treaty, Panama agrees to co-operate with the United States in the protection and defense of the Panama canal. Complete control of radio and other communications, aircraft and aviation, transit of the canal, and other questions involved in the national defense is lodged with the United States.

Jepson moved ponderously away to do so, while Rodney, opening his big box in the hall, drew out the poinsettia and chrysanthemums and proceeded to arrange them in a gorgeous armful. Bangs had unexpected taste in color and arrangement, as Epstein's stage-directors had discovered in the past. Laurie watched him with polite interest.

"Making a picture of yourself, aren't you?" he asked. "Going into the sick-room with your little hands full of flowers?" But even as he scoffed he was unwrapping his own flowers. Bangs was right. The act of handing a pasteboard box to a sick friend lacked esthetic value.

Jepson returned with a cordial message. Mrs. Ordway would be charmed to see both young men, but she received only one visitor at a time. Would Mr. Bangs come up now? And perhaps Mr. Devon would drop in again during the afternoon or evening.

Rodney grasped his floral offerings and mounted the stairs two steps at a time. He was excited and his brown eyes showed it. It was most awfully good of Mrs. Ordway to let him come up in this informal way. Standing by the chaise longue where she lay, he told her so, his auburn head shining among the flowers he carried, like a particularly large chrysanthemum. Then, selecting some empty vases, he sat down on the floor beside her and began to arrange his flowers, while she watched him, at first with surprise, then with growing admiration

Rodney had no social airs and graces, no parlor tricks. If he had been formally sitting on a chair, holding his hat, he would have been a self-conscious and unhappy young man. As it was, with hands and eyes busy, and wholly at his ease, he talked his exuberant best.

"How about Laurie's romance?" Louise asked at once.

Bangs told her about the vision in the mirror. As he did so, luncheon was served, and he was casually invited to share it. Susanne, moving shuttle-like between the table in the sick-room and the dumb-waiter in the upper hall, presently confided to a young footman a surprising piece of news, which he in turn confided to the incredulous Jepson. Young Mr Bangs, who was lunching with Mrs. Ordway, must be as amusing as young Mr. Devon himself. He had actually made the mistress laugh both times he came. She was laughing now, as Susanne had not heard her laugh for weeks. To be sure, this was one of her good days. But it wasn't easy to amuse Mrs. Ordway at any time.

Jepson summed up the situation in an oracular utterance:

"Henny one that's a friend of Mr. Devon's his hall right."

When Rodney was leaving Jepson's mistress expressed the same thought to her guest in a different way.

"Come often," she said. "You have given me a new interest. I don't think you can quite realize what that means to me."

When Sonya arrived at five that afternoon, she found Jepson still exuding reassurance. With two doctors within call, a nurse in the house, and Mr. Devon and Miss Orleneff to telephone to at a moment's notice, "nothing much could 'appen." So reasoned Jepson. He beamed approvingly on Sonya, informed her that Mr Devon was in the sick-room now, and waved her through the hall with an effect of benediction.

She found Laurie just leaving, and they had a moment's chat on the upper landing. Mrs. Ordway, he told her, was rather restless this afternoon, but she seemed better than she had been yesterday. However, he didn't like her looks at all, and he fancied the nurse was disturbed. Suppose Sonya sounded Louise about cabling for Warren? Surely Warren would want to know, Laurie thought.

For the moment Laurie's striking good looks were slightly dimmed. He was hollow-eyed, almost haggard. Things were coming just a bit too fast for him. The habit of carrying the burden of others had been taken on too suddenly. Under the strain of it, his untrained mental muscles ached.

It was the irony of fate that Sonya, looking at him with the clear brown eyes that were so much softer than Bangs', and so much less beautiful than Doris', should misinterpret his appearance, his emotion, and his reaction from the high spirits of the morning. He was again going the pace, she decided; and, mingled with her pity for him, rose the scorn of a strong soul that was the absolute master of the body in which it dwelt.

His newly aroused perception carried some hint of this scorn to the boy, covered though it was by the friendliness of Sonya's manner. The knowledge added to his wretchedness. He had a childish desire to explain, but he conquered it and hurried away Some day, if not now, Sonya would understand.

What he himself did not understand was the long stride he had taken in the moment when he felt and resented her unspoken criticism Heretofore his attitude had been one of expressed and sincere indifference to the opinions others held of him. He wanted them to like him, but he didn't care a hang whether or not they approved of him. Now, suddenly, he wanted Sonya's respect as well as her liking. The discovery added to his mental confusion.

If Sonya, when she entered the sick-room, was shocked by the change in the appearance of her new friend, she showed no sign of it. Sitting down beside the chaise longue, she entered briskly upon a description of the recent experiences of Samuel. When she left the hospital the house surgeon was obediently endeavoring to look down the throat of Hullen R J., and every nurse on Samuel's floor was scuttering in and out of his room. Nevertheless the Infant, though graciously accepting these attentions, had demanded and received Sonya's personal assurance that the particular game of the morning was not to be repeated. There was an unpleasant element in that game which grown-ups might not notice but which he, Samuel, had caught on to.

Louise laughed and expressed a hope that Samuel would now be able to breathe without disturbing his neighbors. Sonya came to the real purpose of her visit.

"He and his mother are going back to Devon house Saturday," she said, "but I've got to stay in New York for a few months, on account of my literary galumphings. I wondered if you—if it would be convenient for you—to put me up. I hate hotels and—"

Louise lay silent for a moment Then she reached out and took Sonya's hand

"Yes, you unskillful prevaricator," she said. "You may come—and see me through."

Sonya held the hand tightly in her own.

"There's one thing more," she went on, hesitatingly. "Laurie and Mr. Bangs and I wondered if perhaps you wouldn't feel more comfortable if Mr. Warren came home. You know he himself would want to—"

Louise closed her eyes.

"Yes," she said, "Bob would want to, if he knew."

She was silent for so long that Sonya began to think she was not to have the answer to her question. Perhaps Mrs. Ordway was leaving the decision to her.

But to leave to others decisions that concerned herself was not Louise Ordway's habit. Instead, she was fighting a battle in which the lifelong devotion of a supremely self-centered nature was struggling with a newborn unselfishness. Though new-born it was strong, as the invalid's next words showed.

"If I were calling him back from anything but his honeymoon," she said at last, "I'd do it. But he's utterly happy. His letters show that, in every line. I want him to stay so, as long as he can. I want his honeymoon to be long drawn out and perfect." Her manner changed.

"I have an idea that perhaps, after all, I'll be here when he gets back," she added more lightly. "Life still has its interests. But, if I happen not to be here, tell him why I didn't cable."

"I will tell him," Sonya promised.

Neither of them referred to the subject again.

CHAPTER IX

An Invitation

That evening Laurie walked across the square to Doris' studio with a decision in his stride which definitely expressed his mental attitude. He had come to the conclusion that something must be done. What this something would be was still hazy in his mind, but the first step at least seemed clear. Doris must move.

He was so convinced of the urgency of this step that he brought up the subject almost before the greetings of guest and hostess were over Tossing his hat and coat on a convenient chair, he stood facing Doris, his hands in his pockets, his black eyes somber.

"We've got to get out of this, you know," he abruptly announced.

Her eyes, which had brightened at his entrance, grew as somber as his own Without replying, she turned, walked across the room to the window, and stood looking down into the street.

"Is he there?" she asked at last, and without moving her head.

"Shaw? Great Scott, no' At least I didn't see him. I suppose he takes a few hours off now and then, during the twenty-four; doesn't he?"

"Oh, yes, he comes and goes, sometimes secretly, sometimes openly. I did not see him at all today until late

"If I Moved, How Long Do You Think It Would Take Him to Find Me?"

this afternoon Then he took up his post across the street just opposite this window, and stood there for almost an hour."

Laurie ground his teeth.

"What does he expect to gain by that performance?"

"Several things, I suppose. For one, he wants to get on my nerves; and he does," she added somberly, and still without turning.

Laurie made a vague tour around the room and brought up by her side.

"You know," he confessed, "I haven't really taken this thing in yet. Even now, this minute, it doesn't seem possible to me that Shaw could do you any real harm."

She nodded. "I know. Why should it? Even to me it is like a nightmare and I keep hoping to wake up. There are hours, even days, when I convince myself that it isn't real." She stopped. "It must be very hard for any one else to understand," she ended, when he did not speak.

"Nevertheless," admitted Laurie, "I can't forget it. I can't think of anything else."

She took this as naturally as she had taken his first remark.

"It's going to be very hard for you. I was wrong to draw you into it. I am realizing that more and more, every minute."

"You couldn't help yourself," he cheerfully reminded her. "Now that I am in it, as I've warned you before, I intend to run things. It seems to me that the obvious course for you is to move. After you're safely hidden somewhere, I think I can teach Herbert Ransome Shaw a lesson that won't react on you."

She shook her head.

"If I moved, how long do you think it would take him to find me?"

"Weeks, perhaps months."

Again she shook her head.

"I moved here a few days ago. He appeared exactly forty-eight hours later. If I moved from here it would only mean going through the game of hare and hounds again."

"But—" he began. She interrupted him.

"I've reached the point where I can't endure that any more." For the first time her voice broke. "Can't you imagine what that sort of thing would be? To get up in the morning and wonder if this is the day I'll see him under my window? To go to bed at night and ask myself if he is lurking in the shadows below, or across the street, or perhaps outside my very door? To know that sooner or later he will be there, that his coming is as inevitable as death itself—" She broke off.

"I sometimes think I'd rather see a boa-constrictor crawling into my room than see Shaw down on the sidewalk," she ended. "And yet—I know you can understand this—there's a queer kind of relief in the knowledge that at last, and finally, he has got me."

She whirled to face Laurie and threw out her hands. There was nothing theatrical in the gesture, merely an effort of entire finality.

"We have come to the end of things," she finished. "Since you would not have them end my way, they must end his way. Whatever happens, I shall not run and hide any more."

For a moment silence hung like a substance between them. Then the visitor resolutely shook off the effect of her words.

"I promise you I will get to the bottom of this," he quietly told her. "In the meantime, will you try to forget it, for a little while? You know you said you could do that, occasionally."

He was clearing the table as he spoke. Now he proceeded to unpack a basket he had sent over an hour before by Griggs, and which, he observed, had not been opened. Dropping back into her big chair, she watched him with an odd look. If he had seen this look it would have sorely puzzled him, for it held not only interest but an element of apprehension, even of fear.

"In the past two days," she said, after an interval, "you have sent me five baskets of food, four baskets of fruit, six boxes of candy, and three boxes of flowers. What do you suppose becomes of them all?"

"I know what becomes of the flowers." He cast an appreciative glance around the transformed room. "And I hope," he mildly added, "that you eat the food."

She broke into her rare laugh, soft, deep-throated, and contagious. Under it his spirits rose dizzyingly.

"You are feeding half the people in this building," she said, "not to mention Sam and his home circle. Sam has absorbed roast chicken, cold partridge, quail, and sweetbreads till he is getting critical. He asked me this morning if I shouldn't like ham and eggs for a change!"

Laurie felt slightly aggrieved.

"Do you mean to say that you're not eating any of the stuff yourself?" he demanded.

"Oh, I eat three meals a day. But I don't keep boarders, you know; so I give the rest to Sam to distribute. He feeds several dozen art students, I infer, and staggers home every night under the burden of what's left."

"There won't be anything left this night."

She had risen now and was helping to set the little table. Laurie looked at her with shining eyes. One of her rapid changes of mood had taken place, and she was entering into the spirit of the impromptu supper as cheerfully as if it were a new game and she a child. She had become a wholly different personality from the tragic-eyed girl who less than ten minutes ago had somberly announced that she was making her last stand in life. Again, as often before, Laurie felt overwhelmed by the rush of conflicting emotions she aroused.

"Shall we have this big bowl of roses in the center, or the four little bowls at the corners?" she asked absorbedly.

As she spoke, she studied the flowers with her head on one side. For the moment, it was clear, the question she had asked was the most vital in the world.

"The little ones," decided the guest. "The big one might shut off some of you from my devouring eyes." He was mixing ingredients in a chafing-dish as he spoke, and he wore the trying air of smug complacency that invariably accompanies that simple process.

"No," he objected, as she tried to help him, "I will do the brain-work. Your part is to be feminine and rush briskly back and forth, offering me things I don't want. And at the last moment," he added gloomily, "you may tell me that there isn't a lemon in the place." He looked about with the hopelessness of a great artist facing the failure of his chef d'oeuvre. "I forgot the lemons."

"Information" Tired of Old Man's Stale Joke

The new sales clerk who was "learning all about the store" had been placed by her section manager next to an information booth with instructions to "stay there and hear the questions customers ask."

They ranged all the way from the sensible to the insane.

The prize query came from a little elderly gentleman with a white beard.

"What floor's the basement on, eh?"

The new sales clerk stared. He didn't seem to be kidding; anyhow, one could never tell, and it was best to abide by the rule: The customer is always right even if occasionally crazy. So she said, "Over there," pointing to the stairs.

The little man walked away muttering, "What floor's the basement on, ha, ha." Then the information clerk, who had ignored all this, turned and said: "Didya see I didn't notice him? He comes around every month or so and asks that pet joke of his. Asked me the first time I was here; he always picks a new girl to spring it on."—New York Sun.

Too Much Service

"An elderly gentleman was having lunch in our grill," said the hotel manager, "and, as was customary when his water glass showed evidence of use, a passing waiter or bus boy refilled it. After the fifth or sixth refilling the diner let out a roar. 'Stop!' he cried. 'I've been trying to get that water glass to the proper level ever since I came to this table. My doctor ordered me to take a pill in a third of a glass of water. Now I feel like an overloaded water-wagon and I still have the pill to take.'"—Boston Transcript.

Wrestling Bouts in Japan

Every year the Japanese wrestling championship is decided at the Kokugikwan in Tokyo, says the Pathfinder Magazine. Here the wrestlers from the east and west of Japan struggle for supremacy. The championship bouts, which are always picturesque, sometimes last for ten days or more. The matches begin early in the morning and last until late at night. Each wrestler has a stage name, like our actors. In fact, they are the heroes of the Japanese flappers, some of them being as popular as matinee idols in this country.

The wrestlers all use the "catch-as-catch-can" method. Each match continues until one man is thrown. The man who wins the championship becomes a popular national hero.

Orchard Information

COST SHOWN FOR GROWING PEACHES

A comparative study of peach costs in all important areas of the United States was made in the fall of 1925 by the United States Department of Agriculture. The work in Colorado was carried on in co-operation with the State Agricultural college. Results are now available showing the cost of producing peaches for the Palisade and Paonia districts.

Estimates were secured covering three years necessary to bring an orchard into bearing. In the Palisade area peaches were set 100 trees to the acre on land worth $300 per acre. They were given clean cultivation during the three years. A total of 195 man hours and 160 horse hours were used per acre in the three years.

The labor cost was $107; trees and necessary replanting, $47; spray material, $4.40; taxes, $30; water, $45; other costs, $11, and interest, $106, making a cost of $351 per acre. At the end of the three-year period the orchard showed a total investment of $651, including the original land value of $300 and costs of $351.

At Paonia the trees were set somewhat farther apart, 17½ by 17½ feet, giving 140 trees per acre. Here all costs per acre for the three-year period amounted to $312. Land was listed at $250 per acre, making a total investment of $562 in the peach orchard at the end of three years.

Growers reported that these costs could be reduced in some cases by planting crops between the rows the first two years.—R. T. Burdick, Associate Economist, Colorado Agricultural College.

Pruning Grapevines While Dormant Is Right Plan

By pruning the grape when the vines are dormant, danger of injury from bleeding is avoided.

Young plants set out last spring are thinned to one vigorous shoot and this shortened to two or three buds. The best-developed cane of vines set two years ago is pruned just long enough to reach and be tied to a wire about 80 inches from the ground. After the third season a vigorous cane coming from just below this lower wire is selected for a continuation of the trunk and is cut off slightly above the upper wire, 80 inches higher. Two other canes are also chosen, tied to the right and left along the lower wire, and cut back to six or eight buds each. At the fourth season's pruning two canes of the previous season's growth are tied to the top wire, one on each side of the trunk, and cut back to eight or ten buds.

The grape bears on wood produced the same season. Depending on the variety, 30 to 50 vigorous buds will usually produce all the fruit and new wood which the average vine should be allowed to bear. In order to maintain the desired number of buds, four fruiting canes are usually left each year and all the remaining wood removed except a few spurs or stubs of one or two buds each near the trunk to produce the fruiting canes for the following year.—J. S. Shoemaker, Ohio Experiment Station.

Oat Straw Favored as Mulch for Strawberries

Generally speaking, oat straw which has been cleaned of chaff is considered the best material for mulching strawberries. By removing the chaff the grains and weed seeds are pretty largely removed. Next best, in all probability, would be the barnyard manure, and barnyard manure with plenty of straw in it, if available, which is at the same time free from weed seed and grain. There is no question but what the extra fertility coupled with the mulch would be very desirable indeed. The trouble is that manure of this sort has a good deal of weed seed in it as a rule. Leaves usually mat down, becoming quite packed by spring, and for that reason their use is generally objectionable.

Horticultural Notes

Gardening keeps down the cost of living on the farm. It's no longer just a job.

* * *

No acre on the farm will pay better or produce a greater income than the acre devoted to the home orchard.

* * *

Most home orchards of apples and pears will need a dormant spray to control San Jose scale.

* * *

A real dry basement will not keep apples, potatoes and similar products well. They shrivel up. To remedy this, sprinkle the floor occasionally.

* * *

Farmers generally have not yet come to know the value of a sharp pencil in making the various lines of farming profitable.

* * *

Farmers should learn to tie knots appropriate to the task at hand. Good knots are those which can be easily tied, are secure, and easily undone.

* * *

A prominent man comments that you won't go wrong if you judge a farm by its improvements. If the improvements are good, he says, the soil is also likely to be pretty good.

Happy New Year

By H. LUCIUS COOK

IT WAS an uninteresting little town—or so it seemed to young Rendell—cold, bleak, the most cheerless place on earth to spend the winter holiday season. He was there on business for his firm. Christmas had been a grand fiasco as far as he was concerned. He had no relatives and he knew no one about whom he cared enough to send even a Christmas card. It was New Year's Eve. Late in the afternoon he left the one hotel that the town could boast about (and did) and walked down the main street. It was not that Robert Rendell felt loneliness—one must have known a friend to experience that emotion. He was just bored. All that the holidays meant to him were innumerable wreaths and strings of holly, one half concealing wholly ugly chandeliers, and the perfunctory "Merry Christmas" or "Happy New Year" that everybody seemed to feel it necessary to say to him. How could people repeat such silly, meaningless phrases, he wondered. They couldn't possibly mean them. Robert never used them.

He wandered into an art shop that attracted him—out of curiosity rather than a desire to buy. There was no one he wanted to buy anything for. What a bore life was. As he was about to leave the shop the kindly, little old man behind the counter called cheerily after him—"Happy New Year." Robert turned and looked at him. There was something in the twinkling, blue eyes of the old man that made him wonder and he couldn't help asking, "What can there possibly be that is new?" The old man's eyes just twinkled. He didn't seem at all surprised by the question. He merely kept a silence that seemed to hide all the wisdom in the world. Robert went on, "How can there possibly be any happiness for one who is alone in the world?" The young-old blue eyes twinkled more brightly and this time the lips spoke. "One can't be alone when God is his friend." Now Robert kept silence. Then he smiled doubtfully and went out, but not before the old man's calm voice called merrily after him again—"Happy New Year."

The Old Man Didn't Seem at All Surprised.

Robert had been invited to a New Year's Eve dance and he returned to his hotel to dress. A business acquaintance in the town had urged him to come and he accepted for polite reasons rather than from any desire to mingle with local society. It was at the dance that Robert met Ethel. She interested him at once, and with business-like initiative he immediately booked her for most of the dances of the evening.

When Robert returned to New York the day after New Year's he experienced for the first time in his life the sensation of genuine loneliness. Most remarkable of all, he felt strangely happy in his new sadness, for now he always had the vision of a pair of dark laughing eyes to cheer his loneliness. More than once in the ensuing months he found occasion to make business trips to the little town which sheltered the laughing dark eyes and before another year had passed his loneliness had turned into complete joy, for he had married the pretty owner of the eyes.

At his own request his firm stationed him permanently in the little town which a year ago had seemed the most cheerless spot on earth, and Robert and Ethel settled down to a cosy, comfortable married life.

It was New Year's Eve again and Robert was in the little art shop where the old man with the twinkling blue eyes still presided behind the counter. This time Robert had come with definite intent. He had ordered a frame for one of Ethel's new photographs. "Happy New Year," he said cordially to the little old man. The blue eyes twinkled knowingly and he said, "I thought there was nothing new." Robert smiled good-naturedly It was a very different smile from the doubtful one that had curled his lips the year before as he had left the shop. "I hadn't found love then," he replied.

"But love isn't new. It is as old as—as everyone's Friend," the old man said softly.

"But it was new to me," laughed Robert and as he left the shop it was he who called out cheerily—"Happy New Year" again, and he really meant it. The old man's kindly blue eyes twinkled more merrily than ever and he smiled a little, sweet, wistful smile.

Rev Calvin Grosshuesch and family are enjoying a visit from Mrs. Grosshuesch's brother and sister, Mr. Herman and Miss Adella Kuhlmann, who came last Thursday from Meno, South Dakota, for a couple of weeks visit.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Neahring were Klemme callers Wednesday of this week. They have been living in Illinois but have moved back to this community. Mrs. Neahring was Miss Martha Brandt before her marriage.

Paul Mueller, assistant buttermaker at the Klemme Creamery, left last Thursday for Winthrop, Minnesota, to spend Christmas with his parents Harl Gimer, who is home from Morningside College, is helping at the butter factory during Paul's absence.

LOCAL COUPLE MARRIED TODAY

SMID-SCHAEFER MARRIAGE AT REFORMED CHURCH

Reception Being Held At The U. G. Smid Home This Evening

This morning at 10:30 o'clock, at the Klemme Reformed Church occurred the marriage of Miss Geraldine Smid and Mr. Emery Schaefer, both popular young people of this community.

The church wedding was very pretty and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends of the young couple.

The wedding party awaited in the vestibule of the church while Mrs. P M Griesemer played the wedding march, during which the party walked slowly up the aisle to the alter where Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch performed the ceremony, using the ring ritual, and spoke the words that bound the happy couple in marriage vows.

The bride was dressed in white satin and wedding veil and carried a bouquet of roses She was accompanied by Miss Hilda Schaefer, sister of the bride, who wore a gown of tan georgetee

The groom was attired in the conventional blue serge. Mr. Bernard Smid, brother of the bride, acted as best man. Little Reuben Grosshuesch was ring bearer for the bridal party.

Both of these young people come from the very best of families. They are popular in our comunity and have a good standing The bride is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs U G. Smid The groom is a son of Chris Schaefer, of Marble Rock, a former resident of this community

These young people are industrious and will move onto the Albert Schmidt farm at the north edge of Klemme in the early spring where they will be at home to their many friends.

A reception is being held at the U G Smid home this evening in honor of the newly weds and to which a large number of their many friends have been invited.

The Times joins in the congratulations and best wishes being extended to Mr and Mrs. Schaefer.

A New Year's Eve Dance will be given at the Idle Hour theatre Friday evening, Dec. 31st The Night Hawks will furnish the music. Mr Bernard Smid is managing the dance and expects to put on a few more in the near future.

Christmas programs were held at the school house by the Methodist church Christmas eve. The Reformed church had a very nice program at the church, and a good program was held at Liberty church. Large crowds were inattendance at all the programs.

Fred Gartz suffered a very painful accident Sunday evening. He was chopping some kindling wood when his ax slipped and cut a deep gash in his foot. It took six stitches to close the diagonal wound in his foot Mr. Gartz is employed on the Rock Island section and this accident will lay him off for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Patet entertained at their home on Christmas Day the following people: John Lackore and family and Clifford Lackore and family, of Forest City; Mr. and Mrs. Victor Waldeck and Lilly, Letha and Lila Meyers of Hayfield, Leonard Sampson and family, of Klemme, and Milo Patet, of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Waterman gave a Christmas dinner at their home Sunday to which the following people were guests: Mrs. Mary Waterman and daughter, Mabel, of Iowa City; Mr and Mrs. T. F. Mitchell, of Swea City; and Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus and Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Keraus and sons, Otho and Verle, of Klemme.

Geo. Schaefer and son, of Webster City, called on the J. N. Day and Wm. Smith families Monday. They expect to leave soon for California to make their home. Mr. Schaefer lived at Garner for a number of years where he conducted a pool room. He is well known in this part of the county. Their Klemme friends wish them happiness in their new home in the West.

School Notes

A good many of the pupils have received their Declamatory selections and will begin work on them after school starts.

Goodell is having one week of Christmas vacation.

The townspeople have been very much amused at the unusual activity they have witnessed in the past few days The flag of our country was caught at the top of the 70 foot flag pole in front of the school house Mr Geo Nelson, our High School Principal, after two attempts to scale the pole, succeeded in climbing to the top and detaching the flag.

The Girls of the Home Economics Club broadcasted their first annual program, consisting of several vaudeville acts, reading, duets and songs by members of the club, thru station G H. S. on Tuesday evening, December 21 Home made candy was also sold by the girls.

Hot lunches are now being served at the Goodell School and seem to be meeting with general approval. One hot dish, a dessert and sandwiches are served each day, thus eliminating the old type of pail lunch. About thirty pupils are served daily at a cost of fifty cents per week for each pupil. The class in advanced food under the direction of Miss Littschwager, has charge of planning and serving the lunches.

The above notes were made by pupils in the American Literature Class.

How to Get One

To one of the chapters of a widely known national college sorority came a sister from a "hick" school but with splendid recommendations. After only a perfunctory examination the member was invited to become affiliated, but with, oh, how many regrets later. Her taste regarding men was striking, for she was immediately and repeatedly seen in company with the campus joke, a veritable Ichabod Crane. And to the ill-disguised comments of her sisters she was invulnerable.

Freddie and Jessie had been playing one of those old-fashioned games with forfeits, and the girl had been ordered to give the young man ten kisses.

"Let's see," said Jessie, pausing for breath, "that's seven, isn't it?"

"Only six," corrected Freddie.

"Seven, I think."

"No, six."

"Seven!"

"Six!"

"Look here," said the girl, wearily, "sooner than have any argument, we had better start all over again."

MODOCS in the NEWS AGAIN

SCAR FACE CHARLEY

TOBEY RIDDLE

INDIAN TREACHERY.

Murder of Gen. Canby and Two Peace Commissioners by the Modocs.

The Victims Invited to a Conference and Foully Killed by Jack's Gang.

LAVA BED, April 11, via YREKA, April 12.—Yesterday afternoon, five Indians and four squaws came into our camp, and were made presents of clothing and provisions by the Peace Commission, and a message was sent out by the Commissioners asking for a talk this morning, at a point about a mile from our picket line.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FIFTY years ago the Modoc Indians, insignificant in numbers and living in a remote and comparatively unknown part of the country, were very much in the news of the day, as the above facsimile of a newspaper story of that time shows. In one brief hour they stamped their names on the pages of history, then slipped back into obscurity to be forgotten for more than half a century.

The other day they appeared in the news again when press dispatches chronicled the fact that all but six of the original 68 allotments of land in northeastern Oklahoma to Modocs who had been sent there as prisoners of war, had been removed from governmental supervision. This federal order, which means that 62 Indians are held fully competent to manage their own affairs and which brought the name "Modoc" into the headlines again, also served to recall the story of what one writer has called "an epic written in blood and flame."

The tragic history of these red men and the gallant American general whose brilliant military career was cut short by a Modoc bullet in the lava beds of Oregon on April 11, 1873, was also revived several weeks ago when a monument to the memory of Gen. E. R. S. Canby and others who perished in the Modoc war was unveiled in Modoc county, Calif. The monument was dedicated by Alturas parlor, N. D. G. W., and among the notable persons present were Col. William Thompson and Capt. O. C. Applegate, both veterans of that war. (In the picture above Colonel Thompson stands at the left of the monument and Captain Applegate at the right).

The story of the Modoc war of 1872-73 is a sad page in American history. Stripped of minor details, the situation leading up to the "tragedy of the lava beds," was this:

The Modocs, led by Chief Kintpuash, commonly known as Captain Jack, and Chikchikam-Lupalkuelatko ("Wagon Scar-Faced"), Scar-Faced Charley, because of incessant persecution by the Klamath Indians, had left the reservation which they and the Klamaths occupied and gone back to their ancestral homes. When the army was called in to bring them back by force, they fled to the lava beds of southern Oregon and northern California, where they not only defied capture but inflicted heavy losses upon the soldiers sent against them.

In fact, the war with this little insignificant tribe of the Pacific Northwest was one of the costliest, in proportion to the number of the enemy, which the United States ever waged. There were never at any time more than 50 of the Modocs under arms, but it took more than 1,200 soldiers to subdue them. The total loss of the white settlers and soldiers was 168, of whom 83 were killed. The cost of the war was more than half a million dollars. Each Modoc accounted for three men and cost the government of the United States more than $10,000 before he himself was killed or captured.

Then Gen. Edward Richard Sprigg Canby, a veteran of the Seminole, Mexican, Navajo and Civil wars, who was in command of the military department of the Columbia, took command in person. He was familiar with Indian affairs, well-disposed toward the red man, and, believing that the Modocs had been unjustly treated, substituted negotiation for armed force. A peace commission, composed of the general himself, Rev. Eleazer Thomas, a Methodist minister, A. B. Meacham, a former Indian agent, and L. S. Dyar, agent on the Klamath-Modoc reservation, was formed to treat with the recalcitrant Indians.

After several conferences a peaceful settlement of the difficulty seemed hopeless. The commission, restricted in power by Washington, could promise nothing definite in regard to a permanent home for the Indians. The Modocs stood pat on their insistence that they be allowed to return to their old home on the Lost river. Captain Jack was willing to end the war if this was promised; otherwise he would fight to the death.

Finally a conference was arranged for April 11, 1873, to be held in the Modoc stronghold near Tule lake. The commissioners, accompanied by Frank Riddle, a Kentucky frontiersman, and his wife, a Modoc woman named Winema, "Woman Chief," better known as Tobey Riddle, as interpreters, were to meet the Modoc leaders under a flag of truce. Meanwhile a plot had been hatched among the Modocs to murder the commissioners. At first Captain Jack refused to have a part in this plot, but when his warriors put a woman's hat on his head and taunted him for being a coward, he finally consented. No sooner was the plot laid than it was betrayed to the commissioners by Tobey Riddle.

The fact of the betrayal of their plans was unwisely revealed to the Indians by Doctor Thomas, and the Modocs immediately demanded that Tobey come into their camp and name her informer. At the risk of her life the heroic Indian woman went, admitted that she had told the white men of the plot but defied the Modocs when they tried to make her give the name of the Indian who had revealed their plans. Although she was a cousin of Captain Jack, who stood ready to defend her with his life, it was her cool courage which so won the admiration of the savages that they allowed her to return to the army camp unmolested.

Arriving there she told the commissioners that not even the betrayal of their plans could change the Indians' determination to kill them. She pleaded with them not to attend the council, and her husband who knew the Modocs, joined in her entreaties. Canby's reply was that of a soldier: "It is my duty to go." He did not believe the Modocs would dare treachery with so many soldiers near and reinforcements coming. Other members of the commission were thoroughly convinced of the purpose of the Indians, and Meacham proposed that each should carry a concealed weapon to defend himself in case of attack.

To this both Canby and Thomas refused to assent. They had given their word of honor to come unarmed and they would keep it. Then Meacham proposed that if affairs became threatening, they should agree to any terms made by the Indians in order to escape. "I have never deceived an Indian and I will never consent to any promise that cannot be fulfilled." So he went to the council unarmed.

From the beginning of the council the commissioners realized that Tobey Riddle's warning had been a true one. The Modocs intended to murder them! As the council progressed, the Indians' manner became more insolent and hostile. The climax came when Schonchin John made a peremptory demand for the immediate removal of the soldiers from the country. General Canby spoke for the commissioners, and he knew that he was sealing his death warrant when he said "The soldiers are here and here they will stay until this thing is settled one way or another."

Captain Jack who had withdrawn from the council fire a few minutes previously, reappeared at this moment with a pistol in his hand.

"Ut wih kutt" (All ready!) he exclaimed.

As the words came from the lips of the Modoc leader, he pointed his weapon at the general's head and pulled the trigger. The cap snapped but failed to explode. Canby started toward the Indian. The Modoc drew the hammer back and, with the pistol almost touching the white man's face, fired. The shot struck Canby under the right eye. As he staggered away, Ellen's Man, another Modoc, shot him again and again, and a second later Bogus Charley tripped, threw him, and drew a keen knife across his throat.

The bloody scene did not last long. Thomas and Meacham were shot down. Dyar and Riddle fled with the bullets whistling about them. Tobey Riddle, although struck down with the butt of a rifle, sprang to the defense of Meacham. He had been very kind to her and she was devoted to him. Her life was threatened by the men who were trying to finish Meacham, who had been seriously wounded but not killed at the first fire. Captain Jack interposed and declared he would kill the first man who harmed the woman.

A moment later a red fiend named Boston Charley attempted to scalp Meacham. Tobey sprang to his side and tried to stay the murderous knife. Despite her desperate efforts the blade slashed across the commissioner's head. Then the quick wit of the woman came to her aid. "Soldiers coming!" she exclaimed. The murderers immediately fled. The tragedy of the lava beds was over.

When the soldiers did arrive they found three of the four commissioners stretched upon the ground. Canby and Thomas were dead. Meacham, although suffering from three bullet wounds and a knife slash, was still breathing faintly. Eventually he was nursed back to health by Tobey Riddle, his friend, and restored to his family at Salem, Ore. "The Pocahontas of the Lava Beds," despite the brutal blows she had received at the hands of her tribesmen, was not seriously injured and lived to an old age until February 20, 1920, when the influenza epidemic swept the remnants of her people on the Klamath reservation in Oregon.

The Modoc treachery which scored such a terrible success at the time was also a terrible defeat for them. The bullet which struck down General Canby killed their best friend. All over the country a cry for vengeance went up and a demand for the extermination of the Modocs was uttered. Driven from hiding place to hiding place by the soldiers under Gen. Jeff C. Davis, who succeeded General Canby, Captain Jack and his warriors fled through the lava beds like hunted animals.

Then some of his men turned traitor. Scar-Face Charley, who had fired the opening gun of the Modoc war and who had been one of those who had called Captain Jack a coward, became a scout for the soldiers. Finally they ran the Modoc leader to earth. He and three others were placed on trial for the murder of the commissioners and on October 3, 1873, Kintpuash, Schonchin John, Black Jim and Boston Charley paid the penalty for their crime on the scaffold at Fort Klamath.

After their capture General Davis prepared to hang Captain Jack and the other murderers of the commissioners immediately. But an order from Washington stopped him and finally they were placed on trial before a military commission, charged with violation of the laws of war, in their attack upon a peace commission under a flag of truce. Although the prisoners were not represented by counsel, they were given a fair trial.

When the sentence of death was pronounced the Modoc leader made a speech, pitiful in its futility, in which he declared that the soldiers had made the first hostile move when they attacked Scar Face Charley's camp. He also pointed out that the Modocs who had betrayed him to the soldiers and then turned state's evidence to save their own necks were the very ones who had forced him into the war when he had tried to hold out for a peaceful settlement of their difficulties.

On the scaffold there was a dramatic scene in which the natural dignity of the Modoc leader asserted itself and the manner of his dying atoned somewhat for whatever shortcomings there had been in the manner of his living. There was a harsh clanking of iron as he rose to speak for the last time for himself and his people. "Let me die like a man, not like a dog," he exclaimed. "I am not afraid to die, but I am ashamed to go this way, with my hands tied behind me."

There was also an incident which added a touch of grim humor to the scene. A zealous minister, who stood beside Captain Jack, tried to comfort him. "You must not be afraid to die," he said. "You are going to a beautiful land where you will never want for anything." "Preacher," replied the Indian, "the country right here is good enough for me. You say the other is a fine place and I suppose you want to go there. I'll give you 25 ponies if you will take my place. I don't want to go right now." The minister hastily declined.

Soon after the execution 140 Modocs were removed to Indian territory as prisoners of war. About 20 years ago all but 49 of them had died. The white man's doctors will tell you that they died of various diseases, but the Modocs say that many of their kinsmen died because their hearts were breaking with longing for their old home in Oregon. Finally these 49 were allowed to return to the Klamath reservation where other remnants of the tribe still lived. Of the original prisoners of war in Oklahoma none survive. The Indians whom the recent federal order held competent to manage their own affairs are the children of the men who fought under Captain Jack "in the land of the burnt-out fires" half a century ago. They dress and live like the whites, and this recent federal order which gives them the status of American citizens, breaks the last link with the past when the name "Modoc" in the news was a word of horror and of hate to the white man.

Brahman-Cross Steers Favored

Especially Adapted to Hot Climate, Droughts and Cattle Pests.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

For a number of years cattlemen of the Gulf coast region have been using Brahmans—the so-called sacred cattle of India—to cross with the common beef breeds of this country. Brahmans are especially adapted to a country having a hot climate, droughts, and where cattle pests are common. Native cattle carrying as little as one-eighth Brahman blood exhibit these same characteristics to a large degree and are in many ways more suitable for the conditions of the Gulf coast region in Texas than native cattle. Brahman-crossbred cattle are becoming quite widely distributed in this section.

Experiment With Cross.

The United States Department of Agriculture is experimenting with Brahman crosses to determine how they compare with other beef breeds in the Gulf coast region. Breeders producing Brahman crosses are meeting with success. This is particularly true of the young stock which weighs more at the same age and sells as high as calves of the ordinary beef breeds raised in that section. They are in good demand for veal in the markets serving this region.

Sold In North.

While considerable number of Brahman-cross cattle are marketed in Texas, shipments occasionally reach northern markets. Twenty-four head of two-year-old steers carrying one-eighth to one-quarter Brahman blood recently were sold on the Jersey city market where they not only created considerable curiosity but were well received by buyers. This carload was part of a shipment made by one of the largest ranches in Texas to several markets in an endeavor to introduce them to the packers. According to reports to the department the 24 head dressed an average of 59.17 per cent, which is considered as very satisfactory. They were fed cottonseed cake on grass pasture throught the summer and fall.

Find Poor Lettuce Seed Expensive at Any Price

The importance of good lettuce seed cannot be too strongly emphasized. Poor seed is expensive at any price and the grower is not justified in buying it in order to save a small difference in cost.

It is not unusual for lettuce growers to be able to cut only 50 per cent or less of their crop. This, to a large extent, is due to many plants going to seed before developing a head. Much of the failure to head can be traced directly to bad seed. Growing conditions and cultural methods are as important in the growing of lettuce as in growing other vegetables, but will not produce a good crop of heads unless the best of seed is planted. For the last two seasons good lettuce seed has been scarce and, as a result, a lot of seed of inferior quality has been sold. A large percentage of some strains of seed being offered to the growers will not produce firm heads except under the most favorable growing conditions. Some of these strains contain a rather large percentage of seed which will produce nothing but "seeders" under any conditions.

Overhauling Tractor Is Proper Job for Winter

What are some of the main things to check up when overhauling a tractor?

The ignition system, the oil pump if the tractor has one, valves, pistons and rings, bearings, gears and carburetor should be examined and fixed if necessary.

These things should be considered by every tractor owner during the winter months when the tractor is ordinarily idle. Time spent in overhauling the tractor this winter may mean time and money saved next spring and summer when most farmers can ill afford to neglect farm work long enough to make tractor repairs.

If your tractor has a high-tension magneto that has been working all right leave it alone. However, if something is wrong with the magneto it is not advisable for anyone but a good mechanic to try to do much with it.

The oiling system should be gone over. There is nothing more necessary than plenty of good oil to prevent wear and to keep the tractor in running order.

FARM NOTES

Crop rotation is the beginning of organized or business farming.

* * *

Alfalfa will grow on sand. That has been demonstrated through many successes and some failures.

* * *

If manure is hauled out and spread daily during the winter months, it saves double work in the spring.

* * *

As a pasture crop and as a soil enricher sweet clover, without doubt, heads the list of leguminous plants.

* * *

Thoroughly cleaned clover and alfalfa seed means not only fewer weeds, but lessens likelihood of parasitic plant diseases.

Old-Time Sports in Rural Bavarian District

Bavaria is the most old-fashioned part of Germany, and one may see in some remote villages customs that have survived for hundreds of years.

Recently a new Catholic priest was ordained in the little village of Rosshaupten. As usual, the religious part of the ceremony was followed by all kinds of worldly festivity, including the climbing of the "maypole."

The highest tree in the local wood was felled for the purpose.

The branches were lopped off, the bark was peeled and a green wreath of pine branches was hung around the topmost sprig.

It is no easy matter to shin up such a tree, over a yard in circumference near the foot. Indeed, it is so dangerous an undertaking that married men were forbidden to make the attempt.

Orchids in Canada

Discovery of a rare species of orchid is reported at Port Arthur, Ont., two men who had been fishing in the vicinity and returned with specimens. Experts state the plants are worth $100 a bulb. The finders relate that they saw other orchids, the value of which they did not know, growing in the neighborhood, and have returned to collect specimens.

From what they were called (vv. 20).
They were called from positions of ulte service. God always chooses servants from the ranks of the ployed.

To what they were called (v. 17). "To become fishers of men." These n no doubt had been successful as hers. The qualities which made m good fishermen, namely, pa-nce, bravery to face the storm at ht and perseverance which led m to toil all night, though no fish e caught, would make them good hers of men. Winning souls for rist requires great patience, brav-and perseverance. Becoming hers of men is the most important siness in the world. It is the hard-work in the world to do.

The cost of obedience to Christ's ll (vv 18, 20).
Obedience to Christ's call meant crifice, painful separation, to give all business interests and leave ir father behind. Regardless of cost they yielded prompt obedi-ce. They put their trust in Him o called them, believing that He s able to supply all their needs.

Their reward (v. 17).
These four men have wielded won-ous influence in the world. Their mes have become immortalized. d they remained at their business ey would only have been humble hermen.

II. Matthew Becomes a Follower of sus (Mk. 2:13-17).
Matthew was a despised tax gath-r under the Roman government. r a Jew to fill such a position was become unpopular. Since they re-ded taxes paid to the Roman gov-ment as unlawful extortion, a mem-r of their race engaging in the busi-ss of tax collection was to be ex-ed to shame and contempt.

Observe the abruptness of this ll (v. 14).
While sitting at his place of busi-ss he heard the call of Jesus.

The definiteness of the call v. 14).
It was to follow Jesus. To follow sus means to learn of Him and to gage in service for Him.

His instant decision (v. 14).
Matthew did not stop to reason on e question, but rendered definite d instant obedience. He openly re up his business and identified self with the Lord. Happy is the n who has the good judgment to in-antly respond to the call of the Lord en though it may be costly. Mat-ew made a feast and invited many his publican friends to meet his rly found Saviour. This had a two-ld objective:

(1) An expression of grateful appre-ation to the Lord for His saving ce.

(2) To bring his former friends and sociates into touch with his newly nd Saviour. It is natural for those o have found the Lord to desire to ng their friends into touch with m.

III. Walking as Jesus Walked. The reme Test of Abiding in Him. John 2:6).
Abiding in Christ means to have ex-erienced the life of God in Christ, have come into contact with rist's personality and to be con-ously living in fellowship with Him. hrist's oneness with the Father and s devotion to His will is the su-reme and grand example. Anyone o pretends to abide in Christ, who not walking as He walked, is not ntitled to the claim of Christian. The lk of the Christian implies the ole of his life. The reality of our ofession is determined by the con-stancy of our walk.

CLOTH GOWNS GAYLY TRIMMED; LUXURIES FOR EVENING MODE

A DRESS of navy twill, strictly tailored, is all right for practical wear, but a frock of navy twill glorified with red and gold embroidery enlivening cunningly contrived sleeves and collar is a different story—a story of an intriguing gown, handsome as handsome can be for smart afternoon occasion. Look at this picture and decide for yourself as to the effectiveness of just such a navy cloth dress for informal daytime wear.

What is true of this model is true of hosts of other cloth frocks this season—embroidery is "the touch that tells" their chic and charm. Thus through the medium of fanciful sleeve and discreet touches of gay stitchery the erstwhile humble cloth frock assumes a position of importance among "classy" daytime attire.

The decorative note for all costumes this season bespeaks metallic splendor. It is glitter here and glitter there and the daytime dress is no exception to the rule.

In this ornate trimming class a new item has appeared—spangle banding. The favorite is peach or flesh tint, although metal effects are also good. A black or midnight blue frock of flat crepe with a simple finish of the new pink spangle banding at the throat and wrists is the last word from style headquarters.

As to embroidery for the cloth daytime frock designers show a disposition to concentrate most needlework embellishment on the sleeves. It is quite inspirational to see what airs a simple cloth frock will take on when fancifully sleeved. Perhaps you have a "perfectly good" yet somewhat passe cloth straightline frock on hand and are wondering what to do with it. Try the effect of a new pair of sleeves in this dress. Designed after the unusually attractive bell sleeves in this picture they will modernize most any frock as if by magic. Of course the collar must show a bit of embroidery to match that on the sleeves.

Wanted, a vocabulary of superlative adjectives, for if one is to faithfully record the exquisite loveliness of the accessories which complement milady's evening costume this season, a word picture, however boldly drawn, will still fall short of doing the subject justice.

There is the glittering headdress of exotic splendor which crowns her permanent wave, the handsome flower so entrancingly positioned on her left shoulder, the mammoth ostrich fan she waves to and fro with languid grace, the gorgeous costume jewelry she wears, the ropes and ropes of pearls which encircle her throat, the scintillating rhinestone bag dangling from her slender wrist, even the splendor of the bejeweled heels of her slippers must receive due mention. In short, resplendent accessories are playing an important role in the program of evening costumes.

A trio of pretty accessories such as the stylist considers indispensable for a perfect ensemble is admirably displayed in this picture. First, there is the metal lace headdress, soft as a boudoir cap. The manner of fitting the broad ribbon of gold or silver cloth, it matters not which, snug about the forehead is fashion's latest whim. As to the ostrich fan, it either must blend into the color scheme or else it must boldly contrast. The one in the picture is pale pink.

Shoulder bouquets! Many chapters could be written on that subject. A huge rose-pink carnation, its gauzy petals bespangled with wee rhinestones, was selected to complete the color symphony of the costume in this picture. This boutonniere might well have been of tinted metal tissue, for gorgeous gold or silver flowers are very fashionable. Later than the chrysanthemum, which has become a "popular" choice, is the carnation; also dahlias of every color. Orchids, too, are much in favor.

The Huguenots

AN INSANE man, foaming at the mouth and muttering incoherent prayers to the saints, crouched in the embrasure of one of the upper windows of the palace of the Louvre, at Paris, on the night of August 24, 1572. He was gripping a gold-chased musket which he fired at intervals into the throng of panic-stricken men and women who rushed screaming along the dark street below. The madman was King Charles IX of France, son of that Henry II who had told William the Silent of a plan to massacre all the Huguenots in France. A series of strange events had led up to this midnight scene of wholesale murder.

The Protestant creed (started many years before in Germany by Martin Luther) had spread into France. But there it had, to a great extent, lost its religious significance. The French Protestants (or "Huguenots," as they were called) became largely a political party. The so-called religious wars, massacres, etc., in France during the Sixteenth and Seventeenth centuries had far more political than pious significance.

Henry II had married, for political reasons, an Italian woman, Catherine de Medici, daughter of the magnifico, or lord, of Florence. Henry neglected her, and in his lifetime she was of little consequence. But on his death she came to the front as the most powerful, most dangerous power of her time. Among other Italian customs she introduced into France were assassination by poison. She had four sons—Francis II (who married Mary Queen of Scots), Charles, Henry and Francois. All died childless, and three of them (Francis II, Charles IX and Henry III) were successively kings of France.

The Lorraine family, whose head was the duke of Guise, were all-powerful at court. When Francis II died and Catherine became regent for her young son, Charles IX, she sought to curb the growing influence of Guise by favoring the Huguenots. The leaders of the Huguenot party were Louis, prince of Conde, young Henry, prince of Bearn (afterwards king of Navarre and still later King Henry IV of France), and Admiral Coligny. Henry was head of the Bourbon family, as Charles IX was of the Valois family. In 1562 civil war broke out between Guise's followers and the Huguenots. Conde was captured and killed. Guise was murdered. His son, who succeeded to the dukedom, declared that Admiral Coligny was his father's assassin and swore blood vengeance on him.

At last the Huguenots grew so powerful that Catherine feared them as much as she had once feared the Guises, and she threw her influence with the latter. Charles IX had meantime come to manhood and was strongly in favor of the Huguenots. He loved Coligny and regarded Henry of Navarre as his own brother. Catherine viewed with alarm this attitude of her son. Then she and Guise concocted a plot that has made both their names odious.

They arranged a marriage between Charles' sister, Margaret, and Henry of Navarre, and invited all the Huguenots in France to come to Paris for the ceremony. The wedding occurred August 18, 1572. While the festivities were in progress Catherine hastened to Charles with the false news that Coligny and other Huguenots were conspiring against his life. Charles was weak, credulous, and, moreover, was subject to fits of temporary insanity. By working on his fears Catherine and Guise persuaded him that the Huguenots, under Coligny's orders, were planning a massacre of Catholics and were especially pledged to murder himself and those dear to him. Insane with fear, he cried:

"Kill Coligny! Kill every Huguenot! Let none be left alive to reproach me!"

Guise had beforehand laid his plans. He was the idol of the populace. Through his agents he instructed the townsfolk and rabble to assemble at midnight on August 24 (St. Bartholomew's day), and at a signal begin a wholesale slaughter of Huguenots. The Huguenots, taken wholly by surprise, died like sheep under their butchers' weapons.

Guise, full of his old-time vengeance against Coligny, hurried to the hotel where the admiral lay ill in bed. The defenseless old man was stabbed a dozen times and his body hurled into the courtyard below.

The wave of massacre spread through all France.

Henry of Navarre, the young bridegroom whose marriage celebration had been the trap to lure so many thousands of his followers to their doom, was captured in the Louvre before he could escape or defend himself. Being less scrupulous—or fonder of life—than his unfortunate co-religionists, Henry promptly renounced Protestantism, declared himself an ardent Catholic, and thus appeased the royal wrath and saved his own skin.

Atrocious and utterly unpardonable as was the massacre of St. Bartholomew, yet it was not without lasting benefit of a sort. For, owing to it and to subsequent religious persecution, fully 50,000 Huguenots left France and a large number of these eventually settled in America, helping to form the social and religious backbone of our present nation.

Few Are Without Faith in Mascots

The use of mascots, whether to bring good fortune or ward off evil, is age-old and universal. They were an element in the romance of the Middle ages, when the armored knight carried into battle, for his protection and encouragement, the charm which his lady love had blessed with her prayers.

In every clime, among people of all creeds and classes, some particular form of mascot has been individually or collectively cherished. At the head of the list, perhaps, says Miss St. John Montague, may be placed the little bone found in the shoulder of the tiger, which is supposed by Europeans and natives alike to be powerful in attracting good luck, and is eagerly sought after by those who believe in its value.

Its apparent uselessness in the tiger's body—being "all upon its own" and literally "at a loose end"—has made its existence a mystery, which has begotten this belief in its power.

Funchal Is One Spot Untouched by War

Funchal, on the island of Madeira, historically is one of the most peaceful spots in the world. It has had uninterrupted peace since its discovery by Zarco in 1418. Three times it has been captured by British fleets, but each time returned to Portugal on conclusion of peace. Men have been free to plant and decorate and build there, unscourged by wars, according to Warren H. Miller's "All Around the Mediterranean." They brought grapes from Crete in 1420 and sugar cane from Sicily in 1452, and have been most industrious with them ever since. The result has been many miles of terraces for vines and great plantations inland for sugar cane. Many generations have devoted their efforts to beautifying these lands without molestation. Continued freedom from wars in Funchal has given the people so much time for work that even the pebbled streets are laid in patterns interlined with geometric designs in white stones.

Lions Stalk on Highways

In East Africa the drought has been so severe that wild animals have invaded the towns and settlements in search of water. At Nairobi the inhabitants have only to stroll a short distance out of town to encounter herds of buffalo and rhinos and it is a frequent occurrence to meet all manner of big game including lions on the roads leading from one town to another.

Strong Combination

What threatens to be a new rival of halitosis may be the cooked, or raw, result of a recent scientific accomplishment reported by Prof. Lucien Daniel, eminent French botanist. He has announced that he has succeeded in grafting a garlic plant and a cabbage plant. Whether the new botanical product will retain the odorous qualities of both its ancestors has not been established, the Independent says.

Famous for Linen

The most ancient Egyptian tombs have revealed to us linens in a fine state of preservation. The histories of all other early civilization have invariably referred to linen and the splendid garments which cunning workmen fashioned of it. The modern use of linen fibers may be traced directly to Phoenician merchants, who are said to have carried this material to Ireland on their voyages of trading and to have settled and colonized the land of Erin. Since then Ireland and Scotland have been the chief sources of the world's fine-linen supply.

Tactful Thomas' New Year's Day

By Christopher G. Hazard

IT WAS with smiling resolution, but also with invincible vanity, that Mr. Thomas Spriggs greeted the sunshine of a New Year's morning. He had determined to be socially active and pleasant, but he had failed to reckon with himself. In assuming that everybody would be glad to see him he had forgotten that his previous faithfulness to calling lists had not always seemed to hit the mark. If some kind friend could have advised and convinced him about his faculty of getting into situations wrong and his ability for saying the things he did not mean to say, he might have profited by counsel, but, as the case was, his powers in these directions were unimpaired. He was still unaware of the fact that he was ironically known as Tactful Thomas.

Thus it was that the day opened characteristically as he shook hands with old man Young and, after the usual New Year wish, stepped on his favorite corn by an unfortunate comparison. Mr. Young was on the other side of seventy, but fond of imagining himself as young as ever, and a mutual acquaintance of the two was this side of the meridian, but with the looks of decades less. "How old do you think our friend Smithers is?" asked Mr. Young. "Well, I should say about sixty," replied Mr. Spriggs, "but he doesn't look as old as you do!" The conversation then abruptly ended.

Being unable to appreciate Mr. Young's wit, Mr. Spriggs proceeded to find his next victim, mentally wishing himself a happy New Year. On his way to Miss Bliss' residence he fell in with Mr. Gladbys, friendly, his pastor for many years and still holding the office, but recently fell out with him in this wise as follows: "I see," says Mr. Spriggs, "that the other church has called its pastor. He's been with us only about three years and we called to Bigville. They say a good man long in Bliss."

Arriving at the Lump homestead Mr. Spriggs happened to be rather late. Mr. Lump had distinguished himself in the endeavor to promote social fellowship by introducing a young lady of about one forty winters to one of the invitations present. Unfortunately he forgot the name of the lady, so escaped from his dilemma and fell into a new difficulty by saying, "Professor Fox, let me make you acquainted with—with—with Miss—with one of our old standbys!"

"It Won't Be Long Now."

At this, Spriggs, all unabated, introduced himself at the Gladbys in turn to Judge Upright, who was approaching the age limit set upon his office. "It won't be long now, judge, before you will have to go 'way back and sit down."

Perhaps the most interesting adventure of this colorful day occurred at the Robinson party. There he grew positively careless, until he finally took his leave with a crowning bon mot. As Mrs. Robinson kept her upstairs room during the festivities, on account of a rather severe indisposition, her daughter, Miss Allura, had become the hostess and to her he made his adieu. "Give my best regards to your mother Miss Robinson," he said, "and tell her that I hope that she will be down and out!"

Alas, with his landlady that evening Mr. Spriggs heard from her that there are many queer people in the world. When he replied that this would undoubtedly continue to be the case after they both had left it, the good Lady overlooked the implication and wished him good night.

Nothing interfered with the slumbers of Mr. Spriggs. No ghostly consciousness of an imperfect New Year's call seemed to stand accusingly about his bed. He awoke the next morning to put on the magnifying glasses of conceit with fresh assurance. He will go forth on January 1, 1927, to commit new depredations upon the conventionalities of society. But people will wish him a happy New Year just the same. They know that he means well with it all and they take his mistakes as contributions to the merriment with which we all desire to enter upon new and promising eras. Some day he will laugh at himself, or, although that would deprive us of amusement, it will do him good. If we could see ourselves as others see us, who would dare to be funny? And if we are queer it avoids monotony and gives us of that variety which has been called the spice of life.

Watching the Old Year Out

Florence Harris Wells

AS JACK wired bridge lamps for the salesroom below his mind was on other more personal matters than wiring lamps for wholesale houses. Saidie, who made shades in another department for these same lamps, had refused to dance the New Year in with him. In fact this was the second time this holiday season she had refused to go to a dance with him. This time she had given no reason, but had been so sweet about it Jack was more puzzled than if she had done it ungraciously.

Saidie with her dark eyes, and golden curls that no bob on earth could make lie down in any sort of respectable fashion, looked anything but the industrious little worker she had proved to be.

No girl in the department could begin to make shades as fast or as beautiful as Saidie. No one got checks anywhere near the size of Saidie's at the end of the week; yet, while the other girls envied her skill, they all liked her, too—so did every one for that matter. Jack would have adored her if she hadn't been able to make but one shade a week. She had always been ready to laugh and joke and go to parties with him until now. Still, Jack reasoned, she was just the same as always about everything but the parties.

The queer part of it was, to Jack's thinking, that he had called on Saidie last night and her mother had said she was out on an errand, but she hadn't said where, neither had she asked him to come in and wait for her. They didn't usually treat him that way.

Jack wasn't easily downed. He wouldn't let Saidie's refusal upset him so. He'd do something different from just going to an ordinary dance—something he could tell Saidie about afterward. He decided to go to a gay cabaret where the wealthy people went, and there he'd watch the old year out. He could afford to spend what it would have cost him to take Saidie to the dance and he wouldn't have to spend so much all alone. It would be a new experience in his life of ordinary routine. He'd forget Saidie if he could. Jack was quite thrilled with his idea.

When night came, into the popular resort he sauntered and seated himself in a far corner where he could watch the gay throng, unmolested. For some time Jack watched the festive scene without signaling out individuals; suddenly through the crowd he saw the golden curls of Saidie.

Jack could scarcely believe his eyes. Strange thoughts flew through his mind. This was why she was refusing him—coming here with some wealthy guy. It couldn't be possible, Jack told himself; yet, after all, it was Saidie. He could just see the top of her head, now here, now there.

Jack wished he hadn't come. He felt it would be easier not to know it; then the crowd between them parted and he saw her distinctly as she came nearer, swaying gracefully in and out among the tables. A red lacquered tray laden with bright-colored packages and gilt boxes swung from her white shoulders by red velvet ribbons, in keeping with the holiday season.

She opened her lips and through shut teeth offered:

"Cigarettes! Cigarettes!"

So close was she Jack reached out his hand and caught her, relieved that it wasn't a man that brought her there; withal startled at her self-imposed task after her hard day's work.

Surprised, Saidie wavered a moment, then stopped beside him.

"What does it mean?" Jack demanded suddenly, feeling he must protect her from herself.

And Saidie whispered:

"It's the tips I get that count. Jack, I've been doing it during the holiday season. A few more hours of this holiday generosity and I'll have the fee for the specialist and little brother will be well. I thought you might not like it. I didn't want you to know until I was through. It'll soon be over now. You'll wait for me won't you?"

She hastened on calling blithely: "Cigarettes! Cigarettes!"

"Wait for her?" Jack repeated softly to himself, "I'll say I will!"

Commands High Prices for Artistic Candles

For the specialist it seems that candle making is by no means an unprofitable business in the United States today. In New York society many hostesses are willing to pay a good price for candles that lend an artistic effect to table decorations—rose-colored candles, for instance, to form part of a centerpiece with a bowl of roses. There is an Italian candlemaker, carrying on the craft of his forefathers in a studio on the upper East side, who so far individualizes his candles as to give them names. One called Eleanor Duse is decorated by hand with a delicate lily design and perfumed with the late actress' favorite orange blossom. At the time of the prince of Wales' last visit he made prince of Wales candles by the dozen. They were of "pale pink with the fragrance of an old English garden." Evidently this artist takes his profession very seriously. Once he had an order to make candles for a banquet to be given to a dancer. He watched her dance, so that he might catch her spirit in his dryad design, and then he scented the candles with her favorite perfume. The same man is sometimes called upon to make reproductions of candles centuries old for use in cinema films.—Manchester Guardian.
